My parents never seemed very concerned what church I went to, as long as every Sunday I got up earlier than I cared to and made the trek to sing and pray.

For years it was only singing and praying, until I was finally given the freedom to explore my own religious beliefs. At the time, I was relieved to have an extra morning to sleep, but after a while I realized that it would not hurt me to start thinking about prioritizing my life and trying to fit religion in there somewhere.

I had always kept my Jewish roots in mind, especially when my friend from summer camp told me about his upcoming Bar Mitzvah (and the gifts he would receive). I started thinking about confirming my faith, only by that time I had no real faith to confirm.

I have spent the last few years trying to decide if there was a religion that I am cut out for. For a while I looked into confirmation at the United Church of Christ congregational church that my father played organ at, but it did not suit me.

Two years ago I spent an entire 24 hour train ride talking about my unorganized beliefs with an avid Roman Catholic girl. This only confused me more, because by the end of the trip she was questioning her faith, and I was actually starting to like what she was telling me about being Catholic. My interest in Catholicism subsided with my feelings for the girl. Once again I was searching for my faith.

I remembered my mother's love for the Diary of Anne Frank, and I marvelled at some of the exciting, sad and moving histories she told me about Judaism. I knew that I could never be really interested in Catholicism because I do not like the politics and emphasis on formalities rather than true emotion.

It was this need for a more accommodating, feeling religion that has kept me away from looking further into Judaism, because of the fact that I do not have to ward off anybody trying to get me to accept their beliefs. I would probably enjoy that instead I would be encouraged to accept and challenge my own beliefs.

The established Jewish community on the UMass campus is not pushy in its "recruiting," which makes me more interested in what it has to offer. As someone who cannot claim to be a practicing Jew, I am supportive of the Jewish community at UMass, especially because I know it is there for me in case I decide to explore that avenue.

I do not see myself making any drastic moves right now, but when I look at my options, I appreciate that I have the strength to explore my own beliefs, without the pressure of the campus religion salesmen.

Calling all writers!

The Jewish Affairs desk is seeking writers for the rest of the fall and the spring semester.
If you're interested, bring a sample of your writing and come speak with Sarah Kimmel at the Collegian Offices, or call 545-1361

UMass contingent to join other colleges in 10-day winter break journey to Israel

By Sarah J. Kimmel
Collegian Staff

On Dec. 23 a group of 27 UMass students, both graduate and undergraduate, will travel across the Atlantic into the Middle East and land in Tel Aviv, Israel. These students will travel the country for 10 days, returning on Jan. 2.

The cost of this trip is subsidized by both the UMass Hillel and the United Jewish Appeal (UJA). Jewish federations donate money to the UJA in order to aid trips like this one as well as give funding to Israel and other countries.

Another perk to this unique opportunity is the fact that the students involved in this trip are given the choice to receive academic credits in Judaic Studies for the second semester.

The students have choice of earning from zero to three credits by preparing journals, research papers or large projects as a result of interest generated during the trip.

The UMass students will not be alone in visiting the nation. Students from colleges and universities all over America, as well as students from Israeli universities, will join UMass in tours and discussion groups.

The weather in Israel during the trip is anticipated to be cool and rainy. During a meeting held at Hillel last night, the students had a chance to have a question/answer session with people who had previously visited Israel.

"...students have a chance of earning... credits by preparing journals, research papers, or large projects...."

The students were given information about their security, living arrangements and how Americans are looked upon in Israel, as well as a description and itinerary of their trip.

The trip will begin by the group landing in Tel Aviv and taking a three hour bus ride to the north of the country to spend the night. The group will take jeep rides, tour the Golan and try out some folk dancing.

On the third day they will spend time in Jerusalem and sign the Jerusalem 3000 scroll. On day four the students will tour the old city of Jerusalem and spend Shabbat there.

The next few days include seeing the Dead Sea Scrolls; visiting Yad Vashem (the Holocaust memorial museum) and the grave of Yitzchak Rabin; going on an archeological dig; and floating in the Dead Sea.

The students said they are very excited to be touring their homeland. They expressed their desires to experience a taste of Israeli culture, a taste of Judaism in Israel — and a taste of falafel.

Hillel freshmen plunge into system

First year UMass students work to better Jewish community

By Bryan Schwartzman
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Hillel has created a group especially for freshman called "Hillel 2000" designed to make UMass and the Jewish community more accessible to incoming freshman.

Beth Seewald, the Jewish Campus Service Corps Fellow from Hillel House, organized the group.

"First year students have a lot in common. This is a good chance for them to get to know other Jewish students," she said.

The group has met every Wednesday in the Cape Cod Lounge, drawing about 15 students each time. There is no official president, so each student has assumed a position and takes an equal role in planning events.

The big event that was planned by the group this semester is the Chanukah Party, which will take place at the Hillel House tomorrow evening. Seewald said that all are welcome to the party, which will start with the 6 p.m. Menorah lighting, then proceed to activities such as dreidle games, candle making and potato latkes.

Group member and recording Secretary Jacklyn Sobel said there will be a toy drive in conjunction with the party. Toys will be collected at the party, she said.

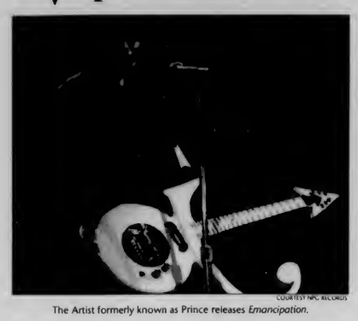
Sobel said she is glad such a group exists.

"I was really scared I would loose my Jewishness when I came to UMass," she said. "I feel more comfortable."

First-year student Aaron Philmus said he first heard about the group through word of mouth. Like many other students, he participated in events at the beginning of the year which were designed to initiate the group.

One of these events was an evening of music at Fire and Water which was led by Seewald.

"[Fire and Water] was a good time," Philmus said. "This is a really good group to have. The group is really down to earth. It is nice to have a group of friends that I can also be in a group with."



He said he was unsure whether the group would stay intact formally after this year, but it almost positive that a similar group will exist for next year's freshmen.

Seewald said that this experience may prepare some of the students to participate on the Hillel Council in the next few years.

Happy Chanukah to all from the Collegian Graphics Crew!

Arts & Living

☥ proclaims his Emancipation

The Artist formerly known as Prince releases Emancipation.

COURTESY NPG RECORDS

By Humphrey brown III
Collegian Staff

Love him or hate him, you have to give props to the Artist formerly known as Prince. The Purple One has returned with a new album, celebrating his newfound liberation from his former record label, Warner Brothers Inc.

In 1992, Prince (pre-name change), signed a $100 million record deal with Warner, the biggest recording contract in Warner's history. Shortly after the signing, the deal went sour and Prince found himself battling the record label for artistic control.

In a display of public protest, Prince scrawled the word "slave" on his cheek and proceeded to wear it at award shows, concerts and television talk show appearances. Then, in 1993, the man born Prince Rogers Nelson legally changed his name to an unpronounceable symbol. As one can imagine, this caused a wave of confusion among the public and added to the mystery behind a man whose antics were beginning to get in the way of his music.

After a string of so-so albums, the climax of them being The Gold Experience, liberation finally came to The Artist formerly known as Prince after last July's release of Chaos and Disorder, a rock heavy, guitar-charged piece that many claimed to be a throwaway album to fulfill his record agreement. Whatever the case may be, Chaos and Disorder did mark the last album done by the Artist formerly known as Prince under the Warner label. Five months later, with a wife and newfound freedom, he released a 3-CD set which, under his own NPG label and new distributer EMI-Capitol Music, is appropriately titled Emancipation.

This is the album fans of the Artist have been waiting for. Emancipation is 37 songs strong and is probably the most complete album he has ever made.

Emancipation showcases the multiple talents of the Artist and that of his band, The New Power Generation. You would think that with 37 cuts, there has to be a few throw- aways. That all depends on what you want to hear from him. Getting Emancipation is like getting an R&B, rock, pop, dance, funk, soul and old school album all in one.

There are four covers on Emancipation, including the first single release, "Betcha By Golly Wow." Also covered are Bonnie Raitt's "I Can't Make You Love Me," Joan Osbourne's "One of Us" and the Delphonics' classic "La-La-La-Means I Love You." The Artist does right by all of them, but if you're tired of covers and want some original material, he has plenty.

Exploring the definition of love, romance and relationships are melodic cuts like "Dreamin About You," "One Kiss At A Time," "Friend, Lover, Sister, Mother/Wife," and the ballad that makes his wife Mayte cry everytime she hears it, "Let's Have A Baby."

Emancipation is full of songs dealing with sex and sensuality, but there's also a whole lot of funk. You're guaranteed to move on such cuts as "Jam Of The Year," "Get Yo Groove On," "Joint 2 Joint" and the song destined to be pumping out of the speakers of every club from California to Boston, "Sleep Around" — a bass-pumping, techno-esque jam that could make Bob Dole get up and pull something.

For those wanting to hear his Royal Badness get nice with the axe, there's plenty of guitar oriented songs. The Artist plays nearly every instrument on the album, including brilliant guitar licks on "Saviour," "Damned If I Do" and "One Of Us."

Whatever you're looking for, you'll find it on Emancipation, making this a definite treat for fans looking for new stuff, or old Prince fans looking to come back to the dawn.

Emancipation lets you look pass the public persona and pay attention to what's really important, the music. Listening to Emancipation is truly hearing freedom ring. Freedom is truly a beautiful thing.

FAC hosts Biblical opera tomorrow

By Seema Gangatirkar
Collegian Staff

Just in time for the holidays, New York's Ensemble for Early Music (EEM) will close out the Fine Arts Center 1996 season with an opera version of the Biblical story of Daniel and the Lions.

The 13th century opera is a liturgical drama that uses Gregorian chant in Latin as its principal musical means. The show begins at 8 p.m. tomorrow night in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

Ensemble from the opera, Daniel and the Lions.

COURTESY NEW WORLD CLASSICS

The churches of medieval Europe provided the first steps in creating the opera. During those times, biblical stories were acted out and sung on special occasions. These productions used a blend of Gregorian chant and simple but elegant mime to tell the stories.

EEM maintains the rich purity of the original productions. The ensemble's repertoire is filled with vibrant pieces of authentic music and music-drama from the medieval and renaissance periods.

Using exotic and authentic instruments, as well as performance techniques that blend imaginative insight with sound scholarship, EEM is able to put together performances that are not only spontaneous, but also emotionally moving.

Their version of Daniel moves quickly and is visually entertaining. The 70-minute show uses tenors, baritones and counter-tenor singers. While the setting is Biblical, the costumes are opulently Byzantine.

The characters are dressed in robes of royal purple and gold and mantles of scarlet and vermillion while the musicians are attired in plain muslin costumes.

The trio of musicians perform on various medieval instruments from old string instruments to flutes. Also included are improvised accompaniment on medieval bells, which provides and eerie haunting background to the play.

EEM is directed by Frederick Renz and has earned a world class reputation for its colorful and energetic performances in the past. The Washington Post has praised the group's performances as "outstanding" while the Las Vegas New Press raves that "The New York Ensemble for Early Music is one of the finest on Earth."

The group has also recorded Daniel and the Lions on the Fone Lable (Allegro Imports). Those interested in learning more about creation of opera can read The Play of Daniel: A Thirteenth Century Musical Drama is available in an edition edited by Noah Greenberg and published by Oxford University Press, 1959.

Tickets for Daniel and the Lions are $27, $23 and $15. Tickets for Five College students are $5 and for persons ages 17 & under, $10. To order tickets or for more information, please call the Fine Arts Center Box Office at 545-3511 or (800) 999-UMAS.

Play shows life at turn of century

By Julia Casson
Collegian Correspondent

Lily Dale, written by the world-renowned and award winning screenwriter, Horton Foote, will be presented by the University of Massachusetts' Theater Department this evening at the Curtain Theater. This production provides a glimpse into the life of a turn-of-the-century Texas family.

Lily Dale is the third out of nine plays in "The Orphan's Home Cycle" series by Foote. The series depicts the travels of a young man as he rambles across the country visiting relatives and experiencing life. He strives to leave behind his poor and neglected childhood and to create a decent life for himself.

Numerous characters who appeared in Foote's 1995 Pulitzer Prize award winning drama, The Young Man from Atlanta, reappear in Lily Dale. Foote wrote over 40 plays, including two Academy Award-winning screenplays, To Kill a Mockingbird and Tender Mercies.

Lily Dale is set in early 20th century in Houston. Horace Robedaux, whom the series revolves around, returns home to his family for a visit. There he encounters his step-father, mother and Lily Dale, his sister. Family tensions are evident as they reunite once again.

Horace's family portrays a "typical" family of the early 1900s. His step-father's work ethic focuses on the belief of self-sufficiency. Eighteen-year-old Lily strives to be a pianist and a composer, despite her lack of talent, because it is an acceptable career for a woman of that time.

Lily Dale is directed by Linda McInerney, a M.F.A. candidate in the Directing graduate program. She is the founder of Old Deerfield Productions and directed Overruled, a one-act play, which was performed earlier in the fall semester.

Foote has received significant praise for his work in theater. Theater critic for Dallas Morning News, Jerome Weeks describes Foote's plays as "unconcernedly unfashionable, not topical, urbane or intellectual. They are, however, profoundly and humanely moral, sensitive to complex questions of families and individuals."

Lily Dale will be performed Friday, Dec. 6, Sat. Dec 7 and Monday Dec.9- Sat. Dec. 14 at the Curtain Theater at 8 p.m. In addition, a 2 p.m. matinee will be held on Saturday, Dec. 7. Tickets are $6 for general public and $3.50 for students and seniors.

A scene from the play Lily Dale.

COURTESY GRANGE THEATER DEPT.

Blue Christmas with Walter, Waters

Chess makes use of many strategies. The age-old record label's (now a division of MCA) newest is to re-release some of their most classic rare blues albums just before the holiday season rush. If there's somebody you know out there who, like Elvis, prefers a "Blue Christmas," then keep the four new Chess/MCA re-issues below in mind.

The first of the bunch is actually a re-issue of a re-issue. The Little Walter (master harmonica player predominant in the '50s) collection Confessin' The Blues was originally a 1974 collection of some of the Chicago bluesman's 1952-62 singles. On many of the 15 songs here, most are done with Little Walter Jacobs' backing band, the Aces. The Aces were an all-star band comprised of two guitarists chosen from Robert Jr. Lockwood, Luther Tucker or Louis Myers, with master composer/bassist Willie Dixon on bass, Otis Spann on piano and Fred Below on drums.

Together this group produced some of the rawest, grittiest and yet most musically intelligent blues in the long history of that music. Check out the rawness of Jacobs' playing on instrumentals like "Rocker" and "Lights Out," and enjoy the humorous "Temperature," sung by Jacobs in his booming tenor. "Up The Line" will raise the ears of Bob Dylan devotees with the baritone sax-organ hook on this 1962 song later being employed as the hook in Dylan's Blonde On Blonde (1966) rocker, "Obviously Five Believers."

In the same year as Little Walter's death, 1968, that bluesman's former employer and sideman Muddy Waters, went even more electric than he had most always been (having helped to invent the mellow electric Chicago blues) on Electric Mud. With a band that could easily have dropped acid during these sessions, Waters, probably tripping himself, played psychedelic versions of some of his old standbys like "I Just Want To Make Love To You," "Mannish Boy" and "Hoochie Coochie Man," as well as a few Dixon tunes and a captivating talking blues straight from the protest period, "Herbert Harper's Free Press News."

Electric Mud was, in a way, a thank you to all the young British and American rockers like The Rolling Stones, Eric Clapton and even Dylan who employed Waters' gutsy blues style to create the British Invasion sound, and, in general, the '60s blues-based rock sound.

With Etta James' 1974 album, Come A Little Closer, we probably have one of the best re-issues of the year. Recorded in a time when James was just getting over a hard personal time and a heroin addiction, she was able to really belt out some of the most powerful music ever sang.

Starting off with the funky, deep groove of "Out On The Street Again," which has a Curtis Mayfield-influenced sound, the CD from Chess/MCA is not so much straight blues, but more a mixed bag of blues, funk and just general soul, in the spiritual sense of the word. She could easily put a smile on George Clinton's face with "You Give Me What I Want," and then James makes Randy Newman's mellow "Let's Burn Down The Cornfields" as sexy as the theme of the song (a girl wanting to have sex with a man while watching the cornfields burn, basically), before taking her broad voice through many more powerful blues, soul romps and romantic ballads.

Long before he was tagged by Pepsi for some TV commercials, John Lee Hooker was playing his laid-back blues for privileged Bohemians and convicted felons alike. Live At the Cafe Au Go-Go (And Soledad Prison) (MCA) has a wealthy portion of the guitarist's relaxed, low, groove blues from 1966's Cafe Au Go-Go date (with Waters as guest), featuring the boogie of "One Bourbon, One Scotch, One Beer" and the desperate rage of mortality in "I'll Never Get Out Of These Blues Alive." The material from Soledad Prison features more rocking, upbeat tunes — especially "Boogie Everywhere I Go."

As for recent jazz releases, look to the following addition to the Blue Note re-issues I focused on in the last edition of this column,

"Two Consenting Adults:" Comedy duo to perform at Hampden Theatre.

By Jamie Sinsheimer
Collegian Staff

The stand-up comedy act "Two Consenting Adults" will appear at the University of Massachusetts Hampden Theatre on Dec. 8 at 7 p.m. The event is sponsored by the UMass Stonewall Center, the UMass Arts Council and Metroline, New England's Gay and Lesbian Magazine.

The performance, part of the monthly GLBT Café series, stars comedians Linda Herskovic and Eddie Sarfaty. The two play with such diverse topics as coming out to Herskovic's cat's life in New York City, family and phone sex. "Two Consenting Adults" provides a hilarious take on life in general and contemporary gay life in particular.

The two openly gay and lesbian comedians use sources of information from their lives and incorporate it within their performance. They have appeared both separately and together on college campuses, at fundraisers and at famous New York comedy clubs such as Caroline's, Comic Strip and Stand Up New York.

Herskovic was born and raised in the Bronx. She describes herself as "tough skinned, offensive, defensive, foul- mouthed, obnoxious, disrespectful, yet truly loveable."

When asked why she does comedy Herskovic replied, "If I wasn't doing this, I'd have to pay for therapy. I'm too cheap." Her comedy is about exposure, putting gay issues on the table.

She has been seen on Lifetime's "Girl's Night Out" and Late Date with Sari, and HBO's Real Sex. Formerly of the comedy trio No Family Values, she is now performing with Sarfaty. She recently completed a tour of the Southeast, including Louisiana, Alabama and Florida — part of the not-so-liberal deep South.

Eddie Sarfaty believes that everyone should come out to their parents — even straight people. Originally interested in acting, he attended the Eugene O'Neill Theatre Center. A friend suggested that Sarfaty try stand-up, since he loved to perform but did not feel so strongly about being someone else and playing characters, so he did, now performing with Herskovic.

A winner of the "search for the funniest gay comic" by Stand-Up New York, Sarfaty has been described as displaying "a subdued bitchiness just this side of wicked" — a review he likes.

"We've gotten great receptions from both gay and straight audiences," Sarfaty said. The two appeal to both lesbians and gay men in that they feel they are equal opportunity offenders.

Tickets are available at the door, $3 for students, $5 for the public. For information contact the Stonewall Center at 545-4824.

The Collegian wants to remind you that Spring Break is fast approaching. Start making your plans now- Here are a few suggestions for some...

Exciting Spring Break Escapes

SKI CRESTED BUTTE
THE LAST GREAT COLORADO SKI TOWN.
4-NIGHT VACATIONS STARTING AT $599.
Depart from Bradley International Airport Sunday or Monday. Vacations include: round trip airfare on, AmericanAirlines ground transfers in Colorado and lodging in Crested Butte.
CALL TODAY FOR ALL INCLUSIVE SKI PACKAGES. DISCOUNTED MULTI-DAY LIFT TICKETS ALSO AVAILABLE
1-800 998-2SKI

SPRING BREAK
CANCUN
AMERICA'S #1 SPRING BREAK TOUR OPERATOR
JAMAICA
29 YEARS EXPERIENCE • 400,000+ SATISFIED STUDENT TRAVELERS
BAHAMAS
LOWEST PRICES • BEST HOTELS • BEST FLIGHTS • BIGGEST PARTIES
Complete 7 Night Air & Hotel Packages from $399!
ALL COLLEGE TOURS SPRING BREAK PACKAGES INCLUDE:
• Round Trip Non Stop Airfare • College Tours famous VIP Party Package: FREE cover charges, FREE parties, FREE food & drinks!
• 7 Nights Hotel Accommodations • Round Trip Airport Hotel Transfers EXCLUSIVE special events, OVER $150 in savings!
CAMPUS REPS NEEDED • ORGANIZE A GROUP AND TRAVEL FREE
CALL TODAY! COLLEGE TOURS 800-959-4786

The Spring Break Experts Bring UMass Students Spring Break '97! This is our 11th Year.
Balloon Travel
Cancun, Key West, Jamaica, Bahamas, S. Padre Island, and Cruisers. Call us Anytime. 1-800-964-TRIP.

Spring Break '97
CANCUN JAMAICA DAYTONA PANAMA CITY
KILLINGTON SUGARBUSH SMUGGLERS NOTCH WHITEFACE LAKE PLACID
Best Price Best Offer
CONTACT On Campus SCOTT 253-7938
EMAIL:SURFNSAV@Javanet.com

CLASS travel #1 IN FUN
SPRING BREAK '97
CANCUN
NASSAU
Complete Packages From only $299!!!
LET NORTH AMERICA'S PREMIER STUDENT TRAVEL COMPANY BRING YOU TO THE WORLDS HOTTEST SPRING BREAK SPOTS TO ENJOY THE HOT SUN, WHITE SANDS AND INSANE PARTIES!!!
TRAVEL WITH THE BEST TRAVEL WITH CLASS!!
Find out How to GO FOR FREE & Earn Extra Cash!!!
CALL 800/919-9920

What's on Tonight?
Check out the Daily T.V. Listings
Starting Dec. 9

DON'T GO INTO HIBERNATION ON YOUR WINTER BREAK
Winter Intersession
January 2 - 17
... spend that time earning extra credits at UMass Lowell! If you want to move ahead in your educational program, and earn college credit, enroll in UMass Lowell's Winter Intersession. This highly concentrated session is also a great way to earn transfer credits if you're enrolled in another University. This year, make the most of your winter break... at UMass Lowell.
DAY CLASSES: Monday - Saturday, 9am - 12noon
EVENING CLASSES: Monday - Friday, 6 - 9pm Saturday 1 - 4pm
Credit Courses (3 credits) available in:
• Liberal Arts • Sciences • Mathematics • Computers • Social Sciences • Music • Management
Cost: $115.00 per undergraduate credit
For a Winter Intersession Course Bulletin, call the Division of Continuing Education/Office of Enrollment Services at (508) 934-2481.
Or just fill out the coupon and mail it to University of Massachusetts Lowell, Office of Enrollment Services/DCE, One University Avenue, Lowell, MA 01854-2881.
Name:
Address:
City:
State: Zip:
Phone: ( )
Institution Currently Attending:
UMass Lowell UNIVERSITY COLLEGE Division Of Continuing Education

ON SUNDAY DECEMBER 8TH, DON'T MISS ...
HOCKEY DAY IN THE VALLEY
UMASS VS. PROVIDENCE
GAME AT 2:00PM; PRE-GAME FUN STARTS AT 12:30PM
• A Skills Challenge where you show-off your talent in the Mullins Center during the game!
• THE GROUND ROUND & KLEINS ALL-SPORT SHOOT-OUTS !
• Autographs from UMass players after the game!
• Face Painting for the kids!
• On-Ice Prize Scramble
• Ground Round Treasure Hunt
• Prize Throw-Out - great UMass stuff!
• Great Giveaways -- like hockey sticks & t-shirts!

TOC Bar & Grill
Saturday Dec.7 at 7:30pm
UMASS vs. Wyoming
Munchie Specials Mon - Fri 4 - 7 PM
Free Popcorn Draft Beer Drink Specials & Micro Brews
GO UMass
11th Floor ❖ Campus Center
Mon.-Fri. 4pm - 12:30am
Sat. 3pm - 12:30am

■ water polo

continued from page 12

On the defensive side of the pool toils the senior leadership for the Minutemen. Co–captains Ron Gonen and Paul Engin — who have now both been to four straight NCAA championships — anchor the UMass defensive efforts.

Engin has emerged from his back–up role (to star net– minder Alex Mujica), and has progressed steadily all season, earning All–Eastern honors at the Eastern Championships.

"I'm glad I got the opportunity, and I'm glad that things went the way I wanted them at the end of the year," Engin said. "I'm hoping this year will be more rewarding being in the final four, being my senior year. Hopefully I'll come up big again like I did at Easterns."

Gonen is an intelligent player who routinely plays hard– nosed aggressive defense, and can shut down many of the opposition's scoring attacks.

The Cheltenham, Pa. native takes on much of the dirty work load, piling up the numbers in categories such as assists (44 — his 157 career assists are a UMass record) and steals (46) and blocks (4).

Gonen revels in the opportunity to play for a national championship. "When you play a sport for this long, you play a tremendous amount of games. Some you remember and some you forget," he said. "But when you play for an NCAA championship, you never, ever forget that game.

"So you really need to go in there, and for every second that you're in there make yourself proud of what you've done."

■ horn

continued from page 12

thanks for the Minutemaniacs, my escape from the early morning snowball fights at the Cage. Enjoy the games, folks — it is going to be a long winter.

• This year's men's basketball Top 25 will see tumultuous changes is the early going. Many people's pre-season No. 1 pick Cincinnati has already fallen to an unranked team. The Bearcats were beaten on a last second shot by regional rival Xavier, a member of the increasingly strong Atlantic 10 conference.

The A–10 is also represented by UMass, of course, and Rhode Island who will give the Minutemen a challenge for the top spot in the east division of the conference.

If you are looking for a sleeper team to root for this season, look at Providence in the Big East, and New Mexico in the WAC. PC has one of the best unknown big men in Austin Croshere, and an above average backcourt led by God Shammgod (this name writes checks his skills can cash), and Jamaal Thomas.

New Mexico had a big recruiting year before last season, picking up some great talent from the Albuquerque area and the southwest. Kenny Thomas just needs another scorer to join him on the court for the Lobos to have "the Pit" rocking in the Southeast quadrant of one of my favorite cities.

Jeremy R. Adams is a Collegian staff member.

V.O.D disk falters; Deadguy still angry

What's up boys and girls? I was originally going to dedicate this column to trashing major labels and The Mighty Mighty Bosstones' show, but a lot of stuff has happened so instead of whining, here's the column.

VISION OF DISORDER— S/T (Roadrunner Records) — I love V.O.D. and live they are still one of the best bands around, but this album sucks. It seems that V.O.D. forgot that it was their combination of old and new school with Tim's raw vocals that made them so special. This album is over–produced; Tim sounds like a cross between the guy from 311; the packaging looks like a rave flyer; and Supersoul is a bad label. The music leans to the metalish side of things, but is still better then 99 percent of bands in this genre. Buy their EP on SFT records or go see them live.

H2O — 7–inch (Orphan Records) — A good, if somewhat silly EP. "Telephone Song" is a great melodic hardcore song that reminds me of old Bad Religion or Youth Brigade. You get the cover of Minor Threat's "Salad Days." Sorry Toby, Ian did a better job. "Bad Boys" is a cover of the Inner Circle and Cops theme song. It's a fun song with silly lyrics that you probably won't understand if you don't know the band. There's a great sing–along in that one. There's also an instrumental on this.

DEADGUY — Screaming With The Deadguy Quintet (Victory Records) — First off, Tim Singer is a much better vocalist then Pops who sings on this EP. Deadguy continues to sound angrier, heavier and scarier then any other band around today. Overall this album reminds me a lot more of Today Is The Day or Neurosis than Black Flag, as it is a bit more technical then their last album. I listened to this before I went to bed the other night and I was afraid to turn the lights off.

• Halfraker just released their four song demo. I saw them open for Weston and they rocked. They have an energy level that borders on dangerous. They have a fast–paced, frenetic, punk/hardcore sound that will have you shaking your booty in no time.

• Murphy's Law are laying Pearl Street on Friday with Fastbreak and The Lordz Of Brooklyn. If you don't know what Murphy's Law sounds like, you should stop watching MTV. Fastbreak continue the Connecticut tradition of bands like Wide Awake and others—bring your hooded champion sweatshirt and circle pit till you drop.

• Doc Hopper are playing on Sunday at Pearl Street with Nigel Six, Sweet 16 and All Fall Down. Punk fans should check this out. Actually everyone should check this out and support the scene and all the hardwork Scott does.

Orange 9MM, Shift, Vision of Disorder and Groundzero are playing Pearl Street on Thursday night. Come check out a wide variety of New York's finest each doing their own thing. I promise Vision Of Disorder will be much better then their album indicates.

Hatebreed and Fury Of V will be playing a mosh–filled metalish extravaganza at Pearl Street next Friday night. These guys represent the new school in fashion and will leave a mark on you and your ears.

Once again bands — send me your stuff to review, tell me about upcoming basement shows, zines or whatever — I'd love to mention it. You have a voice — use it.

Adam Dlucagz is a Collegian columnist.

Try to fit this wish list in the sleigh, Santa

All I want for Christmas is a lot of things.

Unfortunately, I have to cope with the fact that I am a big boy now, and Mum and Pop are not going to accommodate my every whim. I will look instead to a less accommodating, but definitely wealthier party: the world of organized sports.

• I know I am not alone when I wish for the Minutemen basketball team to have a great season, but just as importantly, I wish for the Boston College Eagles to do poorly.

The college has denied admission for two of Jim O'Brien's Boston–based recruits for academic reasons, prompting a third recruit to question his commitment to the school. This definitely puts a cramp in O'Brien's plans, which I can't complain about the least bit.

Go Eagles — yeah, go straight down the drain.

• How sweet would it be if Lou Holtz all of a sudden decided he wanted to take the low road, and coach Massachusetts football next season. Never mind the fact that this is a virtually definite improbability — it would be, as I said, sweet.

Jeremy R. Adams

I know Lou's a compassionate man, and we do have that sign "Play like a champion, today!" at our Warren G., I mean Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium. Although UMass is not a likely avenue for the coach of the Fighting Irish, I am asking Santa, and he is known for miracles, right?

• How about a few more of those great Snickers commercials. "I'm Batman!" I love it!

• Hey Santa, how about you pitch in and get the Bruins a few goals. While you are at it, they could use a bit of defense. Oh, you know what? A little bit of consistent goaltending would not hurt. Congrats to my boys in black for beating the Habs' 4–3 on Wednesday. It only took them one measly 6–2 thrashing at the hands of those same Canadians to get up to their speed.

• One quick pretty please for the early gift of success for the water polo team at tonight's Final Four match. It's growing more and more obvious that it may take a year or two before our basketball team once again soars to those lofty heights.

I am sure that da' boyz in da baggy shorts will achieve greatness again before long, but for now I have to jump on the bandwagon of the dudes with the maroon and white plastic bags on their heads. Go UMass!

• Gosh, I wish I had a bunch of cool UMass napkins. Those of us who have never spent an evening in the press box at a Massachusetts revenue sporting event have to rely on accounts such as my own that they have really cool napkins there. The football ones look deceivingly like the scratchy brown napkins from the D.C., only they say (brace yourself, this is creative) "UMass Football" on them. I hear the basketball ones are similar, only they say "UMass Basketball" instead.

I have not actually been in one of these cool press boxes, but we have a few specimen of these fabulous works of art down here in the Collegian newsroom, and I can say that I have never heard a complaint on press row of a volleyball match, where we just use the regular ones from the D.C., if not just our sleeves.

• Do you hear what I hear? It's the collective plight of the Massachusetts dorm–confined: Oh, Santa... If you could only give us ESPN in the dorms. I'm not talking about one night stands when the hoop team is on, I mean for real! Every night. SportsCenter. We've been a really good campus, we have not rioted since the last major ESPN sporting event we saw... uh, whoops.

• I have a few friends who live in New Jersey, and luckily I have not had to cut off communication with them.

That is, they are not Nets fans.

Best wishes for Coach Calipari. I only hope that once he gets tired of losing a lot of games he will go back to college ball and resurrect some lowly program to the Final Four. I enjoyed watching him at work (I am just a freshman, so it was mostly on ESPN, of course) last season, but how great is he, really? It is not like he won a National Championship or anything.

Marcus Camby seems to be progressing well up in the Canadian tundra. At least his team has won a few games. I like Coach Cal, and wish him all the best, but it sure would be nice to hear him say something along the lines of "I miss UMass basketball! I am miserable lowlife scum for leaving! I suck!"

Jeremy R. Adams is a Collegian staff member.

Minutewomen start season at UNH

Track & field must overcome numerous injuries

By Corey Peter Goodman
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's indoor track and field team kicks off its 1996–97 campaign Saturday when it takes on rivals Northeastern University and the University of New Hampshire on the road at UNH.

The Minutewomen are coming off a banner year that saw only one blemish on their schedule, coming at the hands of Northeastern in the same opening day meet.

UMass' greatest challenge will be to knock off this deep Northeastern squad that boasts strong performers in sprints, jumps and throws.

To top the Huskies, UMass will need to overcome a heaping list of injuries to key team members.

Top sprinter and jumper Rosey Bryan is out indefinitely with a knee cap injury, as is Jamie Hedgecock, the talented freshman sprinter from Warwick, NY.

Sophomore sprinter and jumper Melanie Bell is banged up and lost until January. Alison Tostevin, a promising freshman in the shotput, will be on the shelf indefinitely.

Perhaps the most damaging loss to the Minutewomen lineup will be Anya Forrest, the Atlantic 10 champion in hurdles may be sidelined for the entire season with two fractured vertebrae.

The UMass lineup that will need step up includes Shelanda Irish in the long jump, Nicole Way in the triple jump and Andrea Comeau and Melissa Ward in the high jump. Throwing for the Minutewomen will be Shana Mitchell and Stephanie Townson.

Participating in both the 55–yard dash and the 200m race will be Irish, Raqueil Shelton and Emma Gardner. Tossed into the 200 mix will also be freshmen Sarah Brown and Elizabeth Shevlin.

Running the 400m race are Silifa Kenku, Jessica Mayerjack and Mary Eaton. The 500m race features Christine Kloiber and the 800m race is being run by Rebecca Donaghue, Lisa Flood and Monica Elmore.

The 1500m field includes Donaghue, Christy Martin and Kristin Donaldson. Tracy Meagher and Sally Hirsch will run the 1000m, while the 3000m race has Molly Dunlap, Katie Greenia and Sharon Tillotson competing for UMass.

■ hockey

continued from page 12

MAR CAO / COLLEGIAN

Rob Bonneau and the UMass hockey team face off against Providence College this weekend in Hockey East action.

nationally ranked BU and New Hampshire this season, they can have just as good a chance as the Friars did last year.

"I watched the Hockey East championships last year, and I had felt that even though we did not beat Providence last year, we were very close to them," Mallen said. "They had a couple of more high profile guys, like Joe Hulbig, and those five senior defensemen really carried them down the stretch.

"I just think right now this league is so competitive, and there is so much parity between the teams that anything can happen to anybody on any given night. [Last season] Providence really found a way, played a good, solid system and Pooley did a great job down the stretch."

So far, the season has been an emotional rollercoaster for UMass. The difference between wins and losses have literally been temporal in nature, more specifically, judged in the span of minutes and seconds.

In the Nov. 24 match with then–No. 4 Vermont at Gutterson Field House in Burlington, a 4–1 loss could have been a 2–1 nailbiter before seniors J.C. Ruid and Matt Stelljes scored twice in the first :52 of the second period.

A little under a month ago, the Minutemen had No. 2 New Hampshire against the ropes, but sophomore Jason Krog beat junior goalie Brian Regan top corner–glove side just :49 into overtime. Boston University's Matt Wright put the game away with 2:00 left in the third period on Nov. 2, with a UMass comeback bid at 4–3 falling short in that 6–3 loss.

Two of the reasons why the Minutemen have been close to winning against the top teams in the nation of late are seniors Gerry Cahill and Rob Bonneau. UMass special teams have been on a roll, with the No. 1 penalty kill unit of Cahill (7 goals, 3 assists) and co–captain Bonneau (8g, 10a) teaming up for four short–handed goals in the last four games. Bonneau's plus/minus rating is a healthy plus–10, with Cahill's at plus–5. Simply said, their offense has been sparked by their defense in the past few weeks.

The Friars are not the same as last year's championship squad, with Hulbig moving on to the Edmonton Oilers system and the nucleus of their defensive corps graduated. Those five seniors were the reason for last year's success, but PC does still have it's preseason All–Hockey East selections in goalie Dan Dennis and defenseman Hal Gill.

Gill was selected in the 1993 NHL Entry Draft by the current FleetCenter team, the Bruins, and Dennis was the first PC goalie to receive All–Hockey East honors since now–San Jose Shark Chris Terreri's playing days. Coupled with the sneaky, quick offensive threats of seniors David Green (6g, 10a), Russ Guzior (5g, 9a) and Travis Dillabough (6g, 7a), the Friars will still be a team to contend with for 90 minutes.

Mallen looks forward to getting back into conference action, and this will be a test for how consistent the Minutemen's play has become after a stretch of action away from Hockey East competition.

"It's a good thing to get back into Hockey East," Mallen said. "[Providence] is deep, talented and they work hard. These are the sort of games that will make or break us. If we come out with four points against Providence College, it will be a big step for us in the Hockey East standings."

■ hoop

continued from page 12

and the offensive focus has instead been switched to the newcomers.

Against the Hoyas, Larl Ketner had 13 points while pulling down as many rebounds. Freshman Ajmal Basit shot for nine points, while keeping even with Ketner on the boards.

The Cowboys comes to Mullins with a 14–point loss to Atlantic 10 member St. Joseph's at their backs, and hungry for a win to get back on track.

Cowboy's coach Joby Wright is no stranger to winning, having recieved his hoop education at the hands of Bob Knight at Indiana.

Wyoming features three players whose averages are in double digits. Guard LaDrell Whitehead leads the charge with 21 points per game, while HL Coleman (18 ppg) and Jeff Allen (11 ppg) add to the offense in the frontcourt. Coleman pulls down an average of 9.3 rebounds per game, wityh Allen grabbing anaverage of 8.3 boards.

Guards Gregg Sawyer and Jeron Roberts add depth to the Cowboy backcourt averaging 9.7 ppg and 8.3 ppg respectively. Roberts has dished out a team–high nine assists this season, while Sawyer follows closely behind with eight.

Massachusetts has been outscored this season by a 240–235 margin, though the Minutemen hold a 133–123 scoring advantage in the second half.

Wyoming, meanwhile, has been outscored 227–220, while also holding an advantage in the second half, 134–119.

Tomorrow's game marks the first meeting between the two schools.

Minuteman Notes: The University of Massachusetts Athletic Hall of Fame is slated to open Saturday night with a by–invitation–only dinner. The Hall of Fame, located on the third floor of the Mullins Center, will be open to the public weekdays.

Atlantic 10 Roundup

Wednesday night's scores:

Rhode Island 86, Brown 49
Wisconsin 64, Temple 57, OT
W. Kentucky 88, Duquesne 82
Miami, Ohio 92, Dayton 72

Weekend schedule:

Friday — La Salle vs. Southern Mississippi, Fordham at Seton Hall
Saturday — St. Bonaventure vs. Buffalo, Coastal Carolina at Virginia Tech, Florida at Duquesne, Temple vs. Georgia Tech, St. Joseph's vs. Tulsa, Delaware State at Dayton, La Salle at the Super Chevy Shootout
Sunday — Tulane at Temple, UNC–Greensboro at Virginia Tech, George Washington at Franklin National Bank Tournament

COLLEGIAN GRAPHICS
YAHOO!
Nothing like a good cup of coffee!

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
BE A BARTENDER
747-9388
SPRINGFIELD

GRAND OPENING!
Special Korean Cuisine
Authentic JAPANESE Restaurant
Gift Certificates Available
ICHIBAN
One Roundhouse Plaza, Northampton
(413)585-1185

We Deliver
Kai Chi
To UMass
Chinese-American Cuisine
Restaurant & Bar
Mt. Farms Mall, Rt. 9 Hadley • 586-2774
Open Sun-Thurs 12-11 pm
Fri-Sat 12-3 am
Enjoy HALF PRICE APPETIZERS
9 pm - Close • 7 Days a Week
Many Selections!
Example: Pu Pu (for 2) Reg. $11.99 Now $5.99
No other promos apply • EAT IN ONLY

Friday & Saturday weekly DRINK SPECIALS
Captain Morgan & Coke $2.00 16oz
Red Dog 16oz Drafts $1.50
Grape Crush $2.00 16oz
1/2 price Appetizer & Nachos 3-5 & 7-11 Fri & Sat
NO COVER BEFORE 10PM
Fun food, great times
THE PUB amherst
15 East Pleasant Street

BUCCI
HAIRCUTS ... $10. always
25 n. pleasant st amherst 256-0733
145 main st northampton 586-0155

UMass Student Legal Services Office
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995
CALL TODAY!
922 CAMPUS CENTER

UMass
Division of Continuing Education
Winter Session 1997
January 2-23
• More than 100 credit courses both day and evening
• Professional development courses, seminars, workshops
• Courses for recertification points for teachers
Register Now!
Call for a free course catalog - (413) 545-0107
e-mail: contined@admin.umass.edu
Division of Continuing Education · University of Massachusetts Amherst
Explore our Web site at http://www.umass.edu/contined/

CHEESE PIZZA SALE
$4.99 MEDIUM CHEESE PIZZA TOPPINGS $.99 EXTRA LIMIT 10 AT A TIME
$6.99 LARGE CHEESE PIZZA TOPPINGS $1.25 EXTRA LIMIT 10 AT A TIME
$8.99 EXTRA LARGE CHEESE TOPPINGS $1.50 EXTRA LIMIT 10 AT A TIME
DOMINO'S PIZZA AMHERST 256-8911 OPEN TILL 4AM
Expires 12/30/96 NOT GOOD WITH ANY OTHER SPECIAL

MINI MALL '96
Tuesday, December 10 thru Friday, December 13
is Coming
One-Stop Shopping Extravaganza! with over 40 vendors
9am-5pm
Student Union Ballroom
For more information call 549-1710

amc THEATRES
$2.50 (TWI-LITE) SHOW DAILY LIMITED TO SEATING
Bargain Special Engagement
MT. FARMS 4 MT. FARMS MALL ROUTE 9 HADLEY 584-9152
Call Theatre For Showtimes
DAYLIGHT* PG-13
SPACE JAM PG
MY FELLOW AMERICANS PG-13
ROMEO & JULIET PG-13
THE ENGLISH PATIENT* R
HAMPSHIRE 6 HAMPSHIRE MALL ROUTE 5 HADLEY 584-7555
Call Theatre For Showtimes
101 DALMATIONS* G
THE MIRROR HAS TWO FACES PG
STAR TREK: FIRST CONTACT PG-13
RANSOM R
JINGLE ALL THE WAY PG
THE PREACHER'S WIFE* PG

Magic Lantern
Presents
HOLLYWOOD NIGHT
Friday Night !
* Free Happy Hour Buffet Feature Gourmet Pizza's
* Prizes- T-Shirts, CD's, Hat's & $300.00 cash giveaway
* Concert Ticket (Meadow's & Foxwood Resort)
BUD DRY $2.25 BAR BOTTLES
"Come get treated like a star"
Wednesday Dec. 18TH
Our "World Famous" Amateur Night
$5.00 FIRST PLACE
BostonRd.-RTE.20-Palmer,MA (413) 283-9275

SNOWBOARDERS!
KLEIN'S ALL★SPORTS IS WHERE IT'S AT!
NALE ZEKE SNOWBOARD INCLUDES NALE BINDINGS $329.99
HUGE SELECTION OF BOARDS! NITRO, K2, MORROW, OXYGEN & NALE!
NEW 1997 LINES ARE IN!
Great Holiday Savings Going On Now In All Locations!!
AIRWALK SNOWBOARD BOOTS Advantage $150 OFF
All The Hottest Styles In Snowboard Clothing
FREE GORE MOUNTAIN LIFT TICKET With Purchase Of Any Snowboard Package
Hampshire Mall, Hadley • Berkshire Mall, Lanesboro

Come to Barnes & Noble at Boston University's JOB FAIR!
and get off to a great start this winter...
If you want a fast-paced job that will get your winter off to a great start, it's here at Barnes & Noble at Boston University, Boston's best source for books... and the best choice for retail jobs. Find out more at our JOB FAIR on December 11th.
You could be a sales associate - just long enought to get us through the winter rush and get your bank account in shape. Get here early enough and you could be hired on the spot!
• Part-time jobs • Immediate hires • Flexible scheduling • Store discount up to 35% • Friendly work environment
WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 11TH 10AM - 3PM CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE
If you want to get a closer look at us, but can't come to our JOB FAIR, call (617) 236-7402 for more information.
We are an equal opportunity employer.
Barnes & Noble AT BOSTON UNIVERSITY

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

Women s Long Term Therapy Group Weekly 1 1/2 hr meetings Tuesday night in Amherst For info, call (413)774-5418

ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Sisters of the Delta Zeta Sorority would like to invite all University women to a Holiday Rush party on December 10 from 7-9pm

Attention All University Women Come meet the Sisters of CHI OMEGA Sorority at a Pre-Rush party on Tuesday, December 10 from 8:00-8:00 Please call Michalla at 549-8958 for more information

AUTO FOR SALE

Puffton Village Large 1 bedroom, dishwasher/AC, $515 Heat included Available Jan 1 Call Helene or Doug 549-0766

1 BDRM Puffton Apt. New carpet, paint, appliances Available January 1st $515/month Call Doug 549-7463

2 bedroom, available now - Spring 97 Bus route $720 (negotiable) Heat included 545-5725 (days) 548-7216 (night)

AUTO FOR SALE

'90 Honda Civic AC, runs great 119,000 miles $2500.00 or B/O Call John 256-1059

Escort 86 runs good, new tires, battery, etc. $800 o/b o 546-2398 lv msg

AUTO FOR SALE

1984 Honda Accord 3-door hatchback Very Reliable, Looks Good Asking $785.00 or best offer Call Jon 546-6115

'87 Grand Am 4dr, 52K miles, cruise, A/C, no rust $7995 Day 545-2040, Night 549-8675

Blue Volvevgen Golf Excellant condition, born in 1990, $3000 negotiable Call Guy 253-7243

EMPLOYMENT

Exceptional Summer Opportunity— Camp Wayne, NE PA Sports oriented. Counselor/specialists for all land/water sports including tennis, camping, climbing/ropes, rocketry, roller hockey, sailing/waterskiing, A&C, drama, video. Campus Interviews Tuesday, March 11. Please call (800)727-9296

Relief Counselors needed for Residential Mental Health program serving adults in Amherst. Pay is $7.00/hr. This is a great job for students needing to gain much needed work experience in the human services field! Please call David Mastroianni at 584-7329 or send resume and cover letter to: Amherst Apts., 129 King St. Northampton, MA 01060 Fax is 582-4252

SPRING BREAK '97! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica and Florida EARN FREE TRIPS AND CASH Call (800)700-0790

Afterschool Care in our home for our two sons ages 9 & 5. M,T,Th 3:15-5:15, W 1-5 In Amherst. Car needed. 253-5197 Starting 1/97

EMPLOYMENT

JOBS OVER BREAK- Work with Sierra Club to protect wilderness $275-$375/wk Fun atmosphere Call Terri at 256-6434

TROPICAL RESORTS HIRING - Students needed! Entry-level & career positions available Worldwide Call Resort Employment Services (206) 971-3600 ext. R50013

INTERNATIONAL EMPLOYMENT - Earn up to $25-$45/hour teaching basic convarsational English in Japan, Taiwan, S Korea. No teaching background or Asian languages required For info call (206) 971-3570 ext. J50016

FOR RENT

Cape Cod group & summer rentals Waterfront houses, Falmouth area. (508)477-8000

FOR SALE

Kawood Car Sete Player $50, Power Preriar 100W AMP $50 Call Joe 253-6381

Epiphone Les Paul w/hardcase $325 or B/O Boss Drum Machine $300 or B/O Call Joe 253-6381

486 Computer $300, 386= $200/ 286= $100/ Printer $10 Stava (413)566-3314 #2

Apple IIGS W/Printer + extra disk drive Like new $50 545-4348

26" Color TV for sale Brand new $150 Paul 885-2019

FOR SALE

Complete 5 CD Stereo System! 5 band graphic equalizer, dual tape deck and powerful recaiver $250 or B/O Call Craig 546-6811

FOUND

Found Watch in Mahar Auditorium Please call to identify 5-0170

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 bedroom house near Puffers Pond. Spacious house with huge yard. Call Mike, Dan or Jackye 549-9182

MISCELLANEOUS

New Metabolism Breakthrough Lose 5-100 lbs Guaranteed $35 (800)776-9503 Doctor Approved

JAZZ BANDS

Jazz Band Needed Experienced or not, Come jam at our party. Will pay Dec. 6th Call 253-6520

PERSONALS

To the new Sisters of DZ Congrats on initiation. Wa knew you could do it. Lova in DZ

SO LONG PAT! The Supplies Clerks at the University Store would like to wish Patricia Potter, our Manager, a Happy and Fun Retirement! Today will conclude her 32 years of service at the Store. We will miss you, Pat! With love from your boys - Brian, Khalid, Syad, Merlin, Jaff, Josh, Rafael, Glen and Carlos

ROOM FOR RENT

Room in 3 bedroom apt. in Sunderland cool housemates, good-sized room, $218.00/month Ask for Jennifer 665-0985 Availabala 1/1-8/31

Spring Semester Non-smoking female(s) to rent large room near campus & town Call 549-3992

Looking for female to share 2 bdr apt. in Sundarland on bus route Dates- Jan./Feb. 1- Aug. 31 Call 665-9056

Looking for female roommates to share 4 bedroom apt Spring '97 on bus route Must seal! Chaap!! Call ASAP Ask for Laura 253-0823

Three females seeking one non-smoking female to share Mill Valley apartment Jan. 1-May 31 Rent negotiable Call Jess at 253-1797

ROOM WANTED

Two responsible 26 year old undergraduate male students desparate for somewhere to stay over Wintar Intarsession Call Ed at 546-4818

ROOMATE WANTED

One bedroom available in two bedroom apt. Jan 1st Free heat and water Call 549-4089

Looking for a roommate to live in townhouses with 3 cool chicks! Starting January Call Jamie 549-5767

One Bedroom Available in Puffton two bedroom apartment Female wanted On Bus Route 549-9293

ROOMATE WANTED

One male to share rent at Townehouse Apts. for spring semester. Call 549-5993

Three friendly females looking for roommate to share Mill Valley Apt $150 including heat and hot water Call Sarah at 256-9780

Female Wanted to share bedroom in Puffton Village beginning Jan 1 or ASAP Call 549-4748

Room Available 5 bedroom house in Sunderland on bus route Call for details. 665-8029

SERVICES

Computer Consultant Available WEB Authoring, Software & Hardware Installs, Repairs Call 6-0953

GORILLAGRAMS Birthdays, Roses, Balloons, etc Send the crazy gorilla We'll go anywhere, anytime!! Student rates available! Call 256-0287

Money for College. Millions of dollars unclaimed every year Results guaranteed Service is free Thousands of sources of Financial Aid available Hurry Call (413) 538-0041 for more info

Computer Problems? Need an upgrade? In-house service, call Scream Savers 549-0083

Pregnent? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

TO SUBLET

1 bedroom apartment on bus line Available 1/97-9/97 $550/mo or best offer. Call 865-3860

Take over our lease 2/97 Large 2 bedroom apt 5 min. from campus. $660 Call 549-8511

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK AND ALL OTHER TRAVEL SPECIAL RATES FOR STUDENTS INSIDE NJ CALL (201)833-0300 OUTSIDE NJ CALL (800)699-4988

Winter Break Killington with the UMass Ski Club Five nights lodging, 5 days skiing. During Collegiate Ski Fest $260 Call 545-3437

New Year's in Quebec City 3-5 nights in Quebec Hilton Optional Skiing at Mont Ste Anne Starts at $89 Call 545-3437 or 1-800-232-2415

Scuba Spring Break Dive Key Largo, Fl Earn 2 credits! March 16-22 Mandatory Meeting 2/28 7pm Herter 227 Call Project Deep @ 800-282-0977

Spring Break '97 Hottest destinations and coolest vacations! Lowest prices guaranteed! Organize small group, travel free! Call for free info (800)426-7710

TRAVELTIME has great deals for group and individual travel plans Call Corinne 587-3011 413 781-6150

WANTED TO RENT

2 bedroom apt. for Jan 1 within 10 min to UMass Call Amy 546-4424

WANTED

Desperate for Bibliographic Material Must have: vigorous book list, textbook, workbooks, and problems for Statistics 111 (School of Continuing Education) Will pay above $150 My phone may have been defective in previous weeks. Therefore, please notify by mail May Dauwson, 67 Amity Place, Amherst, MA 01002-2255. Don't hesitate, I am correct. Thank you

Rates

$2.00 minimum/day

Students

20¢ per word/day

All others

40¢ per word/day

NO REFUNDS

Please write clearly and legibly. We are not responsible for errors resulting from illegible handwriting or type.

Standard Headings

Activities
Announcements
Apartment For Rent
Auto For Sale
Employment
Entertainment
For Sale
Found (2 days Free)
Happy Birthday
Houses For Rent
Instruction
Lost
Musicians
Miscellaneous
Motorcycles
Personals
Room For Rent
Room Wanted
Roommate Wanted
Services
Summer Sublet
To Sublet
Travel
Transportation
Wanted to Rent
Wanted

Personals Policy

1. All personals MUST be proofread by Collegian classified employees before payment and acceptance of the classified.
2. Last names MAY NOT be used in personals. ONLY first names and initials are allowed. The only exceptions are for birthday or congratulations personals, in which case the full name may be used.
3. Phone numbers are not allowed in personals. NO EXCEPTIONS
4. Addresses are not allowed in personals. this means dorm room numbers as well.
5. Personals of a threatening or derogatory nature are not acceptable. Personals of a vindictive or libelous nature are not acceptable. Personals may not be used for the purpose of harassment.
6. Profanity may not be used in personals.
7. The personals section is for personals only. The personals section may NOT be used to sell items, seek roommates, advertise meetings, etc.
8. All personals must have the name, signature, and UMass I.D. number of the student placing the as filled in on the insertion order. Non-students must provide a valid driver's license and the license number must be recorded on the insertion order. Use of false identification or misrepresentation is subject to penalties under the law.
9. The Collegian reserves the right to refuse or to edit any personal that does not meet the Collegian's standards in accordance with the statutes of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Answers to Yesterday's Puzzle

B	L	U	R		C	R	O	O	N		H	E	R	S
R	O	N	A		L	O	D	G	E		A	G	U	A
A	V	I	V		A	T	O	L	L		V	O	L	T
D	E	T	E	R	S		R	E	L	E	A	S	E	S
			L	A	P	S		D	Y	A	N
E	C	L	I	P	S	E	D		B	R	A	S	S	Y
T	H	I	N			D	R	I	L	L		W	H	O
H	O	N	G		B	E	A	D	Y		N	A	I	L
I	R	E		B	A	R	G	E			O	I	N	K
C	E	N	S	U	S		S	A	R	D	I	N	E	S
			L	O	S	S		L	E	N	S
S	T	R	A	Y	I	N	G		B	A	I	T	E	D
C	O	O	T		N	O	O	S	E			E	I	R	E
O	B	O	E		E	R	R	O	L		S	L	O	P
W	E	T	S		T	E	E	N	S		T	E	S	T

Collegian Classifieds

"they work"

CROSSWORD

ACROSS

1. Under
6. Cats' feet
10. Baseball hit out of play
14. "____ a Piano" (2 wds.)
15. Has debts
16. Ingrid's role in Casablanca
17. Waited
18. Feigned
20. Soothsayer
21. Skeleton, for one
22. Dated
23. Misrepresents
25. Brunch or lunch
27. Elliptical
30. Egg ___ yung
31. Like a DeMille film
35. By hook or by ___
36. Author Sillitoe
37. Genetic initials
38. Vats
39. ___ City (Houston film)
40. Goldbricks
42. Hol's guitar, for short
43. Members of the pine family
44. Eyeshadow
45. Take ten
47. Fury
48. Kitchen tools
49. Grade
51. On which "du jour" is found
52. Held title
55. Slicker
56. Brood
60. Geometric measures
63. "That girl" who married Phil
64. Tarzan portrayer Lincoln
65. "Wall Street ___"
66. Pointless
67. English money: abbr.
68. No ifs, ___, or buts
69. Cartography collection

DOWN

1. Parts of overalls
2. Author Wiesel
3. Mineral vein
4. Disregard
5. Units
6. Leo and Pious
7. Wrong
8. Lka Willie Winkie
9. Jet-setting transport
10. Ending
11. Poet Sharon
12. Exploits
13. Do dock work
18. Clean air gp.
21. Beer barrel
24. Readies a printing press
25. Encircling trenches
26. Vast age
27. Befall
28. Truck stop?
29. Misplaces
30. Warning light
32. Babble
33. Surmise
34. Break coverings
36. Burning
40. Area above the flank
41. Junk-mail addressee
43. ___ to be tied
46. Oscillation
48. Cookbook item: abbr.
50. Lemon refresher
51. Prepares to paint windows
52. Poetic works
53. Droop
54. Appellative
55. Talking horse (2 wds.)
57. Ph.D. postulant's exam
58. Arm bone
59. Little piggies
61. Airline letters
62. Bard's time
63. Alice star

The Massachusetts DAILY COLLEGIAN
New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967 http://www.umass.edu/rso/colegian

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21–April 20

A small misunderstanding could cause big disappointments down the line. Keep things moving smoothly and your payoff will come in the end result. Take health precautions during the holidays. Remember to let little annoyances pass.

TAURUS
April 21–May 21

Holidays can be a time for remembering both the good and bad. Don't let the past keep you down, keep looking for the positive. Friends and family will provide plenty of support during this time. Let yourself look ahead, and you'll have a good time.

GEMINI
May 22–June 21

Don't get so caught up in others' problems that you lose sight of your own responsibilities. Helping out is fine, but know when to draw the line. People will seek your advice and look to you for guidance. Stay in the background if possible, but be willing to stand up for your rights.

CANCER
June 22–July 22

Getting away from the holiday hustle could work wonders. Even a short trip or some time alone can be beneficial in restoring confidence and vitality. Take things one step at a time—going slowly is your best way of gaining ground now.

LEO
July 23–August 23

See things realistically. Don't get caught up in trying to be perfect. Do your best and things will work out. Other people appreciate your efforts and will try to help if you let them. It may be time for a special treat after financial concerns are worked out.

VIRGO
August 24–September 22

Refuse to be snowed by people who don't have your best interests at heart. It's a good time to get straight answers, so be sure to ask the right questions. A short break will help you get back in action.

LIBRA
September 23–October 23

The holidays offer a chance for refreshing change. Make a list, check it twice and stick to it so you can stay focused amid all the hustle and bustle. Step back and take a close look at what you need to do and what can be delegated.

SCORPIO
October 24–November 22

Going overboard on gifts won't pay off. People will like you for your good qualities. Let others take center stage, you'll accomplish more by staying in the background. Remember health and diet issues—don't overindulge. Moderation is crucial during this time.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23–December 21

Keep your eye on the bottom line. Your natural abilities find an appreciative audience and you're chosen for a project which could benefit you personally and professionally. Look for good things in the new year and provide support for a friend or family member in need.

CAPRICORN
December 22–January 20

Enjoy the sights and sounds of the season, you'll accomplish everything that needs to get done. Catch up on paperwork and make sure your facts are right. Sloppy work now can come back to haunt you later. Make time for other people.

AQUARIUS
January 21–February 18

Home and family are major pieces of the holiday puzzle. Fitting everything together takes time but will pay dividends in good feelings. While doing for others, remember to take time for yourself. Take a night to stay in and catch up on your reading.

PISCES
February 19–March 20

Much can be accomplished behind the scenes. Hold your temper and let others off the hook to gain better negotiating position. The holidays could be stressful if you try to please everybody. Know when to let go.

For Entertainment Purposes Only

Always Wanted One of Those By A. Morse & S. Dumas

Drabble By Kevin Fagan

Frumpy the Clown Judd Winick

Robotmen By Jim Meddick

Dilbert By Scott Adams

8 Years in Braces By Eric Petersen

Loold By Roger & Salem Salloom

I think it's important to analyze your dreams.

I was dreaming of a hammer hitting me over and over again on the head. I would start to feel better when it stopped.

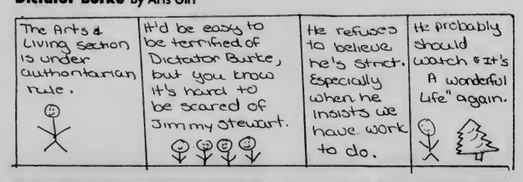
Then I would turn my head at just the correct angle so that the hammer could continue to hit me on the head.

Then I'd pull away... for a few minutes, then I'd put my head right into it again.

My ex-girlfriend's father owned a hardware store. I think there's a connection...

but...I don't know what it is. If you can help me, call 1-800-HIT ME AGAIN.

University² By Frank Cho



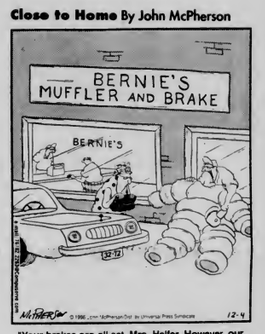
Leedee By Mike Rybicki

Social Norm By Mr. K

Dictator Burke By Arts Girl

Quote of the Day

"I've been flushed from the bathroom of your heart."



– Johnny Cash

Night Teenage Angst Poetry of the Day Graphics

You Don't Understand (age 13)

Adolescence	The confusion and isn't half as	The choices.
Fun	It's like you
As you might think.	Just don't care.
You don't
Understand.	It pisses me off.
What I'm going through	The way you think
Cause all you	Adolescence
Do is drink	Is such a
	Bloat.
The pain, the	You just don't
Problems the pressure	Understand
Is too much	It all so
For me to bear.	Kiss my little Ass.

Close to Home By John McPherson

"Your brakes are all set, Mrs. Helfer. However, our insurance company requires that you wear this protective suit throughout our 90-day warranty period."

Today's Staff

Chris Connor
Night Editor

Seema Gangatirkar
Copy Editor

Courtney Smith
Photo Technician

Christopher Brown
Production Supervisor

Dan Bodah
Matt McCarthy
Production

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Franklin

LUNCH	DINNER
Hot Jello Sandwich	Jello Margherita
Savory Jello Bake	Jello Alfresco
Elbow Jello/Sauce	Pasta Shells with Jello
Lentil Jello Chili	Basil Jello Broth

Hampton

LUNCH	DINNER
Grilled Crud/Bun	Crud Parmesan
Crudatouille	Tempeh Crud Fry
Hot Crud on Rye	Crudabilities
Vegan Crud	Tri-Colored Crud

Worcester

LUNCH	DINNER
Ziti/Italian Scrod Sauce	Scrod Divan
Scrod Tacos	Vegetarian Scrod
Hungarian Scrod Bake	Mandarin Scrod
Broccoli & Scrod	Scrod Alfresco

Berkshire

LUNCH	DINNER
Southern-Fried Pus	Black-Eyed Pus
Hearty Pus Stew	Pasta Shells with Pus
Vegan Pus Bake	Pusloaf
Pus Pizza	Grilled Pus on Branola

Sports

UM water polo heads west to vie for national title

Minutemen face Trojans in first round

By Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.
Collegian Staff

No team from the East has ever gone to the NCAA water polo championships and won more than one game. Hence no eastern water polo squad has ever brought the NCAA title back over the Mississippi

The one eastern team to head out to California for the tourney and bring home a victory will be at the water polo final four for the second straight season tonight in hopes to bring home more than just a first round or consolation win.

The No. 12 Massachusetts Minutemen will look to make more history and cement their place as the dominant Eastern water polo team, as well as legitimate national power.

"What we have to do is play our game, not be intimidated," UMass coach Russ Yarworth said. "We have to play hard. And to play hard, you gotta play all out, that doesn't just mean physically up and down the pool. You have to be concentrating, you have to be thinking, you have to be doing the things that are going to make you a successful water polo player.

"We're admittedly the underdog, but anything can happen. That's why they play the games"

In 1993, the first of four straight NCAA tournament appearances for UMass, the Minutemen emerged triumphant over UC-San Diego, 15-13 in a second round, loser's bracket match.

The last two years, Yarworth's charges ran up against top- seed Cal-Berkeley in the first round, playing well, but falling short in both matches. The Minutemen won't have to worry about the Golden Bears this season as Cal did not manage to make their way into the final four field.

Instead in the first round, UMass will swim off against top-ranked Southern California, the No. 1 seed in the tourney. The other first round contest pits No. 3 nationally ranked UCLA against No. 8 UC-Davis.

"We can play with any team in the country. I sincerely believe that," junior field player Marc Staudenbauer said. "We have a good shot to do something special."

To emerge, and do something special, the Minutemen will need to play four quarters of UMass water polo, something they struggled to do early in the season. They need to maintain their emotional composure and avoid late-game letdowns in order to pull off any upsets.

A major factor in the Minutemen's success will be the play of Eastern Championship MVP Brian Stahl.

Stahl is the cornerstone of a talented, physical and deep corps of two-meter scorers on the UMass squad. The sophomore from Wyomissing, Pa. led the Minutemen in goals scored (80 goals, 5 two-pointers) and in total points (112). He also committed 28 fouls, more an attribute to his lack of maturity than his aggressiveness on defense, but as the season has gone on he has improved on controlling his erratic behavior.

The club's second-leading scorer is also a sophomore two- meter sniper. Gabriel Marrero.

Marrero, in contrast to Stahl's physical play, is more of a finesse scorer, but he is no less effective. On the season, Marrero found the back of the net 46 times (43 goals, 3 two-pointers).

"I like to be involved with the team, but involved with every teammate," Marrero said. "I score many goals, but my main thing is to maintain my team play."

The return of Staudenbauer from an early season thumb injury is also key to the UMass chances for an NCAA water polo coup.

Yarworth refers to him as the team's best all-around player. The California native brings so many intangibles to a young, aggressive, anxious team, and will be a driving force toward the national championship.

"I consider myself so lucky," said Staudenbauer, reflecting on missing most of the 1996 season. "When you're down in the dumps, everyone telling ya, 'I feel so bad for you.' And now, to be able to look at them and say, 'I feel bad for you, I'm going to NCAAs again and I'm going to play.' It's a great feeling."

Turn to WATER POLO, page 8

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

Brian Stahl will be a key component if the UMass men's water polo team is to be a factor in this weekend's NCAA Championships.

1996 NCAA WATER POLO FINAL FOUR
La Jolla, California
Massachusetts Minutemen, No. 12
vs.
Southern California, No. 1

UMASS PROBABLE STARTERS:

CAPTAINS

Paul Engin
Senior Goalie

Ron Gonen
Senior Field

Marc Standenbauer
Brian Stahl
Gabriel Marrero
J.C. Limardo
Aldo Roman

Coach:
Russ Yarworth

Minutewomen try to duplicate major upset at Stanford

By Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.
Collegian Staff

On Nov. 24 last year, the Massachusetts women's basketball team beat then-No. 8 Stanford 65-56 at the William D. Mullins Center to start a 12-game home unbeaten streak.

This year the Minutewomen take to the road to face current No. 1 Stanford in the hopes of pulling off another monumental upset, and in the process dragging their record (2-2) over .500 for the first time this season.

UMass and Stanford tip off at 10:30 p.m. (EST) tonight at Maples Pavillion. The game will be broadcast live on WMUA 91.1 FM starting at 10:15 p.m.

Last year's top UMass scorer in the Minutewoman–Cardinal clash was junior forward Tez Kraft, who knocked down a season-high 14 points in the victory. Senior co- captain Beth Kuzmeski had nine points in the upset, but both players will be in their civvies tonight, suffering from nagging injuries that will keep them out for at least another two weeks.

The two injured Minutewomen will heap much off the scoring burden on to the shoulders of senior co-captain Crystal Carroll, who leads the UMass contingent with a 17.0 points per game average.

The preseason second team All-Atlantic 10 power forward also leads the squad with seven rebounds a contest, and has logged a team-high 36.8 minutes in each of the first four games.

Kelly Van Huisen, a freshman from Haverhill, has become the emotional floor leader for the Minutewomen in the early going with her electrifying play and seemingly effortless handle of the game.

In her first four collegiate games, she is averaging 14.8 points, 4.8 rebounds and 2.8 assists. On the other hand, she has turned the ball over an average of 6.3 times a contest, mostly a product of her aggressive style.

She will most likely have the unenviable task of matching up against 6-foot-2 shooting guard Kate Starbird, who is widely regarded as the nation's most talented women's basketball player.

Starbird has averaged 19.3 points per game in Stanford's first six games, all wins, in which the Cardinal has outscored its opponents by a total of 498-357.

The Tacoma, Wa. native has hauled in four rebounds and dished out five assists per game in '96. She has also posted a .520 shooting percentage behind the arc (13-for-25).

Starbird is joined in the backcourt by senior point guard Jamila Wideman, a former standout at Amherst Regional High School.

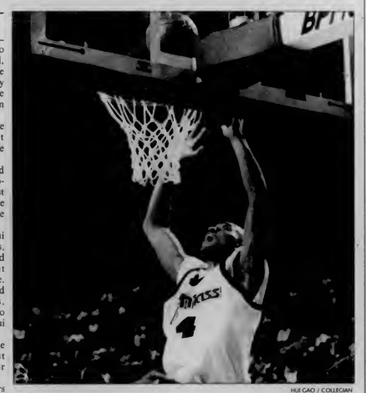
Wideman runs the high-scoring show for the Cardinal averaging 5.2 assists to just two turnovers. She also paces the Stanford women with 2.7 steals per contest. Wideman is the only one of five Cardinal starters who doesn't score in double figures (6.5 ppg), as opposed to the pair of Minutewomen (Carroll and Van Huisen) who notch double figures on a nightly basis.

The junior front court trio of forwards Vanessa Nygaard (15.5 ppg, 8.5 rpg) and Olympia Scott (15.3 ppg, 8.5 rpg) and center Naomi Mulitauaopele (13.5 ppg, 6.2 rpg) round out the powerful Stanford starting five.

UM hoping to find answers at home

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

Given the fact that their road trip to Hawaii didn't go as well as planned, and that Georgetown took advantage of a revenge opportunity Wednesday night, the members of the Massachusetts men's basketball team are probably glad to be back home.



UMass (1-3) begins a three-game homestand tomorrow night against Wyoming (1-2) at 7 p.m. at the William D. Mullins Center.

UMass is struggling for a win, and one against the Cowboys would provide a much needed confidence boost heading into a week that sees the Minutemen face No. 13 Fresno State and Drexel.

With a 1-2 showing in the Maui Invitational and a loss to the Hoyas, Massachusetts has struggled to find the consistent senior leadership it needs in order to settle into a groove. In Hawaii, forward Tyrone Weeks led the charge in the first two games, while shooting guard Carmelo Travieso took over in the final Maui contest.

With Weeks holding crutches while watching the game against Gerogetown, point guard Edgar Padilla guided UMass with 15 points.

But the fact remains that the seniors have been plagued by erractic play,

HUI GAO / COLLEGIAN

Lari Ketner was a spark for the men's basketball team against Georgetown Wednesday night, and will be called on to help UMass tomorrow against Wyoming.

Turn to HOOP, page 9

UMass faces Providence in return to HE action

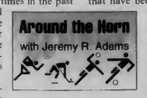
By Jorma Kansanen
Collegian Staff

In the valley of political correctness, there will be nothing PC about this weekend's matchup for the Massachusetts hockey team. Only the initials of its adversary, that is, and you have to think that PC Land will just not be the same.

After a three-week layoff from Hockey East competition, the Minutemen (5-7, 2-6 in HE) will get back into the holiday mix with a home-and-home series with the Friars of Providence College.

After going 3-1 in non-conference play versus Army, Vermont and Air Force, UMass is looking for that kind of success against their fellow HE brethren.

The first game of this series will be tonight (7 p.m.) at Schneider Arena on the outskirts of Providence, Rhode Island. In a special afternoon matinee, the teams will face off Sunday afternoon (2 p.m.) in the William D. Mullins Center.



The Friars (6-7-1, 4-3-1 in HE) are coming off of a stellar finish to their 1995-96 campaign. Like a knife through butter, Providence skated through Boston College, Boston University and Maine to hoist the postseason Hockey East championship in the cavernous confines of the FleetCenter.

Picked seventh in last season's preseason polls, PC came out of relative nowhere, fighting — and defeating — the powers that were in last March's playoffs.

This season, coach Paul Pooley and his squad look to become the first Friar team in school history to capture two consecutive HE titles.

For UMass coach Joe Mallen, he can see some similarities between PC and his own team. If the Minutemen can improve on their close defeats to

Pats fans now have something to cheer about

The Patriots' bandwagon is rolling as fast as ever, and for once it may be safe to jump aboard. It has been a tough rebuilding session for New England fans since the relatively historic 10-6 campaign in coach Bill Parcells' second season at the Pats' helm.

Boston area sports fans have been all too eager to sing the praises of their teams after short winning streaks or deceivingly unimportant wins. So many times in the past few years one could turn the radio dial to a sports talk show and hear some loudmouth praising the Pats for their excellent play, saying that Drew Bledsoe was the second coming for his magnificent two touchdown passes, ignoring his three interceptions.

For the first time in probably 10 seasons, the Patriots have compiled a string of wins and top notch performances that make them worthy of a little respect. The loss to Denver and the shoddy performance of the Chargers this past Sunday cannot be overlooked, but for once New England has the personnel to capitalize on a weak opponent and rebound from a hard loss.

I feel confident that for once we have a top-level college or professional football team to take pride in here in New England, and the timing is good since Boston College obviously could not handle the pressures of the spotlight.

• Now on to real football (soccer people, don't you love saying that?). It's a glorious thing that professional soccer at (or at least near) the top level is being played on U.S. soil, but the people who organized the MLS made the same mistakes their predecessors did in the '70s. It is a good thing that the planners tried to format the league so more people would understand and appreciate it, but they cannot ignore the fact that it is a European-born sport, and there are teams and leagues that have been thriving as long as the oldest baseball club in the United States.

There are certain traditions and methods that would only benefit the MLS that have been ignored in favor of more traditionally American systems. One that would be especially unique in the U.S. that has been the formula for success and competition for decades in Europe and South America is the system of relegation and promotion.

This system involves structuring teams into divisions and moving the best teams from one division up to the next, as the worse clubs assume the positions in the lower group. There is already a wealth of regional and division two-level professional programs in the U.S. that would only profit more from this system.

The benefits of this program include more rivalries and competition throughout the ranks of the division. Every team in the league has a reason to play their best all season long.

This program does not fly for the MLS because advertisers like it when more focus is on fewer teams. If the Boston area has just the Revolution to root for, it is easier for Reebok to make money merchandising to the entire area. Would it not be excellent to be able to go to Springfield and root for the local third division club, loaded with talented players dreaming of their shot at the next level? If we were up for just a little longer drive, we could hit Hartford to see the Division two club vying for one of the spots in next year's MLS. I guess only the lucky will ever see how exciting this is, I just hope I get to study abroad someday...

• Three hardy Boston cheers for Valeri Kamensky, the Colorado Avalanche forward who out-cheapoed the cheap master himself, Ulf Samuelson. In a game against the Broadway Blueshirts, Kamensky refused to take the chippy play of Samuelson lightly and provided Cam Neely's oldest nemesis with a hefty Thanksgiving serving of right hand directly to his Darth Vader-masked face.

Mr. Kamensky, on behalf of the Boston sports community, I salute you for your blatant cheapness towards one of the last pure jerks of the NHL. Thank you for putting the goon where he belongs — that is, stretched out on his back on the ice.

• If the student ticket distribution system is at all faulty or inconvenient (do you like waiting in line at 6 a.m. in a blizzard and then maybe not getting the tickets you've paid part of a fee for?), it should be changed.

It is not important how our system compares to those at other universities. It only matters that if we do not like it, and we should not have to deal with it. I give

Turn to HORN, page 8

The Massachusetts
DAILY COLLEGIAN
Volume CVI Issue 65 New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967 Monday, December 9, 1996

The King of gifts

From Elvis to vibrators, the Collegian Arts & Living staff explores the art of gift buying in today's special section (see Arts & Living, page 6).

Wyoming blows a fuse

Sophomore center Lari Ketner attacked the cowboys with a killer baby hookshot in an interesting 90-72 Mullins Center win. See Sports Weekend for the story.

WORLD

Rangoon Univ. protest postpones convocation

RANGOON, Burma (AP) — Convocation ceremonies at Rangoon University were indefinitely postponed Sunday after two protests last week drew hundreds of students to the streets of the Burmese capital.

State radio and television announced the cancellation of the Dec. 13 and 14 ceremonies, as well as a rehearsal Monday. No explanation was given.

Authorities early Saturday dispersed a mainly peaceful overnight street protest by several hundred university students. Some of the more than 260 protesters detained apparently have been released. It was the third student demonstration since October and the second in a week.

The protests stemmed from the police beating of three students and were the biggest since Burma's military regime used troops to crush a 1988 pro-democracy uprising.

On Sunday, students at the main university campus were heard chanting slogans of defiance, local residents said. The universities are closed to outsiders.

There had been speculation that the government would order the capital's universities shut down and students sent back to their homes in the provinces, the traditional method used by authorities to quash protests.

NATION

Images of the Duke spark controversy

LOS ANGELES (AP) — John Wayne — a symbol of rugged individualism or bigotry? The Duke has become a lightning rod for racial and labor tensions within the Los Angeles County Fire Department. Dozens of posters of the Duke have cropped up at county firehouses since a confrontation over one Wayne image in September, a union official said.

Some members of the department say the issue really reflects strife between union and management as well as white resentment of affirmative action in the department.

"This is bigger than John Wayne," said Brent Burton, a member of the Stentorians, an association of black firefighters. "This is union-management and race."

The Wayne feud may represent deeper morale problems, acknowledged Fire Chief P. Michael Freeman. He said he has set up panels of firefighters and brought in consultants to deal with the issue.

Backers of the Duke, who died in 1979, consider him an icon of American individualism — the kind of guy who would not be pushed around by a boss.

Some black firefighters, however, consider him a bigot because of a 1971 Playboy magazine interview in which he said blacks were incapable of handling leadership roles.

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Tue	Wed
HIGH: 37 LOW: 20	HIGH: 35 LOW: 18	HIGH: 33 LOW: 21

INSIDE
Arts & Living.....page 6
Classifieds .....page 10
Comics.....page 11
Crossword .....page 10
Editorial.....page 4
FYI.....page 2
News.....page 3
Sports .....page 12

Blizzard causes UMass, town blackouts

Mullins Center, Southwest Area left in the dark

By Laura Stock
Collegian Staff

Dormitories, traffic and a University of Massachusetts men's basketball game all fell victim to sweeping snowfall Saturday night in the Pioneer Valley.

Major power outages which plagued nearby towns, campus residential areas and the Mullins Center resulted from heavy snowfall, strong winds and downed trees. Emergency generators which failed to work properly added to problems on campus.

According to Kay Scalan, a spokesperson for the University, the power went out around 9:30 p.m. at the Mullins Center with approximately seven minutes left in the men's basketball game against Wyoming, as well as in the Southwest Residential Area and other buildings on campus.

Scanlan asked Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance Paul Tage why emergency lighting failed to turn on when the power outage hit the Mullins Center.

"The backup generator was going on, but it was 'idling'," Scanlan said. "The generator was not putting out enough power to put on the lights."

After approximately 15 minutes in the darkness, Mullins Center staff told people to leave, assisting them with flashlights.

Chief of Police John Luippold said that police officers assisted Mullins Center staff with flashlights and that television news crews offered their camera lights for extra visibility.

"After helping inside the Mullins Center, we had to shift personnel outside to deal with people leaving," Luippold said.

Police officers assisted drivers who were without traffic lights and students who were walking back to residence halls.

Julia Sears, a Resident Assistant (RA) from Emerson Residence Hall was on duty that night.

"Being in James [Residence Hall]

Turn to SNOW, page 3

LAUREN KOSKY/COLLEGIAN

Students trek through heavy snow on their way to class Friday morning.

LAUREN KOSKY/COLLEGIAN

Saturday night snowball fights led to many broken windows around campus.

Marxist theory reevaluated; UMass scholars teach theory at academic conference

By Daniel Bodah
Collegian Staff

From Thursday to yesterday afternoon, the University of Massachusetts was host to the largest academic conference on Marxist theory in North America.

The conference consisted of over 175 panels and discussion groups, as well as four main plenary sessions. With over 1,000 attendees preregistered, and many more registering on-site, the Campus Center was bustling with activity throughout the weekend. Groups such as the U.S. Communist Party, Bolshevik Tendency, Deep Dish T.V., Routledge Press and the Trotskyite Worker's Vanguard newspaper set up tables and distributed information in the Campus Center's basement.

The history of the conference is rooted in the early '70s development of a radical economics program within the UMass graduate economics department. With the classical economic offerings of the department failing to draw significant numbers of students, the formation of this program of Marxist and radical economic theory helped provide a lifeline to continued existence for the department.

Stephen Resnick, Richard Wolff, Samuel Bowles, James Crotty and Herbert Gintis were scholars hired at that time to teach the new classes. Many of them, as well as a number of their former students, were prominent as organizers or speakers during the conference's many panels.

Topics of the panels ranged over ground as diverse as Marxist critiques of pop music ("Noisemaking: Rethinking Jacques Attali"), analysis of the growing economic and political power of the prison industry in the U.S. ("Lock Down U.S.A.") and lessons to be learned from the Zapatista rebellion in Chiapas, Mexico ("Postmodern Socialism(s) and the Zapatista Struggle").

Marxism is a theory that has grown from the 19th century writings of Karl Marx. Marx travelled widely throughout Europe during the Industrial Revolution, participating in workers' movements from Russia to Germany to England.

In his monumental economic history Das Kapital, Marx traced the emergence of the capitalist economic system from the feudal system of the middle ages. In analyzing the Industrial Revolution of his day, Marx saw that the class of capitalists who owned the factories and the class of workers who were employed in them would inevitably come into conflict. Capitalism, as seen by Marxist theory, creates enormous oppression for the majority of people — the workers, in order to concentrate wealth in the small group who own the factories — the capitalists.

Marx and co-author Frederick Engels argued in their 1848 Communist Manifesto that only by a massive uprising against the capitalists could workers ever create a society in which there was no oppression.

Marx made it clear that he saw all oppression and inequality to be based on economic exploitation. However, contemporary theories which reject this approach were represented at the conference this weekend.

Many contemporary Marxists, especially since the collapse of the Soviet Union and numerous Eastern European socialist governments, believe that race, gender and other social roles are also important in understanding the way that capitalism exploits. For example, Cornell West, a professor of Afro-American studies at Harvard University, spoke Friday night on the importance of race as a factor in capitalist exploitation.

West argued that seeing the exploitation of capitalism as having mostly to do with economic class is the result of the European heritage of most Marxist theorists. He claimed that to understand the ways in which capitalism oppresses, one cannot simply look at class — race must also be considered.

Associate Professor of Anthropology at UMass, Arturo

Turn to CONFERENCE, page 3

News Analysis

LAUREN KOSKY/COLLEGIAN

UMass Prof. Arturo Escobar

UMass athletes honored in new Hall of Fame in Mullins Center

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

For years, an athletic Hall of Fame at the University of Massachusetts has been an idea, a concept without a home.

Now, thanks to the generosity of George "Trigger" Burke, a member of UMass class of 1956, that Hall of Fame is a reality.

"The Hall of Fame is no longer a virtual Hall of Fame," UMass Chancellor David K. Scott said at the Hall's opening. "Now it is a real Hall of Fame, a tangible Hall of Fame."

The hall, named the George "Trigger" Burke University of Massachusetts Athletic Hall of Fame, in honor of its key financial contributor, was created by the Varsity "M" Club to honor the accomplishments of UMass athletes.

"It's one thing to have played [sports] at a university," Athletic Director Bob Marcum said. "It's another thing to be remembered for it."

An invitation-only dinner preceding the men's basketball game against Wyoming celebrated the opening of the facility Saturday night.

"This is a great moment for those associated with the athletic program, and for those who hold near and dear these accomplishments," Holyoke Community College President David Bartley said speaking for UMass President William Bulger.

Senator John Kerry attended the dinner as an honored guest of Burke's.

"The training on the athletic field is the best kind," Kerry said, lauding the achievements of the honorees.

Located adjacent to the VIP room on the third floor of the William D. Mullins Center, the Hall of Fame houses the trophies earned by various athletic teams, plaques with portraits of the inductees and a display case that serves to capture the spirit of UMass sports. A marble inlaid floor features the UMass emblem and column-supported arches proclaim the area as the Hall of Fame. Beneath the main display case and the wall of plaques lies the inscription "Through these achievements we gain tradition, pride and motivation."

A plaque at the far end of the room honors Burke, a member of the basketball team who was inducted into the Hall of Fame in 1981 and whose basketball jersey is retired in the Mullins Center. The plaque states that Burke is "a man who loves this University."

When he spoke at Saturday's dinner, Burke wasted no time confirming that.

"I'm so happy and so proud that I came to this University," he said.

Twenty-four athletes have been inducted into the Hall of Fame, since its inception. Seven members, or representatives thereof, were present at Saturday's opening.

In all, the 24 members, honored with portraits by artist Neil Portnoy, are: Jeannine Burger, George "Trigger" Burke, Lou Bush, George Cain, Tony Chambers, Bernie Dallas, Fritz Ellert, Julius Erving, Kid Gore, Emory Grayson, Dick Hoss, Greg Landry, Joe Lojko, Earl Lorden, Justin McCarthy, Warren McGuirk, Clifton Morey, Mill Morin, Noel Reebenacker, George Richason, Joe Rogers, Al Skinner, John Stewart and Randy Thomas.

The Hall of Fame is open to the public from 8:30 a.m. – 5 p.m. weekdays.

CASEY KANE/COLLEGIAN

The main display case at the new UMass Althletic Hall of Fame features old jerseys, trophies and game paraphanelia.

For Your Information

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Monday, Dec. 9

Lecture — The Cannabis Reform Coalition will host a speech by the author of the critically-acclaimed "On Drugs," Professor David Lensen, during the coalition's upcoming general meeting at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Religious — Chabad House and the Chabad Student Coalition will jointly sponsor a UMass public menorah lighting at noon on the Student Union Lawn.

Tuesday, Dec. 10

Lecture — Peter Lewenberg, Executive Vice President of Morris Alper and a UMass trustee, will give a lecture on food Marketing principles at 4 p.m. in room 805-09 of the Campus Center.

Performance — The Fire and Water Cafe in Northampton presents Susan Scotto and her performance art piece "Five Meditations on Barbie" at 9 p.m. For more information, call 586-8336.

Wednesday, Dec. 11

Poetry Reading — Spectrum magazine is sponsoring a poetry and prose reading in the Student Union Art Gallery at 7:30 p.m. If you would like to read, contact the Spectrum office at 545-2240 or 406 E Student Union.

Notices

Dance — The Northeast School of Dance Studio in Northampton will hold a dance spree every Friday from 8:30 p.m.-midnight. People can dance to variety of music in a smoke and alcohol-free environment. All ages welcome. Sliding scale. For more information, call 584-8167.

Dancing — UMass Ballroom Dance meetings are every Tuesday and Thursday at 5:15 p.m. in room 101 Totman. Come learn to dance, newcomers welcome. For more information, contact Milly Delesus at 546-1083.

Employment — The Department of Consumer Studies is seeking a candidate to fill the position of Computer Coordinator. The applicant must be a grad student. Please send resume with references to: Dr. Sheila Mammen, Dept. of Consumer Studies, 101 Skinner Hall, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Ma, 01003. For more information, contact Dr. Mammen at 545-2391.

Health — To help students and their families stay healthy and access University Health Services more easily, members of the Health Reach International team are available to help you find answers to your questions and concerns: Mondays from 4:30-6:30 p.m. in the Health Education Dept., UHS room 248 (call 577-5181 for more info) and from 4:30-6:30 p.m. in the Community Room H-4 North Village; Tuesdays from 6:30-8:30 p.m. in the International Lounge, Prince House (call 545-2299 for more info); Wednesdays from 4:30-6:30 p.m. in the Community Room, 411 Lincoln . All conversations are confidential.

Meeting — Alanon meetings are held Mondays in room 801 and Thursdays in room 802 of the Campus Center from noon-1 p.m.

Meeting — P.O.W.E.R., the Progressive Organization for Women's Rights holds their weekly meetings on Thursdays at 6 p.m. in the Student Union room 306. All men and women are welcome.

Meeting — The Pakistan Students Association has its weekly meetings every Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. Check for the room number at the information desk. For further details, contact Musharraf at 546-6295.

Meeting — Anthropology Undergraduate Caucus meets every Wednesday at 7:45 p.m. in Machmer 201. All anthropology undergraduate minors and majors welcome.

Meeting — Weekly "Schulchan Ivrit" held every Wednesday at 3 p.m. in the Bluewall Cafe. All Israelis and other Hebrew speakers welcome.

Meeting — The Animal Rights Coalition meetings are every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in room 306 of the Student Union. For more information, call the ARC office at 545-1925.

Menorah Lighting — All are welcome to attend the lighting of the 6-foot menorah in front of the Hillel House, 388 N. Pleasant St., Amherst, at the following times: Mon. Dec. 9 at 7 p.m.; Tues. Dec. 10 at 4:30 p.m.; Wed. Dec. 11 at 8:30 p.m.; Thurs. Dec. 12 at 6 p.m.

New Organization — WICC (West Indian/Caribbean Coalition) meets every Sunday evening at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center Coffee Shop. Anyone from the West Indies or the Caribbean is encouraged to attend, as well as anyone interested in the culture. For more information, contact Tony at 546-6487 or Nizam at 546-3967.

New Organization — Attention Biracial and Multiracial Students on campus. A new organization is forming and your help is needed. If interested, call Jordan at 546-3548.

Religious — The Muslim Student Association at the University of Massachusetts invites all Muslims in the Amherst area to weekly Friday prayer from noon to 1 p.m. in the United Asia Cultural Center Room (in the basement of Worcester Dining Commons). For more information, call Uama at 256-8482 or Lalli at 253-0874.

Staff Needed — The UMass Index yearbook needs staff in all departments. Editorial positions are available in Photo, Layout, Copy and Marketing departments. An assistant copy editor and assistant sports editor are also needed. Meetings are held on Wednesdays at 7 p.m., 304 Student Union, or call 545-0848 if interested.

Support Group — Tobacco cessation support group meets weekly on Wednesday evenings from 7 to 8 p.m. in the Campus Center to help people quit smoking and chewing tobacco. See schedule next to elevators for room number or call Steve at 577-5181 for further information.

Talent Needed — The UMass Asian American Students Association is looking for Asian/American hip hop, reggae and R&B dancers for next semester's annual Asian Night production to be held on April 11, 1997. Contact Geneva at 546-2714 for audition information.

Volunteer — The Zoo in Forest Park at Springfield has a wealth of diverse volunteer opportunities available for people who love animals and are committed to conservation education. For further information about the Zoo and a volunteer application, please call (413) 733-2251.

Depression is a serious threat to anyone that has a brain.

Depression in a suppression of brain activity that can strike anyone. It can make life unbearable, but it is also readily, medically treatable. And that's something you should always keep in mind.

#1 Cause of Suicide UNTREATED DEPRESSION

Public Service message from SAIVE (Suicide Awareness!Voices of Education) http://www.save.org

[cranial] COLLISION

From NYC

MR. KLEEN • YOUNG COWBOY • LOTUS • LAU'd BROS. • HUSH • AARON S.

LIVE DJs SPINNIN'
jungle - house - techno - hip hop - tribal
CASH BAR! (21 + ID)

$6 all ages

FRIDAY DECEMBER 13th 1996
Campus Center Auditorium
UMASS 7pm - 2am
Tickets available at TIX Unlimited
Student Union, 545-0412

Meet the Author
Marty Dobrow
will be signing copies of his book
GOING BIGTIME
The Spectacular Rise of UMass Basketball
Tuesday December, 10 12pm - 2pm
Campus Center Concourse
20% OFF
Publishers Price at the University Store
A Great Gift for any UMass Fan

UNIVERSITY STORE
Campus Center 545 - 2619
Hours: M - F 9 - 5 SAT 10 - 5

Storm leaves Bay State in the dark

FITCHBURG, Mass. (AP) - Phillip LeFevre lived in Chicago so he knows a little something about wind and weather. But the weekend storm that socked parts of the state with a dozen or more inches of snow or soaking rains left him shaking his head.

"I've never seen a snowstorm like this in my life," said LeFevre, 28, of Belmont, who drove home along Route 2 in Fitchburg at the height of the storm Saturday. "Everything was white, the trees were down everywhere, you had to swerve to avoid them. Every stoplight I hit wasn't working."

Two days of snow delivered a one-two punch to parts of Massachusetts, burying some towns in over two feet of snow and leaving more than 100,000 residents in the dark.

The American Red Cross was working Sunday to find shelter for families who were without power and heat.

At noon, more than 300 crews from as far away as New Jersey were working to restore power to 113,000 New England Electric customers, especially in the Merrimack Valley and Central Massachusetts. Power lines were strained by branches that sagged under the weight of the snow that began falling shortly after 7 p.m. Saturday.

After midnight, 36,000 Boston Edison customers were without electricity outside of Boston, said company spokeswoman JoAnne O'Leary. By mid-afternoon, power was restored for all but 12,000 customers in Acton, Wayland, Sudbury, Framingham and Ashland. O'Leary said electricity would be returned by early evening. "It's been a long night for a lot of people," O'Leary said. Trees were also falling, some of them on busy highways — and on cars.

Downed trees caused police to close sections of Route 3 in the northern part of the state. Many other roads, including sections of Routes 62 and 128 were closed temporarily.

There were no reported fatalities from the accidents, but several people were taken to hospitals.

In Princeton, a tree went through a driver's windshield, but didn't seriously injure the driver, police said. A tree also fell on a woman in Chelmsford, but didn't cause her serious injury. "We've had trees on people, trees on cars, trees into houses, cars into houses," said a Chelmsford police dispatcher. "It's been crazy."

The brunt of the snow hit the north central and western parts of the state. The National Weather Service said the storm dumped 18 inches of new snow in Ashburnham, leaving 26 inches on the ground after the two storms. Worcester was digging out from 14 inches of snow, while Springfield was recovering from a mere 8 inches of accumulation.

Elizabeth Parry, 63, tried to shovel outside her Ashburnham home but couldn't.

"I'm not going to go play in the snow, but I have a year-old Suburu that's great in the snow ," Parry said after her driveway was plowed. "I'm going to get in my car and drive on some of these snow laden roads. That's how I'm going to play in the snow."

Supreme Court to rule on sex predators

By Matt Truell
Associated Press

TOPEKA, Kan. — Leroy Hendricks had a way of attracting kids. They'd gather to watch him fly his remote-controlled airplane in a park. Sometimes, he'd buy them illicit treats, like cigarettes and chewing tobacco.

At some point, he started molesting them. And he says only his death will guarantee that he stops.

Now the 62-year-old former carnival worker is at the center of a closely watched constitutional battle which the U.S. Supreme Court will take up tomorrow.

The question is whether states may confine sexually violent predators after their prison terms are completed. Kansas law allows that, if a prisoner is diagnosed with a personality disorder or mental abnormality that makes them a threat to sexually prey on children.

Hendricks already has spent more than half of the last 36 years in prisons or state hospitals for crimes against children. The justices will review a ruling that struck down Kansas' 1994 law as unconstitutional. A decision is expected next year. Forty-five states and territories have filed documents supporting the Kansas appeal, including five states with sexual predator laws: Arizona, California, Minnesota, Washington and Wisconsin.

Hendricks began exposing himself to girls while he was a young airman at McConnell Air Base in Wichita. He was convicted in 1956 and fined $2.90.

His first prison term came in 1960 in Washington state, where he spent two years behind bars for molesting two boys. In 1963, he was convicted of molesting a 7-year-old boy in Seattle.

After spending time at a state hospital, Hendricks was released in 1965 — and was arrested two years later for taking indecent liberties with an 8-year-old girl and her 11-year-old brother. He served five years in prison.

Hendricks was sent back to prison in 1984 for attempting to molest two 13-year-old boys in a Wichita electronics store where he worked.

When he was released 10 years later, a prosecutor argued that Hendricks was a sexually violent predator and should be locked up. At his commitment trial, Hendricks himself testified that only his death would guarantee he would never again molest a child. A jury sent him to the state's mental health facility in Larned, where he is one of nine men declared sexual predators. They can be held there for treatment until doctors decide they no longer pose a threat. Exams are conducted at least once a year.

Then, however, the Kansas Supreme Court said the law violated Hendricks' due-process rights because it allowed him to be committed without proof he is mentally ill.

Attorney General Carla Stovall immediately appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court, keeping Hendricks confined. She expects the court to question whether Hendricks' alleged mental abnormality merits confinement.

"The key is that the court has never ruled exactly what you have to have for that mental condition," Stovall said. "Mr. Hendricks' 40-year history of abusing children is much more than idiosyncratic behavior."

Stovall contends that Hendricks, who was not treated for sexual deviance during his Kansas prison term, should continue to receive the 30 hours of weekly therapy Larned provides.

"We're spending almost $100,000 per predator at Larned for their care, custody and treatment," she said. "The average tends to be about $20,000 per inmate in the Department of Corrections system, so it's clear we're doing something very, very different for these predators versus the inmates."

Hendricks' lawyer, Thomas Weilert of Wichita, said the confinement is an "extension of his criminal sentence" that violates constitutional protections against double jeopardy. "It's a second prosecution for the same acts that occurred in 1984," Weilert said.

UMass
Division of Continuing Education
Winter Session 1997
January 2-23

- More than 100 credit courses both day and evening
- Professional development courses, seminars, workshops
- Courses for recertification points for teachers

Register Now!
Call for a free course catalog - (413) 545-0107
e-mail: contined@admin.umass.edu
Division of Continuing Education · University of Massachusetts Amherst
Explore our Web site at http://www.umass.edu/contined/

snow

continued from page 1

was difficult because there was no emergency lighting," Sears said. "Obviously [James] residents were scared, but we allowed candles to be lit because it was so dark."

One of the concerns of some RAs was that with no backup generators in the two afflicted dorms, fire alarms would not be activated if a candle caused a fire.

Several snowball fights erupted in Southwest, according to RAs and police sources. Chris Cook, an RA from Coolidge Residence Hall reported that a window was broken in Coolidge, but they had difficulty getting police supervision because they were busy with traffic.

Roving groups of individuals engaging in snowball fights were apparent to police mostly in Southwest and Central Residential Areas, as well as in Orchard Hill and Sylvan Residential Areas.

"Teams of officers were dispatched to disperse individuals throwing snowballs," Luippold said.

Police also closed off food delivery to campus until early Sunday morning due to dangerous roads and problems with delivery persons being hit with snowballs.

Luippold said police responded to a number of calls regarding snowballs being thrown at cars and windows, however the exact total was not available due to the police station's power outage and loss of computer use.

"The exact estimate of damage done on campus will take a few days to assess," Luippold said. Housing Services and Auxiliary Services will estimate the damage done on campus.

Luippold could not confirm reports of students travelling to fraternity row and off campus to throw snowballs, but the Amherst Police did receive calls about snowball fights.

"Throughout the town, there were complaints about snowballs being thrown at cars," Michael Johnson, an Amherst police officer who was on duty Saturday night said.

"Downed power lines and car accidents were our first priority," Johnson said. "We did not have time to handle the typical college calls. Snowball fights are kind of minor."

Dan Backer, a member of Zeta Psi fraternity (whose house suffered a broken window from a snowball fight) witnessed groups of people walking down North Pleasant Street throwing snowballs.

"A huge hoard of people went past fraternity row towards Amherst College," Backer said.

The Amherst College Police Chief was not available for comment.

No injuries were reported, and no arrests were made regarding snowball fights, disorderly conduct or property damage either on campus or in Amherst Saturday night.

CASEY ANNE/COLLEGIAN

Mullins Center officials set up emergency lighting after a storm related power outage ceased Saturday night's game.

conference

continued from page 1

Escobar, spoke Sunday about the struggles of black and indigenous people in the rainforest of Colombia. These people, he said, are not only challenging the economic exploitation they suffer at the hands of the Colombian government, but also such problems as environmental destruction as well as the right of the Colombian state to claim the territory in which they live.

Joining Escobar, Roger Burbach of the Center for the Study of the Americas presented perhaps the clearest outline of new directions which Marxism can take in presenting alternatives to capitalism. He rejects Marx's view that an enormous revolution is the only way capitalism can end, and instead envisions a gradual process by which local alternative groups, such as the Zapatistas, will begin organizing non-exploitative societies within the larger, international capitalist realm.

Rawlings confident in Ghanian vote

By Beth Duff-Brown
Associated Press

ACCRA, Ghana — President Jerry Rawlings vowed to carry his 17-year-old revolution into the next century as he voted Saturday in elections marking the first time a government in this West African country has survived a full term.

The election pitted the street-smart fighter pilot who overthrew two governments — in 1979 and 1981 — against an Oxford-educated intellectual who vowed to raise living standards and end corruption.

"I'm going to continue concentrating on protecting the tree of freedom that was planted in the revolution of '79," Rawlings said after voting beneath the palm trees at a polling station behind his seaside residence, the Castle.

Wearing his trademark dark aviator glasses, Rawlings predicted he would get as much as 60 percent of the vote.

About 9 million people were eligible to vote for the president and all 200 seats in the National Assembly. Results were expected Monday from some 20,000 polling stations.

Campaigning was marred by violent clashes and allegations of corruption against Rawling's administration, but there were no reports of serious problems during voting.

"He is our man," said Rawlings supporter Jeffrey Agbenowu, a civil servant who spent three hours scooting over, seat by seat, on the long line of benches leading up to the Castle polling station. "It hasn't been easy, but he's trying. You can't ask for more than that."

Rawlings' opponent said Ghanaians should ask for more. John Agyekum Kufuor, candidate of the opposition Great Alliance, noted that despite international praise for Rawlings' economic reforms, inflation stands at 37 percent and unemployment is between 20 and 30 percent. Further, he reminded voters, it took Rawlings a decade to lift his ban on opposition parties after the 1981 coup. "Don't just read the balance books," said Charles Adjah, an unemployed Kufuor supporter. "Come and see the reality. We want to see better employment for the youth; I don't want to keep relying on charity all the time."

The voting marked the first time since independence from Britain in 1957 that an elected Ghanaian government had completed its term without being overthrown at gunpoint or forced to step down. It was a rare display of political stability in a region plagued by civil wars and military coups.

But it also highlighted the tendency of coup leaders to reinvent themselves as democratic leaders to remain in power.

The presidents of neighboring Niger, Togo, Burkina Faso, Guinea, and Gambia all seized power by force and have remained there mostly through elections that were either boycotted by opponents or orchestrated to virtually eliminate opposition chances.

Rawlings, 49, was a charismatic fighter pilot who first came to power in a bloody 1979 coup, vowing to end corruption. He allowed civilian elections — only to attempt a second coup two years later. That attempt failed and landed Rawlings in prison, but within days he broke out and toppled the elected government. Rawlings ruled over a single-party state until elections in 1992, which he won with nearly 59 percent of the vote.

Rawlings has won praise for permitting an independent commission to oversee the election. In most West African countries, the ruling party organizes voting.

Serbian Supreme Court sparks protests

By Mark J. Porubcansky
Associated Press

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia— The Serbian Supreme Court ruled against opposition parties who say Slobodan Milosevic robbed them of an election victory in Belgrade, a verdict likely to ignite even more determined protests by thousands of demonstrators bent on driving Milosevic from power.

The opposition reported that eight protesters were arrested over the weekend, making 40 in the past week. One of those arrested was badly beaten, opposition officials said.

Even though Serbia's conflict was deepening, it appeared that Milosevic was more likely to be headed for a long struggle of tactics and politics rather than turning police loose on demonstrators.

Radomir Lazarevic, the chief of the Belgrade election commission, told reporters that the Supreme Court had rejected appeals that would have reinstated election victories in Belgrade. The court did not give reasons for its ruling, Lazarevic said. The Belgrade election commission's appeal dealt only with the capital city, but did not bode well for appeals of nullifications of elections in other cities.

When the commission appealed on Thursday, the opposition assumed it would give Milosevic an opportunity to defuse the daily protests that regularly bring 100,000 people onto the streets.

They are the largest and most sustained protests against Milosevic since he came to power in 1987.

On Sunday, 100,000 people were on the streets again. Former French culture minister Jack Lang, a member of the European Parliament, lent them their first significant Western support, declaring that "The Serbs are fighting in the name of all peoples who resist dictatorship."

Lazarevic said the election commission would appeal the Serbian Supreme Court ruling to the federal courts of Yugoslavia, the federation of Serbia and small Montenegro.

Milosevic's opponents said the issue was no longer who ran Belgrade, but who ran Serbia.

"What will prevail: The people's determination, or Milosevic's patience?" asked Zoran Djindjic, leader of the opposition Democratic Party.

"This is an uprising to win democracy," he told the crowd. "It's no longer important whether he would revoke the decisions which robbed us of our victory."

Vuk Draskovic, another opposition leader, added: "There is just one aim now: resignation of the head of state."

He said Serbs faced a simple choice: dignity or slavery. "We are not ready to be slaves," he said.

Kati Marton, the chairwoman of the New York-based Committee to Protect Journalists, said she met Milosevic on Saturday and offered him a proposed statement pledging to allow media to operate freely. "I handed him that manifesto, which he proceeded to tear up," she told reporters Sunday.

She said she took one of the pieces, and wrote in longhand another statement pledging support for freedom of the press in Yugoslavia, which Milosevic signed.

Daily protests in Serbia's second-largest city, Nis, also continued Sunday. The Fonet news agency said about 30,000 people — including students, taxi drivers, workers and farmers on their tractors — turned out.

Djindjic predicted that the protests would spread to 50 towns and cities throughout Serbia in the next two weeks, including towns where Milosevic's Socialists have power.

DAILY COLLEGIAN and ICP present:

The First Annual UMass bandwidth Spanning Fi...

CANCELED

...re for band listing!

Monday 9th

METRO NORTHAMPTON, MA

CANCELED

$5 admission ($4 with this ad)

ΑΧΩ·ΔΖ·ΣΔΤ·ΑΣΦ·ΣΚ·ΚΚΓ·ΙΓΥ·ΣΣΣ·ΧΩ·ΑΧΩ·ΔΖ·ΣΔΤ·ΑΕΦ·ΣΚ·

SORORITY RUSH '97

"The only thing missing is you!"

Registration: Dec 9th -13th
in Campus Center Concourse
All University Women are Welcome

REGISTER TO WIN

2 FREE TEDDY BEARS
24" "BIGFOOT" BEARS
Will be given Away to Two Lucky Winners.
Register to win in the University Store Clothing Department
Winners Will be drawn wednesday December 18
CAMPUS CENTER 545-2619 UNIVERSITY STORE
HOURS: M-F 9am-5pm Sat 10am-5pm
ENTRIES CLOSE TUESDAY DECEMBER 17

ENTRY FORM
ENTRIES CLOSE TUESDAY DECEMBER 17 • DRAWING WEDNESDAY DECEMBER 18
NAME_____ LOCAL PHONE_____
LOCAL ADDRESS_____
HOME ADDRESS_____
UNIVERSITY STORE EMPLOYEES ARE INELIGIBLE

The Massachusetts
DAILY COLLEGIAN
New England • Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592
http://www.umass.edu/rso/collegian

Jacob W. Michaels Editor-in-Chief Chris Taylor Conner Managing Editor
Alycia Hines Business Manager G. Tony Morse Production Manager Pete Servais Advertising Manager
David Voldan Advertising Production Manager Lisa Chiu Senior Diversity Editor

Mike Burke Arts & Living Editor Michelle Hillman Women's Issues Editor
Humphrey brown III Black Affairs Co-Editor Josh Sylvester Editorial Production Manager
Gregory Casimir Black Affairs Co-Editor Sean Horgan Systems Manager
Sunanda Ghosh Developing Nations Editor Eric R. Remillard IV Finance Manager
Mark McGrath Editorial/Opinion Editor Rob McDonald Circulation Manager
Jamie Smithwinter Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor Ryan Courtemanche Subscription Manager
Bryan Schwartzman Jewish Affairs Co-Editor Feisal Ahmad Marketing Manager
Sarah Kimmel Jewish Affairs Co-Editor Renee LeBlanc Classifieds Manager
Lisa Chiu Multicultural Affairs Editor Lyle A. Henry Operations Manager
Michael Elliott News Editor Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Elizabeth Brown Photography Editor Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Casey Kane Sports Co-Editor Thomas F. Sweeney, Jr. Graphics Advisor/Instructor
Chris Stamm Sports Co-Editor David Quist Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Opinion/Editorial

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

U. S. Government: asleep at the wheel

Daniel E. Levenson

The next time you open a magazine or turn on the television, don't assume what you're seeing is objective — in fact it may not even be the whole truth.

With the growth of giant corporations and the assimilation of media outlets into these companies, the American public is being presented with increasingly questionable sources of news.

The potential for abuse of media power has never been so great in recent times.

In the past, the government had set up laws to protect the public from business monopolies and price-fixing.

If these are the basic tenets behind this governmental safe- guard, then it seems to me that our elected officials are sadly lax in the enforcement of these rules.

By preventing private media monopolies from controlling the airwaves and print, the government can also help to insure that what appears in the media is news coverage and not private sector–propaganda.

It is impossible to turn on the television or open a newspaper these days without being informed of some new giant corporate takeover or merger. There is also the issue of mega–companies whose control extends far beyond the original industry in which they established themselves.

Anheiser–Busch, which until recently owned both the St. Louis Cardinals baseball team and a bread making company called "Earthgrain," gave up control of both of these operations within the last year. They are largely an independent company, according to company spokesman Barry Murov, who also told me that no larger company owns Anheiser–Busch, and that currently their only other enterprises besides beer–making are the Busch Garden and Sea World theme parks.

But the real danger does not necessarily lie in the independent companies owning a few subsidiaries, although that's where the roots of mega–monopolies are planted. I think it can actually help the economy for companies to help create other business enterprises, but at some point they must be willing to cut their connections to the new country in the interest of maintaining a competitive marketplace. The monolithic mergers of industry giants are the real threat, as they largely serve only to undermine the quality and efficacy of services that the public relies on.

I spoke with Kirsten Lundell, a Human Resources assistant for CNN (which is owned by Ted Turner, and is now part of Time–Warner), who explained to me the series of events which led to the merger, and how everything from baseball to HBO is now owned by the same company.

Turner Broadcasting Industries Inc., which seems to be one of the largest and most powerful players in the merger game, is leading the mega–merger charge, and was itself recently joined with Time–Warner.

Owning a multitude of television stations, movie companies, sports teams and entertainment interests before merging with fellow media giant Time–Warner industries. The number of varied elements now linked together is staggering.

Television stations include CNN, TNT and TBS. The Atlanta Hawks basketball team and the Atlanta Braves baseball team, as well as World Championship Wrestling, were all part of the Turner family before the merger with Time–Warner.

Now that the two companies have merged, the connections between everything from world–wide news coverage to televised wrestling grows even more confusing.

I think the Americans, in light of these developments, have every right to question the objectivity of a Time magazine article about the Atlanta Braves or HBO special on television wrestling; not because Time hires biased reporters, but consider the economic effects that bad press could have on a baseball team.

And in a country where the fist of the almighty dollar regularly delivers a knock–out punch to the American public, it is not hard to imagine which would win out in a battle between the truth and money.

The United States government has a responsibility to maintain, through law, an economically diverse environment which will guarantee the public's right to accurate information and competitively priced goods and services.

The real problem is not necessarily with the anti–trust legislation currently on the books, but in the American government's lackadaisical attitude towards the enforcement of these laws.

The most obvious reason is that the government, which works closely with a variety of companies in many areas of the private sector, could stand to lose money or hurt their relationships with these corporations if they do anything to threaten their growth. If this is the primary motivation behind their apathy then that is deplorable.

Perhaps an even worse and more troubling scenario would be the idea that it is easier for the government to control the media if it is all owned by a few giant mega–companies than if there are a lot of smaller independently owned sources of news and information.

Many times throughout history, an easily controlled media has been a valued tool used by governments to filter information for "the good of the public."

It is my opinion that some people in Washington have been asleep at the wheel long enough, and now the tractor– trailer truck carrying the American public's interests is about to fly off the edge of a $1 million cliff.

I think it's time we woke someone up, and put on the brakes.

Daniel E. Levenson is a Collegian columnist.

Here's what you're paying for

Mark McGrath

How do you feel about the recipients of your fee dollars?

In a case involving the University of Wisconsin, a federal judge last week made a decision that could end up affecting the academic lives of university students all over the country in the foreseeable future.

Because mandatory activity fees there, like at UMass, are used toward funding political and ideological student organizations, the judge ruled that forcing students to contribute was a violation of their First Amendment rights. Therefore, the university will be forced to allow students to opt out of groups they may not support.

If the decision was to be carried over to Massachusetts, students on this campus could conceivably find their way out of parts of the Activities Fee based on their personal opinions or even their desire to save a few bucks.

Therefore, groups such as The Cannabis Reform Coalition, Amnesty International, The Radical Student Union and even the Republican Club could very easily lack funding or even cease to exist because of their beliefs. While I may or may not support the efforts of these groups, their presence on this campus is absolutely vital to the health of this University, not only because they express different viewpoints, but because they also empower students in a society which often works to achieve the very the opposite goal.

This question is of particular interest to our University community because in the past few weeks, students have begun to question some of the fees which are assessed on our semi–annual tuition bills. Fees in question include the Authority Fee, which is used to pay off the debt service on various campus buildings and the Athletics Fee. Other parts of the fees provide funding to the Fine Arts Center and the PVTA.

Central to the issue of paying these fees is the question of whether the students paying them are taking advantage of what they are paying for. For example, if a student never takes the bus, he may ask why he is forced to pay the transportation fee. If all of the basketball games are sold–out and the team is having a less–than–stellar season, why should someone who is not interested have to subsidize Tyrone Weeks' whirlpool with an Athletics Fee?

These questions have been raised because students feel that they are not getting their money's worth, and because they are sick of seeing the fees increased without visible results. A UMass education is by no means cheap, and adding in this slew of fees only makes the situation more difficult.

As a way of dealing with disagreeable fees, some students have suggested making some fees waiveable, like the MassPIRG fee which appears every semester on our tuition bills. In such a scenario, only students paying particular fees would be allowed access to the service provided.

For example, if you wanted to take advantage of the PVTA, you would have to pay that portion of the fee, and only you and others who paid the fee would be able to get on the bus. If you wanted basketball tickets, you could pay a larger fee which would guarantee you a chance to see the Minutemen in action at the Mullins Center.

As in Wisconsin, each of our fees would have to be divvied up among potential recipients, and each student would have to check or leave blank a box for each group on each bill. The sheet would read like a menu, with students as the diners and the University serving up the main course. Instead of helping pay for everyone's food, the student would be responsible for only what is put on his or her plate.

On the outside, such an option may appear attractive, but in the end, it could never fly. Very few groups on this campus would be able to generate the support individually that the fee gives them in the current system. Instead of having the numerous activities and resources on campus that are currently provided, we would have nothing.

Sound good? I certainly hope not. Here's why: we at UMass are a community. Like any other healthy community, we are assessed taxes which are put toward the general welfare of the community. There is no "I" involved. We have appointed representatives who make decisions regarding our invested money and who are often criticized for putting funds where they do.

If a particular group receives a cent of your money, it doesn't necessarily mean that you have to agree with what that group says. All it means is that you're in favor of a campus which offers a wide and diverse selection of opportunities for not only yourself, but anyone who is interested.

After all, for what reasons does a community exist if not to take care of all its members?

Mark McGrath is a Collegian columnist.

Where is multiculturalism, Chancellor?

Deepika Marya

Every time I hear Chancellor David K. Scott talk he makes me smile. It is not a smile that appears due to happiness or contentment, but because of the absurdity of what he says.

For instance, the Chancellor's pet project for the past few years has been the promotion of multiculturalism and diversity. Now I agree those are both important words and because of that I don't take them lightly, nor should David Scott, because both multiculturalism and diversity convey hope and change for the better.

But somehow, elusive as languages are, Scott's regular references to these ideas make me wonder if I am missing something or is Scott missing what multiculturalism and diversity mean? Without going into the dictionary meanings of the words, multiculturalism is about inclusion, fairness and equatability.

If one recent incident on campus, the director of the International Programs Office, Barbara Burn, wrote explicitly in a memo that hiring or students of color would be a controversial matter although such students were best qualified for the job. Students of color, international and American, were in an uproar — this was clear discrimination and racism. The matter was brought up at a Faculty Senate meeting. The Chancellor and Provost defended the memo and chastised the President of the Graduate Student Senate for challenging the IPO director's commitment to international students of color. The Chancellor, on the contrary, praised Barbara Burn's commitment and contribution to the IPO and the respect she has earned for her work.

It is hard to assess an administrator's contribution over 20 to 30 years, but the memo written by Barbara Burn is not a reflection on the volume of her contribution. We question her commitment and the commitment of the Chancellor to invite non–white international students to come to this University.

Not acknowledging that many departments heavily rely on students from India and China for the work they produce. And the Chancellor has disappointed these students by supporting Barbara Burn and her policies regarding international students!

If multiculturalism is to be taken seriously, we must understand that inviting a group of African dancers to come and perform before an official dinner is the worst kind of multiculturalism that we can think of. The ALANA students on campus are time and again disappointed by promises not kept by the University.

The ALANA agreements of 1992 to increase ALANA admissions to 20 percent have still not been honored. The most recent ALANA update (Nov. 12, 1996) claims that the campus has met this goal. The figures stated do not match with statistics provided by the Office of Institutional Research. So, the truth of the University's claim of honoring their word is at stake.

Needless to say, the ALANA agreement update states, "our goals should be tied to the demographics of the commonwealth and nation and the proportion of minority students attending the Amherst campus should continue to increase as the number of college bound minority students continues to grow." Do these words reflect your thoughts on the issue, Chancellor Scott? Can we take these to represent your and the University's policy regarding ALANA admissions, and if that is so, then can you explain why ALANA admissions are still around 18 percent of the overall freshmen entering the school?

And of course proving how concerned the University is regarding minority students has received added attention every year. Have programs such as CCEMBS and BCP got the support they need to fulfill their roles on campus? The answer is obvious — no! The current population at UMass Amherst is not representative of the state or the country. It lags behind in terms of minority representation. It clearly seems to be turning a blind eye to the changing colors of the United States.

Recently, a Haitian student was wrongly accused to stealing in the University store. The student was apprehended and searched. This incident brought to light many practices that are carrying on at the University, perhaps with the knowledge of senior administrators like the Chancellor. One such practice is that the University store had employed some students as security for the store. None of the students selected belonged to any minority group. This fact has been brought to light since the event. Not once have we heard regret or an apology from the promoters of multiculturalism. Blatant violation of diversity demands an explanation, Mr. Chancellor! Did you not have any knowledge of this practice? Once you knew, why have the students not heard a cry of utter disbelief and shame from you? Is that not part of your multicultural agenda — to not pit one race against another, to employ all–white security against minority men?

This list and discussion can go on for a long time because you have a lot of explanations to offer. If multiculturalism is not about numbers, if it is not about getting rid of racist stereotypes against men of color, pray, what does a multicultural agenda mean?

Is it an idea that appealed to your refined sensibilities that you knew was good to float, knowing the liberal mind–set. We want to know, are chocolate chips on a cream cheese cake your idea of multiculturalism? Is multiculturalism like an expensive perfume that most of us have to imagine what it smells like, but you, Mr. Chancellor, smell every morning and therefore are so convinced it exists?

Deepika Marya is a UMass student.

Write for Ed/Op next semester... come see Mike Burke at the Collegian for more info.

UMass needs to bring standards up

Erik Molitor

President Clinton and the Democrats, as one of their campaign promises, are working on education reforms that will create large tax credits for families sending their kids to college, even vouchers for the tuition costs at community colleges. This is one of the few liberal programs that I greatly support. This plan, according to the promises, will guarantee two years of higher education to everyone (translation: two years of community college will be guaranteed universally, regardless of financial and even previous academic problems). The reason I support this is because I believe it will level the playing ground in education that has been top– heavy for so long.

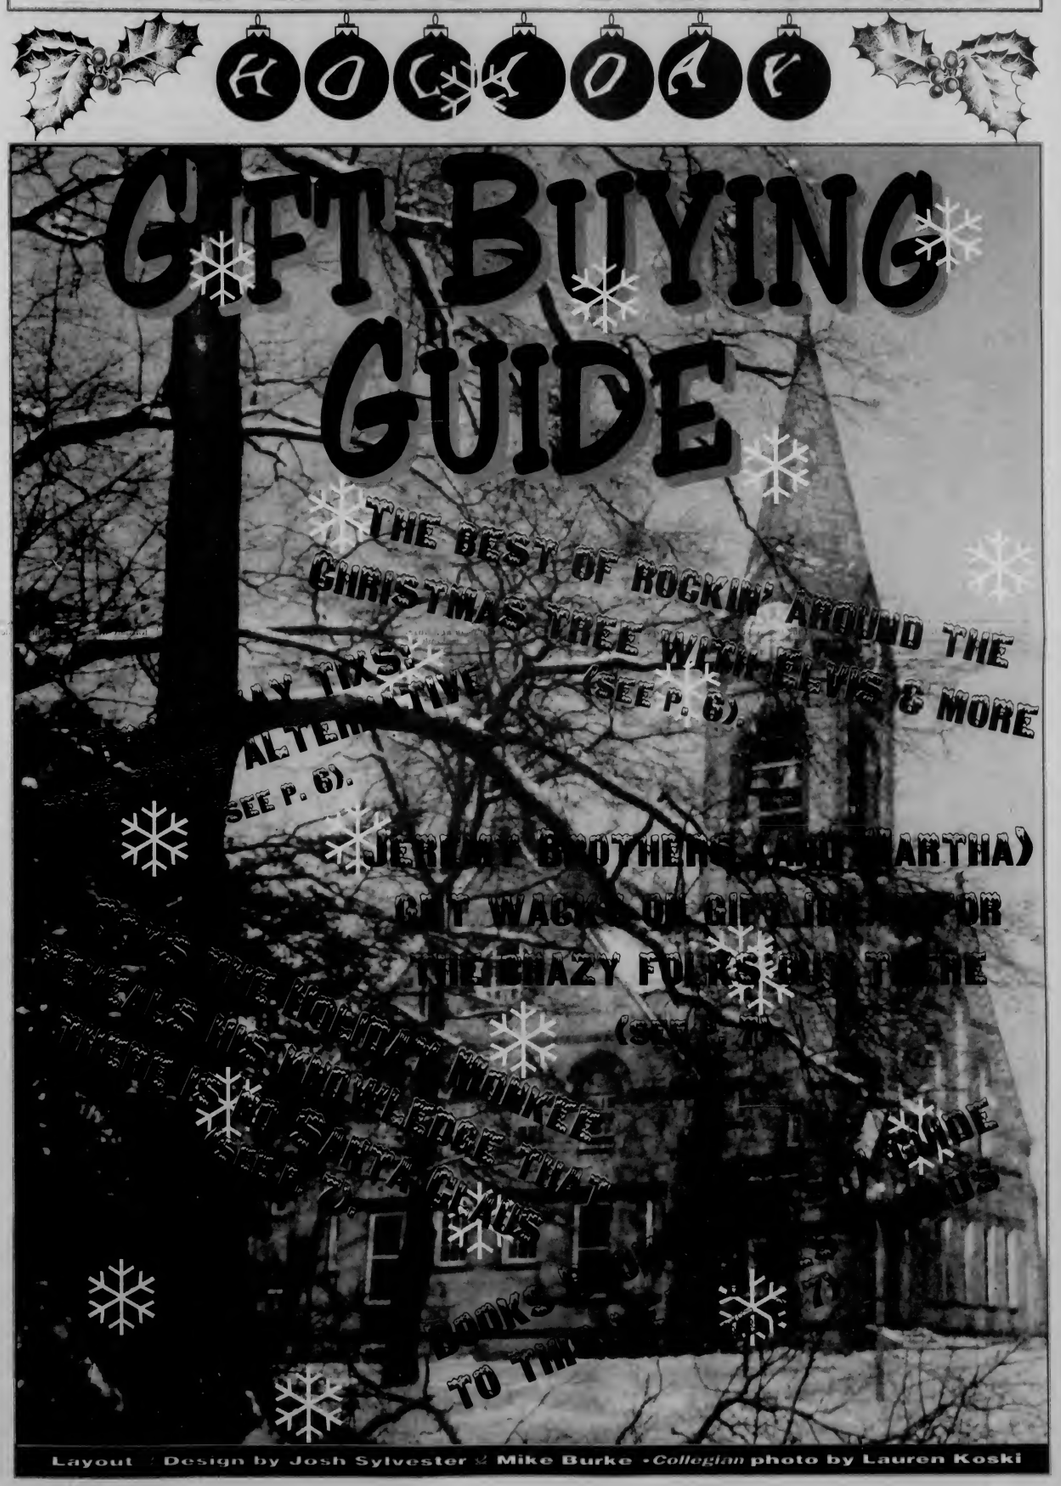
I can not argue the fact that many minority students from inner–city schools have two strikes against them because their schools do not receive the same funding as white, affluent neighborhoods (schools receive funding from property taxes — thus, run down inner–city areas get far less than middle class suburban areas).

I firmly believe that two years of community college could act as a great equalizer. My argument is that there isn't a very big difference between community colleges; an inner city college like Roxbury C.C. gets the same level of professors and funding as affluent Andover C.C. Therefore, students who might not be ready for a school like UMass can learn the basics necessary for college — algebra, English, history, science — the basic Gen. Eds.

Now here is where the real fight would be — improving a university education. Standards must be raised. I am sick and tired of being in the same classes with students who don't know the slope of a line, what Manifest Destiny meant for America or never had to read A Catcher in the Rye. Standards at UMass are dismal because we admit anyone with a pulse.

We must raise these standards for the benefit of the quality of education here as a whole, even if it means eliminating quotas for admissions. We must make it so that a degree from UMass means that you have accomplished something truly outstanding.

If every student came here with a higher base of knowledge to start from, then classes could be made more challenging and thought provoking, rather than spoon–fed repetition. I know the argument that raising SAT or high school academic requirements may preclude more inner city students from coming to UMass, and here is where my bottom line argument comes in. If these students attend a two–year program at a community college (for free under the new education plans), then they will be better prepared for more rigorous classes here. Also, community college transfers often get sophomore status, so they would actually only be putting in one extra year. Finally, by being better prepared, the dropout rate for these students (which is currently dismal) will become much better.



I honestly believe that this compromise between liberal education reform and conservative removal of quotas can produce a much higher level of education that will ultimately benefit everyone.

Erik Molitor is a Collegian columnist.

Editorial Policy

The Editorial/Opinion page welcomes columns, letters and cartoons from UMass and the rest of the Five College Area.
Letters and columns must be typed and double spaced, with the writer's name, local address and phone number attached. This information is subject to verification prior to publication.
Anonymous submissions will not be printed.
The editorial staff reserves the right to edit letters and columns for grammar, clarity and length.
Any submission that is requested to be left unedited will not be considered for publication.
Submissions become the property of the Collegian and will not be returned.
The Editorial staff is not required to print all submitted material.
Letters should be no longer than 450 words and columns should be about 70 typed lines.
Submissions should be sent to the Editorial Desk, c/o Mark McGrath, 113 Campus Center, UMass Amherst.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
ARTS & LIVING
Monday, December 9, 1996
SPECIAL EDITION

Layout Design by Josh Sylvester & Mike Burke • Collegian photo by Lauren Koski

~ HOLIDAY GUIDE ~

COURTESY JOAN MARCUS/ CAROL ROSEGG

Tickets to Rent may be the perfect for that someone special this year.

Forget the mall take a ride down Broadway

By Seema Gangatirkar
Collegian Staff

When the holidays roll around, sometimes finding the perfect gift for that special someone in your life can be a bit trying, especially when you take a look at the long lines of shoppers at the mall.

So instead of hitting the Gap for that sweater or Media Play for a CD, pick up something a little less stressful, but equal in quality.

Giving a friend a pair of tickets to a Broadway show may seem like the easy way out, but there is excitement in a Broadway show that is hard to capture in anything else.

And if your budget is tight, keep in mind that tickets for the shows can start as low as $17 and can go as high as $70, depending on where you want to sit.

You may also want to throw in dinner at one of the restaurants around Times Square or an after-theater coffee at Starbucks or another coffee house. Times Square is home to several chain restaurants including the Olive Garden, but also boasts plenty of ethnic eateries. Some restaurants offer special before-theater dinner packages.

If you want to try to get tickets to a show on Broadway or in Boston, order tickets early, especially for popular shows like The Phantom of the Opera or Rent. These shows sell out fast, and good seats are usually booked months in advance.

You can also take a chance and buy discount tickets on the day of the show. While these tickets tend to be on the inexpensive side, the show you want to see may not be available or the seats are less than choice.

For complete listings of theater, dance and music, call the Theater Development Fund's New York City-On Stage at (212) 768-1818. Tickets are available through Telecharge or Ticketmaster.

•Disney lovers should take note of Beauty and the Beast — the stage version of the Walt Disney cartoon classic. Playing at the Palace, call (212) 730-8200. Tickets are available through Ticketmaster.

•Bring in 'da Noise, Bring in 'da Funk hit Broadway this year and is already a major sensation. Savion Glover stars in this dance musical conceived and directed by George C. Wolfe. Playing at the Ambassador. Tickets are available through Telecharge.

•Cats, one of the longest running Broadway shows, is a musical based on T.S. Eliot's cat poems with music by Andrew Lloyd Webber. Playing at the Winter Garden. Tickets are available through Telecharge.

•Tracy Nelson stars in a revival of Grease, the popular musical set in a high school in the 1950s. Jasmine Guy replaces Nelson Jan. 6. Tickets available through Telecharge.

•One of the most moving and stirring musicals of all time, Les Miserables celebrates its 10th year on the stage. Les Mis is based on Victor Hugo's epic novel and is playing at the Imperial. Tickets are available through Telecharge.

•Miss Saigon, the big London musical hit, is a modern reworking of Puccini's Madame Butterfly. Miss Saigon is playing at the Broadway Theater. Tickets are available through Telecharge.

•Once Upon a Mattress features Sarah Jessica Parker in a revival of the Mary Rodgers musical based on The Princess and the Pea. It is now in previews and opens Dec. 19 at the Broadhurst Theater. Tickets are available through Telecharge.

•The 1996 Pulitzer Prize for Drama and the 1996 Tony Award for best musical, Rent, is a musical celebration of artists and outcasts in New York's East Village. Written by Jonathan Larson, the show is a trip into bohemia. Now playing at the Nederlander Theater. Call Ticketmaster for tickets.

Rent is also playing a limited engagement at the Schubert Theater in Boston. Call (800) 447-7400 for more information about the Boston run.

•Sunset Boulevard features Elaine Paige as Norma Desmond in the Andrew Lloyd Webber musical version of the Billy Wilder film classic, now playing at the Minskoff. Tickets are available through Ticketmaster.

•The Phantom of the Opera is the lavish Andrew Lloyd Webber musical about a deformed composer who haunts the Paris Opera House and the young soprano he loves. It is playing at the Majestic Theater. Tickets are available through Telecharge.

•Victor/Victoria marks the return of Julie Andrews to Broadway in a stage version of her 1982 film about a female Paris cabaret singer pretending to be a man. Liza Minnelli replaces Andrews for four weeks, Jan. 7-Feb. 2. It is now playing at the Marquis Theater. Tickets are available through Ticketmaster.

Credit card holders can order tickets by phone or by calling Telecharge or Ticketmaster. Telecharge's number is (212) 239-6200. Ticketmaster is (212) 307-4100.

Both services will provide information on specific seat locations. Telecharge and Ticketmaster also have toll-free numbers for use by theutergoers calling from outside New York, New Jersey and Connecticut. For Telecharge, call (800) 432-7250; for Ticketmaster call (800) 755-4000.

The Associated Press contributed to this article.

Rockin' round the tree with hits from the King

John Hendrickson

Well, it's that time of year again. The holiday season is upon us. And just as final exams and lousy weather are ubiquitous with the month of December, so is its inevitable soundtrack: Christmas music.

Love it or hate it, you can't avoid it. The month between Thanksgiving and Dec. 25 is the only window of opportunity for what has become its own industry. However, there is more to Christmas music than Andy Griffith and Kathie Lee Gifford's paid TV advertisements. Hidden out there in the dark corners of your local record stores is enough good holiday music to turn any Christmas party into a truly happening affair.

It seems that the heyday of rockin' Christmas music peaked about 30 years ago. Back in the '50s and early '60s, everyone who was anyone put out at least a single or two, if not a whole album, dedicated to the holiday. Most of this material is now available on a slew of reissues and compilation albums, and here is your handy guide to picking out the best of the Christmas loot.

• When it comes to Christmas rock, look no further than the King himself for the ultimate in cool holiday music. There are about a dozen compilations available titled Elvis' Christmas Album — however, make sure the one you get has both "Blue Christmas" and "Santa Claus Is Back in Town." Otherwise, be prepared for a bunch of maudlin religious drivel. Any album with those two songs, though, is definitely worth the money.

• A close second to Elvis on the holiday wish list would have to be producer Phil Spector's A Christmas Gift For You. Originally released in 1963, this collection of standards recorded by the Ronettes, Crystals and Darlene Love. It features Spector's trademark "Wall Of Sound" production as well as consistently excellent performances. The original version of U2's "Christmas (Baby Please Come Home)" is included here and blows away the remake.

• Two other essential albums favor the instrumental route. The Ventures' Christmas Album is a California surf-guitar fest, and the Memphis soul stew of Booker T. And The MG's In The Christmas Spirit gives the holidays a swampy feel. However, avoid The Beach Boys' Christmas Album at all cost—this is the musical comparable to a lump of coal in your stocking.

• There are too many compilation

Turn to MUSIC, page 7

COURTESY RCA

Elvis Presley's Christmas Album

ART SUPPLIES
DESIGN SUPPLY STUDIO
ON TOWN COMMON • 65 SOUTH PLEASANT STREET • AMHERST • 413/253-5592
FREE DISCOUNT CARD
WITH THIS COUPON • GOOD FOR 10% OFF ALL PURCHASES FOR ONE FULL YEAR OWNED UNDER

Don't Let The Marshall Catch You Going Anywhere Else!
Marshall
STEINBECK
COLLISION REPAIR & AUTO BODY
53 S. Prospect St. Amherst Center
• Imports and other unbody vehicles are our specialty.
• Users of Sikkens paint products
• Accepted by all insurance companies for collision repair or glass repair.
256-8157 256-1385
Shop Reg # RS1212

Affordable
Jewelry Natural Fiber Scarves
Blouses Skirts Dresses
Rings Happy B'day Cards Earrings Sweaters Skirts
G.Creek
Posters
India Print Bedspreads Candles Incense
Sale
20 to 50% off selected Clothing
The Mercantile
Weeknights 9PM Dec. 5-23
Sun 12-5 Daily 10-6
Northampton-18 Center St. Amherst-Carriage Shops

facials • waxing • manicures & pedicures
Shear Bliss
Full Service Holistic Salon
479 West St., Amherst
Natural Hair Color & Perms
Botanical Facials
pure flower & plant essences used in every service
253-2322

THE FINEST SINCE 1976
Handmade diamond engagement rings & featuring ideal cut
Lazare Diamonds®
Setting the standard for ...BRILLIANCE™
Gifts from glass to gold.
silverscape designs
GOLDSMITHS GEM GALLERY
One King St., Northampton 584-3324
264 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-3324

Hand Poured Hand Scented Gift Baskets Fund Raisers
Heritage Candle Co.
A COMPLETE LINE OF CANDLES AND ACCESSORIES!
236 North Pleasant Street, Amherst
Factory Outlet Store: 80 East Main St., Ware Ma 01082
256-4797 • 967-3464

Happy Holidays from the Daily Collegian !

RAVEN USED BOOKS
THOUSANDS OF ACADEMIC AND SCHOLARLY TITLES
Relax in our Reading Chairs
Mon.-Sat. 10-8 Sun. 12-6
584-9868
4 Old South St. • Northampton, MA

Always in Bloom
Flowers...
For all the times that are important to you.
253-5545
220 No. Pleasant St. Amherst
• Daily deliveries local & nationwide

~ HOLIDAY GUIDE ~

Wacky gifts for the holidays & more

Jeremy Brothers

It may come as a surprise to many of you that shopping for holiday gifts didn't always come easily to me until I got together with a very special friend of mine (let's just call her "Martha") who showed me how shopping for friends and family need not be such an effort. All that is needed is a little creativity and a lot of patience.

Martha's first suggestion was that I make a list of all the people of whom I'm thinking at the holidays. She started asking about relatives, both close and distant. Before I knew it, she had uprooted my family tree so far that I could see why I preferred to keep some of those relatives so distant.

I also had to insist to Martha that for my beloved Collegian staff-mates I need not make dainty hand-made soaps with orange zest and poppy seeds suspended in the middle, served in a delicious meringue box, lined with a very elegant chamois liner. I suggested that I simply carry a few candy canes in my back-pack, so I could reciprocate if any of the yahoos in the campus center basement decide to give me a card. Martha just gave me her oh-you-naughty- thing-you look and smiled, her teeth shining as brightly as her exaggerated faux-pearl necklace.

We both agreed that I needed to get my recently-engaged friends something that would show how happy I was for them and how special I thought they were. Martha thought that adding to the young couple's mercury glass collection with a grail-like chalice would be the perfect gift, allowing the lovers to see each the other in the mirror-like surface while they drank.

I reminded Martha that drinking was what got these people together in the first place, and it probably wasn't the best idea to bring that fiasco up again, never alluding to the fact that my friends don't even have a mercury glass collection.

We passed by a piercings and tattoos and tattoo parlor, and I demanded that we pull over and see what wares they had to offer. Well, Martha was just astounded by the fact that not one of the pieces they offered for piercing was an antique. I reminded her that if you were going to have metal tearing your flesh, wouldn't it be better if it was "new" metal? She reluctantly agreed, but only after lecturing me on the importance of tradition and how she hopes her daughter Alexis will continue all the charming traditions that scream good taste. I reminded Martha that she comes from New Jersey, and even a town called "Nutley," albeit charming, was still New Jersey. That shut her up for a few minutes.

I was able to arrange for my friends a very special Christmas gift. Separate tongue piercings that, when they fit the two chunks of metal together, would lock tight, forming the two into one. I smiled and asked Martha what she thought, and she agreed it was kind of like that enchanting chalice we saw at the antique shop.

The next stop in our quest for holiday shopping was inevitable: the mall. There, Martha and I realized that we weren't total opposites. Hickory Farms united us in the spirit of the season as only a store dedicated to the sales of fine pork products can. Martha told me that she actually preferred to fatten her hog, slaughter it and smoke it herself, and proceeded it quote Jude the Obscure.

Well, Thomas Hardy had worked her into such a frenzy, mall security had to take her away to the wind chime store to calm down. I took this as my cue to ditch the queen of good things and get everyone else I knew gift certificates to Hickory Farms. Not because I like to kill people slowly, you understand. No, because gift certificates to bad places, as a rule, are funny.

Jeremy Brothers is a Collegian columnist.

Books: the personal choice that lasts a lifetime

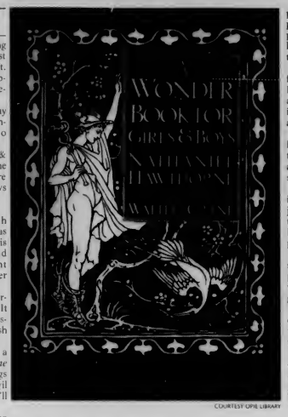
Mark McGrath

By Lisa M. Oliveri
Collegian Staff

The holidays have finally arrived, and the gift-buying is already out of control. People crowd the malls, first looking for a parking space, and then looking for a gift. And though a select few already have their holiday shopping finished, most are looking for that special something to buy.

Well, in my opinion, one of the best gifts one can buy or receive is a book. Books allow for that added personal touch — you must know a lot about a person to choose something they would enjoy reading.

Many of the major book-selling chains like Barnes & Nobles and Media Play offer great discounts around the holiday season, especially on bestsellers. So if you're looking for a relatively inexpensive gift that really shows you care, try purchasing a book.



Here are a few of my favorite selections:

• Hitler's Willing Executioners by Daniel Jonah Goldhagen — For the history buff in all of us. This was a fairly controversial book when it came out earlier this year. Goldhagen examines the Holocaust and anti-Semitism in Germany, but with a different approach, he looks at the ordinary citizen's role rather than just the Nazi's.

• Blake: A Biography by Peter Ackroyd — An interesting story-like look at the life of William Blake. It examines his life and times and the genesis of his masterpieces — a great gift for a friend who's an English major.

• The Golden Compass by Philip Pullman — As a child, I loved to read fantasy literature. Remember The Lion, the Witch and the Wardrobe? This book brings back those memories, and this is a tale about good, evil and Divine boundaries. It's the first in a series, so you'll have another book to buy next season.

• Lord of the Dead by Tom Holland — I wasn't too fond of this the first time I read it, but many other people seem to think it's great. It's a gothic tale with the poet Lord Byron as the main character, but as a vampire. It has kind of an interesting premise, so if you know someone who aspires to be one of the undead, they might enjoy this.

COURTESY OPIE LIBRARY

Nathaniel Hawthorne's tales make a great gift for readers.

• The Law of Love by Laura Esquivel — This is the follow up to her bestseller Like Water for Chocolate. It's an enchanting novel about past lives, time travel and love. Plus, the coolest thing about this book is that it comes with a CD of arias and Mexican love songs. — a great gift for the romantic.

• A Wonder Book for Girls & Boys by Nathaniel Hawthorne — Though it's intended for young adults, the short stories by the famous novelist will captivate anyone. The Oxford edition includes great illustrations, so it's fun to look at.

• Undaunted Courage by Stephen E. Ambrose — This is another powerful history book. It examines the epic journey of explorers Lewis and Clark, the migrations to the American west and also the life of Thomas Jefferson. It really puts the reader in the minds of these interesting people.

• The Green Mile by Stephen King — This was King's serial novel this year, and now all six volumes are neatly packaged in a box, perfect for wrapping. It's a great work of fiction and takes place in a prison. It's always great to receive a book from the master of the macabre.

• The Last Don by Mario Puzo — It's the quasi-sequel to The Godfather, the great work of literature about the Mafia. Here, the crime and corruption takes place in New York, Las Vegas and Hollywood.

• Les Miserables by Victor Hugo — The epic saga which was turned into a fabulous musical. I can relate myself and all of my friends to characters in this book. I guarantee that anyone who receives this will treasure it always, it's the best work of fiction you'll ever read.

Armed with all of these different ideas, I'm sure anyone will be able to find the perfect book for a gift!

The art of buying that not-so perfect sex toy for Christmas

It is the season to be giving... or so corporate America has told me.

Walking into the Hampshire Mall and tossing money into the pot with the student ringing the bell has never been the same since I found out that a lot of the bell-ringers do their deed of "charity" as a punishment for being caught with alcohol in the hallways of their dorms one time too many. Oh well.

This society is funny, especially in its way of handling the gift-giving season. What determines what makes a good gift? Appropriateness? Cost? Thought? Severity of the crime being redeemed? None of the above? Does the "perfect gift" really exist? And how come Santa Claus never brought it?

I was the last one in my grade to figure out that Santa doesn't exist. I remember it well. It was last year. Santa had bought me pajamas that didn't fit. I was crushed. Mother told me that she could return them. "Santa gives you the receipts?" I asked her. She thought it was time we had a talk.

Did I mention how I cried? No matter, it all makes sense to me now. I asked for things like Hungry Hungry Hippos and got things like socks, underwear and Fun Pads. It was the pits. I guess Mom liked to save up all of the things she would have had to get me over the course of the year and deliver them en masse, so as to avoid the unpleasantness of breaking my heart. I just wish I never fell for that trick where she told me she saw an elf peeking in the window. That kept me from rebelling for a good two decades. I guess hindsight is 20/20.

Speaking of hindsight, have you ever given a gift you truly regretted? A couple of years ago, I was determined to get my father the perfect gift, so I was only too pleased to find a sale on back massagers. If you haven't seen one of these contraptions, picture a massive vibrating head on the end of a pole long enough for one to comfortably reach all parts of the body without contortionist training.

Although the appropriateness of such a gift was questioned by friends, I figured it was the perfect present. What more could Dad want? That year I had the feeling I was going to surpass the ugliest of ugly ties (quite an achievement).

Less than two weeks after Christmas, those very same friends began laughing at me every time they saw me. What, I asked, could possibly be so funny? At that point, one of them pulled out a dirty magazine and showed me an advertisement which displayed a picture of Dad's back massager and read, "Good Vibrations Industrial Sized..." I think you get the picture.

Enough of that story.

When it comes to family Christmases, one never knows what he or she may end up giving out. One year, all of my uncles and aunts decided to give up getting presents for all of the kids and instead decided that it would be nicer to exchange barbed comments and bodily injuries. I'd have to say that watching Uncle Jeb force Grandpa to eat mistletoe was a hell of a lot more enjoyable than opening up a three pack of Hardy Boys mysteries or a New Kids on the Block poster. But alas, that side of the family hasn't exactly celebrated Christmas (or anything else for that matter) since that night.

Regardless of such internal strife, something keeps it going, this season of giving. What motivates us to continue? What gain is seen in putting ourselves in a financial hole for the sake of not being outdone, throwing our money to alcoholic college students and force feeding relatives? If humankind had not been blessed with the gift of humor, this season could be extremely painful.

So take it from someone who once bought his father a vibrator with a head the size of a big grapefruit... fretting about the perfect gift may not be the greatest thing to do. December may be the season to be giving, but also the season to be jolly.

Marks (Ooks) McGrath thinks he is a funny holiday monkey.

■ music

continued from page 6

albums available to explore, but a good place to start would be Rhino Records' Christmas Classics. Featuring Chuck Berry, James Brown and the Drifters, this is a nice sampler of both holiday originals and standards. Also, anything featuring the Marquees' "Christmas In The Congo," Edd "Kookie" Byrnes' "Yulesville," or "Santa Came Home Drunk" by the Cadillac Baby Specials should be checked out. Trust me, you have to hear them to believe them.

• If you're feeling swanky this season and feel like a martini or two, your best bets would be Esquivel's Christmas Album and Arthur Lyman's Hawaii-tinged In A Holiday Mood. The Vince Guraldi Trio's A Charlie Brown Christmas, the soundtrack to the television special of the same name, this is truly a holiday classic.

If you're looking for some more recent Christmas rock, check out the two volumnes of A Very Special Christmas (Vol. One features Run-DMC's "Christmas In Hollis.")

Also, the Figgs just released a single on Easthampton's Chunk Records with a punked up cover of the Kinks' "Father Christmas" — definitely worth a listen. Whatever you buy, be sure to turn it up, spike the egg nog and strategically position yourself under the mistletoe. Have a Cool Yule and a boss New Year.

John Hendrickson is a Collegian staff member.

Happy Holidays!

Jonathan Reid LTD
THE COMPLETE MEN'S STORE
HAMPSHIRE MALL, HADLEY, MA
WE SPECIALIZE IN DRESSING MEN FOR INTERVIEWS, BANQUETS OR ANY CASUAL OUTING, WITH PRICES TO FIT ANY BUDGET.
WHEN APPEARANCE COUNTS, COUNT on JONATHAN REID LTD.
WE PRIDE OURSELVES ON FRIENDLY, PROFESSIONAL, and COURTEOUS SERVICE.
BRING IN THIS AD WHEN PURCHASING ANY SUIT OR SPORT COAT AND GET 20% OFF ALL ACCESS-
Buy 1 Suit @ Get 1 Free

HOME FOR THE HOLIDAYS?
If you want to earn some money during your holiday vacation, come to work for the Barnes & Noble College Division. To determine which of the more than 20 college bookstores in Massachusetts will be closest to where you will be spending your holidays, please call Barnes & Noble Regional Office at (508) 934-6428.
Full and part-time jobs, immediate hires, flexible scheduling, friendly work environment, and store discount up to 35%.
We are an equal opportunity employer.
BARNES & NOBLE COLLEGE DIVISION

Work Over Break
We are offering great temporary positions [illegible] your home during January [illegible]
CONSIDER ALL WE HAVE TO OFFER:
• Starting Salary from $6.50 to $7.50 /hour
• Paid Training and Management Programs
• Morning, Evening and Weekend Hours
• Flexible Schedules • Potential for Advancement • $$$ Potential ☆ Ideal for Students ☆
WORK 30 OR MORE HOURS DURING WINTER BREAK.
District Phone #s:
Boston- (617)484-1788; North Boston- (508)657-9522;
South Boston- (508)221-5889; Plymouth & Cape Cod- (508)833-0750;
New Hampshire- (603)472-8483; Maine- (207)854-0500;
Worcester- (508)832-6152; Springfield(local)- (413)737-8938;
Providence, R.I.- (508)336-5655; Hartford, Conn.- (860)645-6573
Interviewing at UMass Campus Center
INVENTORY SPECIALISTS
Dec. 10 8:30AM-8:30PM RM. 162-75
Dec. 11 8:30AM-1:30PM RM. 168C
1:30PM-8:30PM RM. 911-15

If you make back from the Holidays...
...Come write for the...
DAILY COLLEGIAN
next semester

Pace seeks place in Heisman Trophy race

By Rusty Miller
Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Ohio — As the players break the huddle and lumber to the line of scrimmage, the quarterback begins sizing up the defense and the linebackers bark out signals. Receivers and defenders trot into motion while a crowd of close to 100,000 roars in anticipation.

But all is quiet in Orlando Pace's world. The Ohio State offensive tackle tries to close out everything except a primary thought.

"I just go out and block the guy who's in front of me," he says.

A simple job for a complex man. The 6-foot-6, 330-pound junior for the No. 4 Buckeyes understands that after eliminating all the distractions, the confrontation is just between him and another guy in pads.

The last one standing wins.

Almost every time, it's Pace.

"Maybe the best offensive lineman ever to play the game," said former Minnesota coach Jim Wacker.

Wisconsin defensive end Tarek Saleh on his approach to Pace: "Just basically stay away. For that split second after he gets his hands on you, if he gets his legs underneath him, then he's going to body-slam you. And then you're done."

Former Notre Dame coach Lou Holtz: "I think Orlando Pace is one of the best tackles in football today. I didn't say college football. I said football."

Pace is among the top contenders to win the Heisman Trophy, to be presented next weekend, although no interior lineman has ever been selected. Another Ohio State tackle, John Hicks, came the closest with a second-place finish to Penn State's John Cappelletti in 1973.

"It's a longshot. It's been an uphill type of battle all year," Pace said. "If I don't win, it's one of those things I can get over. It's history-making just so I can say I was in the mix." In a way, Pace already has a piece of a Heisman. A year ago, Pace anchored an offensive line that helped Heisman winner Eddie George gain 1,927 yards and score 25 touchdowns.

"I know who I'm voting for," said George, now a rookie star with the Houston Oilers. "I don't think linemen get the credit they deserve. But if you isolate on Orlando, you'd see ...he wants to destroy his man."

Many don't believe an offensive lineman will ever win the Heisman. After all, the grunts up front don't make many highlight reels — even though Pace got substantial publicity for throwing a block 45 yards downfield during one game this year. They don't handle the ball. And they're not versatile.

"Everybody focuses on the running backs and quarterback," Pace said.

However, Ohio State coach John Cooper said Pace meets the main requirement.

"If the Heisman Trophy goes to the best college football player in the country, I don't know how in the world you wouldn't consider a guy like Orlando Pace," Cooper said. "I don't know how he compares with the other great players out there, but he's playing his position right now as good as anybody we've had around here in a long time."

11–1 'Gators claim SEC Championship

By Paul Newberry
Associated Press

ATLANTA — A week ago, Florida was wallowing in a bitter defeat to Florida State. How quickly things have changed.

The Gators awoke yesterday with a fourth straight Southeastern Conference championship, a rematch with the Seminoles in the Sugar Bowl and an unlikely opportunity to finally claim the national championship that has seemed their destiny ever since coach Steve Spurrier arrived in Gainesville.

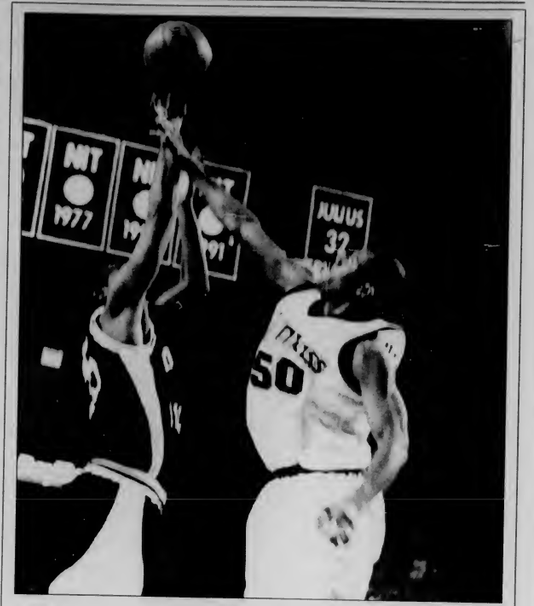
"It's almost like it was meant to be," kicker Matt Teague said. "We're very fortunate to get the chance to play Florida State again."

The Sugar Bowl appeared out of the question when Saturday began. Nebraska, ranked No. 3, was a 20-point favorite to beat Texas in the Big 12 title game and earn a trip to the Sugar Bowl to meet top-ranked Florida State.

Florida, a 24-21 loser to the Seminoles in the regular-season finale, was apparently going to have to be content with another conference championship. But before the Gators trotted on the field at the Georgia Dome to meet Alabama, they watched on television while Texas shocked the two-time defending national champion Cornhuskers, 37-27.

"I was rooting for (Texas) a little," receiver Ike Hilliard said. Then he was overcome by honesty, saying, "Well, maybe a lot."

Duly inspired, Florida (11-1) went out and beat Alabama 45-30 — a performance that not only secured the Sugar Bowl bid but may have locked up the Heisman Trophy for Danny Wuerffel.



Throwing against a team that had the top-ranked pass defense in the country, Wuerffel passed for a staggering 401 yards and six touchdowns — one more than Alabama's secondary had allowed all season.

"I'm so used to it," said Jacquez Green, who caught an 85-yard touchdown pass from Wuerffel during a wild third quarter. "He stays calm in the pocket and never gets roused."

Wuerffel has proven the last two weeks that he is more than just a product of Spurrier's genius. He might be the toughest quarterback in the country, a fearless competitor who's willing to sit in the pocket until the last possible second and take some brutal beatings from opposing linemen.

Wuerffel was sacked six times by Florida State and pummeled to the turf on just about every attempted pass. With only a week to recover, he stood up bravely to an Alabama team that came with the same blitzing strategy used by the Seminoles. Sacked four times, he still managed to burn the Tide's secondary time after time. "I've got to give all the credit to Danny for taking all the punishment he does and still getting the ball off," said Reidel Anthony, who had the best game of his career with 11 catches for 171 yards and three touchdowns. "He gives me and Ike (Hilliard) and Jacquez the opportunity to make a play on the ball."

Wuerffel remained humble when the Heisman was mentioned. "You're completely dependent on the players around you," he said. "Any award I win, I'll want to share it with my teammates." Florida's fourth consecutive SEC title is one short of the record held by Bear Bryant and Alabama and sends the Gators into the bowl season for the second straight year with a chance for a national title.

THANG VO / COLLEGIAN

Get out of the water Inus!

No. 13 Fresno State and coach Jerry Tarkanian (aka "Tark the Shark") come to the Mullins Center Tuesday night to face the Minutemen.

Auto Glass Center
• Same Day Service
• Billed Directly To Insurance Company
• Windshields Replaced
North Amherst Motors
A Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
549-2880
(One Mile from UMass back roads)

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
BE A BARTENDER
747-9888
SPRINGFIELD

Come to Barnes & Noble at Boston University's JOB FAIR!
and get off to a great start this winter...
If you want a fast-paced job that will get your winter off to a great start, it's here at Barnes & Noble at Boston University, Boston's best source for books... and the best choice for retail jobs. Find out more at our JOB FAIR on December 11th.
You could be a sales associate - just long enought to get us through the winter rush and get your bank account in shape. Get here early enough and you could be hired on the spot!
❖ Part-time jobs
❖ Immediate hires
❖ Flexible scheduling
❖ Store discount up to 35%
❖ Friendly work environment
WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 11TH
10AM - 3PM
CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE
If you want to get a closer look at us, but can't come to our JOB FAIR, call (617) 236-7402 for more information.
We are an equal opportunity employer.
Barnes & Noble
AT BOSTON UNIVERSITY

Christmas / January Break
HELP WANTED
$10 up to $15 to start
Apply now. Openings must be filled immediately.
Begin work after finals. Gain excellent resume experience and a possibility to secure a summer position. Opening throughout Massachusetts as well as hundreds of locations nationally.
Earn $800 up to $1600 over break
Apply on the Concourse in the Campus Center from 9-1 on Monday & Tuesday Dec.9th & 10th
If unable to apply in person, call the main line closest to you:
Western Mass 413 736-3230
Central Mass 508 757-7900
Greater Boston 617 449-5255
Chelmsford Area 508 244-5686
South Eastern Mass & The Cape 508 230-8284
(Some Conditions may exist)
Sponsored by Student Employment

DON'T GO INTO HIBERNATION ON YOUR WINTER BREAK
Winter Intersession
January 2 - 17
...spend that time earning extra credits at UMass Lowell. If you want to move ahead in your educational program, and earn college credit, enroll in UMass Lowell's Winter Intersession. This highly concentrated session is also a great way to earn transfer credits if you're enrolled in another University. This year, make the most of your winter break... at UMass Lowell.
DAY CLASSES: Monday - Saturday, 9am - 12noon
EVENING CLASSES: Monday - Friday, 6 - 9pm
Saturday 1 - 4pm
Credit Courses (3 credits) available in:
• Liberal Arts • Sciences
• Mathematics • Computers
• Social Sciences • Music
• Management
Cost: $115.00 per undergraduate credit
For a Winter Intersession Course Bulletin, call the Division of Continuing Education/Office of Enrollment Services at (508) 934-2481.
Or just fill out the coupon and mail it to: University of Massachusetts Lowell, Office of Enrollment Services/DCE, One University Avenue, Lowell, MA 01854-2881.
Name
Address
City
State Zip
Phone ( )
Institution Currently Attending
UMass Lowell
UNIVERSITY COLLEGE
Division Of Continuing Education

UMass BASKETBALL on UVC-TV 19
Courtesy of ESPN
Channel 19 on HSCN

Dec. 10	Fresno State	7:00pm
Dec. 14	Wake Forest*	8:30pm
Jan. 30	George Washington*	7:30pm
Feb. 8	Rhode Island	11:30am
Feb. 25	St. Joseph's	11:30am

A-10 Tournament
Mar. 5 First Round
Mar. 6 Quarterfinals
Mar. 7 Semifinals
Mar. 8 Championships
* no pre- and post-game shows

UMASS UPDATE
Anchor Auditions
December 12
5pm-11pm
All are welcome to audition for an anchor position on our weekly news show.
For appointment call 545-1336.
http://www-unix.oit.umass.edu/~uvctv19

Massachusetts 90, Wyoming 72
WYOMING (1–3)
Coleman 5–11 1–1 13, Allen 1–3 4–7, Haslam 3–5 1–4 7, Whitehead 5–15 13–14 25, Sawyer 0–1 0–0 0, Ragin 4–5 1–2 10, Roberts 3–13 4–5 10, French 0–1 0–0 0
MASSACHUSETTS (2–3)
Babul 1–3 1–1 3, Basit 4–5 3–6 11, Ketner 7–13 1–6 15, Padilla 7–10 2–2 18, Travieso 6–13 0–0 14, Clarke 5–11 12– 16 22, Burns 0–0 0–0 0, Maclay 0–0 0–0 0, Smith 0–4 1–2 1, Kirkland 1–1 0–0 2, Norville 1–1 2–4 4
Halftime — Wyoming 39, Massachusetts 36
3–pointers — Wyoming 5 (Coleman 2, Whitehead 2), Massachusetts 4 (Padilla 2, Travieso 2)
Rebounds — Wyoming 40 (Coleman 14), Massachusetts 35 (Kirkland 5)
Assists — Wyoming 7 (Whitehead 4), Massachusetts 19 (Padilla 8)
Total Fouls — Wyoming 29, Massachusetts 26
Fouled Out — Allen, Sawyer, Babul, Travieso
Attendance — 9,493

HIGHLIGHTS — With 7:32 remaining in the game, the William D. Mullins Center lost power, forcing the to be finished up yesterday afternoon. Charlton Clarke led the way for the Minutemen with 25 points, shooting 12–16 from the line. Four other UMass players scored in double digits (Edgar Padilla 18, Lari Ketner 15, Carmelo Travieso 14, and Ajmal Basit 11). LaDrell Whitehead carried the Cowboys with 25 points.

hoop

continued from page 12

into the second half, Basit sent the Mullins crowd on its feet with a massive jam, bringing momentum to his floor that remained for the next two days. The 6-foot– 9 center from Jersey City, N.J. was an emotional leader, firing up teammates and fans alike.

But with 7:32 left in the game, the Noreaster which raged outside left fans waiting in the dark for 20 minutes before it was announced the game would be continued on Sunday.

When the game continued yesterday, it was much of the same for the Minutemen. Tough offense, tough defense that pushed the lead to as much as 20 points. The five turnovers were a season low, and the .525 field goal percentage and 19 assists were a season high.

Sunday brought a lot of the same for Flint as well.

"[I'm wearing] the same suit, same shirt, same socks, same tie, everything," Flint said in the post–game press conference. "Except my underwear, my wife made me change that."

hockey

continued from page 12

face three Friar players alone. Wrestling into position in the middle of the slot, the senior co–captain unleashed a wrist shot that beat Dennis, an All–Hockey East preseason selection, stick–side at the 16:34 mark to account for the final margin of victory.

Regan held down the fort for UMass in the third, making 10 stops, with the biggest at the 14:15 mark. Freshman Nick Lent got behind the Minuteman defense, snapping off a wrist shot that Regan gloved with apparent ease. In the end, shots on goal were the same, but Regan came out with the win over the Hobey Baker Award candidate.

"We got a great performance from Rob Bonneau and Warren Norris, and we got solid goaltending when we needed it from Brian Regan in the third period," Mallen said. "I just felt we were in the game the whole way despite getting behind 3–1. Not so much territorially, but whether our offensive players can play better than their defensive players in our offensive zone."

Minuteman Notes: Coach Joe Mallen was given a three– year extension to his current contract last week, keeping him behind the UMass bench until the next century. The extension now gives Mallen an $87,500 base salary, with incentives that could reach a maximum of $30,000 per year. In his fourth season as head coach of the Minuteman hockey program, Mallen has guided UMass to postseason Hockey East competition in each season the team has been in the conference.

Due to Saturday night's blackout at the Minuteman basketball game with Wyoming, Sunday's game versus Providence was pushed back to a 4:00 p.m. No results were available as of press time, look for a game story in Tuesday's Collegian.

success

continued from page 12

you guessed it, the lights went out.

For 20 minutes FleetCenter workers toiled in the darkness before the lights came on again. And when they did come on, that UMass (or former UMass in this case)— suspended game magic worked again, and the Nets pounded out a 110– 108 come–from–behind win in overtime.

Go figure. It worked again.

There are some things in this world that are inexplicable. This suspended–game winning formula is one of them.

But now the Minutemen are faced with a challenge. The sit–in protest thing has been used. The wet snow on the power lines is an old story. The challenge is to come up with something new, something creative, something that will — dare I say — stop the show.

What will they think of next?

Casey Kane is a Collegian columnist.

UMass

continued from page 12

prise in a rough trip to the Golden State. Rayside racked up eight points and five rebounds in 26 minutes of work.

Crystal Carroll netted six points and as many rebounds, and senior guard Sabriya Mitchell chipped in with seven points and four rebounds.

With the loss, the Minutewomen fall to 2–3 on the young season, but the rough part of their schedule is over.

The Minutewomen return to action tonight when they travel to Worcester to take on Holy Cross. Then they enjoy a two–game homestand before Christmas with games against Kent Wednesday and Hartford, on Dec. 22.

UMass starts conference play at the Mullins Center on Jan. 4 when Rhode Island visits Amherst, for the first Atlantic 10 matchup of the year.

polo

continued from page 12

Sophomore Gabriel Marrero (second team) netted a pair of scores on the evening, while fellow second–year star Brian Stahl (first team) equalled Marrero's output with a two– pointer that actually had the Minutemen ahead early in the first period.

Juan Carlos Limardo, a junior, had a goal and an assist in the effort while first–team All–conference performer Aldo Roman contributed a goal, and as always stood out on the defensive end.

Roman, a sophomore transfer from the University of Puerto Rico, has quietly become one of Yarworth's most reliable players this season. He is UMass' fifth–leading scorer with 52 points, and is second on the team in steals to senior co–captain Ron Gonen, recording 39 thefts on the year.

In a homecoming of sorts, junior field player Marc Staudenbauer — a native of San Clemente, Calif. — pitched in an assist for the Minutemen. Staudenbauer's appearance in the NCAA tournament was the culmination of his season– long comeback from a severely broken thumb, an injury he suffered in the third week of the campaign.

Also placing their mark on the scoring sheet were freshmen standouts Rich Slingluff and Timmy Troupis, both of whom registered an assist against the Trojans. Slingluff has had a solid impact on the UMass water polo program in his first year. The Annapolis, Md. native was the third–leading scorer for the Minutemen, tallying 30 goals this season.

golden

continued from page 12

stitious you happen to be.

The average Joe might credit inspired efforts by seniors Norris and Rob Bonneau (who each had two goals) for a thrilling NESN–televised come–from–behind 5–3 UMass win. On the other hand, someone, who will only park in an even numbered space between 200 and 214 but preferably 208 in the campus center's lower parking level before typing a Collegian story, will look at the more superstitious side of Friday's win.

Regardless, the game was pivotal for the Minutemen. With the eyes of New England upon them in large numbers due to the snow storm that enveloped the Boston area Friday, UMass played superb hockey.

The Minutemen fell behind early, giving up a goal 1:02 into the game, and spotting PC a 3–1 lead by the 3:28 mark of the second with some sloppy defensive work in front of Brian Regan.

Facing the defending Hockey East Champions and the league's best goaltender in Dan Dennis on the road, it would have been easier for the less–experienced Minutemen to simply call it quits.

The Berkshires were covered with snow and so was the Turnpike from Stockbridge to Boston, setting the stage for UMass to roll over and die, but showing lots of heart, the Minutemen did nothing of the sort.

Instead, Norris took his new golden stick and rifled home a shorthanded goal off Dennis' blocker 1:57 after PC went up 3–1. UMass kept getting pressure through PC's vaunted neutral zone defense and scored four unanswered goals, rolling to victory.

UMass did it all right Friday night. The Minutemen killed all five PC power plays, and have now killed 29 of their last 31 short handed situations.

Norris' golden stick won 27–of–38 face–offs Friday night, a tremendous ratio.

UMass had won four of its last five overall, but just two of eight this year against Hockey East foes. The Minutemen had tied, but had never beaten a team on NESN, a jinx that the team was well aware of. Something had to change for UMass to continue to take the proverbial next step in league play like it had for the past two weeks in non conference action.

The Minutemen played like a team reborn Friday night, and new sweaters and a golden stick in the hands of Norris only helped in the end.

The day that we don't have extra space is the day that you come and write for the Collegian!
545-3500

Collegian

sports - sports - sports - sports

COMPUTER FAIR MULLINS CENTER DEC 14 10AM-4:00PM
Tri-State Fairs: Original Area Shows since 1987
Buy at wholesale prices directly at the show from nearly 50 independent competing companies under one roof. From full systems to shareware, it's all here
Located on the campus of UMass. Rte 9 onto Rte 116N at Staples taking first exit, turn right
This is a discount ticket. General admission is $7.00 each. Clip or photocopy this ad and save $2.00 ea- Student I.D. only $2 ea admission
Our dealers feature the IBM/PC marketplace. Join us four times a year. Kids under 10 free with parent
Don't over sleep, one day show only!
ONE MONTH FREE INTERNET AT THIS SHOW FROM TIAC
Try To Make Your Computer Shows

SHOPPING FOR PRICE?
YANKEE DISCOUNT OIL
Northampton • Holyoke
584-4112 • 535-1888
SAME DAY DELIVERY

Jim & Gabe
Guys & Gals
Clipper Cuts
Layer Cuts
Razor Cuts
Flat Tops
Kid Cuts
Fades
Appointment Not Necessary
The Right Place to Be!
3 Barbers Everyday
Unisex Hair Styling
Amherst Barbers
Tel. 253-1722
40 Main Street, Amherst, MA
(Next to Newbury Comics)
Tom & Terri
Hours: Mon – Fri 8 – 5:15pm
Sat 8 - 2:45pm
Proprietors: Jim Reed and Terri Loncrini

"Winter Session"
Aerobic Instructor Training & Certification
548-8807
(ACE and C.E.C.'S)
"For Certified Instructors"

MINI MALL '96
Tuesday, December 10 thru Friday, December 13
is Coming
One-Stop Shopping Extravaganza! with over 40 vendors
9am-5pm
Student Union Ballroom
For more information call 549-1710

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

CHINESE FOOD Kai Chi delivering Sunday-Thursday to 2am, Friday and Saturday to 3am.

The Advertisement in University of Massachusetts Student Directory for CVS has an incorrect phone number. The phone number should read 256-8620. Due to an error, the incorrect phone number was printed. We apologize for any inconvenience this has caused. This is a statement from University Directories, the publisher of the UMass Campus Directory, and CVS Pharmacy.

The Sisters of the Delta Zeta Sorority would like to invite all University women to a Holiday Rush party on December 10 from 7-9pm

Attention All University Women: Come meet the Sisters of Chi OMEGA Sorority at a Pre-Rush party on Tuesday, December 10 from 6:00-8:00. Please call Michelle at 549-8858 for more information.

APARTMENT FOR SALE

Nice 1 Bedroom Apartment in Sunderland. All utilities included. Great for couples! $540/month 665-8127 Leave Message. Jan 1st

Take Over Our Lease 1/97 2 Bdrm apt Downtown Amherst call Matt or Sean 253-6605

Puffton Village Large 1 bedroom, dishwasher/AC, $515. Heat included. Available Jan 1. Call Helene or Doug 549-0766

1 BDRM Puffton Apt. New carpet, paint, appliances. Available January 1st. $515/month Call Doug 549-7483

2 bedroom, available now + Spring '97 Bus route $720 (negotiable) Heat included 545-5725 (day) 548-2218 (night)

AUTO FOR SALE

1986 Chevy Celeb. Wagon Auto, black, 140k, runs well, needs nothing! Call Kyle 256-2325 $500 firm

Chevy Celebrity Wagon Dependable $500 or B/O Call 549-9162

1982 Toyota Supra Good condition. AT/PW/PD/PS/AM/FM Cass. Call 546-0657 or 413-624-3982

Vision Quest Van Hightop 1985 Dodge 350 solo camper, good condition, well maintained. $1,995 508-544-5874

1990 Honda CRX SI Red, 16 valve, average mileage, new exhaust & brakes, front end mask, driving lights, AC, new tires, filter charger, moonroof, alloys, stereo/tape. $5,500 or B/O Call Derek at 549-9286

'90 Honda Civic AC, runs great, 119,000 miles. $2500.00 or B/O Call John 256-1059

Escort '86 runs good, 2 new tires, battery, etc. $800 o/b o 546-2398 msg.

1984 Honda Accord 3-door hatchback. Very Reliable. Looks Good. Asking $795.00 or best offer. Call Jon 546-6115

'87 Grand Am 4dr. 52K miles, cruise A/C, no rust. $2995 Day 545-7040, Night 549-6625

Blue Volsvagen Golf Excellent condition, born in 1990, $3000 negotiable Call Guy 253-7243

EMPLOYMENT

Clark's and Shippar-Receivers Needed from late December to late January. Flexible schedules $5.25 hour. Babson College Bookstore. Wellesley, MA 617-239-4375 Dave Friedberg

EMPLOYMENT

Exceptional Summer Opportunity Camp Wayne, NE PA. Sports oriented. Counselor/Specialists for all land/water sports inc: tennis, camping, climbing/ropes, rocketry, roller hockey, sailing/waterskiing, ABC, drama, video. Campus Interviews Tuesday March 11. Please call 800-737-9296

Ski and Save Live in country inn (Southern Vermont). Salary plus room/board. Wait tables, cleaning dishes, prep etc. December to April. Call 802-874-4140 after 12/13. Send resume now to: Three Mountain Inn, P.O. Box 180, Jamaica, VT 05343 Interviewing 12/15

CHRISTMAS/JANUARY BREAK

EARN $10 UP TO $15/START. International firm has 80 local openings. 2-8 week program. All majors considered. Gain business and communication skills. Scholarships & Summer positions possible. Apply now. Begin after finals. On-campus accepting applications on Monday& Tuesday December 9&10 from 9-1 on the Concourse in the Campus Center or call 413-736-3230

WINTERSESSION JOBS TELEFUND IS HIRING $5.50/hour + fantastic bonuses PM hours. All shifts available. Gain computer skills. Apply today. Memorial Hall basement 545-3509

Relief Counselors needed for Residential Mental Health program serving adults in Amherst. Pay is $7.00/hr. This is a great job for students needing to gain much needed work experience in the human services field! Please call David Mastroianni at 584-7329 or send resume and cover letter to Amherst Apts. 179 King St. Northampton, MA 01060. Fax is 582-4252

EMPLOYMENT

Afterschool Care in our home for our two sons ages 9 & 5. M,T,Th 3:15-5:15, W 1-5. In Amherst. Car needed. 253-5197 Starting 1/27

JOBS OVER BREAK - Work with Sierra Club to protect wilderness. $275-$375/wk. Fun atmosphere. Call Tern at 256-6434

TROPICAL RESORTS HIRING - Students needed! Entry-level & career positions available Worldwide. Call Resort Employment Services (206) 971-3600 ext. R50013

INTERNATIONAL EMPLOYMENT - Earn up to $25-$45/hour teaching basic conversational English in Japan, Taiwan, S. Korea. No teaching background or Asian languages required. For info call (206) 971-3570 ext. J50016

FOR RENT

Cape Cod group & summer rentals Waterfront houses, Falmouth area (508)477-6000

FOR SALE

MAC Plus, excellent condition Lots of software $200 John 6-6359

12 Inch MTX Speakers Mounted in sub box. $100 or b/o 549-9162

Skis For Sale Rossignol 4s skis 205cm. Nordica 967 boots size 12. GEZE 70 bindings. Skied on 3 seasons. Great shape. All for $250 or B/O. Call Brian @ 665-9005

Kawood Car Sette Player $50. Pneer Premier 100W AMP $50 Call Joe 253-8381

Epiphone Les Paul w/hardcase $325 or B/O Boss Drum Machine $300 or B/O Call Joe 253-8381

FOR SALE

486 Computer $300. 386- $260/ 286- $100. Printer $10. Steve (413)566-3324 #2

Apple IIGS W/Printer + extra disk drive. Like new $50. 549-4349

20" Color TV for sale Brand new $150 Paul 665-2019

MISCELLANEOUS

Rental Problems Questions about your lease/security Deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning leases? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

New Metabolism Breakthrough Lose 5-100 lbs Guaranteed $35 (800)776-9503 Doctor Approved

PERSONALS

SO LONG PAT! The Supplies Clerks at the University Store would like to wish Patricia Potter, our Manager, a Happy and Fun Retirement! Today will conclude her 32 years of service at the Store. We will miss you, Pat! With love from your boys - Brian, Khalid, Syed, Merlin, Jeff, Josh, Rafael, Glen and Carlos.

ROOM FOR RENT

1 Bedroom available as of 1/97. 3 bedroom apartment in Puffton. $275 per month including heat/hot water. Dn bus route (male or female). Call Amy @ 548-7082

Apt. is Boulders. 2-bedroom. My roommate and I are moving and we'd like to find one or two people who will sublet our room for Spring Semester only. Call for more details 256-5496 ask for Juan

ROOM FOR RENT

Room is 3 bedroom apt. in Sunderland- cool housemates, good-sized room, $216.00/month. Ask for Jennifer 665-0985 Available 1/1-8/31

Spring Semester Non-smoking female(s) to rent large room near campus & town. Call 549-3992

Three females soaking one non-smoking female to share Mill Valley apartment Jan. 1-May 31. Rent negotiable. Call Jess at 253-1797

ROOM WANTED

Two responsible 26 year old undergraduate male students desperate for somewhere to stay over Winter Intersession. Call Ed at 546-4818

ROOMATE WANTED

Housemate Needed for a large bedroom in a two bedroom apartment on bus route. Call 253-4973

House in Northampton Dn bus route $200/per month. Live with 4 others. Call Colin 585-1029

Roommate Wanted Northampton $312 + util/own bath N/S 584-5143

Roommate Wanted 2 BDR Apt. in Sunderland. Spring 97. Jan rent free. Call Becca at 665-8389

Male & Female Couple living on cattpus looking to switch room with M/F so both couples can live together. If interested call 546-6137. Ask for Ben

Roommate to share two bedroom apartment on Hobart Lane. Available January 15. $375 per month. Utilities not included. Call 549-5538 Ben or Jason

ROOMATE WANTED

One bedroom available in two bedroom apt. Jan 1st. Free heat and water. Call 549-4089

Looking for a roommate to live in townhouses with 3 cool chicks! Starting January. Call Jamie 549-5767

One Bedroom Available in Puffton two bedroom apartment. Female wanted. On Bus Route 549-9293

One male to share rent at Townehouse Apts. for spring semester. Call 549-5993

Three friendly females looking for roommate to share Mill Valley Apt. $150 including heat and hot water. Call Sarah at 256-8780

SERVICES

Computer Consultant Available. WEB Authoring, Software & Hardware Installs, Repairs Call 6-0953

Money for College. Millions of dollars unclaimed every year. Results guaranteed. Service is free. Thousands of sources of Financial Aid available. Hurry. Call (413) 538-0041 for more info

Computer Problems? Need an upgrade? In-house service, call Scream Savers 549-0083

Pregaant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

Europe $155. Cancun/Mexico $189 R/T Worldwide Destinations Ashirtch Tim 800-326-2009 ashtsch@netcom.com or www.tsi-com.fr/ashtch

WANTED

Spring Break Trips Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica & Florida. Best prices, best parties, group discounts. Space is limited, for free brochure Call today 1-800-959-4SUN

Spring Break America's Premier Student Travel Co ! Party in Cancun & Nassau from $299!! Find out how to go for free & earn extra cash!!Call 1-800-798-1509

Winter Break Killington with the UMass Ski Club. Five nights lodging, 5 days skiing. During Collegiate Ski Fest $260 Call 545-3437

New Year's in Quebec City 3-5 nights in Quebec Hilton. Optional Skiing at Mont Ste Anne. Starts at $89. Call 545-3437 or 1-800-232-2415

Scuba Spring Break Dive Key Largo, Ft. Eam 2 credits! March 16-22 Mandatory Meeting 2/28 7pm Herter 227 Call Project Deep @ 800-282-0977

Spring Break '97 Hottest destinations and coolest vacations! Lowest prices guaranteed! Organize small group, travel free! Call for free info (800)426-7710

TRAVELTIME has great deals for group and individual travel plans. Call Connie 587-3011 413-781-6150

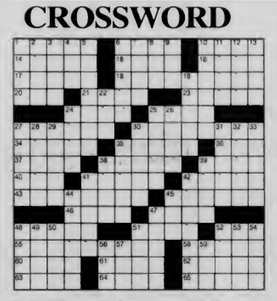
Personals Policy

1. All personals MUST be proofread by Collegian classified employees before payment and acceptance of the classified.
2. Last names MAY NOT be used in personals, ONLY first names and initials are allowed. The only exceptions are for birthday or congratulations personals, in which case the full name may be used.
3. Phone numbers are not allowed in personals. NO EXCEPTIONS.
4. Addresses are not allowed in personals, this means dorm room numbers as well.
5. Personals of a threatening or derogatory nature are not acceptable. Personals of a vindictive or libelous nature are not acceptable. Personals may not be used for the purpose of harassment.
6. Profanity may not be used in personals.
7. The personals section is for personals only. The personals section may NOT be used to sell items, seek roommates, advertise meetings, etc.
8. All personals must have the name, signature, and UMass I.D. number of the student placing the ad filled in on the insertion order. Non-students must provide a valid driver's license and the license number must be recorded on the insertion order. Use of false identification or misrepresentation is subject to penalties under the law.
9. The Collegian reserves the right to refuse or to edit any personal that does not meet the Collegian's standards in accordance with the statutes of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Standard Headings

Activities
Announcements
Apartment For Rent
Auto For Sale
Employment
Entertainment
For Sale -1
Found (2 days Free)
Happy Birthday
Houses For Rent
Instruction
Lost
Musicians
Miscellaneous
Motorcycles
Personals
Room For Rent
Room Wanted
Roommate Wanted
Services
Summer Sublet
To Sublet
Travel
Transportation
Wanted to Rent
Wanted

Rates



$2.00 minimum/day

Students
20¢ per word/day

All others
40¢ per word/day

NO REFUNDS
Please write clearly and legibly. We are not responsible for errors resulting from illegible handwriting or type.

CROSSWORD

ACROSS

1. Home of the Heat
6. Marquis de ___
10. Bryan defeater
14. Doh
15. Blind as ___ (2 wds.)
16. "___ Ever Need Is You" (2 wds.)
17. The "Velvet Fog"
18. Kind of pie
20. Urban trains
21. Silent performer
23. Take care of (2 wds.)
24. Thin
25. Big Mama
27. Deep cold spell
30. Colonize again
34. Broth server
35. Pouts
36. Cloth scrap
37. Porcine sound
38. Testaments
39. Early video game
40. Country south of Can.
41. Dean's Rebel Without A Cause costar
42. Armistice
43. Closed again
45. Compatible
46. See
47. Touchstone
48. Ladle's baby brother
51. Twist
52. Curly and Larry's pal
55. Yen
58. Checking out
60. Ending for major or bachelor
61. Winnie the ___
62. Desert plant
63. Like horses after the farmer's visit
64. Pound hound
65. Alacrity

DOWN

1. Small amount
2. Adored one
3. Tells the world
4. Pop's mate
5. Eschew a standard deduction
6. "What Makes ___ Run?"
7. Lover of an Irish Rose
8. QB Manno
9. List abbr.
10. Most docile
11. Sheltered, et sea
12. Motorist's trouble
13. One of the Jacksons
19. Some curves
22. Rage
24. The Lennons' mentor
25. Viola's kin
26. Questions
27. Miller's yield
28. Elevate
29. Best or al
30. Made parallel lines
31. Speckled fish
32. Camelot prop
33. Urged (on)
35. Vigor
36. Stratagem
39. Discorous
41. 1896 Havana harbor casualty
42. Bowling feats
44. Called forth
45. Henry VIII's greatest desire
47. "In the Still of the ___"
48. Misses
49. Lane's kin
50. Toward
51. Half-hitch, for one
52. Lab creatures
53. Not repeatedly
54. Yipes!
56. Record letters
57. Chi letters
59. Slangy affirmative

Answers to Yesterday's Puzzle

B	E	L	O	W		P	A	W	S		F	O	U	L
I	L	O	V	E		O	W	E	S		I	L	S	A
B	I	D	E	D		P	R	E	T	E	N	D	E	D
S	E	E	P		K	E	Y		P	A	S	S	E
			L	I	E	S		M	E	A	L
O	B	L	O	N	G		F	O	O		E	P	I	C
C	R	O	O	K		A	L	A	N		R	N	A
C	A	S	K	S		F	A	T		L	O	A	F	S
U	K	E		F	I	R	S		O	C	T	E	T
R	E	S	T		I	R	E		P	I	C	E	R	S
		P	A	T	E		M	E	N	U
O	W	N	E	D		M	A	C		P	O	U	T
D	I	A	M	E	T	E	P	S		M	A	R	L	O
E	L	M	O		W	E	E	K		I	N	A	N	E
S	T	E	R		A	N	D	S		A	T	L	A	S

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21-April 20
A great time to plan entertainment or a dinner--your energies will find focus as a host or hostess. Cultivate goodwill at work-- turbulent times may be afoot.

TAURUS
April 21-May 21
If you're feeling bored, check out a new opportunity where your experience may be valued more highly. Deepening a personal commitment may also renew your affection for another person.

GEMINI
May 22-June 21
Planning an excursion provides a welcome respite from a frantic week at work. The pressure will ease when you learn to better delegate authority. Take the first step to bridge a gap between yourself and an estranged friend.

CANCER
June 22-July 22
The covert approach to office politics may disturb you a lot, but this week it's imperative to remain on the sidelines, at least until you're sure which way the wind is blowing. A weekend adventure provides fodder for contemplation.

LEO
July 23-August 23
A romantic attachment flourishes when you make an effort to appreciate your partner's mind as well as other things. A special treat you plan for your sweetie is much appreciated.

VIRGO
August 24-September 22
A new venture you begin is productive from the start, as long as you permit it to develop according to its particular bent. Don't be upset if the reality differs from the theory, as long as it still works.

LIBRA
September 23-October 23
Any extra time you can spend listening pays off handsomely. Not only could you make a new friend, but the information and experience you gather could be invaluable as you head into a new and different situation.

SCORPIO
October 24-November 22
What seems like a boring week presents some unique opportunities for growth. Give aid to someone in need who doesn't expect it--no act of kindness is ever wasted.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23-December 21
As a business deal develops, tt may seem as if one of the parties involved is being deliberately obtuse. Take the extra time to explain; the goodwill you cultivate will pay off one way or another.

CAPRICORN
December 22-January 20
A journey you've begun enters a new phase as you pass a landmark along the way. Celebrate with a trusted friend. Keep your eyes on a central objective in order to avoid being distracted as the week progresses.

AQUARIUS
January 21-February 18
If there's something you want more than anything, this is a good week to sit down and formulate a plan for getting it. Trust a friend to advise you. then stick to your plan--your goal could be closer than you think it is!

PISCES
February 19-March 20
It may be time to sever a relationship that isn't working. While distance can be painful at first, it may be the best path toward a new freedom and happiness. Trust your inner voice.

For Entertainment Purposes Only

UMass Basketball on UVC-TV19

DEC. 10 FRESNO STATE 7PM
DEC. 14 WAKE FOREST 8:30PM
(NO PRE- AND POST- GAME SHOWS)

Courtesy of ESPN

HSCN 2 Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN	Bulletin Board
3	CBS/3	Hartford
4	CBS/4	Boston
5	ABC/5	Boston
6	PBS/57	Springfield
7	HSCN	Movie Channel
8	UPN/20	Hartford
9	Weather Channel
10	NBC/30	New Britain
11	Fox/61	Hartford
12	PBS/24	Hartford
13	WOCH & HSCN
14	UMATV
17	HSCN	Programming
18	TV-19
20	ABC/40	Springfield
22	NBC/22	Springfield
23	CNN
24	CNN/Headline News
25	BET
28	BET on Jazz
27	Laser Video
28	The Learning Channel
30	Comedy Central
31	Popcorn Channel
32	Satellite Programming

Daily listings brought to you in part by your
DAILY COLLEGIAN

MONDAY EVENING © TVData DECEMBER 9, 1996

		6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	C. Sandiego	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (R)		Great Performances "Les Miserables in Concert" (In Stereo)						Symphony for the Spire
WFSB	3	News (R)	CBS News	Inside Edition	Am Journal	Coaby (R) (R)	Ink (In Stereo)	Murphy Brown (R)	Cybill (R)	Chicago Hope (In Stereo) (R)		News (R)	Late Show (R)
WBZ	4	News		CBS News	Ent. Tonight	Coaby (R) (R)	Ink (In Stereo)	Murphy Brown (R)	Cybill (R)	Chicago Hope (In Stereo) (R)		News	Late Show (R)
WCVB	5	News (R)	ABC Wrld News	Inside Edition	Chronicle (R)	Dangerous Minds "Evolution" (R)		NFL Football: Kansas City Chiefs at Oakland Raiders. (In Stereo Live) (R)
WLVI	6	Fresh Prince	Bizzi	Star Trek: The Next Generation		7th Heaven (R) (In Stereo) (R)		Savannah (In Stereo) (R)		News		Extra (R)	Hollywood
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (R)	National Geographic: Puma		"Lying Eyes" (1996, Suspense) Cassidy Rae, Vincent Irizarry. (R)				News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	Simpsons (R)	Roseanne (R)	Home Improve.	Seinfeld (R)	Melrose Place (In Stereo) (R)		TV's Funniest Holidays		News		Murphy Brown	Babylon 5 (R)
WWLP	9	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (R)	National Geographic: Puma		"Lying Eyes" (1996, Suspense) Cassidy Rae, Vincent Irizarry. (R)				News	Tonight Show
WGBY	11	Kratts Creature	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (R)		Members Choice						Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News (R)	ABC Wrld News	Seinfeld (R)	ER. Tonight	Dangerous Minds "Evolution" (R)		NFL Football: Kansas City Chiefs at Oakland Raiders. (In Stereo Live) (R)
WSBK	38	Beverly Hills, 90210 (In Stereo)		Seinfeld (R)	Mad About You	In the House (R)	Malcolm-Eddie	Goode Beh.	Sparks (R) (R)	News	Martin (R)	Mad About You	Real TV (R)
WTBS	72	Family Matters	Family Matters	Home Videos	Home Videos	★★★ "For Your Eyes Only" (1981, Adventure) Roger Moore, Carole Bouquet						★★★ "Love and Let Die" (1973)
A&E	51	Quincy "Smoke Screen"		Equalizer "Heart of Justice"		Biography: Samson and Delilah		Patriot "The Veiled Lady"		Man Marple "Nemesis"		Law & Order "Send" (R)
CNN	53	WorldView (R)		Moneyline (R)	Crossfire (R)	Prime News (R)	Inside Politics	Larry King Live (R)		World Today (R)		Sports Tonight	Moneyline (R)
COM	61	A-List (R) (R)	Dream On	Daily Show (R)	TV Nation	★★½ "Monty Python and the Holy Grail" (1975) Graham Chapman,				Dream On	A-List (R) (R)	Daily Show	TV Nation
CSPAN	13	(4:00) Public Policy Conference		Public Policy Conference		Prime Time Public Affairs						Prime Time Public Affairs (R)
DISC	48	Go for it! (R)		Beyond 2000	Next Step (R)	Wild Discovery: Black Bear		Seeking the Real Jesse James		Fangs! (R)		Next Step (R)	Beyond 2000
ESPN	19	Up Close	Sportscenter		NFL Prime Monday			Gymnastics: Rock 'n' Roll Challenge				Cheerleading	Sportscenter
LIFE	50	Supermarket	Debt	Hope & Gloria	Designing	"A Different Kind of Christmas" (1996, Drama) Shelley Long. (R)				★★½ "Ellidie" (1995, Drama) Susan Lucci, Taran Noah Smith
MTV	52	Ren & Stimpy	Beavis-Butthd	Idiot Savants	Singled Out	Prime Time (In Stereo)				Road Rules	TBA	Idiot Savants	Singled Out
NICK	46	Tiny Toon Adv.	Tiny Toon Adv.	Doug (R)	Rugrats (R)	Hey Arnold!	Happy Days	I Love Lucy (R)	Munsters	M.T. Moore	Rhoda	Taxi (R)	Odd Couple (R)
SCIFI	59	Odyssey (R) (R)	Sci-Fi Trader	Twilight Zone (R)		Forever Knight "Jane Doe" (R)		★★ "Child's Play 3" (1991, Horror) Alex Vincent, Jenny Agutter.				Twilight Zone (R)
TLC	49	Furniture to Go	Home Fro (R)	Hometime (R)	Hometime (R)	Wonde Weathr	Paleoworld	Pharaohs and Kings: Quest		Survival in the Sky (R)		Wonde Weathr	Paleoworld (R)
TNT	57	In the Heat of the Night (R)		In the Heat of the Night (R)		WCW Monday Nitro (Live) (R)				Thunder in Paradise (In Stereo)		WCW Monday Nitro (R) (R)
USA	55	Renegade "Rio Rano" (In Stereo)		Highlander: The Series (R)		WWF: Monday Night Raw		★★★ "Coming to America" (1988, Comedy) Eddie Murphy, Arsenio Hall. (In Stereo) (R)				Silk Stalkings
VH1	45	Video Break		Am. Bandstand	Artist Formerly	Prince		Artist of Year	Fashion TV	RuPaul (R)	Party Machine	Am. Bandstand	Legends (R)
HBO	21	(5:15) ★★★ "Singles" (1992) (R)		Composers' Specials (In Stereo)		★★ "Three Wishes" (1995, Drama) Patrick Swayze. (In Stereo) PG				Comic Relief's 10th		★½ "Makinouo" (1996) (R) (R)
MAX	29	★½ "Folks!" (1992, Comedy) Tom Selleck. (In Stereo) PG-13 (R)				★★ "Nine Months" (1995, Comedy) Hugh Grant. PG-13 (R)				★½ "Body Count" (1996) Brigitte Nielsen, R		"Good Fellas" (R)
SHOW	30	(5:00)	"Johnny & Clyde" (1995, Adventure)		John White (R)	★★ "The Road Killers" (1995) Christopher Lambert. Bedtime (R)				"Critical Choices" (1996, Drama) Lisa Repo-Martel		"Legends: Fall"

Always Wanted One of Those By A. Morse & S. Dumas

Drabble By Kevin Fagan

Frumpy the Clown Judd Winick

Leold By Roger & Salem Salloom

I spend a lot of time quietly watching my girlfriend and her friends do stuff .... normal ordinary things.

I don't think we see life the same.

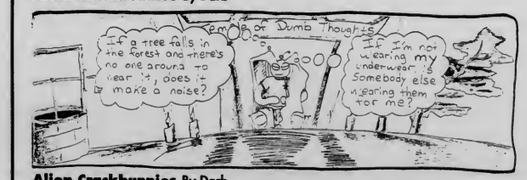
I think men and women are living together .... but in two separate parallel realities ....

We don't see anything the same.... nothing.... is the same.

Maybe trees...

everything else has different meanings for us.... only trees.... maybe swimming pools..... that's it..... trees and swimming pools....

Pasta,.... yeah, pasta, trees and swimming pools..... nothing else....



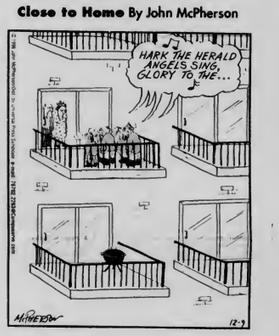
University² By Frank Cho

Leedee By Mike Rybicki

Alien Crackbunnies By Darb

Alien Crackbunnies By Darb

Robotman By Jim Meddick



Dilbert By Scott Adams

8 Years in Braces By Eric Petersen

Close to Home By John McPherson

Quote of the Day

"Do not call up that which ye cannot put down."

–Howard Lovecraft

Quote of the Night

"Forget what they told you, forget what it means..."

–Mary Fahl

Today's Staff

Laura Stock
Night Editor

Suzanne Barber
Copy Editor

Lauren Kosky
Photo Technician

Lorraine Urbanski
Production Supervisor

Sandra Krauss
Chris Lavin
Production

Dining Commons Menu

Menu unavailable. Please refer to this guide to help you decide where to eat.

1 First, go get some dice (6 sided, preferably).

2 Find one you like, and roll it.

If you roll:

- Go to Franklin D.C. for dinner.
- Go to Berkshire D.C. for dinner.
- Go to Hampshire D.C. for dinner.
- Go to Worcester D.C. for dinner.
- Get Pizza for dinner!
- Roll again.

SportsWeekend

Collegian Sports • Monday, December 9, 1996

Inside this issue:

• The men's basketball team won a two–part home–opener against Wyoming yesterday and today in the William D. Mullins Center. See page 12 for the story.

• The woman's basketball team was crushed by No. 1 Stanford on the road this weekend. See page 12 for the story.

• The UMass hockey team captured a huge Hockey East win over Providence on the road Friday. See page 12 for the scoop.

• The Massachusetts men's water polo team lost 21–6 to USC in the NCAA Semifinals.

Wyoming left in the dark at UMass home victory

By Chris Stamm
Collegian Staff

When Massachusetts men's basketball coach James "Bruiser" Flint and the Minutemen arrived at the William D. Mullins Center for Saturday night's game he had one thing in mind: to pick up a home win by shooting the lights out of Wyoming.

MASSACHUSETTS	90
WYOMING	72

Little did he know.

With 7:32 remaining in the game, the Minutemen (2–3) found themselves sitting pretty on top of a 69–53 lead over the Cowboys. After last week's tough 58–53 loss to Georgetown, UMass seemed to be minutes away from notching its first win over a Div. I opponent this year.

After Charlton Clarke took it to the hoop off an Edgar Padillia steal and was fouled, the Mullins Center faded to black.

It would take two days for the Minutemen to finally put a 90–72 win over Wyoming (1–5) into the books.

"I was like, man, I'm up 14 and finally may be able to get one. My team's playing well and the light's go out on me," Flint said. "I can't win for losing."

While relatively few of the Minuteman faithful came out for the game, those who did had much to cheer about.

From sophomore center Lari Ketner's grab on the opening tip, UMass came out of the blocks with a 7–0 run sticking it to Wyoming inside.

With big–man Tyrone Weeks sidelined with an ankle injury, Ketner came up big with 18 points, four boards and a lethal baby hook shot that sent the Cowboys reeling. Weeks is currently listed as day–to–day and hopes to practice before Tuesday's game against No. 13 Fresno State.

Going the other way, Ketner swatted a Wyoming shot with 4:32 to go in the first frame, but with the shot clock winding down, the Cowboys' LaDrell Whitehead (25p, 13– 14 from the line) went inside drawing a Clarke foul. Knocking down both free throws, Whitehead knotted the game at 32.

With 2:38 on the clock, HL Coleman drained a three– pointer to give Wyoming its first lead of the game, propelling the Cowboys to a 39–36 lead at the half.

After knotting it again at 39 on a Carmelo Travieso (14p, 5 assists, 3 boards) trey, the UMass offense heated up and the Minuteman ran away with the lead.

Sort of.

The offensive push was sparked by a feisty Clarke who drove the lane time and again, knocking down the two or going to the line with success. Clarke lead UMass in scoring with 22 points and an incredible 12–16 from the charity stripe.

"I'm happy for him, because I've been on him," Flint said. "He plays, sometimes in spurts. He plays hard sometimes, sometimes he doesn't. Sometimes he walks up the court, sometimes he sprints."

"He took the ball to the hole strong, he shot 16 foul shots and I told him that's his game. Get to the line, get people in the lane, shoot short 15–16 foot shots, that's your game, not a three–point bomber," he said.

As for fellow guards Edgar Padilla (18p, 8a) and Travieso, the two were back in synch spreading out the passing with five Minutemen scoring in double digits.

One of the prime targets in the paint was freshman Ajmal Basit. Seconds

Turn to HOOP, page 9

CASEY KANE / COLLEGIAN

The Minutemen wrapped up Saturday's game with Wyoming yesterday in an empty Mullins Center.

UMass finds "continued" success

If the Massachusetts men's basketball team is smart, it will find new and creative ways to stop play in upcoming hoop games.

It's a winning strategy.

With this weekend's, and I mean this weekend's, 90–72 win over Wyoming, the Minutemen proved that they can laugh in the face of adversity, and triumph despite it.

"Do I get two wins for this one?" UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint jokingly asked after the game.

At 9:45 p.m. with 7:32 remaining in the game and Charlton Clarke going to the line to shoot a pair of free throws, the house lights went down on the evening's show.

The houselights, the spotlights, every single light in the building went out.

"I'm like, man I'm up 14 and finally may be able to get one with the team playing well and the lights go out on me. I can't win for losing," Flint said.

So, the Minutemen and the Cowboys resumed play yesterday afternoon, with 7:32 remaining in the game and Clarke on the line shooting two, although the fans in the stands didn't nearly resemble the prior night's attendance figures.

But before Clarke got the chance to shoot, Wyoming coach Joby Wright added another 20 seconds of waiting into the mix by calling a quick time–out.

"I wasn't expecting it. I didn't think they were going to do it," Clarke said about the time–out. "I thought I got iced enough. It's cold outside. You come here and they try to ice me again. I've been iced for 24 hours and I come here and get iced again."

Clarke hit both of his free throws on his way to a career– high 22 points and UMass dominated from then on out, never allowing Wyoming closer than 14 points of its lead. The Minutemen's five turnovers were a season low. Their 19 assists and .525 field goal percentage were a season high.

"It wasn't that hard," Lari Ketner said about adjusting to the set–back.

This method of play–a–little, stop–for–awhile has been an albeit strange benchmark for UMass success.

Consider the men's hoop game against Rutgers two years ago.

On Feb. 7, 1995 a black female student at Rutgers sat at the center jump circle of Louis Brown Arena a short time before the second half of the Rutgers–UMass game was to begin in order to protest remarks made by Rutgers' President Francis Lawrence.

That student started what turned into an over 150 person sit–in, which postponed the game's second half until March 3.

When the game was resumed in March, it wasn't even played at Rutgers, instead at the Palestra in Philadelphia.

But the Minutemen, after probably the longest halftime ever, came out firing, playing excellent ball en route to a 77–62 victory.

If it worked then, why not in the future?

Consider what happened at Friday night's Celtics game. With the Nets, and former UMass coach John Calipari visiting, Boston jumped at the chance for a win. The two hapless squads fought it out at the FleetCenter before,

Turn to SUCCESS, page 9

UMass hockey rallies to ice Friars in Providence, 5–3

By Jorma Kansanen
Collegian Staff

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — The snow this weekend might have kept you in the house, but for the Massachusetts hockey team, hitting the road was the best thing to happen for them this season in Hockey East competition.

MASSACHUSETTS	5
PROVIDENCE	3

Friday night before a sparse crowd at Schneider Arena, the Minutemen (6–7, 3–6 in HE) rallied from a 3–1 deficit with four unanswered goals, beating the Friars (6–8–1, 4–4–1 in HE), 5–3. Not only was this win over Providence College important for UMass in the HE standings, it was also their first road win of the season. Led by the goal production of the first and second stars of the game, senior forwards Rob Bonneau and Warren Norris, who each scored two goals, the Minutemen came back on the road.

"It was a great road win, and not only a great road win, a great Hockey East win," coach Joe Mallen said. "Being down 3–1 at Providence, and coming back to beat them by two, I think it was a gutsy effort by all of our guys."

At the 3:28 mark of the second period, Friar forward David Green put PC up 3–1, beating junior goalie Brian Regan from assists by Russ Guzior and Fernando Pisani. UMass has had to face deficits in the recent past against other HE opponents like Boston University, New Hampshire and Merrimack, but the road factor seemed to weigh against them in this contest.

At home, the Minutemen comeback bids have been fortuitous, forcing one game into overtime (UNH) and getting a win in their last HE home game (Merrimack). On the road, though, questions abound. UMass has had trouble on smaller ice surfaces, like Walter Brown Arena, Tully Forum and the Volpe Complex.

Those questions were quickly answered, and UMass did not let down after Green's goal, slowly taking over the play for the rest of the second period. At the 5:25 mark, the Minuteman penalty kill came through once again for them. With UMass' fifth short–handed goal in five games, Norris was nicely set up by Bonneau from behind Friar goalie Dan Dennis' net, burying the puck to make the game 3–2.

Senior Gerry Cahill kept up his torrid scoring pace of late, stick–faking Dennis out of his goalie pads, beating him through the five–hole to tie the game up. Junior defenseman Brad Norton assisted on the goal (two assists on the night), walking into the right of Dennis from the blueline to set up the score.

The emptiness of Schneider Arena matched the lack of effort of the Friars in the third period, and UMass took advantage. Bonneau scored his ninth and tenth goals of the season in the third to put the game away. Sophomore Steve MacKinnon kept a loose puck in play in the Friars' zone, with Bonneau knocking the puck past Dennis at the 5:53 mark of the third. The goal–of–the–game occurred a little over 11 minutes later, with Bonneau going one–on–one against the Friar defense.

A broken play through center ice set up the score that put UMass up for good, with Cahill and MacKinnon colliding to leave Bonneau to

Turn to HOCKEY, page 9

HUI GAO / COLLEGIAN

The UMass hockey team came from behind to beat the Friars 5–3 in Providence.

UMass makes changes; Golden stick beats PC

By Leigh Torbin
Collegian Staff

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — Hockey players are rivaled only by baseball players in terms of superstitions. Even if you have never been in a hockey locker room from 6–year–old mites on up to the NHL to see the peculiar manner in which these people put on their equipment, just watch players bless their goaltender before the start of a period for a rough idea.

Players come on the ice in certain orders, use a certain kind of tape or make sure that a certain pad touches a puck before it is put on, and these things change less than William Shatner's hair piece.

With this in mind, seeing Warren Norris takes warm–ups at Providence College's Schneider Arena Friday night sent chills down the old spine. Not only was the team wearing brand new sweaters, with its longest winning streak of the year on the line, but Norris had the audacity to use a new stick.

Norris took to the pint–sized PC ice wielding a bright, shiny new Easton aluminum Pro Gold 100, as opposed to his usual renegade Koho Revolution, with the blade spray– painted jet black from heel to toe, matching the shaft.

"That was a little thought in the back of my mind going into the game; something a little new to change things up," Norris said. "I guess it's a little superstitious."

The minute changes by the good folks in the hockey equipment room led to bigger and better changes Friday night, the correlation depending on how super–

Turn to GOLDEN, page 9

USC topples UM, Trojans win 21–6

By Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.
Collegian Staff

For one quarter of the NCAA men's water polo championship first round match between No. 12 Massachusetts and No. 1 Southern California, the two clubs played evenly.

USC	21
MASSACHUSETTS	6

Unfortunately for UMass, the Trojans stormed out of their horse, and mercilessly drubbed the unsuspecting Minutemen in the last three quarters, going away winning, 21–6 at Canyonview Pool in La Jolla, Calif.

"We proved that we could play with them for a quarter," UMass coach Russ Yarworth said. "But, we lost our concentration; we tried to do too much too soon. Now we need to refocus and look at trying to win the third–place game."

The Trojans will face the winner of the UCLA–UC–Davis semifinal match–up to decide the national championship, while the Minutemen will play for third place against the UCLA–UC–Davis loser.

Southern Cal used the second and third quarters to send a message to their second round opponent, outscoring UMass 12–0 in the middle 14 minutes. Senior goalie Paul Engin and his freshman back–up Richard Huntley rather literally had their hands tied in front of the Massachusetts net.

Engin made the start and stopped seven Trojan tries while Huntley managed two saves in relief.

The Minutemen's phenomenal depth at the two–meter position shone through the cloud of domination draped over them by the powerful USC squad.

Three of UMass' four starting hole men were named earlier in the week to the Eastern Water Polo Association All–Conference team.

Turn to POLO, page 9

UM falls prey to Cardinal

By Luke Meredith
Collegian Staff

Revenge is a dish best served cold.

One year after beating then No.8 Stanford 65–56 in the William D. Mullins Center, the Massachusetts women's basketball team headed west for a rematch Friday night, and found out that the Cardinal, now ranked No. 1 in the country, remembered exactly what had happened in Amherst.

STANFORD	100
MASSACHUSETTS	47

Powered by junior forward Olympia Scott's 26 points and 12 rebounds, the Cardinal spanked the Minutewomen 100–47 in front of 4,519 at the Maples Pavilion in Stanford, Calif.

All–American Kate Starbird added 17 points as Stanford improved to 7–0 to hold on to their No. 1 ranking.

UMass was never really in this one. Shooting just 30 percent in the first half, the Minutewomen fell behind 48–18 by intermission.

The Minutewomen couldn't really get much going against a strong Cardinal defense, hitting on only two of seven attempts behind the three–point line.

Stanford also enjoyed a huge advantage on the boards. The Cardinal out–rebounded the Minutewomen 51–28, including a whopping 22–11 advantage on the offensive end.

Though freshman sensation Kelly Van Huisen led the Minutewomen in points with 10, she was not immune to problems that plagued UMass all night. Van Huisen had eight of the Minutewomen's 22 turnovers, and the 5–foot–8 guard could only rack up one assist.

Sophomore center Yolanda Rayside proved to be a pleasant sur–

Turn to UMASS, page 9

The Massachusetts

DAILY COLLEGIAN

Volume CVI Issue 66 • New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967 • Tuesday, December 10, 1996

Hide your towels!

Fresno St. head coach Jerry Tarkanian and his 13th ranked Bulldogs square off with the UMass men's hoop team tonight at 7:30 in a nationally televised matchup. For the scoop, See Sports (Page 12).

Cartoons redux?

The Best of Ardman Animation pleases as it plays the Pleasant St. Theatre this week. Check out our review (See Arts & Living, page 6).

WORLD

Perry warns China of trade with Iran

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary William Perry told China's defense minister yesterday that weapons sales to Iran could backfire on the Asian giant. Gen. Chi Haotian said he would "consider the point" but maintained reports of the sales had been exaggerated. The Chinese also consented in principle to allowing U.S. warships to continue making port visits in Hong Kong after July 1997, when China regains sovereignty over the colony, according to a senior defense official who briefed reporters on condition of anonymity.

Perry's warning on Iranian relations came as Perry and Chi, as part of a series of increased U.S.–China contacts, agreed to continue high level military meetings.

The Chinese general met briefly at the White House with President Clinton at the start of a U.S. visit that will include trips to U.S. Pacific Command headquarters in Hawaii and other military installations.

Clinton told the defense minister "he views our engagement with China as a way to further our cooperation where we can... and to address our differences were they exist, such as human rights," White House spokesman David Johnson said.

He said there was no substantive discussion of human rights or other contentious matters such as Taiwan or the reported weapons sales to Pakistan or iran.

NATION

CIA director plans to leave post early

WASHINGTON (AP) — CIA Director John Deutch, passed over in President Clinton's search for a new defense secretary, plans to quit as intelligence chief in the next week or two, an administration official said yesterday.

The official, who spoke on condition he not be identified, said Deutch would turn over his duties to his top deputy, George Tenet, until a successor is confirmed by the Senate. Clinton said last Thursday he was nominating his national security adviser, Anthony Lake, to head the CIA in his second term.

Lake is not likely to be confirmed by the Senate before late January.

Indeed, Sen. Arlen Specter, chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, said yesterday he believed Lake "could have a real problem" winning confirmation because of his role in decisions on the secret arming of Bosnia's Muslims.

Specter, R-Pa., who will rotate off the intelligence panel in January, said committee members would have tough questions for Lake on his role in the 1994 decision to tacitly assent to Iranian arms shipments to Bosnia.

Some other prominent lawmakers have predicted Clinton's new national security team, including Lake, will have a relatively easy time getting confirmed.

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Weds.	Thurs.
HIGH: 35 LOW: 20	HIGH: 33 LOW: 21	HIGH: 30 LOW: 20

INSIDE

Arts & Living.....page 6
Classifieds .....page 10
Comics .....page 11
Crossword .....page 10
Editorial .....page 4
FYI.....page 2
News.....page 3
Sports .....page 12

KENNETH W. P. SCOTT/COLLEGIAN

Majestic Metawampe
Metawampe, a legendary spirit, stands strong in the face of the up–and–coming winter.

Snowball fight breaks out at AC; Alleged attackers from UMass

By Beth McCarthy and Laura Stock
Collegian Staff

The snowstorm that caused power outages on the University of Massachusetts campus and surrounding towns resulted in a series of violent and destructive snowball fights by an alleged mob of UMass students on the Amherst College Campus.

The "snowy attack" prompted a special edition publication of the Amherst Student, the Amherst College newspaper.

"He told me he felt like he was driving into hell," said Vivienne Wan, a junior at Amherst College, of her friend's description of the scene he saw through his car window.

According to the Amherst Student, an alleged group of 100–200 UMass students arrived on campus around midnight, yelling profanities directed towards Amherst students and throwing snowballs at buildings and breaking windows. Pratt, James and Sterns Residence Halls seemed to be targeted, according to the paper.

An Amherst student and resident of James Hall told the Collegian that she only witnessed 10–20 of the 100–200 UMass students actually throwing snowballs.

It was estimated by several UMass students that over 500 were involved in snowball fights across campus — with a smaller procession which travelled down fraternity row and headed towards Amherst College.

Mike, a junior psychology major at UMass who did not want to give his last name, said that it started out as a fun snow event, but became crazed when Amherst College students did not respond.

"Everybody was wound up and wanted to get into a snowball fight with Amherst College, but no one came out," explained Mike. "When they didn't respond, that's when it started to get a little out of hand."

Vince Elizarde, a sophomore Civil Engineering major who also participated in the snowball fights, agreed that their intentions were not malicious, but the mood of the crowd became more rambunctious once "the groups of people got big enough where everyone felt they could do anything and get away with it."

Elizarde believes that the snowball fights were incited by the power outage on the UMass campus.

"If power didn't go out, I would never have thought of going out and I think most of the kids there wouldn't have either," said Elizarde.

The Amherst Student, however, said that the event followed an alleged first snowfall "tradition" of UMass snowball fights travelling to Amherst College. The paper cited a similar occurrence from November 1986.

According to Jenny Vosacek, a freshman at Amherst College who fell victim to, as well as witnessed, much of Saturday night's fiasco, UMass students "were screaming, 'UMass, UMass, UMass — come out dorks'."

"I got hit in the head by a snow ball that came through my window and it could easily have had glass in it," said Vosacek. "If someone had gone outside I'm sure it would not have been pretty."

Mike confirmed how out of control the situation got when "approximately 10 kids flipped a [parked] car over."

"Everyone was screaming and yelling and throwing snowballs, and it was so confusing you didn't really know what was going on," said Mike.

According to Mike, he left after police cars with lights flashing came to break up the mass of University students concentrated outside of the freshman quad area of Amherst College.

The Amherst Student reported that the Amherst College Vice–President of the Student Government Organization, Paul Rieckoff, said that "Amherst security was standing on either side of the mob, watching."

According to Officer Michael Johnson, of the Amherst Police Department, "there were no arrests made for throwing snowballs or disorderly conduct."

"I don't know if you've driven through town at all, but this place looks like a war zone," said Johnson on Sunday, describing the scene that awaited the town after heavy snow caused major destruction the day before.

"Downed power lines and car accidents were our first priority," Johnson added. "We did not have time to handle the typical college calls. Snowball fights were kind of minor."

UMass Chief of Police John Luippold said on Sunday that teams of police officers were sent to Southwest and Central Residence Areas at UMass to disperse "roving bands of individuals throwing snowballs."

"Once they were dispersed, they'd move to another location," Luippold said.

Areas hit hardest on campus by snowball fights were the Southwest and Central Areas. In Southwest, a large window in Hampden Dining hall was smashed.

According to The Amherst Student, the Amherst College Security "declined to offer any comment on the extent of the damages" at the school.

The Amherst College Chief of Police was not available for comment.

Co–ops serve UMass

Student collectives bring life to campus

By Tamar Carroll
Collegian Correspondent

Students rush into Campus Design & Copy, searching for the perfect flyer for their band's performance next weekend or an impressive–looking resume. Above the hum of copiers, employees hurry to get their orders out on time, while others are busy creating graphics.

Campus Design & Copy Is one of eight student–run businesses on the University of Massachusetts campus. These non–profit businesses are run on the collective model. In this model, all decisions are made together, with each employee having an equal say in the final decision. There are no specific managerial positions, instead everyone on staff is expected to contribute to running the business.

Several student employees from businesses such as Campus Design & Copy, The UMass Bike Co–Op, People's Market, Earthfoods Cafe, Sweets–N–More, The Sylvan Snack Bar, Tickets Unlimited and the Greenough Snack Bar agree that the collective format has changed their jobs from being routine to extraordinary.

Many of the student employees choose to work at the collectives for work experience, which they hope will aid them in their future professions, while others just need to earn money.

Mike Nolan, of Campus Design & Copy, said, "This job is something that you are a part of. It's part of my life and my academic career. I get just as much from here as from my academic classes, if not more."

Co–worker Maydad Cohen added, "My favorite part is that I can say I own the business. I help play a part in everything that goes on here."

In addition to providing over 160 student jobs, the students, working with the Program Coordinator of the Center for Student Business (CSB) Katja Hahn d'Errico, strive to meet their goals of providing the campus with a useful service, teaching co–curricular skills that students can employ after graduation and teaching respect for diversity.

"The best part is the education, all the different facets — learning how to cook, how to deal with people in a managerial aspect, and taking on responsibility," said Aaron Corso, of Earthfoods.

Maegen Selzner, of Tickets Unlimited, agreed that working at a collective has been an education in itself.

"The stuff that I have learned from

Turn to CO-OP, page 3

Harding examines male feminists

Lectures on role & importance of men in feminist movement

By Laura Forster
Collegian Staff

Sandra Harding, Professor and Director of the UCLA Center for the Study of Women lectured last Thursday in conjunction with a new graduate minor In Women's Studies now offered at the University of Massachusetts.

Internationally known, Harding is currently at work on a her latest book entitled, Is Science Multicultural?

Harding's lecture, entitled, "Men, Women and Epistemology," addressed how various feminist groups view men's involvement within their movement.

Harding began her lecture explaining that even though she introduces men as activists in feminism, "it is not a reason to not hire women."

"History has already produced male feminist thinkers [i.e. Marx, Engels], but if their gender wasn't known to us then perhaps they would be considered feminists," said Harding.

Harding briefly highlighted the various standpoints of liberal, Marxist, social, and radical feminists on male involvement in feminist thought.

She explained that liberal and Marxist feminist groups insist gender does not matter, while social and radical feminists claim that men make distinctive contributions to feminist thought.

The socialist feminists, she explained, take the standpoint that, "it cannot be assumed that because men have no experience in women's positions, they can not relate to, or understand feminist thought."

Harding continued by saying that just as patriarchy has been a conditioned thinking in society, feminist thought must work in the same way.

"Socialist feminists believe women need to be central to feminist thought, but if not supported by various other thinkers, their movement will die," said Harding.

According to Harding, radical feminists feel men have an ability for feminist thought. Insisting that the issue is not about being male but about being masculine, which prevents an understanding of feminist thought.

Harding also addressed critics who say that, "men are left in phobic spaces because if they are sympathetic to women's needs, they are labelled queer, often leaving them to hate women."

Turn to HARDING, page 3

Hoffa win may raise questions for labor

By Kevin Galvin
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — The possibility that labor legend Jimmy Hoffa's son could win a bitterly fought campaign for the presidency of the Teamsters is raising questions for a rejuvenated labor movement and the new leadership of the AFL–CIO.

A federally appointed election officer was to begin tallying mail–in ballots today to determine who will lead the 1.4–million–member union for the next five years. Both sides say the race is too close to call.

The battle between incumbent Ron Carey and Michigan attorney James Hoffa, the son of the Teamsters leader who disappeared in 1975, has split the union and raised the question of what a Hoffa victory would mean to labor.

Carey's reforms reflect changes under way in many unions, and his support was key to John Sweeney's insurgent campaign for the AFL–CIO presidency last year.

Nevertheless, labor leaders say other unions will respect the choice

Turn to HOFFA, page 3

KENNETH W. P. SCOTT/COLLEGIAN

Smoke on the water...
The campus shakes off the nite cold and steams in the morning sun.

U.N. allows Iraq to export oil; Celebrants rejoice in Baghdad

By Robert H. Reid
Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS — The United Nations gave Iraq the go-ahead yesterday to resume oil exports for the first time since 1990 to buy food and medicine for Iraqis suffering the effects of international sanctions.

In Iraq, people rejoiced when state media announced the deal last night. In Baghdad's poor neighborhoods, large crowds danced in the streets and shouted slogans in support of President Saddam Hussein.

Overjoyed celebrants fired guns into the air, prompting government warnings for them to stop shooting or face arrest.International sanctions have prohibited Iraq from exporting oil since Saddam invaded Kuwait in 1990, triggering the Persian Gulf War.

The United Nations agreed to allow limited oil exports to alleviate the misery of the Iraqi people. U.N. agencies estimate that about 180,000 Iraqi children under age five suffer from malnutrition because of the embargo.

"This is a victory for the poorest of the poor of Iraq, for the women and children," U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali said.

U.N. officials said Iraq was free to begin limited exports today at 12:01 a.m. EST. Iraq's U.N. ambassador, Nizar Hamdoon, said he expected oil to begin flowing within a couple of days.Iraq will be allowed to sell up to $2 billion worth of oil for the first six months under strict international supervision. Some 250 companies have expressed an interest in bidding for the oil contracts, and the U.S. Treasury Department has cleared American firms to take part.

Two-thirds of the revenues will go for food and medicine. The rest will provide compensation to Gulf War victims and pay for U.N. monitoring of Iraqi weapons systems.

"We see this as a humanitarian issue, as a way for Saddam Hussein to, however begrudgingly, meet his commitments to the international community to provide for his own civilian population," White House spokesman Mike McCurry said.

In New York, Iraqi officials said the increase was needed to compensate for the rise in food.

For Your Information

PYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an PYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Tuesday, Dec. 10

Lecture — Peter Lewenberg, Executive Vice President of Morris Alper and a UMass trustee, will give a lecture on food Marketing principals at 4 p.m. in roqm 805–09 of the Campus Center.

Performance — The Fire and Water Cafe in Northampton presents Susan Scotto and her performance art piece "Five Meditations on Barbie" at 9 p.m. For more information, call 586–8336.

Wednesday, Dec. 11

Comedy — The comedy improv troupe Mission Improvable will perform at 8 p.m. in the Field classroom in Orchard Hill. "Meanwhile...", an all female a capella group will open.

Poetry Reading — Spectrum magazine is sponsoring a poetry and prose reading in the Student Union Art Gallery at 7:30 p.m. If you would like to read, contact the Spectrum office at 545–2240 or 406 E Student Union.

Thursday, Dec. 12

Lecture — Dr. Vera Whisman, a professor of Sociology and Women's Studies at Hobart and William Smith Colleges and author of Queer by Choice, will present a lecture titled "The Question of Choice" at 12:30 p.m. in Campus Center room 803. This is part of the GLBT Studies Lecture Series and is co–sponsored by the Stonewall Center, GLB GSO, Women's Studies, and the Chancellor's Task Force on GLBT Matters. For more information, please contact the UMass Stonewall Center at 545–4824.

Meeting — GEO Membership meeting from 5–7 p.m. in Campus Center room 804. This meeting is to decide how the union should respond to the Administrations Contract Proposals regarding Affirmative Action and Child Care.

Notices

Dance — The Northeast School of Dance Studio in Northampton will hold a dance spree every Friday from 8:30 p.m. to midnight every Friday. People can dance to variety of music in a smoke and alcohol–free environment. All ages welcome. Sliding scale. For more information, call 584– 8167.

Dancing — UMass Ballroom Dance meetings are every Tuesday and Thursday at 5:15 p.m. in room 101 Totman. Come learn to dance, newcomers welcome. For more information, contact Milly DeJesus at 546–1083.

Employment — The Department of Consumer Studies is seeking a candidate to fill the position of Computer Coordinator. The applicant must be a grad student. Please send resume with references to: Dr. Sheila Mammen, Dept. of Consumer Studies, 101 Skinner Hall, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Ma, 01003. For more information, contact Dr. Mammen at 545–2391.

Health — To help students and their families stay healthy and access University Health Services more easily, members of the Health Reach International team are available to help you find answers to your questions and concerns: Mondays from 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Health Education Dept., UHS room 248 (call 577–5181 for more info) and 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Community Room H–4 North Village; Tuesdays 6:30– 8:30 p.m. in the International Lounge, Prince House (call 545–2299 for more info); Wednesdays 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Community Room, 411 Lincln . All conversations are confidential.

Meeting — Alanon meetings are held Mondays in room 801 and Thursdays in room 802 of the Campus Center from noon–1 p.m.

Meeting — P.O.W.E.R., the Progressive Organization for Women's Rights holds their weekly meetings on Thursdays at 6 p.m. in the Student Union room 306. All men and women are welcome.

Meeting — The Pakistan Students Association has its weekly meetings every Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. Check for the room number at the information desk. For further details, contact Musharraf at 546–6295.

Meeting — Anthropology Undergraduate Caucus meets every Wednesday at 7:45 p.m. in Machmer 201. All anthropology undergraduate minors and majors welcome.

Meeting — Weekly "Schulchan Ivrit" held every Wednesday at 3 p.m. in the Bluewall Cafe. Make a right as you enter and look for the sign on the table. All Israelis and other Hebrew speakers welcome.

Meeting — The Animal Rights Coalition meetings are every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in room 306 of the Student Union. For more information, call the ARC office at 5–1925.

Menorah Lighting — All are welcome to attend the lighting of the 6–foot menorah in front of the Hillel House, 388 N. Pleasant St., Amherst, at the following times: Tues. Dec. 10 at 4:30 p.m.; Wed. Dec. 11 at 8:30 p.m.; Thurs. Dec. 12 at 6 p.m.

New Organization — WICC (West Indian/Caribbean Coalition) meets every Sunday evening at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center Coffee Shop. Anyone from the West Indies or the Caribbean is encouraged to attend, as well as anyone interested in the culture. For more information, contact Tony at 546–6487 or Nizam at 546–3967.

New Organization — Attention Biracial and Multiracial Students on campus. A new organization is forming and your help is needed. If interested, call Jordan at 546–3548.

Religious — The Muslim Student Association at the University of Massachusetts invites all Muslims in the Amherst area to weekly Friday prayer from noon to 1 p.m. in the United Asia Cultural Center Room (in the basement of Worcester Dining Common). For more information, call Utama at 256–8482 or Laili at 253–0874.

Staff Needed — The UMass Index yearbook needs staff in all departments. Editorial positions are available in Photo, Layout, Copy, and Marketing departments. An assistant copy editor and assistant sports editor are also needed. Meetings are held on Wednesdays at 7 p.m., 304 Student Union, or call 545–0848 if interested.

Submissions Request — Spectrum Magazine is looking for submissions of poetry, prose, artwork, and photos. Submissions can be turned in to the Spectrum office, 406E Student Union. The final deadline for all submissions is Feb. 12, 1997. Anyone interested in knowing more about the Spectrum can call the office at 545–2240.

Support Group — Tobacco cessation support group meets weekly on Wednesday evenings from 7–8 p.m. in the Campus Center to help people quit smoking and chewing tobacco. See schedule by elevators for room number or call Steve at 577–5181 for further information.

Talent Needed — The UMass Asian American Students Association is looking for Asian/American hip hop, reggae, and R&B dancers for next semesters annual Asian Night production to be held on April 11, 1997. Contact Geneva at 546–2714 for audition information.

Volunteer — The Zoo in Forest Park at Springfield has a wealth of diverse volunteer opportunities available for persons who love animals and are committed to conservation education. For further information about the Zoo and to be sent a volunteer application, please call (413) 733–2251.

KENNETH W. P. SCOTT/COLLEGIAN

Trippy Tuesday

A student rides the esclator in the Campus Center yesterday afternoon captured in slow motion.

THE UNIVERSITY STORE

UNIVERSITY STORE

Campus Center
545-2619
M-F, 9am-5pm
Sat., 10am-5pm

CONCOURSE SALE

is back...

Save 20% to 50% off
Lowest Ticketed Price on Selected
✓Hats ✓Jacks
✓SweatShirts and ✓Tees

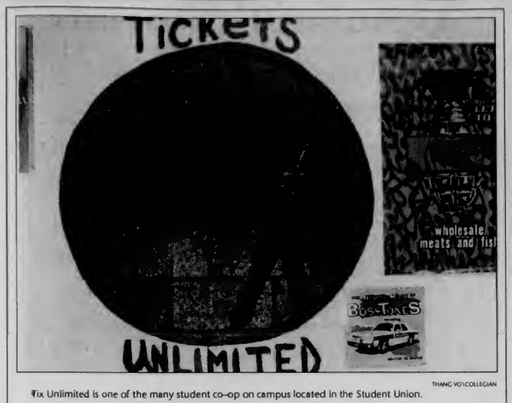
Famous Makers • ALL First Quality

UMass
Division of Continuing Education

Winter Session
1997

January 2-23

· More than 100 credit courses both day and evening



· Professional development courses, seminars, workshops

· Courses for recertification points for teachers

Register Now!

Call for a free course catalog · (413) 545-0107
e-mail: contined@admin.umass.edu

Division of Continuing Education · University of Massachusetts Amherst
Explore our Web site at http://www.umass.edu/contined/

THANG VO/COLLEGIAN

Tix Unlimited is one of the many student co–op on campus located in the Student Union.

■ co-op

continued from page 1

Tix [Unlimited] is so major. I feel like if I graduated and wanted to open my own business, I could do it," said Selzner, "Working here teaches you so much. It's one of the best things I have done here at UMass."

The student businesses provide a wide array of services to the UMass community located conveniently on campus, ranging from low cost vegetarian meals to bike tune–ups and graphics design. However, many student employees feel that they are overlooked by the majority of the campus community.

"A lot of people don't even know that we exist on campus, yet we have some of the best prices in town," said John Maillkux of the UMass Bike Co–Op.

This sentiment was echoed by Jeff Murphy of Sweets–N– More who said, "No matter how much advertising we do, some people still come down and are surprised that we're here."

The lack of business from students is becoming a real problem for the co–ops, particularly for Sweets–N–More, which will be forced to close its doors if it can not fiscally break even this year.

Earthfoods is experiencing similar customer shortages. They now serve 200–250 less people each day than they did two years ago.

"We're not happy about our shrinking customer base. It's a daunting problem," said Corso.

To combat the lack customers, many of the businesses are starting advertising campaigns and are offering new services. For example, the Bike Co–Op will be serving as a pick–up and drop–off site for ski and snowboard tunings, while Campus Design and Copy is looking to add color copying to their list of services.

Many students who work in these Co–Ops have expressed hope that these techniques will boost their sales and allow their collective businesses to continue offering services to the UMass community as well as provide a unique educational experience to their employees.

Details on some the student–run businesses at UMass. For more information on these and other student–run businesses at UMass, contact the Center for Student Business at 5–2525.

Earthfoods
Location: Commonwealth Room of the Student Union
Services: Low–cost vegetarian and vegan lunches
Quotation: "We offer really good, really cheap food. It's especially important for smaller communities like vegans. Since we're non–profit, all the money is going to the students. We're working for the students. We do donations. We're interested in feedback," said Aaron Corso, a worker at Earthfood's.

UMass Bicycle Co–Op
Location: First floor of the Student Union
Services: tune–ups for $20, part ordering and instillation, trail awareness, BMX and free style bike sales by order, and bike repairs.
Quotation: "We're a low cost alternative to going into town to larger bike shops," said Brandon Gillard, a worker at the Bike Co–Op.

Tickets Unlimited
Location: 317 Student Union
Services: Sells tickets for all RSO events, as well as all Pearl Street shows.
Quotation: "We're working on getting Iron Horse tickets, but we don't have them yet. Hopefully we'll pick up Iron Horse by the end of this semester or next semester," said Maegan A. Selzner, a worker at Tickets Unlimited.

Campus Design & Copy
Location: 403 Student Union
Services: Walk–in self serve copiers, graphic design, transparencies, resumes, table tents, binding, course packets, class notes, graphic design, computer use, fax service and high speed copying for larger jobs.
Quotation: "We have really low prices, the same as or lower than our competition. We're not here to make lots of money. We want to be competitive. When you patronize us, you're supporting student–run business," said Mike Nolan, a worker at Campus Design & Copy.

Sweets–N–More
Location: first floor of Field Dormitory, in Orchard Hill
Services: Snacks and candy such as ice cream sundaes, brownies, cookies, milkshakes, nachos, grilled cheese, bagels, rice krispy treats, sodas, coffee, hot chocolate and chips.
Quotation: "This year is a really critical year for us, because if we don't do well, they're going to shut us down. But things seem to be going better, so we may be able to save ourselves," said Jeff Murphy, a worker at Sweets–N– More.

— Tamar Carroll

■ Hoffa

continued from page 1

of the Teamsters members. The AFL–CIO is barred from meddling in its affiliates' affairs and federation officials discount reports that a Hoffa victory would force Sweeney to consider kicking the Teamsters out of the federation.

"The skepticism of many people has to do with who's backing him," Joshua Freeman, a Columbia University professor who studies labor, said of Hoffa. "He seems to represent a vehicle for some of the old guard leadership on the regional and local level to reassert themselves."

But while the name Hoffa recalls corruption for some, in the minds of many Teamsters it is also inseparable from labor's golden days, when the union was a strong social force and its rank–and–file enjoyed good wages.

"Some of his support comes from frustration with the inability of Carey, and the Teamsters and the AFL–CIO to restore the level of influence they once had," Freeman said.

To avoid federal racketeering charges, the Teamsters in 1989 signed a consent decree that established an independent review board to investigate wrongdoing by union officials.

The deal also provided the first direct elections of union officers, which Carey's slate won against the wishes of the Teamsters hierarchy.

Working with regulators, Carey has placed 66 locals in trusteeship and suspended officers suspected of corruption. Carey says Hoffa's supporters are hurt most by such reforms.

■ Harding

continued from page 1

During the question and answer period, Harding was asked whether she had developed a model which captures the various perspectives involved in the feminist movement. Harding replied that these various perspectives already exist.

Harding said that she agrees with post–structionalists who, "disregard the truth because often discussion is closed off when theories in science are adopted. This is one disadvantage of science, as enough faulty theories have pointed out in the past."

FBI asks public to help locate the Olympic bomber

By Russ Bynum
Associated Press

ATLANTA — Stumped in its investigation of the deadly Olympic park bombing, the FBI yesterday asked the public for help in identifying the voice of the man who called to warn police of the bomb just before it went off.

The FBI offered a reward of up to $500,000 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the bomber or bombers, Deputy Director Weldon Kennedy said.

"We've made a lot of progress in this investigation, but we still continue to seek the public's assistance," he said. Meanwhile, NBC reached a settlement yesterday with lawyers for security guard Richard Jewell, who for three months was considered a suspect in the bombing, over comments made on the air by news anchor Tom Brokaw. Details were not released.

At the FBI news conference, investigators also displayed a replica of the knapsack that contained the bomb, and asked for witnesses or photographs taken in the park shortly before the July 27 attack that might help identify the person who carried it. "We firmly believe somewhere, someone has a photograph" of the bomb being carried into the park, Kennedy said.

Kennedy played a recording of the 911 call received by Atlanta police about 22 minutes before the bomb exploded.

"There is a bomb in Centennial Park. You have 30 minutes," a man said slowly and calmly during the 13–second call.

A transcript of the call was released shortly after the bombing but the audio tape was withheld until today.

"If anyone believes they recognize the voice of the person... please call," Kennedy said.

Kennedy announced a toll–free telephone number — 1–888–324–9797 — for the public to call with tips.

The bomb exploded during an early morning concert in Olympic Centennial Park. One person was killed and more than 100 were injured. A cameraman rushing to the scene died of a heart attack. Kennedy said the bomb was heavy — more than 40 pounds — and was carried in a green, Army–style knapsack, which was left beneath a bench next to a sound tower in the park.

Because someone nudged the pack, causing it to fall on its back, the explosion went straight up, he said. Had the force of the blast gone outward along the ground, it would have caused many more casualties, Kennedy said.

"We would have seen a higher number of casualties, and many, many more people injured or killed than what we had."

The Best of the Internet Broadcast to your PC Wirelessly...

Sports Fans
Russell Williamson uses it to monitor the Bulls game on a wirelessly updated multimedia scoreboard, tucked away in the corner of his screen while he works on his Visual C++ project.

In the Home
Janet Ryan uses it to know instantly when she gets new E-Mail from her daughter at college, without constantly going on-line to check.

Cyber Junkies
Rebecca "flygirl" Mills uses it as her doorbell from Cyberspace. Her cyberfriends ring her wirelessly from the web to announce chats, game challenges and internet phone calls, even when her modem is not connected.

At School
Rick Spencer uses it to be alerted instantly when he has new E-Mail. With only five pages done on his term paper, he has no time to fight the busy signal while dialing into the University mail server.

Telecommuters
Jeff Simons uses it for instant response to corporate E-Mail. He wirelessly listens to broadcasts from the corporate Intranet, even while working from home.

Small Office
Ken Murphy uses it to keep track of breaking news that impacts his business. He doesn't have a mondo T1 phone connection, but he does have AirMedia Live™.

How will You use AirMedia Live.?

Designed for Microsoft Windows 95

Here is how you get AirMedia Live.

Hottest Computer Gift This Season!

Buy a NewsCatcher
As low as $149.99

NewsCatcher™ is the first wireless receiver for the AirMedia Live™ Internet Broadcast Network, delivering the latest breaking news, weather, sports scores, stock quotes and E-Mail alerts, to your PC even when your modem is not connected. NewsCatcher™ plugs into your serial port and captures the wireless broadcasts of the AirMedia Live Internet Broadcast Network, feeding the information directly to your Windows®95 desktop PC even while other applications are running. With AirMedia Live™ and NewsCatcher™, you can disconnect and stay informed.

* Special Limited Time Offer *
Buy a NewsCatcher and receive 3 months of free Premiere Serviceand a free T Shirt with registration!
Offer ends January 31, 1997

Visit www.airmedia.com or call 1-800-AirMedia for details.

Available at these and other fine stores:

CompUSA	Elek Tek	MediaPlay
Computer City	Fry's Electronics	MicroCenter
ComputerWorld	Incredible Universe	Office Max
Creative Computers	J&R	The Good Guys
Egghead Software

AirMedia Live.
Internet Broadcast Network

©1996 Bo Machine Inc. All Rights Reserved. AirMedia and AirMedia Live are trademarks of Bo Machine, Inc. All other products named are trademarks of their respective manufacturers. Offers and service subject to change without notice. Photos are (C) copyright Tony Stone Images and The Stock Market. Any unauthorized reproduction is prohibited. ATMC 0511 120496

DAILY COLLEGIAN

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592
http://www.umass.edu/rso/collegian

Jacob W. Michaels Editor-in-Chief Chris Taylor Conner Managing Editor
Alycia Hines Business Manager G. Tony Morse Production Manager Pete Servais Advertising Manager
David Voldan Advertising Production Manager Lisa Chiu Senior Diversity Editor

Mike Burke Arts & Living Editor
Humphrey brown III Black Affairs Co-Editor
Gregory Casimir Black Affairs Co-Editor
Sumanda Ghosh Developing Nations Editor
Mark McGrath Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jamie Simsheimer Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Bryan Schwartzman Jewish Affairs Co-Editor
Sarah Kimmel Jewish Affairs Co-Editor
Lisa Chiu Multicultural Affairs Editor
Michael Elliott News Editor
Elizabeth Brown Photography Editor
Casey Kane Sports Co-Editor
Chris Stamm Sports Co-Editor

Michelle Hillman Women's Issues Editor
Josh Sylvester Editorial Production Manager
Sean Horgan Systems Manager
Eric R. Remillard IV Finance Manager
Rob McDonald Circulation Manager
Ryan Courtemanche Subscription Manager
Faisal Ahmad Marketing Manager
Renée LeBlanc Classifieds Manager
Lyle A. Henry Operations Manager
Maureen Majercowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Thomas F. Sweeney, Jr. Graphics Advisor/Instructor
David Quist Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

ZooMass revisited

This past weekend, several University of Massachusetts students found new ways to make themselves and the rest of the University community look very bad.

While snowstorms have always produced the typical snowball fight, Saturday night's events escalated to extreme measures. Reports of violence center around large groups of students causing damage to fraternity row, the town of Amherst and Amherst College.

How can we change the University's ZooMass reputation in the surrounding community when we re-enact scenes straight out of Animal House.

While we see no problem with having a good time as the semester winds down, we find the outbreak in violence and vandalism disturbing.

As was the case last semester after the basketball team's loss in the Final Four, the events of Saturday night provide a perfect example of how excited students can get out of hand. Before such events transpire again we urge the student body to consider what it means to be a student at this University.

Does it mean getting a quality education and developing into a functional part of a healthy society, or proving that glass breaks and people bleed.

Because of the numbers of students on this campus, there is little the police and security can do to head off such situations. The choice as to how to act will inevitably fall to the students.

Administration in the dark

After Saturday night's melee on-campus, we seriously question the Administration's preparedness for an emergency event such as a power outage.

All over campus electrical generators failed, causing complete darkness not only in some residence halls but also at the William D. Mullins Center and Student Union. While students are to blame for their violent and juvenile actions, the University is guilty for creating these potentially life- threatening situations.

At the Mullins Center, the power shut off midway through the UMass-Wyoming game leaving thousands of fans searching for the exits without the assistance of emergency lights. Imagine the terror for young children or deaf fans.

In Southwest, two dormitories, Thoreau and James, lost complete power leaving hundreds of students in danger.

Why wasn't the University ready for this power failure? What good are emergency lights if they don't even work when needed? If the lights fail in one of our newest, most expensive buildings, what can we expect in our older, more run-down facilities?

The campus has faced enough problems with safety over the last few years. If women feel unsafe in areas of the campus with lights, imagine the fear when all of the lights went out. The Administration must strive to protect the students under even the most extreme circumstances.

We feel the University must take proper precautions including but not limited to testing all emergency lights and generators, especially in the residence halls and other areas where large amounts of students congregate. Hopefully the Administration will wake up and turn its lights on, afterall if Motel 6 can do it, why can't UMass?

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Editorial board.

The snowball syndrome

C. Taylor Conner

The offspring of the lemmings have surfaced — and French-fried in on campus, as evidenced by last Saturday's melee.

Surely you've heard or read that famous children's story about lemmings. The one where the herd blindly decides to follow the rest of the herd off the cliff, failing to heed the misgivings of the sole individual-minded lemming.

To join in terms at which we've all cringed at one time or another, it is the maternal standby, "If [friend's name] jumped off the [local bridge], would you do that, [your name]?"

One of the greatest abilities we evolution-privileged apes have is the power to rationalize, a gift which many chose to eschew in favor of mob mentality this past weekend.

I've never quite understood how these things escalate to such preposterous levels, how 10 kids throwing snowballs turns into 500 robots wreaking havoc. It's not as if there were some worthy cause to protest — a crowd of that size becomes a sea of well-founded support in that situation.

Ironically, I suppose, the UMass lemmings were supporting a cause of their own — the right to remain the public school version of the fabled Dartmouth Animal House environment.

Trouble is, we are in fact a public school that doesn't receive enough money from the state or fabulously wealthy alumni as it is. Most legislators do not enthusiastically recognize the University as the flagship institution of Massachusetts, and even Dartmouth finally disciplined their legendary fraternities.

If students are content to take a leak on the thin ice we tread with potential donors or grant-givers, then let them fall through the inevitable cracks, one is tempted to believe.

Of course, the reality of the deal is that unlike private schools or better funded public schools like Michigan or Virginia, we can't afford to have these blemishes on our record. Our base of advocates simply isn't that influential.

And on the topic of influence, are the same students who pelted a woman with snowballs while shoveling snow into her car supposed to represent our best and brightest? How about the fine young men and women who broke fraternity house windows? Or maybe the upstanding citizens who overturned cars at Amherst College?

I have a good friend, a freshman at Amherst who attended the same private school as I did back home. Currently, I'm embarrassed to call him because we, the UMass proud, have probably just reinforced every snobbish, elitist principle public schools in the minds of Amherst students.

To us, 500 students is a mid-sized dormitory; to Amherst students, that's a good chunk of their total enrollment. While we must have looked like the extras from Braveheart, our crusade was far less noble.

More upsetting is the fact that I have friends and colleagues who aren't offended by the lunk-headed actions, or, worse, even found them amusing. These attitudes suggest passive acceptance or just indifferent complacency — I know more people have corny, outdated school spirit besides me.

So what's next? The Hampden Munchie Store runs out of Antonio's slices, so we tear down the whole joint, leaving only a busted "Galaga" machine and a stale danish behind? Perhaps the loss of campus cable for five minutes will give us sufficient cause to rip the actual wires out the dorm walls and the earth below in the heat of disgust. What will we do when our Top of the Campus waitress informs us that the place is out of potato skins? Why, destroy everything, ye Natty Light brethren!

Alas, that same old-fashioned Gipperish spirit still leads me to believe I'd still stick up for the Maroon and White for the same reason I'd attack some of the school's inadequacies — because I care deeply about that which I'm associated.

Accordingly, I still hope we all stand behind a University whose quality and reputation continue to improve on the whole. Yet I know there are both current and former students out there who know that the time for such B.S. as went down on Saturday has past.

Sadly but certainly, the beloved zoo must be closed if UMass is to remain competitive in the college market, as we literally cannot afford to let the lemmings rule.

C. Taylor Conner is a Collegian columnist.

Letters to the Editor

Save the posters

To the editor:

Since 1821, with the founding of it's namesake college, Amherst has been a college town, and postering in its downtown spaces has been one of its many non-academic aspects. Old photographs from the Special Collections at Jones Library, show that postering goes back at least 125 years, and landlords and merchants would provide poster space in their windows, on storefronts and on bulletin boards placed on buildings.

Now, with Amherst as the host community for the flagship campus of the state university as well as two high-cost colleges, and now with easily available copying processes, postering has mushroomed and become a bit frenetic. Many people find the flurry of posters in downtown Amherst to be appealing, like the plethora of free buses, yet another symbol of the vitality of Western Massachusetts' premier college town; others se it as clutter.

Postering is now under attack in downtown Amherst, as reported in the Advocate, Union News and Daily Gazette with the imminent installation of a first "way-finding" kiosk at 4 Main St. that has about 12.5 square feet of effective postering space. Combined with this new kiosk will be a Selectboard-imposed geographic ban on all other posters within its immediate vicinity. This will effectively wipe out the larger green utility box on the adjacent corner as well as utility poles as poster sites, so some people see the kiosk as an amputation of postering possibilities — a chopping off of one hand of the Amherst taxpayer who put up one half of the funding of the $5,000 kiosk. More kiosks are planned through a 3-year funding plan, and each one will have its own geographic ban or no-poster zone.

This concerns students financially, though few students own businesses or houses in town and therefore don't pay taxes. Funding of the kiosks will affect students' pocket books. A lot of the town's tax revenue comes indirectly from the 54,000 full and part time students who pay the high prices to the merchants and the exorbitant rents to landlords, so when the town spends more, students automatically will get charged more at the cash registers and through each month's rent.

If you can't easily find out about non-academic activities and events, what are you supposed to do: just drink? So now doesn't it seem about time to "rise up and resist" the tax gougers and poster police?

A coalition is being formed to resist the over-control of postering and to advocate for the acceptance, fostering and possible expansion of postering. This pro-poster Coalition will have an open meeting tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the Pole Room of the Bangs Community Center in downtown Amherst. Students and representative of students groups especially are invited because anti-poster efforts seem based on an anti-student sentiment.

John Furbish
Amherst

Opinion/Editorial

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Scenes from a riot:
A first-hand account of the dark night

Editor's note: The following is a participant's account of the riots of Saturday night in his own words.

Mayhem, a word that has only found a home in the most insane of situations, made a guest appearance at the University of Massachusetts on Saturday night. Snow had been falling for about 12 hours straight and there was a foot of accumulated snow on the ground. In all aspects, the night was looking to be a "stay in the dorm and watch a movie night." Alcohol, beer balls, drink mixes were all purchased and in my case, a movie rented, The Craft. Everyone convened back to the comfort of their dorms and dressed accordingly as the snow continued falling outside and the movie began.

Not 10 minutes into the movie, with my two friends, the power went off and then on again. This occurred after several warning signs of flickering lights and skies lighting up green from transformers exploding on power lines. There was pitch darkness and startled, I went to the door and checked the hallway, which was also black. I screamed in to the hall just to be an idiot and not long after that, everyone else also emerged from their rooms. It was confusion in the beginning, but it didn't take long for the owners of candles to light them all.

The Mullins Center was hosting the UMass–Wyoming basketball game and the power was indeed out there too. It must have been scary over there but it wasn't my concern as my situation was more important.

"The horde made it to the beginning of Amherst College and we all formed up about a small rock. One student mounted the rock and yelled: "We have to take Amherst College, they are the ones that are keeping us down in the world. Kill all the geeks!" Everyone's rage modified and we all ran for the first dorm. Every window that had a light on had all its panes broken."

Talks of snowball fights were abundant well before the power outage and as I looked to my two friends, we realized that it was very possible right now. We got dressed in our "snow warfare clothes" and marched down the stairs and out of the building. The entire second floor was outside already and we were all just standing around when we saw another group of people standing outside James Residence Hall.

"Let's rush'em" was the cry, as we all picked up snow and mounted an all out attack. They were easily subdued and then joined us. I took some snow up the back entrance of the dining commons and threw it into the now merged crowd and was answered with hundreds of snowballs pelting the wall behind me. We were done for and out of snow so we came down and surrendered.

A couple of girls who were sitting in the room with candles lit began yelling at us and we all hit their window so many times there was more snow than brick and glass exposed. Interest died there and we decided to move.

The now doubled group went to the horseshoe and met a group form Moore and we launched another Braveheart style attack, yelling and cheering as we charged. There were several people in the Moore smoking lounge, which has a balcony, and they came out and taunted us. "Emerson sucks," they were saying and it took no time before the attack was focused on their sliding door.

One guy climbed up a parked red car and stood on the roof. He fired a snowball into the open door and from the imbalance of throwing, his legs came out from under him and he fell four feet to the ground with a painful thump. It was the funniest thing I had ever seen.

Several girls and a couple of guys were standing behind us and threw a couple of snowballs into our mob. The attention was on the lounge, so no one cared but I did notice them and when one of the snowballs hit me I gathered up a weapon of retaliation. I lofted the hard packed snowball into the air toward the unpaid girl that hit me, and it landed square on her forehead. She fell to the ground crying and grabbing her head. That's what stupid girls get for being stupid.

Our attention span was dying when we saw a group of people and heard a lot of yelling by the towers, we all made for them. Our battle cry went out as we passed a pair of policemen by the Munchy Store and we entered another war with a group from IA and some other neighboring dorms. After a while of exchanging snowballs and a ton of colorful language, a plow came through the center or our now quadrupled group.

"Hit the plow," everyone said and the innocent truck was bombarded with tiny packed projectiles of snow. The thumps and cracks made upon impact made me laugh and seeing the truck start up to get out of there was also funny. We all stood there for a while wondering what to do next. There were cries of people wanting to start the snowball fight of last year (after a Phish concert, a mob from Central came to Southwest and yelled "Southwest sucks." This spurned an all out attack of the stupid people from Central. No one liked them because Central is a shelter for all the crazies on campus. From mental cases to freaks, to Phish fans, Central houses them all and they had the nerve to come here to Southwest, the home of all the athletes, party animals and drunks. They truly were idiots and paid dearly for their ambition.) Then, a group from the Washington/Coolidge area emerged from around Coolidge.

They yelled at us and it took no time before they were greeted with an onslaught of over 200 students, but we thwarted their hopes of winning any snowball fight. Then, as all the other groups had done, they joined us.

There were some cries from the dorm rooms in Coolidge and Washington and they were met with a shower of snowballs and the breaking of the first window, one which was to some dumb ass kid's dorm, and deservingly so because he was yelling at us. "Jim" and "Jay" were extremely good at throwing snow and hit almost any target they wanted. "Jim" threw a little harder though and was lefty.

My friends and I went back to my dorm and got a long string of blackcats and exited out the fire door. We put them in a trash can and lit them. Everyone went crazy with the repetitive popping sounds and repetitive uzi sounds emitted from the innocent looking trash can we put them in.

Some students were trying to break the Hampshire Dining Commons windows with snowballs, but as hard as the snowballs hit, no windows broke. One guy in a strange looking hat had the crown for the hardest hitting snow as he had the arm of an a mature left handed pitcher backing his throws, he told me.

A while later, the decision was made for an assault on Central and a mass of close 100 people made their way out of Southwest. We got rid of all the skeptics and wusses that were outside just to watch and took all the true warriors to Central. I couldn't find my friends as we marched down the street toward Central. Several cars passed by and we took them to be moving targets and pelted them. There was a respect for nicer cars though; when a Porsche passed through it was allowed passage without a beating. A truck had a window broken and one car opened its door only to be greeted by hundreds of snowballs.

As we marched on, we passed between the fraternities Phi Sig and Theta Chi. The Phi Sig group was out and yelled to us. I don't think anyone knew what they said but we took their yelling to be provocative and it inspired an attack. We hit every window in the place, and even had a few individuals brave enough to open the door and chuck snowballs inside.

Our attention was turned to Central, which was a few hundred yards away and we rushed them. We then realized we were outmanned as Northeast and Orchard Hill had come to the aid of Central and stopped us in our tracks. One of the Central students cried out, "Let's join and go get Amherst College." Everyone roared of approval and the now 500-man army made its way down North Pleasant. On the way, we hit everything with snowballs: busses, cars and buildings.

We were in the middle of Frat row and the first frat was Pike. "Mess up Pike" we yelled, only with some profanity substituted for mess, as everyone launched snow at the house. Shattering glass and cheers of unbridled hysteria echoed through the night as everyone attacked. A group across the street yelled "Dorm rats suck," and ran back into their frat house. I couldn't believe the stupidity of those guys. We attacked their house and broke every window in sight.

One car, a white cavalier, after being hit by snow balls, stopped in the middle of the crowd and a fat lady emerged. "Who wants some" she yelled. Everyone cheered and pegged her with snow. She tried to get back in her car, but a large black guy grabbed the door before she could close it and hit her with snow at point blank range. He hit her again with snow he got from the street, then slammed the door, as she had the car floored but went nowhere because of the icy street.

Moving on, we passed several other frats and hit them with snow, and broke their windows also. The horde moved into the center of the town of Amherst and all the local businesses and people stood in awe of what they saw: 500 crazed college students heading off to war. Still hitting every semi decent car to cheap cars, we all launched obscenities into the sky, which still bore the green flashes of expiring fireworks.

A red Jimmy stopped after being hit by snowballs and the driver got out and cussed at us. He was really upset about his mid '80s truck being hit by tight packed snow flying at about 50 miles an hour. He threw it into reverse wheel drive and zoomed it for the crowd. His truck was fishtailing as he moved, but he sustained a steady 15 miles an hour or about. The truck made it through the crowd without hitting anyone and he left. The guy was obviously high on something or in a really pissy mood.

The horde made it to the beginning of Amherst College and we all formed up about a small rock. One student mounted the rock and yelled: "We have to take Amherst College, they are the ones that are keeping us down in the world. Kill all the geeks!" Everyone's rage modified and we all ran for the first dorm. Every window that had a light on had all its panes broken.

A security guard from the dorm, a white guy about six- feet tall and wearing a trench coat, came out of the door and screamed at us. We all hit him with snow, but it didn't even phase him. He wanted to fight but no one was brave enough to step forward. Then a small party made for the door, and one them opened it. Everyone launched snow through the doorway and the guard burst out, chasing the kid who opened the door. The chase went for a 100 yards through the foot deep snow and into a field across the street from the dorm. The guard looked like he was going to destroy the kid but didn't. He just scared the shit out of him.

The mob moved to the main of Amherst College where the cheer began "Let's go UMass, let's go UMass," and it was extremely loud. We all yelled our now familiar yells of attack and charged a grouping of dorms. Breaking all the windows of dorms with their lights on. Several Amherst students stood in the middle of their dorms in terror of the onslaught. Windows shattering and horrible yells in front of their faces. The destruction of their security within your dorm. It was all gone as we proceeded to take Amherst and kill all the geeks.

Three Amherst students, who had composed a five-foot– high snowman had to flee as the mass took the field they were on and sent their expression of winter joy to oblivion. They were geeks so they had to pay. Minutes later, the police showed up with their lights on and a grouping of about six cars entered from all directions. Amherst police and UMass police combined were there and taking as many people as they could. I fled to a bush and hid with a friend of mine I had met in class. We hid for a solid five minutes while we watched several UMassers get nabbed.

I decided that walking away would be best because if we were spotted in the bush, we were certain guilty. On the way out, we were confronted by a pair of cops and questioned. Our slow pace and claims of being Amherst students deterred them from taking us downtown for further questioning and we got out there as fast as our inconspicuous pace would take us.

Arriving back in the dorm about an half hour late to only see the aftermath of fun gone bad was my welcoming. I retired to my room and fell asleep after hanging my thoroughly drenched clothes and taking a warm shower.

The student's name has been withheld for safety reasons

Multicultural Affairs

Tuesday, December 10, 1996

Imperial rivalry in the Rwandan crisis

This is the second part in a two part series on the recent human catastrophe in Rwanda. The first part described how the conflict between the Hutus and the Tutsi was primarily the creation of a systematic attempt on the part of the colonial powers Germany and Belgium to "divide and rule" the population of Rwanda. This piece will focus on the involvement of the western powers during and after the 1994 genocide in Rwanda and the subsequent exodus of over half a million people to Zaire.

Shyamala Ivatury

A small central African republic, the size of Maryland, Rwanda is yet another Third World nation state whose independence and sovereignty, even after decolonization, has been systematically undermined by the relentless and devilish manipulations of the western imperial powers.

What Motivates French and U.S. Meddling

While Rwanda on its own may not have been considered of vital strategic importance by the western powers, it has nonetheless become a site of contestation in imperial rivalry for control of the central African region. The rivals, France and the United States, are vying for influence in Rwanda.

A relatively weak power since the second world war, France has traditionally sought to use its neo-colonial hegemony in Africa, especially Central Africa, to assert influence at the global level. While it is true that France has business and other material interests in Africa, what is of greater concern to the French is their continued self- perception as paternal, macho colonialists. Thus, Rwanda is important for the French national "amour propre." France's dependence on its role in Africa as its sole claim to "international player status" was confessed in President Francios Mitterand's observation that "Without Africa, France is nothing." Consequently, the French jealously guard their "sphere of influence" in Africa against all rivals, including their so-called allies such as the United States.

During the cold war, the United States was happy to allow the French and local pro-Western puppets such as Mobutu of Zaire to ensure that Soviet influence was kept out of Central Africa. An importance exception to this policy was the CIA– directed assassination of Patrice Lumumba, who led the anti– colonial struggle in Zaire. But, for the most part, the United States was content to let the more experienced French handle the imperial dirty work in Central Africa.

Since the end of the cold war, one of the greatest threats to American global hegemony has been the rise of the Islamist movement. While this movement takes distinct forms in various countries, Islamist groups are united in the goals of freeing the Middle East from the shackles of U.S. colonialism, gaining control of their vast oil resources, and creating more egalitarian societies. This liberation movement includes oppositional groups such as Hamas in Palestine, Hizballah in Lebanon, Islamic Jihad in the Gulf states, FIS in Algeria and the Islamic Brotherhood in Egypt, all of which seek to change the nature of their respective states. In some countries, principally Iran and Sudan, Islamists lead revolutionary anti–western governments.

Because domination of the Middle East is the central focus of U.S. global strategy and "national interest," the Islamist movements and governments are considered an extreme treat to the United States. One of the biggest fears of the State Department and other policy makers is the emergence of an Anti–American block of states in the Middle East. As a result, the Islamists, in particular Iran and Sudan, are being viciously hounded and targeted by the United States. They have been falsely labelled as terrorist states and subjected to ruthless economic warfare.

Sudan, the weaker of the two, is particularly vulnerable and faces a US-funded insurrection in the South. The United States has armed and funded Sudan's Southern neighbors including Eritriea, Ethiopia and Uganda, urging them to attack Sudan. In addition, the United States has made Sudan an international pariah accusing it of every kind of immorality ranging from international terrorism to government sponsored slavery.

It is in the course of this policy to demonize and overthrow Islamist Sudan that Washington's interest in Central and Eastern Africa has greatly increased in recent years. The United States wants to nurture an anti–Sudan block in the region, thereby hoping to destabilize and attack Sudan from its Southern borders. It is in this context that influence in Rwanda has become very important for the United States. Furthermore, the U.S. policy against Islamism is what pits U.S. interests in Rwanda against the French.

The Politics of Ethnicity in Rwanda

By the fifties, in Rwanda the artificial ethnic categories created by the European colonizers permeated all political discourse in Rwanda, including many aspects of the de- colonization struggle. The Hutu majority resented the Tutsi who had been propped up as "superior" by the Belgian colonizers. Consequently, in the fifties there was an unleashing of a Hutu anger against the Tutsi. The Tutsi were identified as "Ethiopian invaders" and oppressors. The extent of the hatred against the Tutsi was reflected in the "Hutu Manifesto" published in 1957, which calls for the expulsion of the Tutsi, along with the Belgians, from Rwanda. This extremely racist document urges Hutus to "stop having mercy on the Tutsi," who are accused of all manner of immorality and criminality.

Hoping to exploit this resentment, the Belgian authorities cynically shifted their policies to favor the Hutu, under the guise of promoting the democratic principle of majority rule. The new group of Flemish missionaries in particular sympathized with the Hutu and fed their resentment. In the late fifties, the slaughter of thousands of Tutsi was presided over by onlooking Belgian troops. Large numbers of Tutsi fled Rwanda to Uganda and other neighboring countries.

In 1962, Rwanda gained independence. The colonizers gave power to Gregoire Kayibanda, leader and founder of the Hutu supremacy party, the Prame Hutu. In 1973, he was overthrown by another Hutu extremist, Juvenal Habyarimana. President Habyarimana, a corrupt and sleazy dictator, was close ally of new hegemonic power in all of Central Africa, the French.

In 1975, France and Rwanda signed an agreement in which the French promised military assistance. Also, the French provided monetary aid to Rwanda, and by 1993 Rwanda was receiving over $10 million a year from France. Thus Rwanda had become another French outpost in Central Africa. The French continued to fund and support Habyarimana and his regime in spite of its appalling record of Hutu extremism and human rights abuses.

President Habyarimana pretended to espouse policies of "ethnic balance," but, like most Rwandan politicians, his use of the "ethnic card" as a means of gaining power and legitimacy only served to continuously escalate ethnic tensions and hostility. His government was dominated by Hutu extremists who refused to deal with the question of the return of the Tutsi refugees who had fled to Uganda during the massacres of the fifties. Furthermore, the government trained Hutu death squads, the Interahamwe, in the hope of ridding the country of all Tutsi at some future date.

This, along with the economic decline of Rwanda, led to the formation of the Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF) in 1988. The RPF was formed by exiled Tutsi and dissident Hutu living in Uganda. Supported by Ugandan President Museveni, the RPF declared war against Habyarimana and his government. For a number of years the country was plunged into civil war. Although it is a multi–ethnic party, the RPF's attack was perceived as attempting to return the Tutsi to power, and united many Hutu behind Habyarimana. The dictator initiated a series of revenge attacks against Tutsi and dissident Hutu. For example in 1991, over 1,200 Tutsi were killed by Hutu militia funded by his government.

Cease-fire was declared in 1993 between the RPF, Habyarimana's government, and other civil oppositional groups, and the Arusha Accords were signed in Dar-es– Salaam in Tanzania. The Arusha Accords called for the formation of a multi–party political system, power sharing, an independent judiciary, respect for human rights and the incorporation of the RPF in to the Rwandan Army. The Accords were negotiated with the support of many African governments and were to be implemented under the auspices of the United Nations Assistance Mission to Rwanda (UNAMIR).

Habyarimana and his extremist Hutu government refused to implement the Arusha Accords. The UNAMIR was both unwilling and unable to coerce Habyarimana into implementing the Accords. While the African participants of the Arusha Accords and the UN Secretary General Boutros Boutros–Ghali were eager to deploy troops in Rwanda, the United States and France castrated UNAMIR. The United States under the guise of fiscal austerity reduced its financial and material support for UNAMIR. The French who continued to support Habyarimana were reluctant to mobilize UNAMIR in the implementation of the Arusha Accords. It was a much downsized UNAMIR that finally reach Kigali in late 1993.

In the middle of 1994, the Security Council was to review the progress of the Arusha Accords. While most African nations demanded the speedy implementation of the Arusha Accords, the United States continued to maintain its "disinterest" in Rwanda and UNAMIR. The French, of course, continued their attempt to undermine the Arusha Accords and UNAMIR mandate. En route to Kigali from the Security Council meeting, Habyarimana's plane was shot down by his own Presidential guards. President Cyprien Ntariyamira of Burundi was also killed in the crash.

COURTESY UPENN AFRICAN STUDIES

Map of Rwanda and Burundi

Many have speculated that the Hutu extremists he had promoted began to fear that Habyarimana might be forced to implement the peace agreement he had signed, and decided that he had to be eliminated. Habyarimana's patron's, the French, have also been implicated in his death.

The country plunged into a crisis as the RPF began their offensive to take over the national government, while the Interahamwe and other Hutu Militia began a bloody rampage against the Tutsi. In less than a month, over 500,000 Tutsi were brutally murdered by the French-funded Hutu extremists. The French and Belgians evacuated their own nationals while the Security Council, under the direction of the United States, further reduced the size of UNAMIR.

It was not long before the RPF seized power in Kigali. In the meantime, the French scurried to protect the leaders of the Interahamwe by offering them safe haven in Zaire and France. By portraying the RPF as a Tutsi dominated revenge seeking group, the Hutu militia sought to spirit the bulk of its fighters across the border to Zaire under cover of a sea of Hutu refugees. The refugees camps served as a base for the Interahawme to re–group and re–arm under the auspices of the French and Mobutu. These extremists continue to organize in the border regions, hoping to one day take over Rwanda for themselves and their French sponsors.

A few months ago, as an ailing Mobutu was convalescing in Switzerland, Zairian Tutsi rebels closely linked to the RPF seized control of much of the border region and strongly encouraged the Hutu refugees to return to Rwanda. The RPF and the rebels are strongly supported by an emergent pro–US block of states in Central and Eastern Africa, particularly Uganda. It appears that the RPF has very warm relations with the United States and its allies such as the United Kingdom and Israel.

Rwanda serves as a object lesson in demonstrating devastating effects of the imperial rivalry on small Third world countries. The bitterness is such that Newsweek recently wrote "Welcome to Rwanda, just about the best friend Washington has in Africa these day — so good a friend that French diplomats mutter darkly about a plot to create an Anglophone empire stretching from Cape Town to Cairo." Of course it is the refugees, massacre victims, and ordinary people of Africa who will pay the price for this rivalry.

The newfound American influence in Rwanda bears all the hallmarks of earlier malevolent colonial interventions. In a chilling remark, a senior Clinton administration official said "These [Tutsi] are the Israelis of Africa." In this remark it is impossible not to hear of a sea of Hutu refugees. The refugees camps served as a base for the Interahawme to re–group and re–arm under the auspices of the French and Mobutu. These extremists continue to organize in the border regions, hoping to one day take over Rwanda for themselves and their French sponsors.

Shyamala Ivatury is a Collegian Columnist

Map of Africa

Rethinking "Rethinking Marxism"

Lisa Chiu

In Econ 305, Marxian Economics, with Professor Rick Wolff, I learned the basics of Marxist theory, which I found enlightening and inspiring. We were also introduced to Wolff's theories of "overdetermination."

Imagine my excitement at the opportunity to attend the Rethinking Marxism conference, organized in part by Dr. Wolff, held last week here at UMass. I wanted to understand what exactly it means to critically rethink Marxism.

As a Chinese American, I am particularly interested in developments concerning China, and especially the innovations in communist governance being developed there. Imagine my surprise when I found only one 15 minute presentation dealing with China, and even then, although excellent, it mainly discussed issues involving the Chinese cultural diaspora and Hong Kong.

China is actually working on creative ways to adapt traditional Marxist models to emerging global market conditions. It not only puts a Chinese face to traditional Marxism, it is trying to find solutions to complex and hard– to–predict emergent international circumstances, solutions that are thoroughly Chinese and Marxist at the same time. China is finding ways to make a communist society function in the most populous country on earth, and in a climate of international conditions unfavorable to Marxist ideals.

It must be doing something important if 1.4 billion people, literally one out of five people on this earth, are able to wake up each morning living and thriving in a Marxist society. Clearly anyone who disregards this fact and insists that Marxism as a form of government died with the collapse of the Soviet Union is being profoundly Eurocentric. What is one to make of a discussion of "Rethinking Marxism" that completely ignores the contemporary Chinese experiment with Marxism that has produced one of the world's fastest growing economies?

It is even more extraordinary that a conference which included 175 panels and over 500 participants, called "the largest Marxist conference in North America," would include such incredible blind spots. One would assume it would include a discussion of the existing governments of this world which attempt to implement Marxist ideology. But, at our rethinking extravaganza, not only China was ignored; Cuba was addressed in only one panel discussion, and no mention was made at all of North Korea or Vietnam.

Rethinking Marxism is actively taking place in China and some of these other countries, but was in precious short supply at the Marxism conference which rolled through town last week. Spouting overly academic and high fallutin jargon, these dressed–for–success Bohemians who populated the Campus Center, mainly succeeded in demonstrating why the left in the United States is so fragmented, marginal and inconsequential. The entire event reeked of hypocracy and posturing, a cross between the Cannes Film Festival, where the insiders gather to see and be seen, and a sort of academic jobs fair and pick–up bar combined.

Why were the efforts of the existing Marxist governments to rethink Marxism absent from the consideration of these distinguished scholars? While the question is complex, perhaps even "overdetermined," there are no doubt a number of identifiable factors. First of all, there is an undeniable cultural gap between these Western intellectuals and China. How many of them know Mandarin, and can therefore follow Chinese debates and discourse? How many understand the history, culture, economic conditions, social structures, or anything else about China?

Russia, the supposed seat of genuine Marxism, was always infinitely more accessible at the cultural level to Western academics.

Furthermore, the question of racism must be confronted. Many Western leftists constructed their Marxism around the Soviet model, either by supporting and identifying with it, or in opposition to it. Either way, the Soviet experience was the reference point. This can hardly be said of almost any Western leftists today regarding China, in spite of the fact that it is the world's largest country, has one of the most dynamic and growing economies, is an emergent superpower, and remains firmly committed to maintaining a Marxist government.

The excuse sometimes given that Western leftists' indifference to Chinese Marxism is based on a disapproval of the ongoing reforms cannot be satisfactory. The Soviet Union had many approaches to the question of economic structure from Lenin on. At the very least, these current Chinese reforms are clearly an exercise in rethinking without giving up the basic aims and goals of Marxism. And the fact is that the Chinese model was completely ignored, not criticized or condemned, at the conference.

It is almost impossible to escape the conclusion that most Western Marxists, including the organizers and most of the participants in last week's conference, are incapable or unwilling to look to strong, independent Asian nations for political leadership or as an important reference point that needs to be addressed. Even those Western leftists who claim to be "Maoist" are guilty of this inability, since they invariably claim that Chinese Communism was overthrown by a "fascist coup" in the late 1970's after Mao's death.

Finally, Western Marxists and, especially academic leftists, have become so phobic about power and authority that they are virtually incapable of supporting any revolutionary government, especially in the Third World. By all appearances, the politician most likely to enjoy widespread support at the Rethinking conference would be none other than Bill Clinton. Failed uprisings by lightly armed peasants, such as the Zapatista rebels, are non–threatening enough to be embraced, especially as they never held power. But the successful Marxists of the Chinese government, for example, look considerably less cuddly, and fail to inspire the Peace Corps paternalism that warms the Western leftist heart.

Clearly, the reasons for the blindness of the Rethinking Marxism conference to the Chinese experience include Eurocentrism, racism and an aversion to power and authority in the hands of Third World people. But that's OK, considering that the Rethinking Marxism conference organizers and participants are highly unlikely to ever have any influence on political events in China.

Or, for that matter, the United States.

Lisa Chiu is a Collegian Columnist

Editor's Note

"Black brothers and sisters, stop using the language minority. Never again should you use that in reference to yourself. You are only a minority if you limit yourself to America. But when you see yourself as an international people, then you out number the oppressor 11 to one. You are the majority people on this earth, and you ought to start acting like the majority."

— Louis Farrakhan

• • •

So this is it, the very last page of the Multicultural Affairs Desk. This semester we have attempted and succeeded in delving into controversial and much talked about issues. Our purpose has always remained the same, to bring to the public points of view which have historically been underrepresented. This will also mark my last page as Editor of the Multicultural Affairs desk. Hopefully, I will be equally successful in my new position as Developing Nations Editor. We have always maintained that issues of injustice are universal and should be addressed in all forums. The colonized or abroad speaks the same language as the colonizer within the United States.

As we bring this semester to a close, it is of vital importance to remember that the need for struggle now is as urgent as ever. We need to remember why we are here, and what we are fighting for. As we are winding down and finals are almost underway, we must continue to work to end injustice everywhere. I leave you with a few words of wisdom to ponder.

Lisa Chiu

• • •

"Let's get busy. Let's stop fighting each other. And if they say things about me, don't believe it... question me, and then if I'm wrong, I'm your brother, you correct me. But don't go along with the enemy, who you know wants to separate me from you, so that they can destroy me. And then, 30 years from now, they'll say, you know that guy Farrakhan, he was an all right guy. Let's name an alley after him."

— Louis Farrakhan

"I am a human being, and I am not just an American citizen, I am a world citizen. You can't limit me to the continental United States of America. I'm not just you, you didn't take me from just you. You brought me from Africa. Why shouldn't I be concerned with what you are doing in Africa?"

— Louis Farrakhan

"Them Viet Cong ain't never called me a nigger."

— Muhammed Ali

Arts & Living

Lily Dale finds family; Teri Parker a delight

By Julia Casson
Collegian Correspondent

LILY DALE
Dec. 6
Curtain Theater

The small turn–out for this weekend's performance of Lily Dale can only be blamed on the inclement weather, as the play, performed by the University of Massachusetts Theater Department, proved to be a touching turn–of–the–century drama focusing on family tensions.

Directed by Linda McInerney, the main plot of the production combined the talents of John Kelley, Teri Parker, Sian Cox, Bill Lawren and Maxwell Mount.

The story, written by Horton Foote, revolves around 19–year–old Horace Robedaux as he comes back to his family and hometown. His visit of one day develops to a two–week visit as he falls desperately ill. Much to his dismay, he finds that he doesn't belong and that he is no longer welcome in his house. His step–father scorns his laziness and his loving but timid mother must follow her husband's orders to have Horace leave.

A true joy to watch was Lily Dale Robedaux, played by Teri Parker. Her character offered a bit of relief to the tension felt between the family. Lily Dale's true passion in life is to play and compose music for the piano. Although she lacks in talent, she certainly makes up for it with her enthusiasm. Lily Dale's wide–eyed innocence and constant chattering makes it seem that, at first, she is oblivious to the problems that are plaguing her family. They do, however, prove to be a distressing factor in her life, as she loves both her brother and her step–father very dearly.

Lily Dale is the third in "The Orphan's Home Cycle" written by Foote. He captures the essence of a troubled family with strongly developed characters and a moving plot. This play proves to be, as theater critic Jerome Weeks stated, "sensitive to complex questions of families and individuals."

Lily Dale will continue to run at the Curtain Theater until Dec. 14. Shows are at 8 p.m. Tickets are $6 general public; $3.50 students and seniors. Call the FAC Box Office at 545– 2511 for more information.

"Miracle" visits the Valley

By Bradley Skaught
Collegian Staff

Back in 1982, when his debut album came out, Marshall Crenshaw was a rare bird — an artist who remembered the beauty of a memorable melody and the power of intelligent, moving production. He was a songwriter and guitarist of startling clarity, a singer of great depth and a performer with razor sharp wit and an ear for a great cover. Little has changed over the past 14 years — his latest album, Miracle of Science, is his best in many years, and he is still a rare bird.

Rare or not, Crenshaw will be landing tonight at the Iron Horse in Northampton. Fans who have seen him before will, no doubt, be lined up well ahead of time, and they are an eclectic bunch.

Crensahw's music encompasses a wide variety of styles and influences. Miracle of Science is, in fact, a perfect way to hear the genre hopping in action.

There are country songs, a surf instrumental, a cover of "The In Crowd," and even a Grant Hart song.

The common ground is where Crenshaw resides — never sounding forced or anything less than 100 percent sincere. He turns the songs into his own, never slipping into the mindless novelty of cover songs that many artists do. His version of Harry Nillson's "Don't Forget Me" on the For the Love of Harry: Everybody Sings Nillson tribute is a perfect example of Crenshaw's ability to get inside a song, and bring new life to it.

Crenshaw is going be remembered as far more than a clever interpretive singer, however. Crenshaw's own pen is as sharp as any of pop's best tunesmiths, and there is no question that tonight's show will be as much a showcase for his startlingly insightful songwriting as his guitar playing.

Many of the highlights on Science are Crenshaw originals, in fact, and his grasp of pop tradition, combined with his seamless mixing of styles, makes it hard to tell the classic '60s cover from the soon–to–be–classic '90s original. Throw in Crenshaw's beautiful voice and fluid guitar playing and there's little doubt that Crenshaw's set at the Iron Horse will be an impressive display of pop at its best.

Marshall Crenshaw will perform at the Iron Horse tonight at 7 p.m. Call the club at 584–0610 for more information.

COURTESY AARDMAN ANIMATION
Wallace and Gromit get the job done in "A Close Shave."

Animation's a neat treat

By Jeremy Brothers
Collegian Staff

WALLACE AND GROMIT: THE BEST OF AARDMAN ANIMATION
Written, Directed and Animated by Nick Park
Playing at The Pleasant St. Theatre

In the wake of last year's Toy Story, it is refreshing to see the form of animation known as "claymation" (come on... you must remember those "California Raisins") being used as innovatively and entertainingly as it is in this latest compilation from Academy Award–winning animator Nick Parks.

It seems all too fitting that the "Wallace and Gromit" cartoon, the most widely known feature to be released from the British Aardman studio and the highlight of the festival, is claymation. "A Close Shave" hilariously warns of the dangers of technology, seeming like a slap in the over–stylized Toy Story's face.

Like it's predecessors, "A Close Shave" reunites daft inventor–cum–cheese–fetishist Wallace and his deft dog, Gromit, this time to battle an mechanical dog with malevolent machinations. Park's highlight here is an adorable lone sheep that keeps appearing in the strangest places.

Parks also contributes a short piece to the festival, "Creature Comforts." The cartoon features zoo animals being interviewed about their environs. It succeeds in how strangely fitting the humans being interviewed connect with the animated animals. Although not as visually stirring as the longer "Wallace and Gromit" piece, it's still cute.

But cute is far from how some of the other pieces can be described. Recalling some of the funnier pieces of Spike and Mike's Animation Festival, features like "Ident" and the "Rex the Hunt" series offer strangely arresting shorter concept pieces. Rex introduces us to his special guest star, a dinosaur, only to have him hit by a stray bullet a few moments later — in order to explain how dinosaurs became extinct. Idiosyncratic humor in these pieces makes up for both the short lengths and sometimes trite animation.

One of the greatest surprises, and sure–fire signs that these are in fact the British we're dealing with, is the dialogue– less "Wat's Pig," in which a human child is rescued in the darkest of nights by — you guessed it, a pig. A strange medieval piece with grand literary allusions, "Wat's Pig" sticks out as one of the biggest winners in this best–of collection.

Mingus, Morgan alive again on multi–disc collections

For the final "Jazz/Blues Weekly" of Fall '96, I shall focus on a couple of multi–disc jazz releases that are of great importance in this year's re–issue spectrum.

• It looks like Blue Note did some deep digging into the caves of their archives to excavate some 12 songs from a three night run of Lee Morgan's quintet at the infamous Lighthouse Club in Hermosa Beach, Calif. Live At The Lighthouse collects, on three discs, the original four songs off the 1970 release of the same title ("Beehive," "Absolutions," "Nommo" and "Neophilia"), with eight tracks previously unreleased.

The lineup for the two week run at the Lighthouse in July of 1970 (the tracks here were all recorded over four sets each day between July 10–12) consisted of Morgan switching between trumpet and flugelhorn, Bennie Maupin on tenor sax, bass clarinet and flute, Harold Mabern on piano, Jymie Merritt on bass and the incendiary Mickey Roker on drums.

The songs from the original album welcome the unreleased tracks with open arms, creating a well–rounded album. "Beehive," is simply steaming, with the first of many solos by Maupin that will easily cause gooseflesh to the listener. Jymie Merritt commands his own composition, "Absolutions," with some melodic bass runs. "Nommo" presents some soloing without accompaniment at different times by Maupin, Mabern and Morgan (on flugelhorn here) with Roker and Merritt ripping right along. The mellow "Neophilia" presents horn harmonies by Morgan and Maupin (employing the darkly crooning bass clarinet for mood).

The unreleased songs, however well they work with the original four, sometimes surpass them. "Speedball" features a typically thunderous guest spot by then–Miles–Davis– drummer Jack DeJohnette. "Peyote" is in a nice, minor key with Morgan on flugelhorn again. Harold Mabern's piece, "I Remember Britt," with its light bossa–nova feel, Maupin's flute playing and pretty melodies is easily the best of the set.

All these songs above are from the first two discs. On the third disc, "The Sidewinder," is Morgan's signature piece and he handles it nicely, but "Aon," is just one more song that shows the band's soloing prowess, but with no great, resounding themes that the first two discs have. I must hand it to Mr. Maupin for his short, but very affectionate, memoir of Morgan (murdered in 1972) in the liner notes.

• When Charles Mingus came back to the public after a long break in 1972, with not only a new album, Let My Children Hear Music (Columbia/Legacy), but also a high– selling autobiography, Beneath The Underdog (Penguin Publishers), he decided to also stage a truly public appearance at Philharmonic Hall (now Avery Fisher Hall) in New York.

He wanted to have an all–star big band, and he got just that. "Cool jazz" pioneers Lee Konitz (alto sax) and Gerry Mulligan (baritone sax; he passed away in early 1996) showed up, as well as tenor saxman Gene Ammons. Milt Hinton played a second bass (supposedly Mingus, after such a long break, wasn't so confident of his bass prowess, and he also wanted to focus more on the directions of his compositions in concert). Honey Gordon sang a few of Mingus' vocal pieces, Sy Johnson and Teo Macero arranged and Macero conducted the band. Bill Cosby was the MC for the evening.

The recorded result of this Feb. 4, 1972 show was Charles Mingus and Friends In Concert (Columbia/Legacy), newly re–released with extensive (and apologetic) liner notes by Sy Johnson among others. It is a two–disc package with many previously unreleased songs. Most of the songs on this package are very booming, massive pieces with majestic soloing all around. All the compositions are by Mingus. "Portrait," is the best vocal song on the album, overshadowing "Eclipse." The suite "Little Royal Suite," written for Roy Eldridge with the focused trumpet parts played by then–18–year–old Jon Faddis. Faddis' playing is commendable and the suite is well–written, but sounds frayed at times. A good addition, though, to any Mingus lover's collection.

• I'd like to take a few words here to thank For The Record in Amherst for its info on new releases throughout the semester, and the record labels for its cooperation in helping to get this column going. And to you, my readers, I love you all. Merry Christmas, and Happy New Year and Break!

Joshua Boyd is a Collegian columnist.

THE COLLEGIAN ROCKS YOUR WORLD
Groovy! Radical! Cool! Sweet!

A guide to great holiday goodies:
From cookies to drinks and even a special surprise

Jorma Kansanen

Aah, the smells of the holiday season...

When you're at home, it's Mom, or for those oh–so–enlightened families, Dad strapping on the apron; doling out epicurean delights, with your watering gobs anxiously awaiting to inhale them all in a matter of seconds. When you're at school, it's putting an old Connecticut sweater (you know, the best one to spill stuff on), and calling the fire department saying the oven fire is under control.

Just let me say one thing: food is good. I like food. Cooking and eating is especially good during a season when holiday merry–making is the thing to do. My spirit revels during this time of the year, and one of the things I like to do in showing this is cook. All I know is that I like food.

You can give flowers during the holidays, or a gift certificate to Newbury Comics or something, but food and drink is eternal. Being a chef, I give the gift of food as much as possible. Needless to say, people dig it.

In the spirit of the season, I will now give you some of my culinary picks for the holidays. Do what you will with them, and I hope the season is full of food, drink and fantastic conversation and companionship. Going with our Valley's multiethnic culture — Cheers! Feliz Navidad! Hyvaa Joulua! Merry Christmas! Happy Chanukah!...and don't get mad if I forgot about you!

• My first recipe is easy. Any fool, or Republican, can do this one. It is like a candy bar sort of thing, and you will need milk with this one. Not for cooking, but after — when you've seoffed these down in handfuls.

Jorma's Surprise (9 by 13 inch pan; preheat oven to 350 degrees) — 1 stick butter, 1 cup graham cracker crumbs, small package butterscotch chips, small package of chocolate chips, 1 cup shredded coconut, 1/2 cup walnuts/almonds, etc., I can condensed milk.

1) Melt butter in small pan, and mix in graham cracker crumbs. Press mixture on to bottom of pan.

2) Put layers in any order you desire (for example): nuts, then butterscotch chips, shredded coconut and chocolate chips on top.

3) Pour condensed milk on top, spreading it evenly over the entire mixture with rubber spatula, knife, etc.

4) Bake for 30 minutes.

• Going with the sweets thing, you can't have a holiday season without cookies. I will not give you my Chocolate Chip–Macadamia Nut recipe. No, you can't make me. Maybe...for money. But instead, I'll give you another one of my favorites, and you'll need milk for this one, too.

Double Chocolate Cookies (cookie sheet; preheat oven to 350 degrees) — 2 sticks butter/margarine softened, 1 1/2 cups sugar, 2 eggs, 2 teaspoons vanilla extract, 2 cups all– purpose flour, 2/3 cup cocoa, 3/4 tsp. baking soda, 1/4 tsp. salt, 2 cups (12 oz. of choc. chips), 1/2 cup chopped nuts.

1) In large mixer bowl, beat butter, sugar, eggs and vanilla until light and fluffy.

2) Stir together flour, cocoa, baking soda and salt. Add to butter mixture. Stir in choc. chips and nuts.

3) Drop by rounded tablespoonfuls onto ungreased cookie sheet. Bake 8 to 10 minutes, or until set. Cool.

• Talking about food, you need something to wash it down with. Drinking is great during the holiday season, as if you need any other reason. But of course, when it's done in moderation (for anyone who knows me, that's as PC as I get). In this vein of culinary endeavor, here are some of the Collegian picks for drinks, cocktails, etc. for the season:

Luke Meredith (Assoc. Sports Editor, and the Schwag– meister himself) — Pete's Wicked Winter Brew. The best bet to warm your toesies, if you can afford it. If not, Busch Light or a few shots of Jaegermeister will put you through the holiday season.

Jacob W. Michaels (Editor In Chief) — Nothing can beat the chill outside better than the combination of hot chocolate and peppermint schnapps inside.

Mark McGrath (Ed/Op Editor) — Samuel Adams Old Fezziwig Ale. Dark brewed with a happy touch of nutmeg and cinnamon. This ale will satisfy the heartiest and most discriminating of Christmas beer cravings.

Alycia Hines (Busy Business Manager) — Samuel Adams Winter Lager. Can't be beat! It makes you forget how cold it is outside. A nice holiday blend wine also brings about the holiday spirit... it has like cinnamon in it, or something. (You go, girl! — JK)

Chris Stamm (Underaged Sports Editor) — Ah yes, the joy of being underage for the holidays. While all of your friends are spreading holiday cheer, all of us under 21–ers are forced to deal with hot cocoa with whipped cream and eggnog of the undoctored variety. Next year... next year.

Leigh Torbin (Collegian hockey guru and soccer sicko) — Daahhrr–kkk Beee–rrr!! (i.e. "dark beer," to all of you Rudinski fans). As long as it's darker than a Pepsi, more specifically, I'll go with McGrath's selection.

And now for yours truly, I have a couple of delicious ditties to warm the soul, and fog the mind. For an after dinner drink, try a little Grand Mariner with your tea or coffee. If it's a hopsy, maltsy and barley texture you desire, anything from the Berkshire Brewery will do. But for an all– out buzz, I go back to my Scandinavian roots.

Glug. No not the thing you do when you drink, but the drink itself. Glug. I don't know exactly how to make it, but it is good. Last year when I was in England, some of my Norwegian and Finnish friends and I hooked up, and some of the girls made this drink. It has wine, some other liquor, spices like cinnamon and nutmeg, raisins, almonds, while slowly warmed to a not–too–hot–you–can't swallow–it–down–in–gulps temperature.

All I remember is that I had a couple of them, and I felt like doing naked backflips in the snow. I don't know if that's just a thing Scandinavians do in the winter, but it was a good buzz anyway. Find a northern European and accost them for the recipe.

Jorma Kansanen is a Collegian columnist.

Punk legends the Descendants come back

By Adam Dlugacz
Collegian Staff

THE DESCENDANTS
The Middle East, Cambridge
Dec. 6

Lupo's Heartbreak Hotel, Providence
Dec. 7

CAMBRIDGE — As the bodies swirled together and the ceilings dripped nearly everyone who was at Thursday night's show at the Middle East or Friday night's show at Lupo's had a smile on their face. How could you not? It was The Descendants. The show wasn't about attitudes, old school or new school, or fashion... none of that mattered because the Descendants were about to play.

The Descendants are and always will be the essence of punk in its purest form. Remember the first time you heard The Descendants and it felt like everything up to that point and everything after that would be obsolete? Remember that overwhelming blissfulness in knowing that Milo had written a song describing your exact feelings? Thursday and Friday nights, a lucky few got to experience that live.

Of course, The Descendants had been broken up for 10 years and even though Bill Stevenson and Stephen Egerton were in all one couldn't help but be a little bit nervous before the show. Stevenson and Egerton were well into their 30's and Milo hadn't performed in years. On top of that, there were even kids at the show who were there because they thought the Descendants were a neat "new" band on Epitath. Well, as soon as they busted into "Descendants" all doubts were erased, if you didn't have a smile on your face you missed the point.

In a little under an hour–and–a–half, they played 31 masterpieces of punk perfection including "Hope," "Bikeage," "I Don't Want To Grow Up," "Pervert," "I Like Food" and "Clean Sheets," as well as newer ones like "Everything Sucks Today" and "I'm The One." They were all played with vitality and frenetic energy that reminded you why you got into punk in the first place.

While The Sex Pistols needed full stadiums and Green Day needed major labels and Rancid needed MTV, The Descendants simply gave you themselves — and for an hour and a half they were the perfect band that they'll always be. The Descendants reminded the crowd that they didn't get into punk because it was the "cool" thing to do but because it was a feeling that meant more then anything else in this world. Years from now, people who were in attendance Thursday and Friday nights will be able to look back, smile to themselves and say "I saw the Descendants. Now my life is complete."

Chantings bring Middle Ages back

By Seema Gangatikar
Collegian Staff

DANIEL AND THE LIONS
Fine Arts Center Concert Hall
Dec. 7

Twelfth century liturgical drama came to life at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall Saturday night. The New York Ensemble For Early Music (EEM) presented Daniel And The Lions, a medieval play complete with colorful costumes and authentic instruments.

The show began with a ten minute instrumental prelude, as the trio of musicians (Wayne Hankin, Karen Hansen and Christa Patton) demonstrated on a variety of instruments. Instruments featured including the shawm, dulcimer, rebec, tromba marina, bagpipes and the harp.

The play then began with the ceremonial entrance of Belshazzar (Paul Shipper), preceded by his court singing the story of the Jewish prophet, Daniel. While the court sings the praises of Belshazzar and his father, the words "mene," "thekel" and "phares" appeared on the wall in the background.

Frighiencd, the court is unable to interpret the symbols and the Queen (Marshall Coid) persuades Belshazzar to summon Daniel to unravel the meaning of the phrases. Daniel forsees the los of Belshazzar's kingdom and refuses to accept any reward for deciphering the symbols.

Soon after, Darius invades the kingdom and Belshazzar is killed. After hearing of Daniel's extraordinary abilities as a prophet, Darius appoints Daniel as regent. But the king's advisers grow jealous and they convince Darius to write a law forbidding the worship of any God other than Darius himself.

The courtiers catch Daniel worshipping another God and the king is forced to throw Daniel into the den of lions. An angel appears and keeps the lions away. Darius enters the den later and is overjoyed to find Daniel still alive and immediately orders the courtiers to be thrown into the pit instead.

The ensemble did a good job of reviving an medieval play. Sung entirely in Latin Gregorian chant, sometimes it was hard to follow the action, but otherwise the ensemble was outstanding.

Meet me at the Blue Wall at 5:00 with $4000 or you'll never see your Collegian again!
Ha ha Ha!!!

Graphics folks is rowdy! Yeee HAAw!

Collegian Graphics

DON'T GO INTO HIBERNATION ON YOUR WINTER BREAK

Winter Intersession
January 2 - 17

spend that time earning extra credits at UMass Lowell
If you want to move ahead in your educational program, and earn college credit, enroll in UMass Lowell's Winter Intersession. This highly concentrated session is also a great way to earn transfer credits if you're enrolled in another University. This year, make the most of your winter break at UMass Lowell

DAY CLASSES:
Monday - Saturday,
9am - 12noon

EVENING CLASSES:
Monday - Friday,
6 - 9pm
Saturday 1 - 4pm

Credit Courses (3 credits) available in:
• Liberal Arts • Sciences
• Mathematics • Computers
• Social Sciences • Music
• Management

Cost: $115.00 per undergraduate credit

For a Winter Intersession Course Bulletin, call the Division of Continuing Education/Office of Enrollment Services at (508) 934-2481.

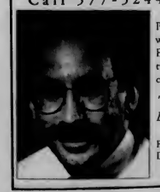
Or just fill out the coupon and mail it to: University of Massachusetts Lowell, Office of Enrollment Services/DCE, One University Avenue, Lowell, MA 01854-2881.

Name
Address
City
State Zip
Phone ( )
Institution Currently Attending



UMass Lowell
UNIVERSITY COLLEGE
Division Of Continuing Education

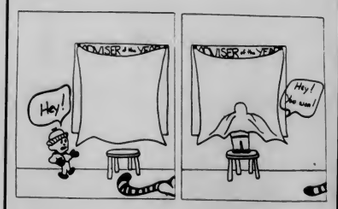
TOC Bar & Grill
Munchie Specials Mon - Fri 4 - 7 PM
Free Popcorn Draft Beer Drink Specials & Micro Brews
Saturday Dec.7 at 7:30pm
UMASS vs. Fresno State
UMass
11th Floor Campus Center
Mon.-Fri. 4pm - 12:30am
Sat. 3pm - 12:30am

TOP 10 Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services

1 We have a comprehensive contact lens program.
2 Emergency eye care delivered at UHS, is a covered benefit if you are a student plan member.
3 Savings on eyeglasses from participating opticians are available if you are a student and have a complete optometry examination at UHS.
4 A great place to get contact lenses.
5 On-site contact lens specialist.
6 Free sample start-up contact lens solutions.
7 Contact lenses can be mailed directly to you; free postage for normal delivery.
8 Same day replacement of contact lenses, in many cases, due to our large in-house inventory.
9 We take great pride in being able to fit many people who have had difficulty in the past wearing contact lenses.
10 Convenient hours and location.

For appointments or questions, Call 577-5244
uhs

Patient feedback of those who have used the UHS Eye Care Program over twenty years has been consistently excellent.



"I invite you to use the Eye Services at UHS."

Frederick H. Bloom, O.D.
Director, Eye Care Program

MINI MALL '96
Today thru- Friday December 13 9am-5pm Student Union Ballroom
One-Stop Shopping Extravaganza! With over 40 vendors
is HERE
For more information call 549-1710

Meet the Author
Marty Dobrow
will be signing copies of his book
GOING BIGTIME
The Spectacular Rise of UMass Basketball
Tuesday December, 10 12pm - 2pm
Campus Center Concourse
20% OFF
Publishers Price at the University Store
A Great Gift for any UMass Fan
UNIVERSITY STORE Campus Center Hours: M - F 9 - 5
545 - 2619 SAT 10 - 5

1997 OUTSTANDING UNDERGRADUATE ACADEMIC ADVISER

Submit nominations in writing by Monday, December 16, 1996 to:
Lu Butler, Chair
Outstanding Undergraduate Academic Adviser Selection Committee
Division of Continuing Education, 614 Goodell Building, Campus

COMPUTER FAIR
MULLINS CENTER
DEC 14
10AM-4:00PM
Tri-State Fairs: Original Area Shows since 1987
Buy at wholesale prices directly at the show from nearly 50 independent competing companies under one roof. From full systems to shareware, it's all here
Located on the campus of UMass. Rte 9 onto Rte 116N at Staples taking first exit, turn right
This is a discount ticket. General admission is $7.00 each. Clip or photocopy this ad and save $2.00 ea- Student I.D. only $2 ea admission
Our dealers feature the IBM/PC marketplace. Join us four times a year. Kids under 10 free with parent
Don't over sleep, one day show only!
ONE MONTH FREE INTERNET AT THIS SHOW FROM TIAC

THANG VO/ COLLEGIAN

Off and Running

After sweeping Providence over the weekend, the Massachusetts hockey team hopes to keep it going when they play Dartmouth and Princeton this weekend.

Patriots taking it one game at a time

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

FOXBORO, Mass. — The New England Patriots have won seven of eight games. They lead the NFL in scoring; are in the playoffs and could get a first-round bye. But they still have problems. Nothing major. It's just that with the improved quality of post-season opponents, minor mistakes could become costly. Shawn Jefferson dropped a pass in the end zone Sunday. The Patriots missed another touchdown when Terry Glenn got only one foot inbounds when he had room for both. And what about the New York Jets third-and-15 completion for 20 yards in the Patriots 34-10 victory that clinched the playoff berth?

The team's improving a little bit as we go and that's important," Patriots coach Bill Parcells said yesterday, but we weren't precise in some areas. We were a little inconsistent throwing the ball.

Our protection was OK, but we had a little subtle pressure here and there," he added. "We didn't tackle well enough in a couple of cases. Our kickoff coverage was pretty good, but it should have been better."

Overall, he was pleased with the third consecutive game in which the Patriots (10-4) never trailed. He said the defense against both the pass and run improved and the work of punter Tom Tupa and placekicker Adam Vinatieri gave him "peace of mind."

The win kept the Patriots in second place in the AFC playoff race, but Parcells is intolerant of mistakes, especially with a game at defending champion Dallas next Sunday. The Patriots can clinch the division title with one victory, and a bye and a second-round home game with two wins.

One of the biggest problems is the loss of fullback Sam Gash, who may miss the rest of the season and playoffs with damaged left knee ligaments that could require surgery.

"It looks like this is going to be a little more serious than I first thought," Parcells said. "I'm anticipating that he'll be out for the season."

Gash, injured in the third quarter Sunday, is an outstanding blocker and receiver, "one of your core guys," Parcells said. But the Patriots may not lose much by substituting Keith Byars, a fullback-tight end-H Back who they picked up after Miami released him seven weeks into the season. He is 33 but thinks he can handle an increased workload.

"If they need me to do that, it's no problem. I'm used to playing that much anyway," Byars said. "You don't have to worry about a guy like me. I'll stay ready."

Some good also may come out of Jefferson's dropped pass. "I turned my head and it fell right out. I should know better," he said. "I got too lax. It's a humbling experience for me. Things have been going pretty much my way this whole season and I'm glad it happened.

"It brought me back down to earth with the playoffs coming up. I hate that it happened, but it's a good lesson."

The Patriots faced another problem Sunday — a slippery field after a couple of days of rain and snow.

"I'm not on the buildings and grounds" crew, Parcells said. "At 9 o'clock [Sunday] morning I thought it was impossible, but it wasn't. They did as good a job as they could" getting the field ready.

Parcells also had a personal problem after the game. He couldn't sleep.

He said he went to bed at 10 p.m. and woke up about three hours later thinking about what he has to do to help keep the Patriots on a roll going into the playoffs.

"I'm tired right now," Parcells said at midday yesterday, "but I'd rather have that problem."

WAC shafted by bowl alliance

(AP) — Notre Dame and Wyoming aren't going to bowls, even though they wanted to. Brigham Young and Nebraska are going to bowls, but not the ones they wanted to. And Florida and Florida State are going to THE bowl, but they're not the teams the fans waqied.

Except those from Florida, of course.

It seems like it wasn't until the bowl picture got really settled that it got confusing.

"I'm terribly disappointed for Wyoming, especially the student-athletes, coaches and fans," WAC commissioner Karl Benson said. "They were certainly deserving of a bowl game."

At least Notre Dame, 8-3 and ranked 18th in the final AP poll, reluctantly chose not to go after losing to Southern Cal and failing to qualify for one of the biggies. They'll stay home for the first time since 1986.

"At Notre Dame, we expect the best and we deserve the best," offensive guard Mike Rosenthal said, speaking for the majority of his teammates. "The team agreed that if there wasn't a top bowl, there shouldn't be any bowl."

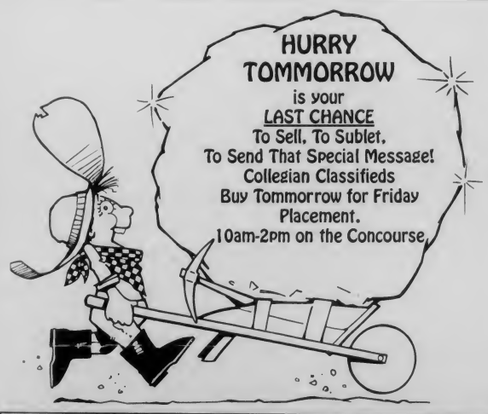
Wyoming finished 10-2 and ranked 22nd, but it lost the WAC title to BYU 28-25 in overtime on Saturday and didn't get a bid. The Cowboys would have gone just about anywhere, if asked.

"It's no longer for the kids," Wyoming Athletic Director Lee Moon said, admitting that Wyoming's problem was it only had 3,500 fans it could send to a bowl game. And it's a travesty that a team gets excluded simply "because you can't generate a large fan base," he said.

At the same time, BYU had to settle for a lesser bowl, a matchup with Kansas State in the non-alliance Cotton Bowl, despite a 13-1 season and No. 5 national ranking.

Four of the alliance teams — Texas, Nebraska, Virginia Tech and Penn State — are ranked lower than BYU. BYU and the WAC were so upset they still are considering legal action.

"At this juncture a decision has not been made whether to file any type of claim," the WAC commissioner said. "We believe it's more important over the course of the next month to focus on the success of BYU and Utah in their bowl games and let our bowl partners conduct games without a cloud of controversy. As a result, we will delay the possibility of any legal action."



Another WAC team, Utah, is in the low-profile Copper Bowl. At least No. 6 Nebraska remained in a bowl alliance game, matched against No. 10 Virginia Tech in the Orange Bowl, although a loss to Texas in the Big 12 championship game cost the Cornhuskers a shot at a third straight national championship.

For many, Florida-Florida State is just a rerun, and, with No. 2 Arizona State going against No. 4 Ohio State in the Rose Bowl, it might not even be for a national title.

In the game of the century two weeks ago, Florida State beat then-No. 1 Florida 24-21 in a real nail-biter.

"You would think that if you beat No. 1 during the regular season you wouldn't have to beat them twice," Florida State coach Bobby Bowden said.

Of course, Bowden's team is No. 1, for now.

HOME FOR THE HOLIDAYS?

If you want to earn some money during your holiday vacation, come to work for the Barnes & Noble College Division. To determine which of the more than 20 college bookstores in Massachusetts will be closest to where you will be spending your holidays, please call Barnes & Noble Regional Office at (508) 934-6428.

Full and part-time jobs, immediate hires, flexible scheduling, friendly work environment, and store discount up to 35%.
We are an equal opportunity employer.

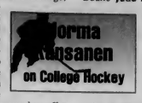
BARNES & NOBLE COLLEGE DIVISION

Auditions For Not Ready For Bedtime Players

NOT READY FOR BEDTIME PLAYERS

Tuesday, December 10 at 6:30PM
Campus Center Rm. 163

For more information call the Health Education Division of the University Health Services and ask for Sally 577-5181.



Pack Your Bags!

Go Skiing!
Go to the Beach!
Go Home!
DON'T PAY RENT WHILE YOU'RE GONE!

Need to Sublet Your Place?

USE US!

Colorado College slipping, UM hockey rising

But what would be the answer to the answer man?

When you talk about 1995-96 final four participant Colorado College, questions abound concerning their rebound (ooh, bad word for all of you Tigers fans) from a 3-2 championship loss to Michigan. Wolverine forward Brendan Morrison netted the game-winner 3:35 into overtime off a rebound of a Bill Muckalt shot, leaving Tiger goalie Ryan Bach on his back in dismay on Cincinnati's Riverfront Coliseum ice surface.

Spinnin' that curious sense of my own, let's take a look at how a team like Colorado College could bounce back from such a harrowing defeat. More than having women's basketball players who have last names similar to my home country (i.e. Finn, man, Finn), the CC issue intrigues me. Can I answer? Yes I can...

The question coming into this season for CC was with their forward situation. Forty-four percent of the Tiger offense was lost to graduation coming into the '96-'97 campaign. Forwards Peter Geronazzo, Jay McNeill, Chad Remackel and Colin Schmidt, who combined for 98 goals last year on an overall average of 5.36 goals a game, donned their caps and gowns, leaving the front line torn and frayed.

But what wins championships? Yes, defense, K-Mart shoppers, and coming into the season, coach Don Lucia had some good alternatives, but so far, no concrete answers. Super soph Scott Swanson and senior Eric Rud are no strangers to defensive accolades, with Rud being named Western College Hockey Association Defensive Player of the Year last season and Swanson making the WCHA All- Rookie team. Goalie Judd Lambert was stellar in goal last year (16-1-2, 2.14 GAA), but so far has been more of a sieve than a star (3.26 GAA, .876 save percentage), and isn't even in the top five in the WCHA goaltending standings.

So, in the end, what has brought them to a 8-5-1 record, a No. 6 ranking in the nation, and second spot in the WCHA just behind No. 7 North Dakota (11-4-1)? (I sense a knee- jerk) And, it is true — offense, baby, offense.

The Tiger offense is only averaging less than a goal per game compared to last year (4.57), with '95-96 WCHA Rookie of the Year Brian Swanson leading the team in scoring. But the jury is still out on CC...well, actually, hung. The season has been an effort in one-step-above- mediocrity, and they are just keeping in the national and conference race.

Series splits with No. 4 Minnesota, Northern Michigan, St. Cloud State, Alaska-Anchorage, and a loss and a tie in last weekend's series with North Dakota are keeping them in pace. But forget about that series sweeps over Wisconsin and Denver University (which to any Tiger fan is worth a season in itself) have kept them above .500.

CC came up big against DU at Cadet Ice Arena, which at this time they unfortunately have to share with Air Force. The arena almost went "oh so quiet" after two assists by Anders Bjork to help put DU up 2-0 early. Mentioning rebounding, they came back with three unanswered goals, and the rest is recent Colorado hockey rivalry history.

That's what this young team must do (seven freshman forwards), and continue to rebound like this because they're going to take their lumps, but Lambert must find his '95-96 touch. They will need their defense on Dec. 27th, as a rematch of last season's NCAA semifinal with No. 9 Vermont will occur at the Badger Showdown in Milwaukee.

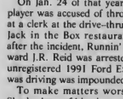
The Catamount's "French Connection," All-Americans Martin St. Louis and Eric Perrin, will look for a late Christmas present: which is, revenge of CC's controversial 4-3 semifinal win in second overtime. Remackel took advantage of a classic non-call, collecting McNeill's hand pass and banking his goal off of UVM's goalie Tim Thomas.

Hopefully for the Tiger faithful, they will get their eventual revenge on Michigan in the NCAA tournament, since they're not scheduled to meet in the regular season. But first things first, the fur will fly between the Catamounts and the Tigers in 17 days at the Bradley Center, and the CC question will be answered on the ice.

• I don't know what is worse — having no fans show up for a home game, or having idiot fans show up for a home game. Last Friday night's game between UMass and Providence College at Schneider Arena was a case in both aspects of my last prognostication.

Granted, the region had a little snow over the weekend, and the game was televised on NESN, but Schneider was empty. Anyway, it was my first time travelling to Schneider Arena, and I was more than impressed with the facility.

It has a dose of a pre-renovated Alfond Arena, Maine's home ice surface, with a low ceiling that would more than aid in high decibel noise level — if fans show up for the game, that is. The seats start at the top of the boards, not the bottom, so a perfect view of the ice is had by all who should be in attendance. Consequently, the fans are on top of the whole game: the players, the coaches, the action. Needless to say, the media facilities are also fantastic, for all of the reasons above. But...



Nobody to take advantage of these facets were there to take advantage of them, and not just last Friday night, but historically. Hey, we don't fill the Mullins Center yet, but that is more because of a basketball-centric mindset. We put 3,000 in the seats, which would fill Schneider on a nightly basis, and we have only been in the HE for three seasons.

I just have one thing to say: PC are the defending Hockey East champions. I can almost guarantee that when UMass gets to that level of success, you will see close to Minnesota type of numbers for every game (i.e. their opening series versus Colorado College averaged over 9,000 per game).

On the other hand, the fans that were there were idiots. No hockey knowledge to speak of at all. After four unanswered goals on the Friars' head sieve Dan Dennis, who is a Hobey Baker Award candidate and All-Hockey East preseason selection, to make the game 5-3, the fans were chanting to UMass goalie Brian Regan, "Regan, Regan...you suck!" Hm, I don't think so. Meantime, I sat on media row, making my fingers into the sign of an "L" (i.e. looo--sssser), smacking it to my verbose Collegian cohort Leigh Torbin, "Scoreboard, scoreboard."

Jorma Kansanen is a Collegian columnist.

Tark spells trouble Sox sign Saberhagen

Somehow you knew that when Jerry Tarkanian threw in the towel at UNLV, he would end up in the college basketball coaching ring again.

He has, and he's coming to town tonight.

Tarkanian, the current coach at Fresno State and the former coach at UNLV, is a member of that rather distinct fraternity of coaches whose careers have been surrounded by controversy. He has, however, the dubious distinction of being the dirtiest, sketchiest, most-controversial coach in NCAA history.

Case in point: Tark the Shark has been involved in more high-profile NCAA investigations than anyone. Scandal has shrouded the Uncle Fester look-alike like fog around the Golden Gate Bridge or the pappa-razzi around Madonna.

In 1986, controversy surrounded the UNLV program when Tark recruited New York City standout Lloyd Daniels.

After floundering through four high schools in as many years and never graduating, Daniels ended up on the Las Vegas strip — in a crackhouse!

Daniels later pleaded guilty to buying crack in a Las Vegas sting operation, shortly after arriving on campus.

In 1991, Tarkanian fought the NCAA all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court so that he and his team would be allowed to defend their National Title (they were allowed into the NCAA Tournament but did not defend their title, falling to Duke in the national semifinals).

Then, in 1992, lightning struck. And the Runnin' Rebels fell apart.

On Jan. 24 of that year, a UNLV player was accused of throwing food at a clerk at the drive-thru of a local Jack in the Box restaurant. Hours after the incident, Runnin' Rebel forward J.R. Reid was arrested and the unregistered 1991 Ford Explorer he was driving was impounded.

To make matters worse for the Shark, three of his players were photographed in a hot tub with convicted fixer Richard "The Fixer" Perry. The picture ran in the Las Vegas Review-Journal and criticism about the UNLV program abounded.

Illicit preseason practices, a clear violation of NCAA rules, were held under the guise of classes.

As a result, the Shark, who had said that it would take "an incredible offer" from an NBA team to lure him away from bright lights of Vegas, headed toward the Rio Grande to coach the San Antonio Spurs in the spring.

By November of 1992, UNLV had spent upwards of $600,000 on legal fees and had dealt with 15 separate lawyers.

But the people loved Tark because he won. Thousands of his supporters heaped criticism on UNLV President Robert Maxson for his way of dealing with Tarkanian.

He flashed a smile and winked at the cameras while his teams posted the numbers to keep the fans happy. His teams, once described by a sportswriter as "fabulously flashy and gloriously skilled" were winners — and isn't that what really mattered?

Unfortunately, it's not all that matters.

There is an extreme cost to winning. Sometimes it is the sacrifice of time and the pay-off of grueling practices, but more often with Tark's program, the cost seemed to be the precious innocence of UNLV's players. And when lives are adversely affected those wins are cheapened.

Tarkanian, who earned his nickname at UNLV because visiting teams referred to the Vegas court as a shark's tank where the Rebels chewed up opponents, built his City of Lights dynasty with the shady practice of importing junior college players or transfers from other institutions. Now at Fresno State he is doing the same. In 1991, eight of his 14 players were transfers or juco players. This year's roster sports six (of 16).

Problems like those he faced at Vegas have also followed him to California. Among other things, Tarkanian was accused of watching his team practice at a local health club before NCAA rules allow.

But the towel-waving coach has the highest winning percentage in collegiate history. The coach who has never had a losing season is winning at Fresno State — and isn't that what really matters?

Casey Kane is a Collegian columnist.

BOSTON (AP) — The Red Sox signed two-time Cy Young Award winner Brett Saberhagen, who is recovering from shoulder surgery, to a minor league contract yesterday.

Saberhagen, 32, will get a $500,000 signing bonus and another $600,000 if he makes the active roster. The deal includes provisions for a major league contract and a club option for the 1998 season.

"He's a top quality pitcher. We've got a chance for a significant contribution from Saberhagen. He's a potential Cy Young winner," General Manager Dan Duquette said.

Saberhagen, who missed the entire 1996 season for Colorado because of shoulder trouble, has agreed to a contract full of performance incentives based on the number of starts he makes, agent Jeff Borris said.

The Red Sox are still trying to re-sign Clemens. The free agent also is being pursued by the New York Yankees, Cleveland and Texas. "That's not related to our negotiations with Roger Clemens," Duquette said.

Duquette said he expects some movement this week in the negotiations with Clemens, a three-time Cy Young Award winner who filed for free agency after spending his 13-year career with the Red Sox.

"I would think that is going to move along in the next week," Duquette said." Everybody's waltzing, they've got their partners."

Saberhagen was one of baseball's premier pitchers in the 1980s, winning the Cy Young Award with the Kansas City Royals in 1985 and 1989. But injuries have limited him to no more than 25 regular-season starts since 1991 in stints with the New York Mets and Colorado.

Saberhagen, sent by the Mets to Colorado right before the trading deadline in 1995, is coming off a three-year contract worth about $14.4 million. The Rockies recently declined an option on Saberhagen for $5 million in 1997.

By not officially signing Saberhagen before Dec. 8, the Red Sox did not have to clear a roster spot for him in time for Monday's major league draft. The agreement with the Red Sox was worked out this weekend — during which Saberhagen was married.

Saberhagen pitched for the wild-card Rockies in the 1995 NL playoffs, and had arthroscopic surgery on his shoulder after the season.

Saberhagen was still bothered by shoulder pain this ycar in spring training. When the problem did not go away early in the season, he underwent major surgery on his rotator cuff in May. By the end of the season, Saberhagen was able to throw, albeit not nearly at full speed.

Saberhagen was MVP of the 1985 World Series for the Royals. He is 141-100 with a 3.26 ERA in a major league career that began in 1984.

■ waterpolo

continued from page 12

the Valley, piling up considerable numbers in the dirty-work categories like quarters played, steals and assists, and he does his job willingly for the good of the team.

From Poolside... The UMass record sheets have felt a tremendous amount of impact this season, mostly thanks to Brian Stahl. His 96 goals mark the fourth highest single- season total in team history, putting his freshman year output in fifth place. Stahl's 118 points in '96 place him fifth on the single season chart. He is already the career leader in two-point goals with 17 and has moved up to fourth place on the all-time goals scored list (181) just seven behind Jon Miller. Stahl also checks in at No. 4 in career points already with 256, ten behind Miller.

■ debrow

continued from page 12

While the book focuses mainly on the achievements and the success of recent years, it does recall the earlier days of hoop success at UMass. Stories of coach Jack Leaman, Julius Erving, Rick Pitino and Alex Eldridge lay the foundation for what became one of the most remarkable turnarounds college basketball has ever seen.

There is much discussion in the book about Calipari's job in rebuilding the UMass program, bringing the team rated the 259th of 267 Division I teams to the top spot in the AP poll. Dobrow focuses considerably on the 1994-95 season and extensively on last year's Final Four season.

In addition to the game details and the history of the program, there are personal profiles on the players on last year's team.

"John Calipari may have gone, but Marty Dobrow's vivid history of Minuteman basketball — from ZeoMass to UMass, from Dr. J and Slick Rick to today — will be sure to keep the success story alive for every true Massachusetts fan," Newsweek columnist and six-time national Sportswriter of the Year Frank DeFord said about the book.

■ philly

continued from page 12

also to help us start to solidify our picks for the Atlantic 10 team, who we're going to take."

The final scores for the meet were UMass in first with (804.5), host La Salle (691), Fordham (566.50), Drexel (437.5), Bloomsburg (264), Rider (259), West Chester (243), and Howard finished in last with (180.50).

This time of the year is critical for the swimming and diving team. The next meet isn't until January 4 in Puerto Rico for the San Juan Invitational. So it's up to the swimmers themselves to stay in shape during finals week and winter break.

Fernandez signs

By Ronald Blum
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — Showing how much free agency can be worth, Alex Fernandez got a $35 million, five-year contract from the Florida Marlins yesterday.

Less than 48 hours after he became a free agent, Fernandez agreed to a deal that makes him baseball's second-highest paid pitcher behind Atlanta's John Smoltz, who will average $7.75 million under his four-year contract with the Braves. In terms of total dollars, Fernandez' package is the most for a pitcher." It's a very exciting, emotional day, said Fernandez, a Miami native. It's a great feeling to know you'll be sleeping in your own house and be with your wife and kids every day".

On a busy day in the free agent market, catcher Benito Santiago agreed to a $6.5 million, two-year contract with Toronto; left-hander Terry Mulholland agreed to a $2.3 million, one-year deal with the Chicago Cubs, and right-hander Bret Saberhagen agreed to a minor-league contract with Boston that could pay him up to $3.5 million if he makes 25 starts and pitches 200 innings in the major leagues.

In a late deal Sunday night, third baseman Todd Zeile agreed to a $3.5 million, three-year contract with the Los Angeles Dodgers. Fernandez, who gets $5 million in each of the next five seasons, became a free agent Saturday when players received credit for service time during the 1994-95 strike. Florida is said to be pursuing two other players in that group: outfielder Moises Alou and reliever Mel Rojas.

"Any time you can sign a quality player from the local community, that's important, Marlins general manager Dave Dombrowski said. And he's only 27. He'll pitch here in his prime, and he can get better."

Fernandez, who jumped to seventh on the overall list by average salary, was 16-10 last season with a 3.45 ERA, and is 57-34 with a 3.52 ERA over the past four seasons for the Chicago White Sox. His agent, Scott Boras, said two teams were willing to pay more than $40 million over five seasons.

"The money was overwhelming somewhere else, Fernandez said. It wasn't an easy decision. It all comes down to being at home."

Santiago hit .264 with 85 RBIs last season at Philadelphia and set career highs with 30 homers, 71 runs scored and 49 walks. He gets a Fernandez' package is the most for a pitcher." It's a very exciting, emotional day, said Fernandez, a Miami native. It's a great feeling to know you'll be sleeping in your own house and be with your wife and kids every day".

On a busy day in the free agent market, catcher Benito Santiago agreed to a $6.5 million, two-year contract with Toronto; left-hander Terry Mulholland agreed to a $2.3 million, one-year deal with the Chicago Cubs, and right-hander Bret Saberhagen agreed to a minor-league contract with Boston that could pay him up to $3.5 million if he makes 25 starts and pitches 200 innings in the major leagues.

In a late deal Sunday night, third baseman Todd Zeile agreed to a $3.5 million, three-year contract with the Los Angeles Dodgers. Fernandez, who gets $5 million in each of the next five seasons, became a free agent Saturday when players received credit for service time during the 1994-95 strike. Florida is said to be pursuing two other players in that group: outfielder Moises Alou and reliever Mel Rojas.

"Any time you can sign a quality player from the local community, that's important, Marlins general manager Dave Dombrowski said. And he's only 27. He'll pitch here in his prime, and he can get better."

Fernandez, who jumped to seventh

Recycle Your Collegian!!!!!!

[cranial] COLLISION
From NYC

MR. KLEEN • YOUNG
COWBOY • LOTUS • LAU'd
BROS. • HUSH • AARON S.

LIVE DJs SPINNIN'
jungle - house - techno - hip hop - tribal
CASH BAR! (21 + ID)

$6 all ages
FRIDAY DECEMBER 13th 1996
Campus Center Auditorium
UMASS 7pm - 2am
Tickets available at TIX Unlimited
Student Union, 545-0412

Come to
Barnes & Noble at Boston University's
JOB FAIR!

and get off to a great start this winter...

If you want a fast-paced job that will get your winter off to a great start, it's here at Barnes & Noble at Boston University, Boston's best source for books... and the best choice for retail jobs. Find out more at our JOB FAIR on December 11th.

You could be a sales associate - just long enought to get us through the winter rush and get your bank account in shape. Get here early enough and you could be hired on the spot!

- Part-time jobs
- Immediate hires
- Flexible scheduling
- Store discount up to 35%
- Friendly work environment

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 11TH
10AM - 3PM
CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE

If you want to get a closer look at us, but can't come to our JOB FAIR, call (617) 236-7402 for more information.
We are an equal opportunity employer.

Barnes & Noble
AT BOSTON UNIVERSITY

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
BE A BARTENDER
747-9888
SPRINGFIELD

The day that we don't have extra space is the day that you come and write for the Collegian!
545-3500

BUCCI
HAIRCUTS always $10.
25 n pleasant st amherst 256 0733
145 main st northampton 586 0155

Fast Glass Cars
OOPS!
•Free Estimates
•Lifetime Repair Warranty
•Auto Glass Replacement
•Car & Truck Rental
North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA
549-2880
(One Mile from UMass bus route)

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Mixed DJ Tapes- 2D music, NYC House, Hip Hop, Reggae, Disco, Techno, Latino. On sale @ mini-mall. 96 Student Union Ballroom, Tues - Fri

The Advertisement in University of Massachusetts Student Directory for CVS has an incorrect phone number. The phone number should read 256-8620. Due to an error, the incorrect phone number was printed. We apologize for any inconvenience this has caused. This is a statement from University Directories, the publisher of the UMass Campus Directory, end CVS Pharmacy.

The Sisters of the Delta Zeta Sorority would like to invite all University women to a Holiday Rush party on December 10 from 7-9pm.

Attention All University Women! Come meet the Sisters of CHI OMEGA Sorority at a Pre-Rush party on Tuesday, December 10 from 8:00-9:00. Please call Michelle at 549-8858 for more information

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Take over lease for 2 BDR Apt in Boulders Call 253-3780

Take over our Puffton lease. 2 bedroom, heat/hot water included $525/month Call 549-7273

Nice 1 Bedroom apartment in Sunderland. All utilities included Great for couples! $540/month. 665-8127. Leave Message Jan 1st

Take Over Our Lease 1/97 2 Bdrm apt. Downtown Amherst Call Matt or Sean 253-6605

Puffton Village Large 1 bedroom, dishwasher/AC, $515. Heat included Available Jan 1 Call Helene or Doug 549-0766

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 BDRM Puffton Apt. New carpet, paint, appliances Available January 1st. $515/month Call Doug 549-7463

AUTO FOR SALE

1989 VW Fox 89K miles, A/C, excellent condition, $3300 or B/O Call 256-1588

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

1986 Chevy Celeb. Wagon Auto, black, 140k, runs well, needs nothing! Call Kyle 256-2325 $900 firm

1982 Toyota Supra Good condition, AT/PW/PD/PS/AM/FM Cass Call 546-0657 or 413-624-3882

Vision Quest Vee Hightop 1985 Dodge 350 solo camper, good condition, well maintained $1,995 (508)644-5674

1990 Honda CRX Si Red, 16 valve, average mileage, new exhaust & brakes, front end mask, driving lights, AC, new tires, filter charger, moonroof, alloys, stereo/tape $5,500 or B/O Call Derex at 549-3096

'90 Honda Civic AC, runs great 110,000 miles $7500.00 or B/O Call John 256-1069

Escort 86 runs good, 2 new tires, battery, etc $800 o/b/o 546-2398 lv msg.

1984 Honda Accord 3-door hatchback Very Reliable, Looks Good Asking $795.00 or best offer Call Jon 546-6115

'87 Grand Am 4dr 52K miles, cruise, A/C, no rust $2995 Day 545-2040, Night 549-8625

AUTO FOR SALE

Blue Volsvegen Golf Excellent condition, born in 1990, $3000 negotiable. Call Guy 253-7243

EMPLOYMENT

Drivers Wanted Apply in person at Pinocchio's, 30 Boltwood Walk.

Clerk's and Shippar-Receivers Needed from late December to late January Flexible schedules $5.25/hour Babson College Bookstore, Wellesley, MA 617-239-4376 Dave

CHRISTMAS/JANUARY BREAK

EARN $10 UP TO $15/START. International firm has 80 local openings. 2-6 week program. All majors considered. Gain business and communication skills. Scholarships & Summer positions possible. Apply now. Begin after finals. On-campus accepting applications on Monday & Tuesday, December 9&10 from 9-1 on the Concourse in the Campus Center or call 413-736-3230

WINTERSESSION JOBS TELEFUND IS HIRING $5.50/hour + fantastic bonuses PM hours. All shifts available. Earn computer skills Apply today Memorial Hall basement 545-3509

Relief Counselors needed for Residential Mental Health program serving adults in Amherst Pay is $7.00/hr. This is a great job for students needing to gain much needed work experience in the human services field! Please call David Mastrojanni at 584-7329 or send resume and cover letter to Amherst Apts. 129 King St. Northampton, MA 01060 Fax is 582-4252

Afterschool Care in our home for our two sons ages 9 & 5. M,T,Th 3:15-5:15, W 1-5. In Amherst Car needed 253-5197 Starting 1/27

EMPLOYMENT

JOBS OVER BREAK- Work with Sierra Club to protect wilderness $275-$375/wk. Fun atmosphere Call Terri at 256-6434

TROPICAL RESORTS HIRING - Students needed! Entry-level & career positions available Worldwide Call Resort Employment Services (206) 971-3600 ext R50013

INTERNATIONAL EMPLOYMENT - Earn up to $25-$45/hour teaching basic conversational English in Japan, Taiwan, S. Korea No teaching background or Asian languages required. For info call (206) 971-3570 ext. J50016

FOR RENT

Cape Cod group & summer rentals. Waterfront houses. Falmouth area (508)477-6000

FOR SALE

Leather Jacket- black, classic motorcycle, insulated, very high quality, men's medium, $140. 585-8146

Unique X-mas Gift! Name an actual star for someone! $33 The Star Directory (800)663-6927 ext C2 Visa/MC Framing and Overnight delivery available

12 inch MTX Speakers Mounted in sub box $100 or B/O 549-9162

Skis For Sale Rossignol 4s skis 205cm Nordica 967 boots size 12 GEZE 70 bindings. Sixed on 3 seasons Great shape. All for $250 or B/O Call Brian @ 665-9005

Kawood Car Seats Player $50. Preer Premier 100W AMP $50 Call Joe 253-6381

Epiphone Les Paul w/hardcase $375 or B/O Boss Drum Machine $300 or B/O Call Joe 253-6381

FOR SALE

486 Computer $300. 386- $200/ 286- $100. Printer $10 Steve (413)566-3324 #2

LOST

Lost Black Wallet and Key Contains NYS License, UMass ID and BayBank card. Lost on 12/7 around Brandywine #12 in parking lot. If found please, please call Megan at 6-0653

MISCELLANEOUS

New Metabolism Breakthrough Lose 5-100 lbs Guaranteed $35 (800)776-9503 Doctor Approved

PERSONALS

Congratulations Sarah Cook for a wonderful performance! Your line was the best! Love Always, 2nd floor Gorman Girls: Kristy, Sasha, Felicia and Wendy

TO THE 4th FLOOR MACKIMMIE: Happy Holidays! Good luck on finals and hope y'all have a great winter break! Your 410 friends.

Megan and Angela

ROOM FOR RENT

One bedroom available in 2 bedroom apt. Jan 1st Free heat and water. Call 549 4089

1 bedroom in a three $245/month including utilities Available now Adam 256-4793

1 Bedroom available as of 1/97, 3 bedroom apartment in Puffton $275 per month including heat/hot water On bus route (male or female) Call Amy @ 548-7082

Apt. in Boulders. 2-bedroom My roommate and I are moving and we'd like to find one or two people who will sublet our room for Spring Semester only Call for more details 256-5496 Ask for Joan

ROOM FOR RENT

Room in 3 bedroom apt in Sunderland- cool housemates, good-sized room. $216.00/month Ask for Jennifer 665-0965 Available 1/1-8/31

Spring Samester Non-smoking female(s) to rent large room near campus & town Call 549-3992

Three females soaking one non-smoking female to share Mill Valley apartment Jan. 1- May 31. Rent negotiable Call Jess at 253-1797

ROOM WANTED

Two responsible 26 year old undergraduate male students desperate for somewhere to stay over Winter Intersession. Call Ed at 546-4818

ROOMATE WANTED

Easy-going, friendly Coed Apt looking for a similar person to fill a single room Free heat and water Jan 1st Call Jim 549-1081

2 rooms in three bedroom apt $267 per month Call 549-8917. On bus route Available Jan 1

Housemate Needed for a large bedroom in a two bedroom apartment on bus route. Call 253-4973

House in Northampton On bus route $200/per month Live with 4 others Call Colin 585-1029

Roommate Wanted Northampton $312 + util/own bath N/S 584-5143

Roommate Wanted 2 BDR Apt. in Sunderland Spring '97 Jan. rent free. Call Becca at 665-8389

Male & Female Couple Living on campus looking to switch dorms with M/F so both couples can live together If interested call 546-6137 Ask for Ben

ROOMATE WANTED

Roommate to share two bedroom apartment on Hobart Lane. Available January 15 $375 per month. Utilities not included. Call 549-5638 Ben or Jason

One bedroom available in two bedroom apt. Jan 1st. Free heat and water. Call 549-4089

Looking for a roommate to live in townhouses with 3 cool chicks! Starting January Call Jamie 549-5767

Winter Break Killington with the UMass Ski Club. Free nights lodging, 5 days skiing. During Collegiate Ski Fest $260 Call 545-3437

New Year's in Quebec City 3-5 nights in Quebec Hilton. Optional Skiing at Mont Ste Anne. Starts at $89. Call 545-3437 or 1-800-232-2415

Scuba Spring Break Dive Key Largo, Fl. Earn 2 credits! March 16-22 Mandatory Meeting 2/28 7pm Herter 227 Call Project Deep @ 800 282-0977

Spring Break '97 Hottest destinations and coolest vacations! Lowest prices guaranteed! Organize small group, travel free! Call for free info (800)426-7710

TRAVELTIME has great deals for group and individual travel plans Call Corinne 587-3011, (413)781-6150

SERVICES

Don't abandon your dorm bunny!! Rabbit Rescue can help!! Will find your bunny a new home. Ellen 367-0105

Computer Consultant Available WEB Authoring, Software & Hardware Installs, Repairs. Call 6-0853

Money for College. Millions of dollars unclaimed every year. Results guaranteed. Service is free. Thousands of sources of Financial Aid available. Hurry Call (413) 538-9041 for more info.

Computer Problems? Need an upgrade? In-house service, call Scream Savers 549-0083

Pregnent? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

TO SUBLET

Rent our house over Winter Break In Hadley on the bus route. $150.00 per person Call 582-0711

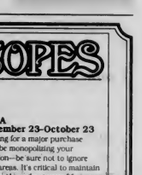
TRAVEL

Caribbean/Mexico $189 RT Europe $169 OW If you can beat these prices, start your own damn airline. Air-Tech 587-8001 Northampton

Europa $155. Caribb./Mexico $189 R/T - Worldwide Destinations Airhitch Tm 800-326-2009 airhitch@netcom.com or www.is-com.fr/airhitch

Winter Break Killington with the UMass Ski Club. Free nights lodging, 5 days skiing. During Collegiate Ski Fest $260 Call 545-3437

New Year's in Quebec City 3-5 nights in Quebec Hilton. Optional Skiing at Mont Ste Anne. Starts at $89. Call 545-3437 or 1-800-232-2415



Scuba Spring Break Dive Key Largo, Fl. Earn 2 credits! March 16-22 Mandatory Meeting 2/28 7pm Herter 227 Call Project Deep @ 800 282-0977

Spring Break '97 Hottest destinations and coolest vacations! Lowest prices guaranteed! Organize small group, travel free! Call for free info (800)426-7710

TRAVELTIME has great deals for group and individual travel plans Call Corinne 587-3011, (413)781-6150

WANTED

Need a ride to Orlando, Florida on January 4? Call Brandy 665-0353

Personals Policy

1. All personals MUST be proofread by Collegian classified employees before payment and acceptance of the classified.
2. Last names MAY NOT be used in personals. ONLY first names and initials are allowed. The only exceptions are for birthday or congratulations personals, in which case the full name may be used.
3. Phone numbers are not allowed in personals. NO EXCEPTIONS.
4. Addresses are not allowed in personals. this means dorm room numbers as well.
5. Personals of a threatening or derogatory nature are not acceptable. Personals of a vindictive or libelous nature are not acceptable. Personals may not be used for the purpose of harassment.
6. Profanity may not be used in personals.
7. The personals section is for personals only. The personals section may NOT be used to sell items, seek roommates, advertise meetings, etc.
8. All personals must have the name, signature, and UMass I.D. number of the student placing the as billed in on the insertion order. Non-students must provide a valid driver's license and the license number must be recorded on the insertion order. Use of false identification or misrepresentation is subject to penalties under the law.
9. The Collegian reserves the right to refuse or to edit any personal that does not meet the Collegian's standards in accordance with the statutes of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Standard Headings

Activities
Announcements
Apartment For Rent
Auto For Sale
Employment
Entertainment
For Sale
Found (2 days Free)
Happy Birthday
Houses For Rent
Instruction
Lost
Musicians
Miscellaneous
Motorcycles
Personals
Room For Rent
Room Wanted
Roommate Wanted
Services
Summer Sublet
To Sublet
Travel
Transportation
Wanted to Rent
Wanted

Rates

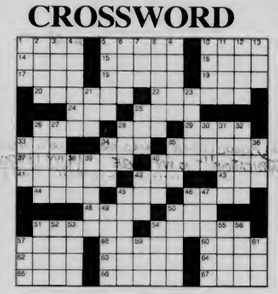
$2.00 minimum/day

Students

20¢ per word/day

All others

40¢ per word/day



NO REFUNDS

Please write clearly and legibly. We are not responsible for errors resulting from illegible handwriting or type.

Answers to Yesterday's Puzzle

M	I	A	M	I		S	A	D	E		T	A	F	T
I	D	I	O	T		A	B	A	T		A	L	L	I
T	D	R	M	E		M	I	N	C	E	M	E	A	T
E	L	S		M	I	M	E		S	E	E	T	O
			W	I	R	Y		C	A	S	S
F	R	E	E	Z	E		R	E	S	E	T	T	L	E
L	A	D	L	E		S	U	L	K	S		R	A	G
D	I	N	K		W	I	L	L	S		P	O	N	G
U	S	A		M	I	N	E	O		T	R	U	C	E
R	E	S	E	A	L	E	D		S	U	I	T	E	D
			V	I	E	W		N	O	R	M
S	P	O	O	N			K	I	N	K		M	O	E
H	A	N	K	E	R	I	N	G		E	Y	I	N	G
E	T	T	E		P	O	O	H		Y	U	C	C	A
S	H	O	D		M	U	T	T		S	P	E	E	D

CROSSWORD

ACROSS

1. Dancer Kaye
5. Fathom without sonar
10. ___ calls
14. Prejudice
15. Corrosive substance
16. Confederate Robt.
17. Came down to earth
18. Garbo or Borg
19. Actress ___ May Wong
20. Muzzles
22. Actress Winger et al
24. TLC providers
25. The Four Seasons actor
26. The Sun ___ Rises
28. Three, in Roma
29. Be indiscreet
33. Slugger's stat
34. Ball or tree
35. Quit
37. Most honorable
40. Earp's wear
41. Ohta's "Spider Woman" role
42. Away from home
43. " ___ how you play the game"
44. Cab
45. Use a cotton ball
46. Belonging to us
48. Participate in a gabfest
50. Big Bird's network
51. Spring or fall
54. Thorny bushes
57. Mortal enemies
58. Tomato mixture
60. Doctors' charges
62. He created Perry and Della
63. Fowles' The ___ Tower
64. Tel
65. Flat hill
66. Obligations
67. "___ we forget"

DOWN

1. Lakers' league abbr
2. Lubricates
3. Weather prediction
4. Actress Mary et al
5. Telemarketers, e.g.
6. Enactments
7. Shoshonean
8. Butt in
9. AKC division
10. "___ Prudence" (Beatles)
11. Forearm bone
12. Perfect ones
13. Positive vote
21. Spanish pronoun
23. Tower of
25. Prepare for battle
26. Around
27. DeLillo's JFK story
28. "King ___" (Steve Martin song)
30. The (Spanish)
31. In reason
32. Harvard ___
33. Genetic initials
34. Govt. pencil-pushing orgs.
35. Foldaway furniture
36. MDs
38. ___ and bagels
39. Sevared and Clapton
40. Center of commerce
42. Feed-bag lobbi
45. Budapest's river
46. Oriental sash
47. Pragmatic
49. Expected
50. Victims
51. Minted
52. Lampreys
53. At a loss
54. Like Dizzy Gillespie's horn
55. Coty or Clair
56. Hardens
57. Opposite of masc.
59. He and Sally played the Stivics
61. Drunkard

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21-April 20
Setting lofty goals ensures that you'll make great achievements. Plan a course of higher education to further a career goal. Focusing your eyes on the prize makes things happen more quickly.

TAURUS
April 21-May 21
A vacation could provide an opportunity to develop a new talent. Don't be afraid to ask for input from others if you're not sure what something means. Ambition in the workplace leads to rewards.

GEMINI
May 22-June 21
A good friend helps you achieve a goal that seemed impossible before. Thank them in a special way. If you're planning to try something new, make sure you have all the paperwork in order before consulting a professional.

CANCER
June 22-July 22
Rehearsing your plans to advance helps you make a strong presentation. You'll reap the rewards later—meanwhile, just bask in the approval. Spending quiet time ensures your batteries will be recharged.

LEO
July 23-August 23
A promising romance could continue to go your way, with the proper care and attention. Don't hesitate, or you could break your momentum. An active weekend provides ample opportunity to socialize.

VIRGO
August 24-September 22
Early in the week, try to get preparations out of the way for a holiday event. A testy sweetheart may be feeling neglected. Patience and TLC will ease the situation.

LIBRA
September 23-October 23
Planning for a major purchase could be monopolizing your attention—be sure not to ignore other areas. It's critical to maintain balance throughout your life, especially now.

SCORPIO
October 24-November 22
Changes that have been happening at breakneck speed probably seem normal to you. Spend time with someone dear to you, to revitalize and refresh yourself. A passionate interlude is its own reward.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23-December 21
Asking for guidance from a wise person could be the step that alters your outlook in the long run, so don't be afraid to seek help. Open your mind to new possibilities, and you could experience an epiphany.

CAPRICORN
December 22-January 20
Pay close attention to your hunches—they could be valuable sources of information on what to do next. You'll learn more from watching a person do something than you will from their explanations, so pay attention.

AQUARIUS
January 21-February 18
A frazzled feeling may mean that you're experiencing holiday overload. Try to find a quiet corner—then, don't permit anyone or anything to disturb you for a reasonable amount of time.

PISCES
February 19-March 20
Taking care to watch your vitamins and get enough sleep will help you stay in the holiday spirit and keep you healthy. Visiting with close friends proves to be more fun & less expensive than elaborate plans.

UMass Basketball on UVC-TV19

DEC. 10	FRESNO STATE	7PM
DEC. 14	WAKE FOREST	8:30PM
	(NO PRE- AND POST- GAME SHOWS)

Courtesy of ESPN

HSCN 2 Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN	Bulletin Board
3	CRS/3	Hartford
4	CBS/4	Boston
5	ABC/5	Boston
6	PBS/57	Springfield
7	HSCN	Movie Channel
8	UPN/20	Hartford
9	Weather Channel
10	NBC/30	New Britain
11	Fox/61	Hartford
12	PBS/24	Hartford
13	WOCH & HSCN
14	UMATV
17	HSCN	Programming
18	TV-19
20	ABC/40	Springfield
22	NBC/22	Springfield
23	CNN
24	CNN/Headline News
25	BET
26	BET on Jazz
27	Laser Video
28	The Learning Channel
30	Comedy Central
31	Popcorn Channel
32	Satellite Programming

http://www-unix.oit.umass.edu/~uvctv18

UVC-TV

TUESDAY EVENING © TVData DECEMBER 10, 1996

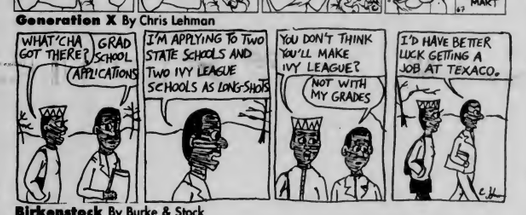
		6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	C. Sandiago	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Klondike & Snow		Nature (In Stereo)			In the Wild (In Stereo)
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	AmJournal	Martha Stewart-Holidays		"Christmas in My Hometown" (1996, Drama) Melissa Gilbert.			News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News		CBS News	Ent. Tonight	Martha Stewart-Holidays		"Christmas in My Hometown" (1996, Drama) Melissa Gilbert.			News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC Wld News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Roseanne		Life's Work	Home Improve.	Spin City (R)	NYPD Blue (In Stereo) (PA)	News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Fresh Prince	Bizzi	Star Trek: The Next Generation		★★★ "A Christmas Story" (1983, Comedy) Peter Billingsley			News			Extra	Hollywood
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Mad About You	Something So	Frasier	Caroline		Dateline (In Stereo)	News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	Simpsons	Roseanne	Home Improve	Seinfeld	"Slaves to the Light" (1996, Drama) Eric Roberts. (In Stereo)						Murphy Brown	Deep Space 9
WWLP	9	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Mad About You	Something So	Frasier	Caroline		Dateline (In Stereo)	News	Tonight Show
WGBY	11	Kratts Creature	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Spontaneous Healing (In Stereo)					Mannheim Steamroller Christmas Concert		Charlie Rose
WGGB	40	News	ABC Wld News	Seinfeld	Ent. Tonight	Roseanne		Life's Work	Home Improve.	Spin City (R)	NYPD Blue (In Stereo) (PA)	News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Beverly Hills, 90210		Seinfeld		Mad About You	Moesha (R)	Homeboy-Spce	Burning Zone	"Arms of Fire"	News	Martin	Mad About You
WTBS	49	Family Matters	Family Matters	Home Videos	Home Videos	★★★ "Diamonds Are Forever" (1971, Adventure) Sean Connery, Jill St. John.						★★★ "The Living Daylights" (1987) Timothy Dalton
A&E	43	Quincy "The Shadow of Death"		Equalizer "The Cope"		Biography "Edward VIII: The Traitor King" (R)					Sherlock: Holmes Mysteries	Law & Order "Night and Fog"
CNN	42	WorldView		Moneyline	Crossfire	Prime News	Inside Politics	Larry King Live			World Today	Sports Tonight	Moneyline (R)
COM	45	A-List (R)	Dream On	Daily Show (R)	TV Nation	Dana Carvey: Critic's Choice		Tompkins Sq.	Lounge Liz.	Dream On	A-List (R)	Daily Show	TV Nation
CSPAN	41	(4:00) Public Policy Conference		Public Policy Conference		Prime Time Public Affairs						Prime Time Public Affairs (R)
DISC	48	Go for It!		Beyond 2000	Next Step (R)	Wild Discovery "Kodiak" (R)		Mystery Unlv.	World-Wond	Fangs!		Next Step (R)	Beyond 2000
ESPN	51	Up Close	Sportscenter		College Basketball: Fresno State at Massachusetts. (Live)				College Basketball: Indiana at DePaul. (Live)				Sportscenter
LIFE	52	Supermarket	Debt	Hope & Gloria	Designing	Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Yes, Virginia, There Is a Santa Claus" (1991) Richard Thomas.				Martha Stewart	Unsolved Myst.
MTV	53	Ren & Stimpy	Road Rules (R)	Idiot Savants	Singled Out	Beavis-Butthd	Prime Time (In Stereo)			Buzzkill	TBA	Idiot Savants	Singled Out
NICK	44	Clarissa Expl.	Tiny Toon Adv.	Doug (R)	Rugrats (R)	Secret of Alex	Happy Days	I Love Lucy	Munsters	M.T. Moore	Rhoda	Taxi	Odd Couple
SCIFI	46	Mann & Machine "Daring Game"		Twilight Zone		V "The Champion" (In Stereo)		★½ "Child's Play 3" (1991, Horror) Justin Whalin, Jeremy Reeves.				Twilight Zone
TLC	47	Furniture to Go (Home Pro (R)		Hometime (R)	Hometime (R)	Myth America	Amazing Amer.	Pharaohs and Kings: Quest		Survival in the Sky (R)		Myth America	Amazing Amer.
TNT	50	In the Heat of the Night		In the Heat of the Night		NBA Basketball: Houston Rockets at Minnesota Timberwolves. (Live)					Inside the NBA	★★★ "Two Mules for Sister Sara"
USA	54	Renegade "Love Hurts"		Highsinder: The Series		Murder, She Wrote (In Stereo)		Boxing: Jose Victor Burgos vs. Michael Carbajal. (Live)				Silk Stalkings "Cadillac Jack"
VH1	55	Video Break		VH1 to One (R)	Playing Favorites	Artist of Year	Playing Favorites (R)			VH1 to One	Am. Bandstand	Legends (R)
HBO	61	★★★ "Forever Young" (1992, Fantasy) Mel Gibson. PG		★★★½ "Heat" (1995, Drama) Al Pacino, Robert De Niro. (In Stereo)								"Tin Cham" (1994) R
MAX	63	(4:30)		★★½ "Dr. Jekyll and Ms. Hyde" (1995) PG-13		★★ "Portraits of a Killer" (1996) Jennifer Grey. NR		★★ "Pamplona" (1995, Drama) Kim Delaney. R				Trinkets and Beads (In Stereo)
SHOW	60	★★★ "Educating Rita" (1983, Comedy) Michael Caine. PG				★★½ "Sketch Artist II: Hands That See" (1995)			Roger Corman Presents "The Unspeakable" (R)			Women	Compromising

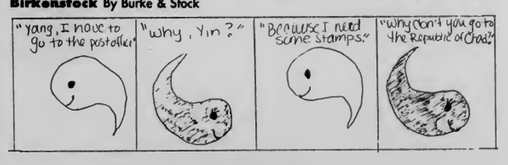
Always Wanted One of These By A. Morse & S. Dumas

Drabble By Kevin Fagan

Frumpy the Clown Judd Winick



Leold By Roger & Salem Salloom



University² By Frank Cho

Generation X By Chris Lehman

Birkenstock By Burke & Stock

Alien Crackbunnies By Darb

Quote of the Day

"Wherever you go, there you are."

–Buckaroo Banzai

Recycle your Collegian

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Dilbert By Scott Adams

8 Years in Braces By Eric Petersen

Close to Home By John McPherson

"To help you better understand this good cholesterol/bad cholesterol thing, Nurse Bowman and Nurse Strickling are going to do a little skit for you."

Today's Staff

Mike Burke
Night Editor

Mark McGrath
Copy Editor

Kenneth W.P. Scott
Photo Technician

Brian Inocencio
Production Supervisor

Roberto Snow
Thang Vo
Production

Dining Commons Menu

Menu unavailable. Please refer to this guide to help you decide where to eat.

1. First, go get some dice (6 sided, preferably).
2. Find one you like, and roll it.

If you roll:

- Go to Franklin D.C. for dinner.
- Go to Berkshire D.C. for dinner.
- Go to Hampshire D.C. for dinner.
- Go to Worcester D.C. for dinner.
- Get Pizza for dinner!
- Roll again.

Sports

Minutewomen defeat Holy Cross 58-57

By Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.
Collegian Staff

WORCESTER — The mark of a good team is its ability to find a way to win.

It took all 40 minutes last night at the Hart Center in Worcester, but the Massachusetts women's basketball team (3-3) edged the Holy Cross Crusaders 58-57 on the strength of a Sabriya Mitchell baseline 3-pointer with four ticks on the clock.

"I got the ball and my first thought was I should get it to Crystal [Carroll]," Mitchell said. "Then I thought I should penetrate, but then there'd be four of us standing there [in the paint]. So I was like, I just gotta shoot it, and I gotta make it."

The senior point guard was 0-4 beyond the arc in the 39:56 prior to her game-winner. She finished the game with 10 points and six assists, committing just two turnovers.

Her second turnover could have proven costly.

With 42 seconds left in the contest, Mitchell grabbed a loose ball and saw Jaywana Bradley breaking free up-court. Her long pass sailed into the seats, giving the ball back to the Crusaders, who at the time held a 57-55 lead.

Alison MacFarland fouled Holy Cross forward Amy O'Brien on the ensuing inbounds pass. O'Brien went to the line for a one-and-one situation that could have put the game out of reach, but she missed her first attempt, setting the stage for Mitchell's heroics.

"I told [the team] before we started that if we don't match their intensity we'll be in for a long night," UMass coach Joanie O'Brien said. "I think we matched their intensity. I think we got ourselves a little tired at certain points in the game, but we fought it off and we got Sabriya to step up and hit a big shot."

Mitchell's big shot negated the gutsy performance by Holy Cross (5-2), which was coming off a big win over intrastate rival Boston College.

The Crusaders took a 31-29 lead into the locker room at halftime thanks to a Veronica Jutras fall-away baseline jumper with the clock winding down in the first half.

Holy Cross was led by Jutras, the first Crusader reserve off coach Bill Gibbons' bench. The freshman guard netted 15 points on 5-7 shooting (3-4 on 3-pointers) and dished out three assists in an impressive 31 minute effort off the pine.

Senior co-captain Kathy Courtney tallied 15 points on the night for Holy Cross, scoring 11 points at the charity stripe. She also pulled down a team-high 13 boards and blocked six UMass shots in the losing Crusader cause.

The Minutewomen's main threat in the post, Carroll, led the UMass attack with a game-high 21 points and 14 rebounds. Carroll's 14 boards ties her career high.

Carroll was very active on the defensive end, blocking five Holy Cross shots and holding Courtney — who had been averaging 18.5 points per game — to 2-10 shooting from the field.

Freshman point guard Kelly Van Huisen again played a crucial role in the UMass success. The Haverhill native scored seven points and assisted on seven buckets in 38 minutes on the Hart Center hardwood. She also came up with four thefts on the evening.

Van Huisen was just 3-10 from the field, but came up with a huge bucket to tie the game at 51 late in the second half.

With 4:30 remaining, after two free throws by Courtney, Van Huisen drove baseline, drew contact from O'Brien and got an off-balance layup to drop. She finished the three- point play, shifting momentum back to the Minutewomen.

Sophomore forward Yolanda Rayside pitched in four points and hauled down eight rebounds in 23 minutes off the bench.

THANG VO \ COLLEGIAN

The Massachusetts women's basketball team squeaked one out on the road last night, edging out Holy Cross 58-57.

Fresno St. comes to town

By Chris Stamm
Collegian Staff

On Saturday night the William D. Mullins Center was dark. Tonight it will be shady.

At 7:30 p.m. the towel-chomping madness of Jerry Tarkanian (a.k.a. "The Shark") and his No. 14 Fresno State Bulldogs (5-1) will mix it up with the 2-3 Massachusetts Minutemen.

Tarkanian, who for many represents all that is corrupt in college athletics, formerly coached at the University of Nevada, Los Vegas from 1972 until he was fired for committing a slew of NCAA violations in 1992.

Tarkanian has brought his winning ways with him to Fresno since taking the reigns last April. Last year, he led the 'Dogs to a 22-11 mark building a loyal fan following along the way. The Tark attack has swept Fresno as they have sold out the 10,182 seat Selland Arena for the entire season.

What's there to cheer about?

Depth. With the exception of James Gray, the Bulldogs return every starting player from last year's squad.

"Jerry Tarkanian's teams always play hard," Massachusetts head coach James "Bruiser" Flint said. "They pressure you defensively and they always have guys that can break you down and get to the basket."

The 'Dog's attack is headed by 5-foot-10 guard Dominick Young. Last season, Young led the nation in three-pointers per game (4.1), in addition to leading the Western Athletic Conference in assists (6.6) and steals (2.6) to this year's 17.9 points per game.

However, Young is not the only scoring threat the Bulldogs boast as four other players have led the team in scoring. Kendric Brooks (twice), sophomore Terrance Roberson, junior Daymond Forney and sophomore Chris Herren.

Yes, that same home-grown Chris Herren who was the subject of an intense recruiting battle two years ago coming out of Durfee High in Fall River, where he earned Eastern Mass. Div. 1 Player of the Year honors. After eventually signing with Boston College, Herren suffered a season- ending wrist injury and only played in one game the entire season. Last season Herren transferred to Fresno and sat out the year.

"He's a good player, we recruited him hard," Flint said. "They say he's got himself together. He's been playing really hard, scoring some points. He knows this is it for him, he doesn't have any other chances after this. He's on a mission."

While the Bulldogs are coming off a 87-75 road loss to Oregon, the Minutemen look to build on last Saturday- Sunday's 90-72 home win over Wyoming. As of Sunday, power forward Tyrone Weeks was considered day to day with an ankle injury, yet hoped to practice before tonight's game.

For more on Tarkanian, see related story on page 9.

UMass thumps PC; hockey team rolling

By Leigh Torbin
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts hockey team, winner of six of its last seven, has the best record of any major UMass winter team on the heels of its second consecutive come-from-behind win against defending Hockey East Champion Providence.

Showing signs of self-confidence, the special teams are starting to come around as UMass has killed 31 of its last 33 shorthanded situations. In years past, UMass has often been able to play even with tough league competition when skating full strength, but had fallen apart on special teams, roles which require more discipline and experience.

The revitalized hockey team gave its home fans an in- person taste of its new-found dominance late Sunday afternoon amidst the Sport Management department's Hockey Day in the Valley promotion.

Down a goal with six minutes to play, the Minutemen pumped in a trio of goals, a pair by Steve MacKinnon and an empty netter by Tiger Holland for a 3-1 win, evening the team's record at 7-7 on the year.

"We've got a couple of wins now and we're starting to build on them," MacKinnon said. "Everyone's playing with a lot of confidence and it's starting to build from the wins that we're getting."

For 49 minutes the game remained scoreless, although not not without having some great scoring bids stymied by Brian Regan and PC netminder Dan Dennis. Providence's strong defense served as its backbone in its monumentous march to the Hockey East title last march at the FleetCenter.

The Friars finally broke through for the opening goal of the game, 9:07 into the third when defenseman John Touhy snuck in front of the UMass net and roofed a 15-foot wrist shot over Regan's blocker and into the top shelf.

Teams on a streak find that the bounces just go their way and things just fall into their lap. Such was the case with each strike as UMass assumed the lead late in regulation.

The stingy Providence defense withstood the UMass attack, but MacKinnon finally broke through, inadvertently tying the game at the 14:00 mark. MacKinnon, at the edge of the face off circle to Dennis' right, tried to slip a pass across the crease to a cutting Warren Norris, headed for the far post. MacKinnon's pass deflected off Dennis' skate and in the net to tie the game at 1-1.

Further proof that someone above is watching over the Minutemen came at the 16:44 mark when UMass took the lead for good.

"A lot of goals [like these] just come from hard work," MacKinnon said. "Warren, Robbie and myself have been working hard down low and even the defensemen have gotten into the play down low. When you're working hard you get those bounces. Last year we weren't working as hard and we weren't getting those bounces. These close games now were working hard and the puck's popping out for us and we're taking care of the chances we get."

Rob Bonneau dumped the puck into the Friar zone to Dennis' left. The All-Hockey East goalie came out of his cage to play it, but the puck caromed awkwardly off the boards, and ricocheted directly to the slot and a wide open MacKinnon, who fired the game-winner into an open net.

PC pulled Dennis in favor of an extra skater, but Holland put the final nail in PC's coffin with a 150-foot empty net goal, fired from well back in his own defensive zone. The goal, Holland's second of the year, touched off a raucous celebration from what is suddenly one of the hottest teams in America.

Minuteman Notes: The big guy upstairs has noticed the improvement in the UMass program as it continues to literally build from the ground up. Coach Joe Mallen received a three-year contract extension from Athletic Director

UM water polo loses consolation; Falls to UC–Davis 11–8 in Final 4

By Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.
Collegian Staff

There was no consolation for the Massachusetts men's water polo team at the NCAA championships this weekend.

In the consolation, third–place match of the NCAA water polo final four, the No. 12 Minutemen fell behind UC–Davis, 3-0, in the first period and never recovered, falling to the 8th–ranked team in the country, 11-8.

UMass finishes fourth for the second consecutive season, after having won its fourth straight Eastern Championship and earning its fourth straight NCAA playoff berth.

"UMass will make a strong commitment to be back at NCAAs next season," said Massachusetts coach Russ Yarworth whose Minutemen compiled a 22-9 record on the season. "Davis had a great season and played fantastic. It is really a great experience for both teams to be here."

The three–goal hole that the Minutemen dug for themselves proved to be an insurmountable deficit, despite the Herculean efforts of sophomore Brian Stahl. The club's top scorer netted five points on three goals and a two–pointer in the match as UMass played well in the final three quarters.

"In the first quarter, they jumped out to an early lead and put us in a tough position for the rest of the game," Yarworth said. "I don't think we were really quite ready."

Senior goalie Paul Engin played well in front of the Minutemen cage, stopping 12 Davis attempts, including just one goal in the third period.

Engin's co–captain and fellow senior, Ron Gonen, also had a solid game for the Minutemen, assisting on two man–up goals for UMass, and playing his usual tenacious defense in his final NCAA appearance.

In their four varsity seasons of UMass water polo, Engin and Gonen have won four Eastern Championships, and have been to four straight NCAA tournaments, including the two final fours, a rash of success that few collegiate athletes get the opportunity to scratch.

Engin's career didn't hit its pinnacle until this season when he finally emerged from the shadows of All–Eastern performer and 1995 honorable mention All–American Alex Mujica.

In his first year as a starter, Engin played 84.5 quarters in the UMass net, a mark that leaves him third on the all–time single–season list; he recorded a career–high 191 saves and a .523 save percentage while racking up an 8.24 goals against average.

Engin, whose brother Tasan was an All–American at UMass, finishes off his tenure in the pool third in career quarters played (in goal), third in saves and third in save percentage, a category in which he held the top spot after last season.

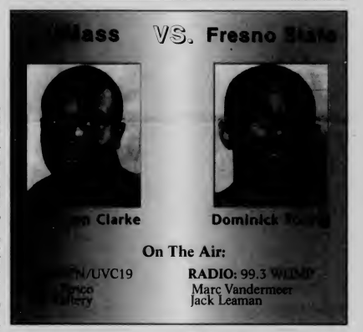
Gonen has also left a considerable mark on the water polo record book at UMass. He leaves the program as the Minutemen's all–time leader in quarters played (448) and assists (159). The Cheltenham; Pa. native is second in career steals with 169 and fifth in all–time points at UMass (231). Gonen is in the top 10 in three other career categories for the Minutemen.

Gonen has been a leader for the Minutemen for most of his duration in the McBride said.

Hueston finished fourth in the 50 free at 21.82 and third in the 100 free at a time of 47.98, right on the flippers of Mike Fortman of Drexel, who touched the wall at 47.75.

"Dawn Reich swam really well for this time of the season. His times are starting to come along," McBride continued, "Brian Grimes, another freshman, got a couple personal bests or right around there."

Grimes finished third in the 500 free at 4:44.57, third in the 1650 free at 16:33.13, just behind teammate B.J. Brannon, and sixth in the 400 IM at 4:16.73. In diving, Ed Hefferon finished eighth in the 1 meter event and sixth for the 3 M. Derrick Demaio finished tenth for the the 1 M, and ninth for the 3 M.



The relay teams took almost every event. The 'A' squad took first in the 200 R–free at 1:25.81, first in the 400 R– free at 3:09.45, first in the 400 R–medley 3:31.96, first in the 200 R–medley at 1:37.18 and second in the 800 R–free at 7:08.63. The 'B' squad took third in the 400 R–medley at 3:36.40, fifth in the 200 R–medley at 1:39.05 and just finished behind the 'A' squad for second in the 200 R–free at 1:26.87.

According to McBride, some of the swimmers did not finish as well as expected.

"Mainly the upperclassmen, probably some of the ones who weren't on where they wanted to be. It was the freshmen who did the job," McBride added.

"Everyone stepped up pretty much, took control of the meet and ran away with it," McBride said, "We really didn't fully rest for this meet. We only rested for about a week, week and a half. It wasn't a trials finals format, it was only a three sessions. It was kind of a warm-up to see where we were, to see how the team was progressing, what kind of times they can do, and

Turn to PHILLY, page 9

UMass wins Philly invite

By Jonathan M. Place
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's swimming and diving team finished first at the Philadelphia Invitational this past weekend. Over the two day period, UMass swam better than La Salle, Fordham, Drexel, Bloomsburg, Rider, West Chester, and Howard. The underclassmen took control for the Minutemen when the upperclassmen couldn't.

"I thought the meet went really well. They swam a lot faster than we thought they would at this part of the season," said Assistant coach Ben McBride, who took the helm this weekend for Coach Yarworth, who was out gallivanting in San Diego with his Final Four–finishing water polo team.

Sophomore Brian Wisniewski recorded his second meet record in as many days to lead UMass to victory. He finished first in the 200 IM at a time of 1:55.61 on Friday, a personal best time which ranks fifth on the UMass all–time charts. On Saturday, he swam for first in the 100 back at 52.08, a season–best time.

Other top swimmers for UMass this weekend were freshman Henry Turner, sophomore Dave Koritkoski, junior Matt Turner, and sophomore B.J. Brannon.

Henry Turner finished second in the 50 free behind Howard's Daniel Ricketts at 21.40. He also captured first in the 100 free at 47.65. Koritkoski took second in the 100 back at 52.34, and also finished first in the 200 free at 1:44.48. Matt Turner finished third behind Kortikoski and Wisniewski in the 100 back at a time of 54.22. B.J. Brannon took second in the 500 free at 4:44.39, but took the first prize in the 1650 free at a time of 16:27.87.

Apart from the top finishers, McBride was pleased by some of the performances from other swimmers.

"Kerry Hueston swam well. He's been off for about a year and a half. His times were all around personal bests. We really didn't expect that,"

Dobrow to campus

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

Marty Dobrow, author of Going Bigtime: The Spectacular Rise of UMass Basketball, will be on the Campus Center Concourse today to sign copies of his book from 12–2 p.m.

A staff member at the Daily Hampshire Gazette, Dobrow has covered the Massachusetts men's basketball team for the past five seasons, and has been the recipient of various honors for his work. In 1995, the Associated Press named him the best columnist for papers with circulation under 50,000. In 1993 he was acknowledged in The Best of American Sports Writing, an annual compilation of the year's best sports articles.

Going Bigtime, which Dobrow has worked on for the past two years, focuses on UMass' ascent to national prominence during John Calipari's tenure as coach, while also examining the younger days of the program.

The book, published by Summerset Press, is on sale at the University Store for a list price of $23.95.

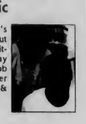
Marcy Schwartz, who coordinated the booksigning for the University Store, said that the book has sold well.

"It's been selling pretty well," she said. "It talks about the team from all the way back up till last year, and it's got a lot of pictures to catch people's eye.

"People really seem to like it when they pick it up and look at it. I think it would make a great gift."

Dobrow signed copies of his book at the William D. Mullins Center before the men's basketball game against Wyoming.

Turn to DOBROW, page 9



Attention hoop fans!

You can hear all the home women's basketball games, and selected road contests, on WMUA 91.1 FM, the flagship station for UMass women's basketball.

The Massachusetts
DAILY COLLEGIAN
Volume CVI Issue 67 New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967 Wednesday, December 11, 1996

Playing that oh so funky music

Turn to today's Collegian to find out what our music critics have to say about Bush, Mobb Deep and other groups (see Arts & Living, page 6).

The Shark's team swallows UMass

Freshman pivot man Ajmal Basit's intensity wasn't enough to keep the Minutemen from being collared by the Bulldogs (see Sports page 12).

WORLD

Saddam briefly switches on oil flow

KIRKUK, Iraq (AP) — Saddam Hussein was showered with flowers after making a surprise appearance at a pumping station yesterday to open the pipeline carrying the first Iraqi oil exports since the Persian Gulf War.

But 29,000 barrels later, Iraq stopped pumping oil to Turkey because it jumped the gun before the United Nations formally approved any contracts for delivery of oil, U.N. officials said.

Under a closely monitored U.N. deal, Iraq will be allowed to sell $2 billion worth of oil over an initial 180-day period.

The revenues will be used to compensate war victims, pay for U.N. weapons monitoring and provide badly needed commodities for an economy battered by trade sanctions imposed after Iraq invaded Kuwait in 1990.

The oil-for-food deal was heralded as a great victory in Iraq, even though Saddam for months had rejected the U.N. monitoring as an affront to the country's sovereignty.

Onlookers welcomed Saddam with flowers and cheers before he pushed the button to begin the oil.

NATION

Sailors charged in Nov. night gang rape

GROTON, Conn. (AP) — Three sailors stationed at a submarine base are accused of plying a 16-year-old girl with liquor and sexually assaulting her on Thanksgiving night at a motel run by the Navy.

Lionel A. Benjamin, 19, and Raymond Johnson, 17, were arrested Monday on charges they raped the girl after a night of dancing and drinking. A third sailor, Luis C. Jones, 20, was charged with a lesser count of sexual assault and attempted sexual assault.

They were jailed on $100,000 bail each and could get up to 20 years in prison.

A fourth sailor, Greg Watkins, told police he was in the room but did not take part in the attack. He backed up most of the girl's story, according to court papers. Watkins has not been charged.

The girl, a 10th-grade student, told police she met the sailors at the restaurant where she works as a waitress. The sailors, whos hometowns were not released, are newly enlisted at the Naval Submarine School in Groton.

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 33 LOW: 20	HIGH: 35 LOW: 25	HIGH: 40 LOW: 25

INSIDE

Arts & Living.....page 6
Classifieds .....page 10
Comics.....page 11
Crossword .....page 10
Editorial .....page 4
FYI.....page 2
News .....page 3
Sports .....page 12

Chancellor apologizes for snowball fiascos

By Beth McCarthy
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts Chancellor David K. Scott issued a statement yesterday apologizing to President Tom Gerety of Amherst College for the considerable damage done by a group of alleged UMass students engaged in throwing snowballs.

"On behalf of the institution, I apologize to Amherst College President Tom Gerety, and to all the faculty, staff and students at Amherst College, and I want to state firmly that this kind of random violence has no place on campus," Scott said. "I have assured President Gerety that if we find that the perpetrators of the damage at Amherst College were UMass students, these students will be subject to full disciplinary action, as they will be for the behavior on this campus."

According to The Amherst Student, the Amherst College newspaper, their security has yet to establish the full amount of damage done to the campus, but several Amherst students estimate that a considerable amount of windows were smashed in addition to a vacated car being flipped.

Scott said in a press release that he, "deeply regrets the participation of our students," if it is found that UMass students were actually involved in damaging Amherst College's property.

"As Chancellor of the University of Massachusetts, I am shocked that any member of this community would engage in any type of activity that might caus- physical harm or result in the destruction of property or in stealing or the looting of stores," Scott said.

According to Scott, "The University's Code of Student Conduct extends to the four colleges in the Five College consortium, so a student's action at any of the four colleges will be treated as if it occurred at UMass, with all of the possible sanctions."

There are no reported serious injuries due to the snowball fight, but freshman Jenny Vosacek of Amherst College said that the snowball which smashed through her window and struck her in the head could "easily have had glass in it."

Scott said that as a result of previous snowball fights "people have sustained serious injuries, including permanent brain damage and serious eye injuries, because stones were embedded in the snowballs."

According to Officer Michael Johnson of the Amherst Police Department, the destructive activities of students occurred in the midst of a severe snow storm that had police staff overwhelmed with power failure situations and vehicular accidents.

Scott said that UMass faculty were also busy attempting to keep the University running smoothly during the snow storm and the behavior of UMass students hit during a particularly trying time.

"The incidents were particularly dismaying during a weekend of severe and destructive weather conditions in which staff at the University, the colleges, and the towns were overextended in trying to maintain the health and safety of people, of animals and equipment," Scott said. "It is incomprehensible that our own students through their thoughtless actions could add to the burdens."

Scott said, "We urge our students not to participate in these kinds of activity, to act at all times with consideration for others, and to make the winter season a fun and enjoyable time."

ELIZABETH BROWN \ COLLEGIAN

Emily is hit by the storm

Part of a tree and branches have fallen because of the storm over the weekend which hit the Emily Dickenson house sign.

IBM workers win in suit

NEW YORK (AP) — Computer maker Digital Equipment Co. was ordered to pay nearly $6 million to three women who suffered disabling arm and wrist injuries they blamed on their keyboards.

"This is the first one of these cases to succeed," said Steven Philips, who represented the plaintiffs. "We've settled cases before, and we've tried cases that have lost. Defendants always win in the early going. This is the moment where it turns around."

Patricia Geressy, a secretary at the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, won nearly $5.4 million; Jill Jackson, a legal secretary, was awarded $306,000 and Janet Rotolo, a hospital billing clerk, was awarded $278,000.

The women worked on keyboards that Digital knew could result in carpal tunnel syndrome and other repetitive stress injuries, Philips said.

The verdict, the first of its kind, was returned last week in federal court in Brooklyn.

Digital, based in Maynard, Mass., said it would appeal if the judge doesn't agree to set aside the jury awards, arguing that the verdict was "inconsistent with relevant scientific knowledge, the evidence, and with the law."

In a statement, Digital also said there was "no scientific evidence that keyboards cause" such disorders and that its products "are safe and conform to all applicable industry standards."

Despite a rising number of complaints from office workers, no computer maker has ever been ordered to pay damages for injuries blamed on keyboard design.

Philips said Digital had been cited by the Federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration for similar injuries among its own workers in 1989.

"Digital put in a terrific program for its own workers and managed to reduce the incidence of this at Digital eightfold, but they didn't bother to tell their customers," Philips said. "Not only did they know people were getting hurt, they knew how to fix the problem and they kept quiet so they could sell their equipment."

Digital lawyer Kenneth King would not comment on the verdict. Philips said Geressy, 50, the most severely injured, has undergone four operations since her injuries became severe in 1991, and now "her arms are withered."

Carpal tunnel syndrome is an inflammation of tissue covering nerves in the wrist. When that sheath, or "tunnel," becomes inflamed, it can press on nerves, causing problems ranging from soreness to inability to use the hands.

Jackson, 42, now of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., suffered from cubital tunnel syndrome, a similar affliction of the nerves in the elbow that is not treatable surgically, Philips said.

In October, a jury in Kansas City, Mo., said IBM was not responsible for a former Blue Cross and Blue Shield worker's disabling arm and shoulder pain.

Mandela signs new constitution; date, site have historical context

By Tom Cohen
Associated Press

SHARPEVILLE, South Africa — With the stroke of a pen, President Nelson Mandela signed South Africa's new constitution into law yesterday. Then he hoisted it over his head, to the cheers of 4,000 people at a ramshackle soccer stadium.

The 150-page charter was the cumulation of more than six years of negotiations between white and black leaders on the shape and ideology of post-apartheid South Africa.

"By our presence here today, we solemnly honor the pledge we made to ourselves and to the world, that South Africa shall redeem herself and thereby widen the frontiers of human freedom," Mandela said.

"As we close a chapter of exclusion and a chapter of heroic struggle, we reaffirm our determination to build a society of which each of us can be proud as South Africans, as Africans and as citizens of the world."

The signing date — yesterday — and the place — Sharpeville, a black township south of Johannesburg — were not accidental.

Yesterday was International Human Rights Day, and the constitution represented South Africa's commitment to equal rights after decades of the injustice of apartheid.

Sharpeville was where police gunned down 69 black protesters in a 1960 massacre that galvanized the anti-apartheid movement. The township also is part of Vereeniging city, where the treaty ending the Anglo-Boer war was signed in 1902 to set up the present-day borders of South Africa.

The constitution, written in two years by an elected Constitutional Assembly, is one of the most liberal in the world.

It is based on an interim document that took effect with the nation's first all-race election in 1994, won by Mandela's African National Congress, and includes a Bill of Rights.

"We are making a clear break with the past — a break with pain, a break with betrayal," said Cyril Ramaphosa, the African National Congress leader who headed the Constitutional Assembly. "We have a constitution we can be proud of. It is our task to make it work."

Under the charter, South Africans have the right to adequate housing, food, water, education and health care — all of which were mostly denied the black majority in the apartheid era.

It also bans discrimination on the basis of race, gender, sexual orientation, age, pregnancy or marital status.

During the hour-long ceremony under a blazing sun, Mandela urged unity and tolerance in South Africa, saying that making the constitution succeed would honor those who died in the struggle for democracy.

"Above all, let us work together in striving to banish homelessness, illiteracy, hunger and disease," he said. "Let us join hands for peace and prosperity."

Prior to the signing ceremony, Mandela visited the field where the 1960 massacre occurred and unveiled a memorial of stones covered with a South African flag. Survivors of the shootings recalled the horror when police opened fire.

"I was running, falling on corpses. My clothes were torn and I was covered with blood," Charles Mkwanazi, 68, told the South African Press Association.

At the soccer stadium, police and soldiers maintained tight security, and crowds passed slowly through metal detectors.

Barbed-wire fencing layered the walls and entrances.

A carnival atmosphere prevailed, with jazz great Hugh Masekela performing and later dancing with Mandela on stage. Six military helicopters drew cheers and ululations when they flew over, trailing South African flags.

While most major parties in South Africa disorders the document, the Zulu nationalist Inkatha Freedom Party boycotted the assembly that drafted it. But Inkatha, which fears losing power to the ANC in its stronghold of the traditional Zulu homeland, has said it will abide by the new constitution.

ELIZABETH BROWN \ COLLEGIAN

Just between friends...

Public art by a UMass landscape architecture student gets weathered in by the snow on Main Street in Amherst.

China warned not to tamper

By Marcus Eliason
Associated Press

HONG KONG — A free society needs all the news it can get, even if it's false, the U.S. consul in Hong Kong said yesterday in a veiled warning to China not to tamper with Hong Kong's media freedoms.

Richard Boucher, a former State Department spokesman, said he knew from experience of many rumors about coups or ailing leaders that had made financial markets fluctuate.

"In many cases, it wasn't until these stories appeared in the media that they could be shown to be false," he said in a speech to journalists.

He was apparently referring to a recent interview in which Chinese Foreign Minister Qian Qichen said that once Hong Kong returns to Chinese sovereignty on July 1, the media "can put forward criticism, but not rumors or lies."

Boucher did not address Qian's remark directly, but said that on media freedom, "the Chinese have recently sent many mixed signals."

An information-based economy like Hong Kong "needs information, whatever can be had, whether the information is true or, frankly, whether it's not true," he said.

For instance, he cited the stories that circulated on the Internet claiming that the July 17 crash of TWA flight 800 was caused by a U.S. missile.

"It wasn't until they appeared in the media that they were thoroughly discredited," he said.

In his speech, and answering questions, Boucher reminded China of its formal undertakings to safeguard Hong Kong's civil liberties.

He said China had made a "sweeping, a vital and an unrestricted pledge" to preserve freedom of assembly, speech, travel, movement, religion and academic research, as well as the freedom to strike. He mentioned its promise to uphold the rule of law, and Hong Kong's separate, British-structured legal code that "tops the list of reasons why American firms are here in Hong Kong."

U.S. companies employ almost 10 percent of Hong Kong's work force and have almost $14 billion invested here, he said.

Asked what Washington could do if China reneged on its promises, Boucher implied it was up to Hong Kong's people, rather than the outside world, to protect their interests.

For Your Information

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Wednesday, Dec. 11

Comedy — The comedy improv troupe, Mission Improvable, will perform at 8 p.m. in the Field classroom in Orchard Hill. "Meanwhile...", an all female a capella group will open.

Meeting — The last meeting of the Biracial/Multiracial Students Association will be held at 7 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union. Call 546–3548 for more information.

Memorial Service — There will be a memorial service for Denyel Faulk at 5 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

Poetry Reading — Spectrum magazine is sponsoring a poetry and prose reading in the Student Union Art Gallery at 7:30 p.m. If you would like to read, contact the Spectrum office at 545–2240 or 406 E Student Union.

Seminar — The Neuroscience and Behavior Program is sponsoring a seminar on "Mechanics of Sexual Differentiation in the Rat Brain" by Dr. Margaret McCarthy in room 319 of Morrill II at 4 p.m.

Thursday, Dec. 12

Lecture — Dr. Vera Whisman, a professor of Sociology and Women's Studies at Hobart and William Smith Colleges and author of Queer by Choice, will present a lecture titled "The Question of Choice" at 12:30 p.m. in Campus Center room 803. This is part of the GLBT Studies Lecture Series and is co–sponsored by the Stonewall Center, GLB GSO, Women's Studies, and the Chancellor's Task Force on GLBT Matters. For more information, please contact the UMass Stonewall Center at 545–4824.

Meeting — GEO Membership meeting from 5–7 p.m. in Campus Center room 804. This meeting is to decide how the union should respond to the Administrations Contract Proposals regarding Affirmative Action and Child Care.

Seminar — The Neuroscience and Behavior Program is sponsoring a seminar by Dr. Laura Lubbers on "Gonadal Steroid Control of the Male Reproductive Endocrine Axis" at 12:15 p.m. in 521B Tobin Hall.

Notices

Financial Aid — Financial Aid Services would like to remind students to file their '97–'98 Free Application For Federal Student Aid (FAFSA) or renewal FAFSA by Feb. 15. This is to ensure that your application will be received by the processing center by the UMass March 1 deadline. If you do not receive a renewal form, please fill out an original form available at the following locations: Fin. Aid Services– 255 Whitmore; United Asia Learning Resource Center– Knowlton; New Africa House; Division of Continuing Ed.– Goodell Bldg.; Bilingual Collegiate Program–Wilder Hall.

Information — The UMass Pagan Students will be holding an informational table in the Campus Center Concourse from Wed. Dec. 11 through Fri. Dec 13. For more information, contact Melissa at 546–0476.

Dance — The Northeast School of Dance Studio in Northampton will hold a dance spree every Friday from 8:30 p.m. to midnight every Friday. People can dance to variety of music in a smoke and alcohol–free environment. All ages welcome. Sliding scale. For more information, call 584–8167.

Dancing — UMass Ballroom Dance meetings are every Tuesday and Thursday at 5:15 p.m. in room 101 Totman. Come learn to dance, newcomers welcome. For more information, contact Milly DeJesus at 546–1083.

Employment — The Department of Consumer Studies is seeking a candidate to fill the position of Computer Coordinator The applicant must be a grad student. Please send resume with references to: Dr. Sheila Mammen, Dept. of Consumer Studies, 101 Skinner Hall, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Ma, 01003. For more information, contact Dr. Mammen at 545–2391.

Health — To help students and their families stay healthy and access University Health Services more easily, members of the Health Reach International team are available to help you find answers to your questions and concerns: Mondays from 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Health Education Dept., UHS room 248 (call 577–5181 for more info) and 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Community Room H–4 North Village; Tuesdays 6:30– 8:30 p.m. in the International Lounge, Prince House (call 545–2299 for more info); Wednesdays 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Community Room, 411 Linclon . All conversations are confidential.

Meeting — Alanon meetings are held Mondays in room 801 and Thursdays in room 802 of the Campus Center from noon–1 p.m.

Meeting — P.O.W.E.R., the Progressive Organization for Women's Rights holds their weekly meetings on Thursdays at 6 p.m. in the Student Union room 306. All men and women are welcome.

Meeting — The Pakistan Students Association has its weekly meetings every Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. Check for the room number at the information desk. For further details, contact Musharraf at 546–6295.

Meeting — Anthropology Undergraduate Caucus meets every Wednesday at 7:45 p.m. in Machmer 201. All anthropology undergraduate minors and majors welcome.

Meeting — Weekly "Schulchan Ivrit" held every Wednesday at 3 p.m. in the Bluewall Cafe. Make a right as you enter and look for the sign on the table. All Israelis and other Hebrew speakers welcome.

Meeting — The Animal Rights Coalition meetings are every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in room 306 of the Student Union. For more information, call the ARC office at 5–1925.

Menorah Lighting — All are welcome to attend the lighting of the 6–foot menorah in front of the Hillel House, 388 N. Pleasant St., Amherst, at the following times: Tues. Dec. 10 at 4:30 p.m.; Wed. Dec. 11 at 8:30 p.m.; Thurs. Dec. 12 at 6 p.m.

New Organization — WICC (West Indian/Caribbean Coalition) meets every Sunday evening at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center Coffee Shop. Anyone from the West Indies or the Caribbean is encouraged to attend, as well as anyone interested in the culture. For more information, contact Tony at 546–6487 or Nizam at 546–3967.

New Organization — Attention Biracial and Multiracial Students on campus. A new organization is forming and your help is needed. If interested, call Jordan at 546–3548.

Religious — The Muslim Student Association at the University of Massachusetts invites all Muslims in the Amherst area to weekly Friday prayer from noon to 1 p.m. in the United Asia Cultural Center Room (in the basement of Worcester Dining Common). For more information, call Utama at 256–8482 or Lalil at 253–0874.

Staff Needed — The UMass Index yearbook needs staff in all departments. Editorial positions are available in Photo, Layout, Copy, and Marketing departments. An assistant copy editor and assistant sports editor are also needed. Meetings are held on Wednesdays at 7 p.m., 304 Student Union, or call 545–0848 if interested.

Submissions Request — Spectrum Magazine is looking for submissions of poetry, prose, artwork, and photos. Submissions can be turned in to the Spectrum office, 406E Student Union. The final deadline for all submissions is Feb. 12, 1997. Anyone interested in knowing more about the Spectrum can call the office at 545–2240.

Campus Police Log

Accident — Property Damage
Dec. 5
There was a two–vehicle accident on Commonwealth Avenue. No injuries were reported.

Animal Complaint
Dec. 6
A lost dog was returned to its owner in James Residence Hall.

Annoying Behavior
Dec. 6
Individuals using laser guns from windows in Webster Residence Halls were issued warnings.
There was a false 911 call from Patterson Residence Hall.
Dec. 9
There was a dispute between roommates in Cashin Residence Hall.
Dec. 10
An individual in Kennedy Residence Hall reported receiving threatening calls.

Annoying Telephone Calls
Dec. 5
A series of annoying telephone calls were reported from Eastman Lane.

Assault & Battery
Dec. 6
An individual in Butterfield Residence Hall was allegedly assaulted and sprayed with a fire extinguisher. An investigation is underway to determine possible charges.

Burglary/Breaking and Entering
Dec. 5
The front grille of a vehicle in parking lot 49 was stolen.
A vehicle in parking lot 44 was broken into and an equalizer was stolen.

Health/Safety Hazard
Dec. 6
A trash can fire on North Pleasant Street was extinguished by the Amherst Fire Department.

Larceny
Dec. 5
A bird feeder and a sign were stolen from the Chancellor's Residence on Chancellors' Drive.
An individual reported that her purse was stolen from her vehicle which was parked in parking lot 33.
Dec. 9
There was a report of fraudulent use of a credit card from Knowles Engineering Building.
An individual in Washington Residence Hall reported that a check was stolen.
A bicycle was stolen from Baker Residence Hall.
A tire was stolen from a vehicle in parking lot 22.

Noise Complaint
Dec. 9
There was a complaint of fireworks on the Southwest Residential Area Mall.

Suspicious Person/Activity
Dec. 6
Bryan S. Weinberg, 21, of 20 Corners Rd., Congers, N.Y., was arrested on Authority Way for malicious destruction of property in excess of $250, disorderly conduct, resisting a police officer making a lawful arrest and possession of a Class D substance.

Need a Job?

The Collegian News Department is currently accepting applications for Associate News Editors. These paid positions offer substantial writing experience. News Assistants typically cover:

- politics of higher education
- student activism
- state politics
- student government
- University policy and administration
- police and public safety
- Town of Amherst, Hadley, Northampton, etc.
- court proceedings
- health and environment
- science and technology

Interested students should call Laura Stock, Michael Elliott or Chris Conner at 545–1851, or stop by the Collegian office in 113 Campus Center (basement).
The Collegian is an Equal Opportunity Employer.

Work faster with it.

Power Macintosh® 7600
132 MHz/16MB RAM/1.2GB/8X CD-ROM
15" display/keyboard
Now $2,558

Simplify your life with it.

Communicate to the world with it.

Power Macintosh® 7200
120 MHz/16MB RAM/1.2GB/8X CD-ROM
15" display/keyboard
Now $1,918

Have fun with it.

Apple® Color StyleWriter® 2500
Up to 720x360 dpi
Now $329

Get $150 back with it.

Check out Apple's Holiday Savings.
Right now Apple Computer is it, offering a $150 rebate when you purchase a Macintosh® personal computer and an Apple® printer. Fact is, your timing couldn't be better to get your Mac® a machine that features some of the world's most innovative technology. And it's easier to use than anything you'll encounter in your class schedule. So get to your campus computer store and pick out your Mac. It'll help keep you ahead in your classes (or at least tied). And right now, you'll come out $150 ahead on the price.

Power Macintosh® 5260 120 MHz/16MB RAM/1.2GB/8X CD-ROM/14" built-in display/keyboard Now $1,559
Power Macintosh® 8500 150 MHz/16MB RAM/1.2GB/8X CD-ROM/17" display/keyboard Now $3,548
Macintosh® Performa® 6400CD 180 MHz/16MB RAM/1.6GB/8X CD-ROM/15" display/keyboard Now $2,198
Apple® Color StyleWriter® 1500 Up to 720x360 dpi Now $239

UNIVERSITY STORE
The University Store
Campus Center
Hours: M-F 9-5, Sat.. 10-5
545-2619

©1996 Apple Computer, Inc. All rights reserved. Apple, the Apple logo, Mac, Macintosh, Performa, Power Macintosh and StyleWriter are registered trademarks of Apple Computer, Inc. Apple mail in rebate offer ended from November 2, 1996, through January 19, 1997, while supplies last and subject to availability. To qualify for rebate, printer, computer and an Apple monitor (if sold separately) must be purchased on the same invoice. Offer good on any Macintosh desktop computer with any Apple printer. Void where prohibited by law. See participating reseller for further rules and details. All Macintosh computers are designed to be accessible to individuals with disability. To learn more (U.S. only), call 800-600-7808 or TTY 800-755-0601

Seasons greetings
A Menorah and Christmas tree are lit for display at the Amherst Commons through the season.
ELIZABETH BROWN \ COLLEGIAN

ASC: airports still not secure enough

By Randolph E. Schmid
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — America has taken airport security too lightly and now must develop a system that works quickly and efficiently, an aviation security consultant (ASC) told an industry conference yesterday.

"We have not declared war on terrorism as the Europeans have," Lee Grodzins told the Global Aviation Safety and Security Summit. "A system that secures us against past acts may not secure us at all against future acts," warned Grodzins, vice president of American Science and Engineering Inc., which develops advanced technology for security, and a professor at Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

He urged toughening airplanes and their cargo containers against explosives and improving technology to detect explosives and scan passengers, luggage and cargo.

Security concerns have been heightened since the July explosion of TWA Flight 800, killing 230 people off New York's Long Island. The cause remains under investigation, but the blast has prompted tighter airport security and has drawn congressional and White House attention.

Grodzins spoke during a daylong meeting organized by Aviation Week & Space Technology magazine that also heard a top air safety expert urge development of a single standard of flight safety worldwide.

While the developing nations have just 16 percent of commercial air traffic they account for 70 percent of accidents, Stuart Matthews of the Flight Safety Foundation said.

"We must strive for one level of safety worldwide and it's the less-developed nations that need the help," said Matthews, chairman of the airline-sponsored safety foundation.

He told the conference that human error is the biggest single factor in airplane accidents.

"It's a fundamental facet of the human species, people make mistakes," Matthews said. "Fatigue is one obvious reason why people make mistakes. They forget, they become confused, they misunderstand and take the wrong actions."

That prompted a discussion of proposals for airlines to share operations data with the government and safety consultants to detect minor mistakes and correct them before an accident occurs.

John Kern, vice president of Northwest Airlines, noted that the current system, which can include penalties for errors, discourages the reporting of such incidents when they do not lead to an accident.

He said the industry and government need to find a way to cooperate so that errors can lead to improved training or other changes.

Other industry speakers also expressed concerns that information might be released and be misunderstood by the public, causing unnecessary concerns.

"I frankly don't think the way to deal with it is to hide the data," responded Anthony Broderick, formerly a top Federal Aviation Administration official and now an aviation consultant. He suggested finding a way to include an analysis of any information that is made public.

Broderick noted that public concern about flight safety has grown as a result of several dramatic crashes in the last few years and this must be taken into consideration by managers and regulators.

Nobel Prizes awarded in Oslo, Norway

By Doug Mellgren
Associated Press

OSLO, Norway — A Roman Catholic bishop and an exiled activist who oppose Indonesia's occupation of East Timor accepted the Nobel Peace Prize yesterday and praised the committee for bringing attention to the 21-year-old "forgotten conflict." Bishop Carlos Filipe Ximenes Belo, 48, and Jose Ramos Horta, 51, shared the honor in a ceremony that was boycotted by Indonesian representatives.

Ramos Horta offered his "deepest appreciation" to the committee members for "your generosity in thinking of the wretched of the Earth and your courage in standing up to the might of states."

Indonesian troops seized East Timor in 1975, and forcibly annexed it the next year. In announcing the Peace Prize on Oct. 11, the Nobel committee blamed Indonesia for widespread death, terror and persecution during its occupation of the former Portuguese colony of 720,000 people.

Indonesia says it invaded East Timor to prevent chaos after Portuguese forces abandoned the island during a civil war. The government has denounced Ramos Horta, a former leftist guerrilla, as a traitor, and accused him of "unspeakable atrocities." The government has avoided criticizing Belo, but has complained that he was abusing his position by making political comments.

Yesterday, Indonesia denied it had warned Bishop Belo not to criticize the government when accepting the Nobel Prize. Speaking in Indonesia, Foreign Minister Ali Alatas said Belo's appeal for talks were appropriate to his role as a spiritual leader.

Both laureates urged Indonesia to release political prisoners, and open talks on the future of East Timor.

"I say stop bloodshed. And I add, stop oppression. Stop violence. Stop conflict. Let us sit down around a table and understand each other," said Belo, clad in black and magenta clerical robes.

"I firmly believe that I am here essentially as the voice of the voiceless people of East Timor," he said. "And what the people want is peace. An end to violence and the respect for their human rights."

Ramos Horta called Belo "the real winner" of the prize as "the embodiment of the East Timorese people's resilience, moral rectitude, dignity and identity and its long quest for peace and freedom."

Each Nobel Prize carries a $1.12 million cash award. The other prizes were presented in Stockholm, Sweden, yesterday — the 100th anniversary of the death of the prizes' benefactor, Alfred Nobel, the Swede who invented dynamite.

Polish poet Wislawa Szymborska, celebrated for her "beautiful, deep and subtle poetry," accepted the Nobel Prize in literature. David Lee and Robert Richardson, both of Cornell University, and Douglas Osheroff of Stanford University, shared the Nobel Prize in physics for their discovery of superfluidity in helium-3.

Peter Doherty, an Australian now working in Memphis, Tenn., and Rolf Zinkernagel of Switzerland received the prize in medicine for pioneering work on the body's immune system.

Harold Kroto of Britain's University of Sussex and Richard Smalley of Houston's Rice University shared the chemistry prize for discovering carbon atoms bound in the shape of soccer balls.

UMass
Division of Continuing Education

Winter Session 1997

January 2-23

- More than 100 credit courses both day and evening
- Professional development courses, seminars, workshops
- Courses for recertification points for teachers

Register Now!
Call for a free course catalog - (413) 545-0107
e-mail: contined@admin.umass.edu
Division of Continuing Education · University of Massachusetts Amherst
Explore our Web site at http://www.umass.edu/contined/

CAMPUS ACTIVITIES AT THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PRESENTS

A WEEKLY PROGRAM SERIES: SOMETHING EVERY FRIDAY

FEATURING
STAND UP COMEDIAN

ROCK REUBEN

Rock Reuben

CIRCADIAN RHYTHM

BLUEWALL CAFE
December 13, 1996
8:00 pm FREE
"A TIME TO KILL" Immediately Folllowing
in the BLUEWALL CAFE

For more information check out our website:
http://www.umass.edu/campus/events/calendar.htm

This series is made possible by a grant from Auxilliary Services and the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs.
and DAILY COLLEGIAN

DAILY COLLEGIAN

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592
http://www.umass.edu/rso/collegian

Jacob W. Michaels Editor-in-Chief Chris Taylor Conner Managing Editor
Alycia Hines Business Manager G. Tony Morse Production Manager Pete Servais Advertising Manager
David Voldan Advertising Production Manager Lisa Chiu Senior Diversity Editor

Mike Burke Arts & Living Editor
Humphrey brown III Black Affairs Co-Editor
Gregory Casimir Black Affairs Co-Editor
Sunanda Ghosh Developing Nations Editor
Mark McGrath Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jamie Simsheimer Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Bryan Schwartzman Jewish Affairs Co-Editor
Sarah Kimmel Jewish Affairs Co-Editor
Lisa Chiu Multicultural Affairs Editor
Michael Elliott News Editor
Elizabeth Brown Photography Editor
Casey Kane Sports Co-Editor
Chris Stamm Sports Co-Editor

Michelle Hillman Women's Issues Editor
Josh Sylvester Editorial Production Manager
Sean Horgan Systems Manager
Eric R. Remillard IV Finance Manager
Rob McDonald Circulation Manager
Ryan Courtemanche Subscription Manager
Feisal Ahmad Marketing Manager
Renée LeBlanc Classifieds Manager
Lyle A. Henry Operations Manager
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Peppas Classified Advertising
Thomas F. Sweeney, Jr. Graphics Advisor/Instructor
David Quirk Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1950. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Dissidence and punishment in the U.S.A.

Daniel Bodah

We're probably all familiar with stories of journalists and dissidents disappearing or being imprisoned. From Guatemala, China, Indonesia, Argentina, Mexico and Nigeria we read or watch the news of political repression. Most recently, we have heard how Serbian ruler Slobodan Milosevic ordered the dissident radio stations of Belgrade shut down — during a period of massive street protests against his administration's cynical refusal to accept defeat in the recent election. Today we can read that plainclothes police in Belgrade have been arresting and beating selected leaders and organizers of the protests.

We talk about the need for democracy in other countries, and often back that talk up with action — economic sanctions against Serbia, military intervention in Haiti, weapons and training for Contra rebels. When we think of political oppression, it's something that happens somewhere else. The United States is thought of as an exporter of democracy. We never question whether the United States itself may practice illegal violations of the civil and human rights of its own dissidents.

At least two prominent arrests have been interpreted as exactly this sort of move by our government. Leonard Peltier and Mumia Abu Jamal are both U.S. dissidents whose trials show numerous irregularities. Huge protest movements have developed around each of them, making the claim that the charges they are accused of have been trumped up.

Peltier was a member of AIM, a Native American group which struggles against government–sponsored or aided suppression of our indigenous populations. He was convicted for the shooting of an FBI agent on a reservation, but advocates for his release point out that the physical evidence and the reconstruction of the crime which came up at his trial are inconsistent and inconclusive.

Mumia Abu Jamal was a news commentator who worked for WDAS radio in Philadelphia. A community activist and outspoken critic of the city, Jamal was also a proponent of the Philadelphia MOVE group (more about them later).

Jamal is now on death row, awaiting execution (or release,) for the alleged killing of a police officer. Yet numerous witnesses who saw another person shoot the cop have been ignored, and evidence has had a tendency to come up "missing."

MOVE is an African–American political and social organization who live communally in houses owned by the group. There have been numerous problems between MOVE and their neighbors over the years, but the response of the city to a situation which arose in 1985 continues to stun with its implausibility. The Philadelphia police claim to have been acting in response to community noise and safety complaints about a certain MOVE house, but for some reason they chose to act in the dead of night. A shootout occurred around 4 a.m., followed by hours of tense standoff. Finally the city broke the impasse — by dropping a bomb on the house! In the aftermath of the bombing, an entire city block burned to the ground. Needless to say, many MOVE members lost their lives without benefit of trial.

All of these situations show political suppression as a motivation, whether explicit or implicit. Neither individual state governments nor the United States government has moved to investigate or correct any human rights abuses that have occurred in these cases.

These are just a few well–known incidents of potential political suppression in "the land of the free." There are numerous others, from the violent police attacks on the New York squatting movement, to allegations indicating the possible existence of special lockdown units in our prisons, used specifically to isolate political prisoners from the general prison population. Deep Dish T.V. has produced a series of exposes on the prison industry (Lock Down U.S.A.) indicating an underlying political and economic motivation behind this country's highest–in–the–world incarceration rate.

The New York City–based Committee to Protect Journalists has documented the killings of a number of journalists on our home soil. All have been emigrants writing for U.S. papers publishing in languages other than English. Five were Vietnamese, killed in sites from Virginia to California, three Haitian radio journalists in Miami and one a Chinese writer in San Francisco. Whether these killings have a political connection is not currently clear, but they warrant investigation and most certainly bring the question of the suppression of free speech home.

Daniel Bodah is a Collegian columnist.

Shalom, UMass

Henry J. Brier

"Henry, do you want a ride home?" asked a friend from his car last week while I, unbeknownst to him, was about 10 footsteps from my front yard.

One evening a couple of years ago I bumped into him at the then, Town and Campus. He was anguishing over his studies, yet he still extracted the positive quality from grinding and enriching the organ between his ears.

"If you ever want your brain to work to its outer limits," he said that night, "take a class about economic theory."

Needless to say, I took the lift home.

***

Without question, my most memorable news story happened on Tuesday night, Apr. 18, 1995.

Robert M. Schapiro, a 49–year old graduate student who I never knew, was pronounced dead at approximately 9 p.m. after having collapsed seconds after the completion of his speech for treasurer of the Graduate Student Senate (GSS).

Several witnesses alleged that while Schapiro spoke, the incumbent treasurer's blatant intimidation was so overt that Schapiro's voice was shakingly unstable.

I was not there during the speech. But, afterward, I certainly was there gathering news and observing the surroundings while paramedics worked on the fallen man.

And never will I forget the disturbingly complacent grin that I saw emerge upon the face of the 1994–1995 GSS treasurer, as he relaxedly leaned against the wall facing room 174.

I know what I saw, and I have seen what I now know.

***

In my opinion, exploration of the intellect's dynamic capability (meaning the outer bounds, furthest extremities and hidden depths) is possible by taking a philosophical history course.

Study of the past (provided, of course, if it is factually– accurate) should never be devalued or underestimated.

That which has happened in history should surprise no one when it happens again because what has occurred has been approved by the historical text.

Perhaps this is a pessimistic view, but this perspective can also rightfully be considered realistic.

Thus, the study of history is philosophical realism.

***

There exists but one singular reason why the eastern Mediterranean peace process is so rabidly condemned on this campus. This two–plus millennia of "rationale" are no quiet secret locked away in some remote treasury, thus, should not be a surprise.

"They may as well just write 'I hate Jews!'" my friend, who is not Jewish, said in his car outside my house.

He was referring to the caustic vitriol and revisionist history masquerading as fact regarding Israel that consistently appears throughout the pages of many different campus–wide publications.

The highest–ranking mass communicator on this campus once called such printed material "junk."

Such continuously excessive and disproportionate hatred has far surpassed any political threshold, as it festers and thrives within the religious and personal realm.

Period. Paragraph.

***

The peace process entails an exchange of United Nations– partitioned land for security. This land (and so much more that has already been traded) was pre–emptively captured by the General Yitzhak Rabin–led campaign commonly known as the Six Day War in June 1967.

Six days. One–hundred forty–four hours.

Such efficient defense is why Rabin's assassination, in November 1995, was so sickeningly celebrated by some.

A key aspect to remember and seriously consider is that although Rabin's political presence and leadership may have ceased, his legacy certainly perseveres.

To many, the late general now serves as a standard, so perfectly exemplifying how strong the military he helped create and lead presently is and will continue to be, as it is significantly stronger now than it ever was before.

Make no mistake.

Why else would and how else could such a country even consider something as risky as a peace process?

***

Now, to give credit where it's due: To SR, SM and PS, the three of you were my first UMass pals from Brown; ES, MT, PC and ON, the three of you are sweet as an apple. Officer NL, I thoroughly enjoyed discussing "the skinny" on UMass politics with you, and keep an eye on your postage.

To the blooming braggart aspiring to become a trustworthy, genuine, kind and sincere politician, surely you are absolutely well on your way. Yes, you will definitely do just fine.

As hard as I looked and as patient as I was, Ilana, I never found the submissions that you repeatedly assured me you'd write, after that day you hysterically shrieked at the top of your lungs while we listened in the newsroom. And, no, I don't buy that bit about how you're "not a good writer."

Go, OP. You and your entirely pleasant manner deserve nothing other than the life's best. The same applies to you, SK. I find it amazing, NM, how our ideology and history is so very parallel, and I truly enjoyed speaking with you. DB, AB, KW and FW, to me you four represent toward whom I aspire. Can't thank you each enough.

Lastly, and by no means least, to JWM, working and writing with you was a pleasure. Thank you for helping me start and finish.

***

Hark, now hear the sailors cry,
Smell the sea and feel the sky.
Let your soul and spirit fly into the mystic.
—Van Morrison

***

So, to everyone meaningful who I've neglected to remember, thanks a lot. Believe you me, I've learned quite a bit and I'm now prepared to find out more.

Remember: in the grand context of life, 10 footsteps is merely a fond memory of life's path as we each blaze trails and explore separate ways.

Shalom, UMass.

Henry J. Brier was, at one time which like every other will become a remnant of the long–forgotten past, a Collegian columnist.

Opinion/Editorial

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Gun control numbers don't add up

John Wilkinson

OK, I've been waiting to write about this for quite a while. It's a topic that I've been interested in for several years now, and I've finally got my chance to mouth off about it. The topic, which I expect to stir a bit of heated debate on this liberal, East–coast campus, is that of gun control.

Now, before I get to telling you that "assault weapons" are overrated, that "cop–killer" bullets never existed and that even if we could magically eliminate handguns from our streets the homicide rate would skyrocket, let me tell you a little about myself. I'm not what you might think. I was born here in the Northeast — New York to be precise. I didn't have guns in my house when I was growing up. I don't (and never did) hunt. My parents weren't (and still aren't) NRA members and they didn't encourage me to believe that gun control was wrong.

None of that changes the fact, however, that the gun control proposals I've seen so far make little, if any, sense at all and that some of them are prescriptions for disaster. But I'm not here to argue moralistically or politico–legally about gun control and the Second Amendment. You see, I'm a physics major, and I love numbers and equations so I thought I'd show you some that might illuminate the gun control debate for you.

First of all, the most striking thing I learned about guns when I first started reading about them four years ago is that they are used at least as often for self–defense as for criminal purposes, about 600,000 times per year. (The number of self–defense uses may be as high as 800,000.) For those who doubt this conclusion, I advise you to go to the library and check out any of the books written by criminologists on gun control.

A particularly well–balanced source is Point Blank, by Florida State criminologist Gary Kleck — a liberal Democrat and ACLU member. (Unfortunately, the UMass library doesn't have his book, so you'll have to go to the Amherst College library to get it.)

Those who are tempted to wimp out and try reading Time, Newsweek, or just about any newspaper (except of course, this one) for gun statistics, be warned: those sources are every bit as biased and inaccurate as Guns & Ammo.

How about so–called "assault weapons," though? Aren't those particularly dangerous and susceptible to criminal misuse? Well, "assault weapons" are not machine guns, they aren't nearly as lethal as the typical deer rifle and very few criminals actually use them (less than one–percent according to the ATF). The few high–profile cases that have involved "assault weapons," like the Stockholm school tragedy, could have been much worse if "assault weapons" were not used. In the Stockholm case, nearly 90 percent of the 30–odd victims survived. If a typical hunting weapon had been used instead, more than half of the children and adults would have died.

OK, what about armor–piercing, "cop–killer bullets?" Well, would it surprise you to learn that, according to the FBI, no police officer has ever been killed by a "cop–killer" bullet? Every officer that has ever been killed while wearing a bullet–proof vest has been shot in an extremity where the vest offers no protection, or in the head, or in a weak spot where the vest panels are joined. No armor–piercing bullet has ever penetrated a vest and wounded or killed a police officer.

Well, what about banning handguns that are used most often in crimes? Sounds like a good idea if you think that it will actually prevent criminals from obtaining one of the 65 million handguns currently in circulation and that criminals will go unarmed if handguns are unavailable. Unfortunately, handgun prohibition isn't likely to do much more than disarm the law abiding citizens of the more than 30 states that allow the concealed carrying of handguns. (The most recent and comprehensive study, done at the University of Chicago, found that rates of homicide, rape and assault in these states decreased after the number of concealed carry permit holders went up.)

And even if criminals can't get handguns, as many as three–quarters of them are inclined to "upgrade" to "sawed–off" shotguns, according to a study by the National Institute of Justice. Ironically, because shotguns are many times more lethal than handguns, even an effective handgun prohibition campaign could more than double the homicide rate.

Conservative politicians often emphasize their "tough on crime" attitude to deflect attention away from the tough decisions regarding the root socioeconomic causes of crime. Liberal politicians use gun control in much the same way. It's time we all woke up and let them know we aren't blinded by the smoke screen anymore.

John Wilkinson is a UMass student.

Battling the mind–forg'd manacles

Bryan Schwartzman

A large crowd of tourists gathers on a warm mid–summer day by the water in Battery Park, NY. The line that forms for the Liberty Island/Ellis Island Ferry is like a gateway into our country's past and its most profound aspirations.

A large group of stationary people is a prefect venue for New York's finest street performers, who strut their stuff with fierce enjoyment in the hopes of collecting some spare dollars and cents. A myriad of acts were performing on this day — jugglers, acrobats, but the one that swayed the crowd the most was a young Haitian poet who proclaimed "why do I need money when I speak in rhythms and be happy?"

This is a wonderful sentiment, but why is a man of verse who speaks with words of wisdom and harmony reduced to the prominence of begging for change? Other than writers where is the prominence of poetry?

What happened to the days when artists like William Wordsworth, inspired by the events of the French Revolution, sparked a revolution in the way people thought and perceived the world? My question is, what role does poetry, and especially the sentiments of Romantic poetry, play in our society and how can one maintain a romantic outlook on life in the inner cities, business world and superhighway of information.

My own definition of Romanticism as established by the six major romantic poets (Blake, Wordsworth, Coleridge, Byron, Keats, Shelley) if this: the development of primal sympathy and kindness towards other human beings and a heightened struggle to live life to the fullest in a mechanized and oftentimes bleak society. Romanticism and realism are not completely separate, although they may appear to be. The urban landscape, which the Romantic poets critique is plagued with so many problems that survival is given more importance than the praise of human potential and appreciation of the natural world.

Take the place of my origin, Queens, where the slumber of everyday life combined with young people's rampant disconnection from the political middle class homeowner leaves little room to praise life and treat it as a blessing. To quote the taxi driver in an Eddie Murphy film Coming to America "If there is one thing that Queens has, it's common parts." Yet that same movie represents the best qualities of city life which the romantic poets would extoll, the vivid interaction between people and groups of people from all around the globe.

The problem is that the city is such an all–encompassing place that it is often difficult to see past that and develop goals beyond what is visible on the streets and apparent in everyday life. Over 200 years ago, William Blake prophesied the oppressive aspect of city life when he wrote "In every cry of every man, In every infant's cry of fear, In every voice, in every ban, The mind–forg'd manacles I hear." When an individual's mind is bound by its society it is much easier to desire to be something small rather than something great.

In his book Makes Me Wanna Holler journalist Nathan McCall compared the game of chess with life, saying that most people believe they are chasing kings when they are really going after pawns. In prison, when he realized that his life as a drug dealer was simply chasing a pawn he turned his life around and made it all the way to the Washington Post.

It upsets me when at a University, Romantisim is taught from an elitist and overly scholarly approach. When this happens, Romantisim becomes the heady by–giving–you–one. Kelly has slept with everybody, except me.

Eat...

Seriously, the food is good, the food is free and the food gets replenished when you eat it. How much sweeter can life get?

and philosophical writings of dead writers who lived long ago and bears no relevance to today. The lofty ideals of Romantic poetry must be grounded with understanding of modern street life in order to be a useful reference point for people. William Blake once wrote "to particularize is the alone distinction of merit."

Romantic poetry has been taught from Harvard to a south Bronx high school just across the street from housing projects. There have been teachers in the Bronx who had second and third generation welfare students glued to their seats with poems such as "The Rime of the Ancient Mariner."

An evocative and caring teacher can relate the themes of great poetry to the lives of students and memorize them into coming to class. Someone once told me that no matter how much support an individual has in the home and in their school, it only accounts for 30 percent of their consciousness and the street makes up an overwhelming 70 percent of someone's awareness. With this in mind, if someone can acquire a touch of Romanticism and carry it with them onto the street, into the business world, or even into public office, then as Wordsworth says "the Mind of Man can become a thousand times more beautiful than the world in which he inhabits."

Bryan Schwartzman is a Collegian columnist.

Live and let live

Andrew Trodden

I was once convicted of a crime. It wasn't a terrible crime mind you but nonetheless a conviction scars my otherwise impeccable record. I was convicted of trespassing, (a.k.a. sledding on a golf course after closing). I served no time for this crime but was issued a rather brutal fine of $135.. for sledding.

My point behind bringing up my "sledding conviction" is that I've been wondering how long it will be before my criminal record will be required by law to precede me no matter where I go. Certainly, there are those out there who would like to know if there is a trespasser in their company.

Now there's Michael Carlson, the convicted rapist and sex offender. Sure he did the crime, but he also did his time and has been in the process of trying to make something of his life. But that process just got quite a bit harder for him as the recent release of his prior record all but issued him the death sentence the courts decidedly waived.

Imagine one day he has all these friends and the next day they find out he's a convicted rapist, not to mention his teachers find out as well. I can only imagine that it would be kind of hard to restrain your personal bias against someone like that. Maybe Carlson had a girlfriend before this bomb was dropped on campus. Imagine the nightmares she'd be having after hearing that.

I thought the idea behind imprisoning criminals was to reform them so they didn't get out and do the crime again. But by throwing on top of that this insult to injury I think we may be saying the penal system doesn't work, which isn't to say that it does work. But I figure this country's political correctness is so good at covering up the real truth we ought to at least be able to make the people believe that our prisons are working well.

If not, why don't we just scare the hell out of everyone? If we are going to do this release of prior records, why not go all the way with it? Let's release the names and addresses of every person that ever committed any sort of crime ever. That way you'll know if you've got a trespasser in your town or a guy who broke into a house 75 years ago, because you never know when he might relapse.

With that system, if a similar crime happens in a neighborhood, police will know where to start looking... so will the lynch mobs. Which is exactly the situation that Mr. Carlson finds himself in right now. Suppose a rape were to take place, maybe in the area of his residence. I guarantee that he could have gone home for that weekend and people would still point the finger at him. Some justice that is. It's like we are living in a large–scale version of kindergarten and all we like to do is tease people while we point at them... nah nah nah nah naaa, Michael is a rapist, nah nah nah naaa. Is this really what we've come to? Please say it isn't.

Take a look at how ass backwards we've got our society. We treat alcoholics and addicts and gamblers etc. as if they were diseased, we even call it a disease. These people who are doing most of the damage to themselves are receiving the treatment. While we sit by allowing the truly sick people to rape and murder, pillage and plunder our society, then after that, we make fun of them for doing it.

To hell with that if any of my tax dollars are going to help any of these people. I want it helping the whackos out there that one day may just crack and end up in the bell tower with a high powered rifle shooting innocent people. Let those addicts slowly kill themselves, that's their choice.

In a nutshell, allow these people who have paid for their mistakes to attempt to lead a normal life. There are those out there, believe it or not, that do repent for their actions and do not commit that act again. Why do we deem it necessary to crucify these people when we should help them to escape from their past, so that it will not surface again.

Problems are only as big as you think they are. Remember that.

Andrew Trodden is a Collegian columnist.

A season of extremes

Mark McGrath

It's funny how we look at our world.

December is upon us and with it comes the holiday season. For many, it is a time of joy and happiness, a time to see family and friends, a time to mark the passing of another year, a time to look back on the years gone by and to look forward to many more.

Sometimes, when this time of year comes around, we are so busy making our own plans that we forget to look around and see that our happiness isn't shared by everyone. For many, this world isn't a happy place, even if it is the holiday season. When I say this, I am by no means trying to put a damper on the good ole' holiday spirit. I am merely stating that this spirit isn't like a blanket and therefore can't cover our entire society.

I'm not going to talk about the homeless and suffering. We hear enough about them. If we haven't taken action for them by now, it's hard to believe we ever will. I'm speaking more of people who look and act like us. You know... the average Joe.

Joe may have worked in a factory for his entire life, just barely getting by with his family. Maybe Joe's employer decided to pack up his whole corporation and move it to Mexico, where he can pay someone to do Joe's work for a quarter of what he paid Joe. Maybe Joe is 35 years old, and having worked there his entire adult life had developed no other skills. Perhaps Joe is fighting it out with his former co–workers for the few minimum–wage jobs remaining at their local Wal–Mart. Joe might be able to collect for a few more months, but he has no idea how to deal with the future. We wish you a merry Christmas, Joe.

How about Mary. She's stuck in the closet because the world is hostile to people who may not necessarily fit its definition of regular. Instead of being free in her life, she has to put on an act, attempting to avoid being disowned by her family, tossed aside by her friends and stigmatized by society. There are things about people that you just cannot change, things that they couldn't avoid even if they wanted to. Things that are so scary that these people are forced on the edge every day of their lives. Deck the Halls, Mary.

What about Dave? He and his family are preparing for what is assumed will be his mother's last Christmas, due to her inoperable and malignant cancer. How will he feel, giving his mom a present he knows full well she will never have the opportunity to use? How will he come to grips with the fact that no one wants to talk about what will happen because they want the holiday to happen as it always has? How can he celebrate when he knows it will never be the same again? Silent night, Dave.

When heading into the holiday season, a time of giving, you never know if you'll run into an average Joe, Mary or Dave. They're regular people, just like you and me, and they'll be attempting to hide whatever it is that is tearing their sanity to shreds. Just because our society goes to great lengths trying to prove that we've reached the most wonderful time of the year doesn't mean that it is for everyone.

If you weren't aware, suicide rates skyrocket during the holiday season. Perhaps the majority of our society is so busy finding the right colored wrapping paper or last–minute gift that we neglect to pay attention when people need help. Believe me, it's not difficult to listen to someone's story and accept them for what they are, to give them a shoulder to cry on. The holiday season is a time of extremes: for every person who runs through the streets with a smile and a candy cane there is someone who may need someone to talk to... perhaps more then than ever.

As members of this society, it is important that we show compassion towards everyone because you never know what they may be carrying around with them and how much it can hurt for you to try and convince them that there is something to be merry about.

Mark McGrath is a Collegian columnist.

How to make your break

Luke Meredith

Break out the sweatpants and Dad's bottle of Wild Turkey, kids. It's wintersession time!

Yes, winter break will be here before you know it, and for many of you, (except me, I live off–campus, hah!) that means five weeks at home with the parental units. It's a very depressing thought, and so, as a veteran of many sucky winter breaks, I figured I'd pass along a few helpful hints to get you through the month of January without going loco.

P.S. Say. "Hi," to Mom for me, will ya?

Five Words— "9–0–2–1–0"...

At the rate that they show reruns, I will guarantee you that you will be able to watch Beverly Hills' finest at least three times a day. So take advantage of the situation. Use this time to get re–acquainted with the crew. For instance, who has David slept with? Who has Brandon slept with? How many times has Steve cheated in school? How many times have Pumpkin Boy and Donna broken up? Who hasn't Kelly slept with? These are questions that need answering. I'll even get you started by giving you one. Kelly has slept with everybody, except me.

Eat...

Seriously, the food is good, the food is free and the food gets replenished when you eat it. How much sweeter can life get?

Practice lines to dish out to old high school friends...

Come on, we all have friends from home who never left home, and it's really hard to know what to say. But's that why I'm here, guys. These little nuggets will get you through. Say'em with me now. "Ah, that's cool." "Yeah, I heard he's a pothead now." "How's the IROC running?" "You still work at the mall?" "How's (insert local community college here)?" I'm telling you, they're words to live by if you've ever caught at a junior year metal shop reunion.

Paint your living room in maroon and white...

That'll keep the break lively. Think of it. You just can't wait until Mom and Dad (Did you say hi to Mom for me?) leave for work so you can head down to True Value, pick up some common house paint and do your school proud. Then, when you're done, you can shave your head, paste up pictures of John Calipari all over the wet paint, grab Daddy's shotgun and explain to them, calmly and rationally, that you just need the Buick for a few days so you can drive to Kansas City and "persuade" the NCAA to put the basketball team back at No.1. I'm sure they'd take your attack with patience and understanding, and hey, there's nothing like a road trip to break up the monotony, right?

Eat...

I'm telling you, it's free. Eat up!

Ask your parents about the '60s...

Guys, they'll love you for it. Mom will start to talk about Woodstock ("I was stuck in traffic in Utica," is a common response), and pretty soon you'll be sucked in by tales of acid trips, rallies and Buffalo Springfield bootlegs from the same people that think that R.E.M. is the new accounting firm down the street. And when you inform them that you too like Janis Joplin, be ready for a bond that will last a lifetime, especially when you call in March with the classic, "I don't know why that check bounced!"

Count the days until the start of spring...

It's 130 days and counting, kids. Dream of the warm weather, the girls, the Saturday afternoon parties, opening day, the birds chirping, Saturday afternoon parties, the short skirts, the Saturday afternoon parties...

Did I mention the Saturday afternoon parties?

Eat...

Alright, put down the drumstick. I don't care how free it is, at a certain point you have to say "no mas," fatty.

Hey. I'm just kidding. No seriously, you look good.

Luke Meredith is a Collegian columnist.

Entering the new millennium

Martin F. Jones

The year 2000, once a futuristic dream explored only in science fiction, is now nearly upon us. As of today, Dec. 11, 1996, there are exactly 1,115 days remaining before this hugely important point in the earth's history. While there are many people who are expecting the new millennium to mean a huge New Year's Eve party and a new calendar, in reality, the new millennium will mark a dramatic departure from our current way of life in ways that will fundamentally transform the world in which we live. It will also mark the beginning of an entirely new and unprecedented age of global consciousness and cooperation, as well as an entirely new way of understanding the laws of nature, the mysteries of the universe, our relationship with God and a new definition of life.

Living on the Cusp of Time

The year 2000 is significant most of all to Christians as it is based upon the year of the birth of Christ approximately 4 B.C. This creates a perception that history began with the birth of Christ, despite the fact that human civilizations have flourished on earth for many thousands of years before then. However, it is also popularly believed by astrologers that the New Age officially begins in the year 2000. It is at this point that the world will enter "The Aquarian Age," a new period of enlightenment symbolized by the water bearer as spiritual master. Aquarius imparts impersonal and oceanic consciousness to cleanse and purify the ills and dramas of humanity. With the current cycle of Pisces reaching its final stages, this passing of an astrological age is akin to the final moments of a dying man. Just before the slide from life, the deceased– to–be often experiences what appears to be a miraculous recovery. In the same way, many of the strongest influences of a dying age enjoy a final flare–up before expiring. This would mean that the wave fundamentalism in Christianity, Judaism, Hinduism and Islam, as well as the sudden upsurge of nationalistic and ethnic fervor we see today, do not denote a renaissance of old values but presage their final demise within the span of a few decades.

Entropy, the law of nature that says all things must lose momentum and stop, is not the monopoly of physics. The followers of Lord Buddha believe that even the evolution of truth — The Dharma — must wind down and die. Gautama Siddhartha, whose enlightenment sparked the creation of Buddhism, taught his disciples that the quest for truth is like a wheel that requires a fresh push from a new Enlightened One every 25 centuries. This 2,500 year period is scheduled to reach a dramatic conclusion by the year 2000.

The End of this World

We are indeed living in the last days. History will soon show the later 20th century, and more specifically, the late 1990s, to be the most turbulent and revolutionary period in the history of the world. From the Atomic Age to the 1969 Lunar Landing, the world is being transformed at a faster rate that at any time before. The invention of the television is perhaps the most profound development in the history of civilization, as it began the process of establishing a new collective experience through sight and sound in which the world community would become evermore deeply connected. The development of the computer has also greatly increased the speed and magnitude by which the human intellect has been able to employ itself.

But there are also great dangers that lie in waiting. Nuclear weapons are still a real threat to the world, and military weapons procurement continues at an unprecedented rate. Nationalism and religious fundamentalism today pose the greatest threat to world peace and security, as exemplified by the recent ongoing conflicts in the former Yugoslavia, Russia and Israel. One doomsday scenario which was recounted in the movie Crimson Tide referred to the prospect of a Russian ultranationalist coming to power and bringing the world to the brink of a nuclear war. As it stands, Russia still has a huge nuclear arsenal of nearly 30,000 weapons with advanced delivery systems which put them in striking range of every major city on the earth.

The Bridge to Utopia

There will always remain the eternal hope that in the end humanity will survive its greatest adversary: itself. Nuclear disarmament, and increased environmental protection are absolutely essential to secure our survival for another 1,000 years and beyond. As the world increasingly adopts more globalized economic and political systems, there lies in waiting great future opportunities to wipe out war, famine, disease and poverty forever. What will be needed is for all the nations of the world to defeat age–old divisions and commit themselves to work cooperatively for the common good of the entire planet. Global wealth and development will have to be more equitably distributed among all six of the world's populated continents, while open immigration between them can help realize a new multicultural meritocracy which affirms and promotes fully the collective history and cultures all of the earth's diverse and varied peoples. Together, these goals represent grand challenges which have defied humanity for many generations, but we should not feel overwhelmed by them. Rather we should allow ourselves of the supreme optimism that our generation has before it an historic opportunity and duty to succeed to all of these ends as the world takes that great historic leap forward into a new age of enlightenment, prosperity and cooperation, while continuing its eternal evolutionary quest towards reaching the infinite capacity of the human potential.

Martin F. Jones is a Collegian columnist.

UMass needs to grow up

Seema Gangatirkar

You know, I thought I left high school behind three years ago.

There are times when I listen to the way people talk and act, and I just wonder if they are ever going to grow up.

You know the people I'm describing. I'm guessing the majority of the time these people are lovely and wonderful examples, contributing to the well being of the University.

It's just every now and then this vortex of weirdness envelopes the University of Massachusetts as a whole and people feel the need to go out on a rampage and basically seem to devolve into hormonally and adrenalinally charged monsters.

What's the deal with this snow ball riot? Was it really necessary to go and break windows in Southwest, Frat Row and Amherst College? People involved could claim that it was all good spirited fun and all, but the cry of, "Kill the geeks" pretty much knocks that idea out of the water. And besides, it makes you wonder how much of our tuition dollars will go to repair the unnecessary damage to the buildings.

Then there is the bubble gum issue. Is it really so impossible to find a trash can on this campus or in any of the classrooms that people feel an irresistible urge to stick clumps of purple synthetic rubbery chewed up wads of gum on the backsides of chairs, desks and anywhere else my foot or elbow will land?

Along with the gum, in any classroom, you'll find that students have left empty bags of potato chips, candy bar wrappers and soda cans in the aisles. Evidently the walk to the trash can or recycling bin was way too difficult for these individuals. Or maybe they thought they were at home, where their mothers probably follow them around with a broom and a vacuum. Whatever the reason, students who leave their trash in classrooms obviously have little respect for their fellow classmates or for the janitorial staff.

There are other things that show obvious disrespect for fellow students and faculty. For example, there is the vandalism of the candy machines by some sugar starved, money hungry candy toting maniac or the idiot who feels the need to break the glass on the Campus Center doors every now and then. It's no wonder it's hard to get things fixed around here. What's the point if no one cares enough to take care of things?

It's the lack of respect on this campus that drives me absolutely nuts. You only have to listen to some of the conversations on this campus to realize that some people here haven't matured enough to be awake past 9 p.m.

But then you put some beer cans in the hands of these immature twerps and you have a full blown riot over, of all things, snow.

Just to put the riots in perspective, consider that Mahatma Gandhi and Martin Luther King Jr., had much more to complain about, yet they managed to precipitate change less violently than the hoodlums who marched on Amherst College Saturday night.

Rioting because UMass lost power or because they lost a basketball game isn't a worthy cause. It's disrespectful of people, not to mention dangerous.

It makes me wonder if being polite to people or respecting personal property and space isn't in style anymore.

It's really sad when something like the Saturday riots occurs or when prospective students visit this campus and see dirty classrooms. What impression does UMass convey to the rest of the world?

If we hope to be taken seriously, we have to act seriously. And this statement should not in any way, be taken as a ban on fun. Rather, there ought to be a measure of personal responsibility taken as well as respect for other people and surroundings.

So when you leave the campus for the holidays, remember where you go to school and understand that you have a certain obligation to maintain a modicum of dignity so you don't drag UMass down into the mud.

After all this University is what you make of it.

Have a happy and safe holiday.

Seema Gangatirkar is a Collegian columnist.

More than a good weekend

Christopher Hassett

I like to think of myself as a pretty decent editorialist. I like to keep every editorial to one point each since multi– point editorials are not all that difficult to write and people usually just start talking about how great or awful their weekends were. But since this is my last editorial of the year, I need to get everything I want to say in right now.

•We have discovered as of late a sex offender living in one of the dorms of this campus. So far, his name has been printed, he has been on television and he has become the personification of naughtiness here at UMass with the administration sullying themselves as well for not warning us of his predatory presence. I have another suggestion to add to the fray. How about we leave the guy alone?

He made a mistake, an awful mistake, a horrendous mistake. He served the punishment society doled out for him and now he is trying to go to college to better his life and put his past behind him. I don't think we should give him a yellow passport to nail to his door or a scarlet letter to tell everyone what he did in the past. His past is his business, that of the police and the unfortunate young lady unlucky enough to be his acquaintance so long ago. You don't have to be his best friend, but please leave the guy alone.

•Has anyone noticed how screwed up the Housing Services Cable Network movie channel has been lately. We had one day of no volume on Independence Day and then some odd bar graph displaying how far into the movie we are. Hey guys — wake up!

•Breaking windows with snowballs? While I don't exactly agree with some of the reports that make us sound like Beruit, will it ever be possible to have a student body mature enough not to cause random acts of violence? Snowball vandalism — we can do better.

•The Developing Nations page has written some pretty potent stuff. While I read this and don't exactly buy it all, it is the one and only place I see pro–Palestinian news. I mean that anywhere, any time. I look on CNN, it's all nasty Arabs and poor, oppressed Jews. I look on network news and mainstream newspapers, ditto. As I have said earlier this semester, I love Jewish culture, my romantic relationships with Jews have always been the funnest, and if I could be a Christian Jew I think I would. However, although I may not agree with what the Developing Nations page has to say I will defend to the death their right to say it.

I can see how it would be a point of view. They say this many people got killed and they caused it and everyone else says this many people got killed and they caused it. We all know different people see things in different ways (my ex– lovers certainly have revisionist memories of our relationships) so it is not like people are printing lies — they are printing points of view and the Collegian should be proud that amidst all the controversy surrounding it, we have kept professional and protected free speech.

•Lastly, I had such a great weekend! I went to a party at Jay's place in Boston (close friend) got a phone number of a cute brunette, spilt red wine (my fourth glass) on another brunette, did my holiday shopping and look forward to New Years Eve with my friends. A perfect weekend — I think that's worth six lines.

From the Campus Center basement, that's the way it is UMass. Enjoy your vacation and goodnight.

Christopher Hassett is a Collegian columnist.

Spreading some joy

Amy Lounsbury

There is nothing more exciting during the Christmas season than walking into a store and having the perfect gift jump out at you. The pink flamingo slippers that you know will make your best friend's year or the bird–call record that you're sure is what your dad needs but never really knew it. The new knitting machine for your grandmother that you love so much you convince her to open two days early.

It's the anticipated reaction that is your gift in return. No matter how much you love a gift you receive during the holidays, the feeling can never be matched to the one elicited when you give a loved one the perfect present.

So what do I do this year? I am a poor college student with barely enough money to pay my never–ending phone bill. How can I afford to buy my friends and family the gifts they deserve? I can't.

Many of us are suddenly finding ourselves in this situation. A seemingly endless list of people in need of gifts in one hand and a less–than–promising bank statement in the other. I decided to make most of my gifts this year, but I felt I should be doing more. I began to get depressed about the situation. Then I really started to think about it.

I thought about what Christmas means and about that little drummer boy. How do you follow an act like the Three Wise Men? All this boy had to offer the newborn king was his music. But that was the most wonderful gift of all, because it was from his heart. I have realized that this is my year to be that drummer boy.

Unfortunately, I can't play the drums. But what I can do is find a special gift inside of me to share with others. I can donate my time to help a family member in need. I can try to be more patient and more generous. I can just be there to talk when a friend needs me.

Christmas is not about

Arts & Living

Mobb Deep lyrically airtight, Turrentine average

Hip-hop band teeters on edge of perfection while Bush does well as alternative copy-cat band

MOBB DEEP
Hell on Earth
Loud Records

There is a certain claustrophobic, terrifying beauty in Mobb Deep's music. The beats are hard and sparse, with hypnotic strings and haunting samples bubbling up under the crackle of record static and stuttering bass. Their last album, The Infamous, seemed the epitome of their craft — it was a near flawless collection of urban nightmares and hazy street scenarios, and it featured some of the best non-RZA production in hip-hop. It's hard to believe, but the Mobb has actually done themselves better with Hell on Earth.

There isn't much stylistically new on Hell, but as soon as the opening track, "Animal Instinct," begins, it's obvious that there is a new urgency and depth at work.

"Crime pays, but for how long? 'Til you reach your downfall." Much of this album is the sound of teetering on the edge — watching your back and feeling the net close in. For every street boast and promise there is retribution and paranoia. The Mobb paints a brutal picture of their project home, crawling their way out but paying a heavy price for the ticket. Lyrically, the Mobb have never been so airtight and, though they hardly need any help, they recruit Method Man, Raekwon, Nas and Big Noyd to help out, giving the album an over-the-top lyrical intensity.

Hell on Earth is not for the PC or the faint of heart. Tracks like "Bloodsport" and "Nighttime Vultures" are swirling, bullet ridden tales, frightening as much for the brutal honesty as the deadpan cool of the delivery. By the time the album closes, the listener feels like they've been taken on a horrific madhouse ride, and the final two songs, the breathtaking "Still Shining" and the ominous "Apostle's Warning," create a kind of chilling last call — a final clarifying declaration that makes Hell on Earth one of the most powerful hip hop albums of the decade so far. A (Bradley Skaught)

COURTESY VIOLATOR MANAGEMENT

Prodigy on the left and Havoc make up Mobb Deep.

BILL EVANS TRIO
The Artist's Choice: Highlights From "Turn Out The Stars"
Warner Bros.

Just before his death on Sept. 15, 1980, Bill Evans had plans to release a double-album set of what was to be his last live run at the New York jazz-club The Village Vanguard in June of that year. This single disc has what that double-album set would have had, as the nine songs on here are what Evans wanted to release.

This set complements the full six CD set that Warner Bros. released this fall, featuring all the music from the Vanguard run with Evans on piano, the young Marc Johnson on bass and Joe LaBarbera on drums. Evans loved this trio almost as much as his famous trio of the late '50s which featured Scott LaFaro on bass and Paul Motian on drums.

All the songs on this disc are piano-centered and they pretty much all start off with a solo theme by Evans. When the band plays together, like on the opener "Bill's Hit Tune," they have a real fluid, boiling chemistry going on, especially with the versatile bassist Johnson, who gets much attention all through the disc. "Nardis," by Miles Davis, is an excerpt of a longer version on the box set with the excerpt here presenting a solo spot by Evans. Paul Simon's "I Do It For Your Love," is a well-adapted ballad. However, repetition gives this collection a bit of a handicap. B (Joshua Boyd)

STANLEY TURRENTINE
The Spoiler
Blue Note

On this re-issue of Turrentine's 1966, the second of four projects Turrentine was working on with arranger-pianist- composer Duke Pearson (Rough 'n Tumble, from the same year, was another). Turrentine uses a large-ensemble and the arrangements most all work out quite successfully.

Songs like Pearson's "The Magilla," and the newly added bonus track, Max Roach's "Lonesome Lover," feature the ensemble working at its best. "When The Sun Comes Out," and "Maybe September" both lag a little, but are spread out enough on the disc so that "La Fiesta," a Latin tune, with great percussion by Mickey Roker and Joseph Rivera, and "Sunny," a tender pop tune of the day, with sweet flute by James Spaulding, are able to bridge two weaker spots with a strong foundation. A good date though (Sept. 22, 1966) with McCoy Tyner, Pepper Adams and Blue Mitchell also all turning out commendable performances. B– (J.B.)

BUSH
Razorblade Suitcase
Interscope\Trauma Records

Bush has taken a lot of flack for it's lack of indie- credibility. Critics dismiss them as bubble-gum grunge, teeny-bopper fluff and Nirvana wanna-be's, insisting that most of their debut album, Sixteen Stone's sales are because singer Gavin Rossdale is, as my sister says, "so hot."

If you hated the first album, you'll hate Razorblade Suitcase. Rossdale's unmotivated stoner lyrics are only intensified this time out. Much of the album, particularly "Insect Kin" and "A Tendency to Start Fires," sounds like the work of a Nirvana cover band, a product of the Bush's collaboration with former Nirvana producer Steve Albini, and will only add fuel to critics' fire.But Razorblade Suitcase is still a great listen. You have to give props to Bush for doing what they do best, which is combining Neil Young style feedback with Rossdale's angst- ridden Gen-X voice. Bush may be a copy-cat, but they still copy better than anyone else in the lower rungs of alternative rock, a wasteland featuring the likes of Sponge and Candlebox. The album's first single, "Swallowed," is as sweet as angry '90s rock can get, and "Greedy Fly," which just hit radio, could be their best effort to date, So leave Bush alone. If Nirvana captured the essence of the depressed junkie scene, consider Bush, kings of the hard rock stoner scene and stoners aren't big on change. And what's so wrong with that? If it ain't broke, don't fix it. B– (Luke Meredith)

Tibetan, Chilean musical releases

Xenophile Records has released yet another excellent album: Arriesgaré La Piel, from the Chilean band that made the sound of Andean pan pipes famous, Inti-Illimani. On this album, however, the band has developed a different sound, much more rhythmic and centered around the guitar.

Spelled out in the extensive liner notes, a string of songs with brilliant lyrics fills this disc. The sultry "Medianoche (Midnight)" leads off with its insomniac sadness and poetry: "Ven a beber conmigo en doce copas / Doce campanas esta medianoche / Escucharás el bronce congleado / Tañendo nuestro adiós en doce copas (Come, drink with me from 12 glasses / Twelve bell tolls this midnight / You will hear the frozen brass sound / Our farewell with 12 voices.)"

Other songs ("El hacha," "Cumpleaños 80 de Nicanor," "El negro Bembón") have the distinctive combination of sensual poetry, wild images and forceful political concern that many Latin American artists (Frida Kahlo, Pablo Neruda) are known for. The disc's last piece, "Canto de las estrellas (Song for the Stars)" is a recording of a punfication ritual performed in a former Chilean concentration camp, with verses improvised from the poet Moisés Chaparro.

It isn't only great lyrics you'll find here — the music is equally beautiful, ranging from the somber joy of "Kalimba" to the emotional delicacy of the title track. This is an album well worth hearing.

Something inspiring of much less enthusiasm, Alan Stivell's new album Brian Boru has recently come across the desk. Stivell has been getting a lot of critical applause, but I must disagree. His diverse interest in a broad range of Celtic traditions is appealing, and there is nothing innately wrong with integrating electric guitar and rock 'n' roll into old Irish or Brythonic folk tunes. What makes this album fail for me is the half glam-rock, half new age tendencies it exhibits.

It's true, there are places on the album where Stivell rocks out, and places where the music is interesting. His mixture of rock with traditional music brings up some fascinating possibilities. It's just sad that the rock he plays could be pure concentrated extract of VH-1. Yuck.

Albums by Tibetan Buddhist monks have been

Turn to MUSIC, page 7

1997 IS ON SALE
20% OFF ALL CALENDARS
FOR THREE DAYS ONLY • DECEMBER 11-12-13
Pictorial - including UMASS BASKETBALL
Engagement Books • Desk and Wall Calendars
96/97 Academic Planners • Assignment Books
Calendars make great gifts!
be remembered all year long.
CAMPUS CENTER 545-2619 UNIVERSITY STORE Hours M-F 9pm - 5pm SAT 10am - 5pm

DISTRIBUTION MANAGER
WANTED FOR SPRING SEMESTER
Must be available between
7:45am and 11:00am
Monday through Friday

Come to the Collegian to apply, or call Ryan Courtemance or Alycia Hines at 545-3500

DOMINO'S PIZZA
CHEESE PIZZA SALE
$4.99 MEDIUM CHEESE PIZZA TOPPINGS $.99 EXTRA LIMIT 10 AT A TIME
$6.99 LARGE CHEESE PIZZA TOPPINGS $1.25 EXTRA LIMIT 10 AT A TIME
$8.99 EXTRA LARGE CHEESE TOPPINGS $1.50 EXTRA LIMIT 10 AT A TIME
DOMINO'S PIZZA AMHERST 256-8911 OPEN TILL 4AM
Expires 12/30/96 NOT GOOD WITH ANY OTHER SPECIAL

Roberts, Tweed excel in documentary

By Adam Levine
Collegian Staff

SYNTHETIC PLEASURES
Directed by Iara Lee
Playing at Pleasant Street Theater

Please do not get the wrong idea of this film from its quirky title. This is no made in Canada and straight to video thriller starring Shannon Tweed and Eric Roberts. On the contrary, Synthetic Pleasures is a visually oriented documentary that combines the structure of Strange Days with the morality of "Star Trek." The end result is an innocent but bizarre look at the artificial realities which modern science has created for our decaying natural world.

The film places a tremendous emphasis on how intricate our synthetic pleasures are in our lives and presents it in a completely matter of fact way. At one point, some generation-X type intellectual claims, "the electricity goes off and you realize you're not living in paradise, you're living in hell." Although this statement may come across as quite bold, this is the documentary's primary focus to examine this particular phenomena. It achieves this goal in a completely original and intriguing way by refraining from persuasion, but yet leaving it impossible for the viewer to not render some form of opinion about this cybergenetic age.

The technology is presented more like amusement rides than threatening devises which both reinvent and alter the natural world. We are taken to Japan's Ocean Dome to watch its visitors tan themselves under an artificial sun and swim within an artificial sea. The question arises: is this harmful or negative to our individual lives or society in general? One would most likely respond with an answer of "no." The film then changes perspective to explore the question from a different point of view. What if we have destroyed our natural earth to such a degree that repairs seem far too much of an effort? Instead of creating technology to fix our human controlled disasters, we rather choose to lose ourselves in fake, manipulated carbon copies of the real thing.

Synthetic Pleasures at times loses itself in the contrast of technology vs. God. A French performance artist claims she is playing the role of creator by having plastic surgery alter her natural appearance (she wants to look like the Mona Lisa). New York raver club kids also believe their tattoos and piercings are more than free expression, but the individual taking control of their environment. Smart drinks, cybersex and tourism are just few of the "technological" advances we are subjected to, all without any blunt criticisms of their relevances to society, especially as we approach a new millennium.

At times the computer animation is so dazzling that it is easy for the viewer to become indulged to the point where the background voiced commentary seems annoying. Set to computer controlled rave style music and fast paced editing, Synthetic Pleasures is as entertaining to watch as it is interesting to analyze. Although by the end you feel a bit disappointed with the film's message, because it really isn't saying anything we haven't heard before. Yet, this is the farthest thing from your usual dry documentary and to experience it for solely its kinetic visual elements will not be disappointing. B

Theater guild's Pajama Game no sleeper

By Lisa M. Oliveri
Collegian Staff

THE PAJAMA GAME
Student Union Ballroom
Dec 6

"Only 10 years from today..."

These words were sung by the cast of The Pajama Game as they pondered what they could buy with the seven and a half-cent raise they were fighting for. Well, 10 years from today, members of the University of Massachusetts Theater Guild will have fond memories to look back on as they put on a great performance last Friday evening.

The Pajama Game is a musical comedy about love and work. It centers on a group of factory workers who are vying for a raise, and when they are rebuffed, wreak havoc on the pajama industry by shoddily sewing on buttons. Intermingled are budding romances and jealous partners.

Though the set was somewhat lacking, the UMass Theater Guild pulled off the performance without a hitch. The Pajama Game had great singing and even better acting, and combined with the innovative choreography of Nicky Pajer, culminated in a enjoyable evening. Each one of the cast showed great effort and they all appeared as if they were having the time of their life.

Notable performances were given by two of the leads, Babe (Jessica Inserra) and Sid (David Joseph, who you may remember from last year's Chess). They were stunning belting out the duet "There once was a man (who loved a woman)," and Joseph was very convincing in his courtship of Inserra.

But they were not the only ones who shined — Pop (Jason Czernich), Gladys (Michelle Ouellette) and Poopsie (Denise Baron) all gave wonderful performances, as did the rest of the cast.

Undoubtedly, the show was stolen by the fantastic, comedic Hines (Tim Fisk). From his snazzy duet of "Picture This," to his devotion to his boss, Fisk maintained a high level of energy and not once failed to make the audience laugh.

It's nice to see a student production where all of the cast is talented and devoted, and The Pajama Game is one of the best this semester.

Madonna more suited to Evita

Singer shares many similarities with Argentina's Eva Peron

By Michael Warren
Associated Press

NEW YORK — They share an impressive resume: blondes with ambition, legendary populists, shocking performance artists.

They are women who began with nothing and transformed themselves into living icons, revered and hated by millions.

Countless others with drive, smarts, fashion sense and peroxide have carved out leading roles in macho societies. But Madonna believes she is uniquely suited for the starring role in Alan Parker's film version of the Andrew Lloyd Webber musical Evita.

"Only I could understand her passion and her pain," Madonna wrote in an eight-page letter to Parker, begging to play Eva Peron, the remarkable wife and tireless campaigner for Argentine Gen. Juan Peron.

Others doubt whether Madonna's talents are up to the task of adapting Lloyd Webber's musical, a phenomenal worldwide hit that made more than $1 billion exploiting myths about the radio actress-turned-first lady.

And many Argentines old enough to remember Evita are livid that the former pop-tart with a crucifix fetish is portraying their martyred mother figure, who is still revered 44 years after her death from uterine cancer.

Still, with some brown contact lenses and a painful mouthpiece to hide the gap in Madonna's teeth, the physical resemblance is striking, and the facts about their lives do offer some fascinating parallels.

Both grew up in the sticks. Evita, the youngest of five out-of-wedlock children in the village of Los Toldos, lost her father when she was seven. Madonna, one of eight kids in Bay City, Mich., was five when she lost her mother.

Both desperately wanted to escape to the big city. Evita was 15 when she arrived in Buenos Aires in 1935, alone and with no money, hoping to be like Norma Shearer, the 1930s film star.

A 17-year-old Madonna, also alone, arrived in New York City in the 1970s with dreams of being a dancer. She was forced to pose nude and eat out of garbage cans to get by.

Argentina in the 1940s was extremely conservative and offered very few public roles for women, while nowadays in the United States, almost anything goes. Still, both became scapegoats for female sexuality as they challenged the cultural hierarchy.

Actually, both women were less interested in sex than power — wearing spikes and leather or nothing at all, Madonna has shown her wannabes that they can be in control. She even had her baby Lourdes, born Oct. 14, on her own terms, with little talk of romance, let alone marriage to the father, a bicycle-racer she plucked out of Central Park named Carlos Leon.

Likewise, the marriage of Eva and Juan Peron was more like a business partnership — their private letters were full of politics, and she paid little attention to her body, failing to get a checkup before her cancer became terminal.

Something else — an ability to connect with the needs and dreams of ordinary people — made fans adore both women.

Cast members reported death threats, and Evita's sisters deplored Madonna's "blasphemous attitude."

Madonna tried to smooth things out by avoiding her customary raunchy talk and promising to be more respectful to Evita's memory than the musical was. In the end, she was allowed to sing "Don't Cry for Me Argentina" to 4,000 cheering extras from the Casa Rosada's famous balcony.

Tomas Eloy Martinez, who collected the general's memoirs and recently wrote Santa Evita, a novel about the bizarre afterlife of Evita's embalmed corpse, says "Madonna is an entertainer — her glory is the glory of the moment. And Evita is a political woman who transformed her country and her gender. Her glory is more durable."

■ music

continued from page 6

a growing industry since the '80s. They're even on tour, collecting money for the Dalai Lama's government-in-exile and performing traditions such as the Yak Dance and stylized monk-master argumentation to standing-room only audiences. The whole thing is a bit surreal, which perhaps isn't entirely out of line with Buddhist teaching.

Buddhist chant, with its profoundly deep, peaceful voicings complemented by surprising bursts of cymbals and rough horns is the focus of the new Tibet: the Heart of Dharma compilation, on ellipsis arts... Records. It's a little disappointing that ellipsis chose to put out a record of Buddhist chant, since so many are already available. This record company's products are so consistently excellent that I wish they'd given attention elsewhere.

But whatever ellipsis touches turns to gold, and this record is no exception. You can't beat getting a small hardcover book full of brilliant color photos and extensive, accessible liner notes along with a high-quality recording of authentic traditional music.

Daniel Bodah is a Collegian columnist.

[cranial] COLLISION
From NYC
MR. KLEEN • YOUNG COWBOY • LOTUS • LAU'd BROS. • HUSH • AARON S.
LIVE DJs SPINNIN'
jungle - house - techno - hip hop - tribal
CASH BAR! (21 + ID)
$6 all ages
FRIDAY DECEMBER 13th 1996
Campus Center Auditorium
UMASS 7pm - 2am
Tickets available at TIX Unlimited
Student Union, 545-0412

Party Time.

ZANNA
downtown Amherst

Come to
Barnes & Noble at Boston University's
JOB FAIR!
and get off to a great start this winter...
If you want a fast-paced job that will get your winter off to a great start, it's here at Barnes & Noble at Boston University, Boston's best source for books... and the best choice for retail jobs. Find out more at our JOB FAIR on December 11th.
You could be a sales associate - just long enought to get us through the winter rush and get your bank account in shape. Get here early enough and you could be hired on the spot!
• Part-time jobs
• Immediate hires
• Flexible scheduling
• Store discount up to 35%
• Friendly work environment
WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 11TH
10AM - 3PM
CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE
If you want to get a closer look at us, but can't come to our JOB FAIR, call (617) 236-7402 for more information.
We are an equal opportunity employer.
Barnes & Noble AT BOSTON UNIVERSITY

Go Ahead, Card Me.

Talk about your great deal...the Okemo College VIP Card. For just $25, your first lift ticket (Mon.–Fri.) is FREE, then ski or ride for 1/2 price on weekdays and get $10 off on weekends and holidays for the rest of the season. Snickers, Mountain Dew and HMV Record Stores are throwing in special deals, too! So c'mon up to Okemo - it never felt so good to get carded.
Okemo InfoLine: (802) 228-4041 • 24-Hour Snow Line: (802) 228-5222 • http://www.okemo.com
OKEMO
Non-College Season Pass and Stub* Show Rides Anytime
Holiday periods are 12/25/96-1/1/97, 1/17-19/97, 2/17-21/97. For the season pass, present your college I.D. and proof of full-time student status at the Okemo Main Administrative Office
*The prices of the College Card and Season Pass exclude Vermont 5% sales tax

COMPUTER FAIR MULLINS CENTER DEC 14 10AM-4:00PM
Tri-State Fairs: Original Area Shows since 1987
Buy at wholesale prices directly at the show from nearly 50 independent competing companies under one roof. From full systems to shareware, it's all here
Located on the campus of UMass. Rte 9 onto Rte 116N at Staples taking first exit, turn right
This is a discount ticket. General admission is $7.00 each. Clip or photocopy this ad and save $2.00 ea- Student I.D. only $2 ea admission
Our dealers feature the IBM/PC marketplace. Join us four times a year. Kids under 10 free with parent
Don't over sleep, one day show only!
ONE MONTH FREE INTERNET AT THIS SHOW FROM TIAC

GEO Membership Meeting
December 12th 5 pm -7 pm
Campus Center 804
This meeting is to decide how the union should respond to the Administration's Contract Proposals regarding:
Affirmative Action
Child Care
Your Presence and Your Voice will help set the direction the union will take on these important issues.
If you have questions or suggestion for the agenda, please stop by the GEO Office -- Room 201 in the Student Union Building, Or call 545-5317
For More Information, Check out the GEO Home Page http://www-unix.oit.umass.edu/~geo

■ Dunlap

continued from page 12

work harder. I try to lead by example," Dunlap said.

Dunlap also thinks that a key responsibility of the captain position is to relax the team before big meets.

"Sometimes the pressure can get to some girls, and I try to be the one who tells a joke to ease the tension," Dunlap said. "I'm one of the only people who's there everyday in practice, and I'd like people to know that I'm there for them. It's one of the perks of the job that I have no problem accepting."

Molly Dunlap is staying at UMass for a fifth year to pursue her degree in Education and Sports Management. She hopes that there is a future for her as a track or cross country coach, but knows no matter what happens, she will always keep a place in her heart for the sport. Though she may never be a champion in the UMass record books, she has already won the praise of her peers, and this reporter.

Minutewomen knock off Huskies

UM women's cross country takes eight events in win

By Corey Peter Goodman
Collegian Staff

For the first time in school history, the Massachusetts women's indoor track and field team knocked off its long– time rival Northeastern University in a tri–meet at Durham, New Hampshire Saturday.

In a stunning display of events, the Minutewomen stole eight events en route to a convincing 73–60 win over the Huskies. The Wildcats of New Hampshire finished a distant third with 37 points.

"For the past couple of years we've been closing the gap between Northeastern and us," coach Julie LaFreniere said. "Now I think our program has pulled slightly ahead of theirs."

UMass' attack was commanded by junior Rebecca Donaghue who took home first–place finishes in both the 1500m and 800m events.

Other Minutewomen who won their respective events included junior Shana Mitchell who set a personal record in the 20–pound weight division with a 48–foot–4 5–inch toss.

Stephanie Townson also achieved a personal record while winning the shot put competition with a 41–foot–5–inch heave.

Sophomore Shelanda Irish won the 200m race at 26.4 seconds, and senior Katie Greenia earned first–place honors in the 3000m with a time of 10:38.

In addition to the outstanding performances of the upper classmen, LaFreniere was simply amazed by the emergence of her phenomenal freshman class.

"Our freshmen had a surprisingly smooth transition into college competition," LaFreniere said. "It caught us a little off guard."

Andrea Comeau set a school record with her 5–foot–8–inch performance in the high jump.

Nicole Way won the triple jump with a 36–foot–1–inch leap.

And freshmen Melissa Ward and Mary Eaton were key members of the 4x400m group that took first–place.

"Our kids were just a little more hungrier than Northeastern's kids," LaFreniere said. "From the look of things, this could be a fun season."

UMass women's swim storms away with win

By Chris Krein
Collegian Staff

The storm that ripped across the East Coast this weekend might have originated in Philadelphia judging from the Massachusetts women's swimming and diving performance last Friday and Saturday.

The team traveled to the Keystone State for the Philadelphia Invitational and annihilated the competition in the nine-school meet. The only squad that was even remotely close was host school, LaSalle University. Still, the Minutewomen outscored them by a phenomenal 197 points.

The Minutewomen scored 902 points for first place. They were followed by LaSalle (705), Bloomsburg (456), West Chester (391), Fordham (267), St. Francis (243), Rider (228), Drexel (185) and Howard (148).

UMass brought in a 3–2 dual meet record, but the team clearly thrives in the invitational format. This bodes well for the squad considering that their next two meets are Christmas break invitationals in San Juan, Puerto Rico and a January 10–11 showdown in Rhode Island.

The team's tremendous depth was evident in Philadelphia and they were especially boosted by strong performances by the freshman and sophomores.

Freshman Lia Lansky continued her string of strong performances winning the 200 fly in a time of 2:09.99. Fellow first–year swimmer, Andrea Spencer, garnered three top three finishes over the two–day meet. She placed second in the 100 fly with a 1:00.30, second in the 200 I.M. touching at 2:11.82 and a 55.05 in the 100 free, good enough for third place.

The sophomores were paced by Jill Carroll and Shana Strothers. Carroll outdistanced the pack to take home the victory in the 50 free in 25.24. Strothers, a Pennsylvania native from Sellersville, placed second in the 400 I.M. with a respectable 4:40.85.

Senior Jessica Farley complimented the youth explosion with a solid meet. She was victorious in the 200 I.M. on Friday with a season best 2:11.70. She came back on Saturday to capture the 100 free title in 54.49 and place second in the 200 free in 1:56.52.

The most interesting stories from the weekend might have been in the junior class however.

Karen Sonnwald showed that she is completely back from a foot injury that kept her out of the water earlier this season. She finished second in the 1650 free with a 17:43.59 and came back to earn points in the 500 free, placing third with a time of 5:09.37.

The biggest performance though came from diving sensation, Angelique Rodriguez, who continues to eradicate her own records and set the standard higher with each meet. She shattered not only a pair of UMass records, but meet records as well. Rodriguez easily took the one–meter title (10 attempts) with a 209.75, 21 points higher than her previous best mark. Her 438.20 in the three–meter (10 attempts) broke the old mark set in 1990–91 by Allison White.

Rodriguez, who hails from Guaynabo, Puerto Rico, will be looking for an equally stellar performance on January 4, the date of the team's next meet. It will mark her homecoming, as the team will look to continue its momentum in its first 1997 meet, the San Juan Invitational.

Hill bucked as San Antonio head coach

By Kelley Shannon
Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — The San Antonio Spurs, reeling from a 3-15 start, fired coach Bob Hill on yesterday, the same day David Robinson was to join the lineup for the first time this season.

Spurs general manager Gregg Popovich replaces Hill and was to make his first appearance as an NBA head coach last night at Phoenix, where Robinson was expected to play against the Suns. Hill was fired despite having led San Antonio to 121 victories the last two seasons. But with Robinson out with a sore back, the Spurs started 2-10, the worst start in franchise history.

Even without Robinson, though, team president Jack Diller said he thought the team's performance should be better than it has been.

"We have perceived over some period of time now that the team has not been playing anywhere near as competitively as it should," Diller said. "We had dropped to a point where it was unacceptable."

Diller said Popovich, who served as the top assistant with Golden State for two seasons, will serve as Hill's permanent — not interim — replacement and will retain the general manager's job.

"At this point I thought a change in direction was necessary," said Popovich, who was an assistant Spurs coach from 1988-92. "The decision wasn't made in a knee-jerk way. It was made with a lot of thought and a lot of counsel and a lot of heartache."

Popovich acknowledged in a telephone interview that Hill's ouster and his stepping in as coach the day Robinson was set to return "looks quite self-serving." But Popovich said a change was needed.

"It's better sooner than later," he said. "We'll have more time to do what we need to do with this particular group of guys. To wait just for (public relations) reasons or for a so-called better time just doesn't make sense as far as the good of the team is concerned."

The Spurs have been plagued by other injuries, too.

Chuck Person has been out all season with a back problem, Charles Smith has missed games because of inflammation in his right knee, and other players have been struggling with assorted minor injuries.

On Monday, Hill had said the team's mental state was not good. "We've been playing shorthanded and that gets a little old. It wears you down," Hill was quoted as saying in yesterday's San Antonio Express-News.

Hill's dismissal followed a loss last weekend to the Vancouver Grizzlies — the only team in the league with a record worse than San Antonio's.

Despite the Spurs' regular-season success under Hill the last two seasons, the team never excelled in the postseason.

He led the Spurs to a league-best 62-20 record in 1994-95, his first season in San Antonio, but they lost to eventual champion Houston in the Western Conference finals. Last season, they won 59 games only to lose to Utah in the conference semifinals.

Diller said Spurs executives were disappointed with the team's playoff performance last season.

Hill came to the Spurs in August 1994 from the Orlando Magic, where he was an assistant coach. He had been the coach of the New York Knicks in 1986-87 and the Indiana Pacers from 1990-1993. Hill's dismissal is the third NBA coaching change this season, following the resignations of Bernie Bickerstaff in Denver and Cotton Fitzsimmons in Phoenix.

COLLEGIAN SPORTS
bringing it to you every day

Atlantic 10 Men's basketball Round—up

Monday night

Temple 67
Tulane 49

Virginia Tech 66
N.C.–Greensboro 50

Maryland 74
Geo. Washington 68

Last night

(16) Fresno St. 102
UMass 81

(19) Xavier 94
Long Island 86

La Salle 75
American 59

Coppin St. 91
Duquesne 57

Rhode Island 96
Providence 79

* BOLD indicates A–10 team

COLLEGIAN SPORTS
WE GOT BALLS

7pm, Dec. 13th at the MULLINS CENTER
University of Massachusetts Amherst
Division 1 Hockey East
UMass Hockey
VS
Princeton Hockey
Pick up your tickets at:
☞ Curry Hicks Cage
☞ 'TIX' in the Student Union
☞ Hockey Table in the Campus Center
☞ At the Game
Be a Part of the Action

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
BE A BARTENDER
747-9888
SPRINGFIELD

SHOPPING FOR PRICE?
YANKEE DISCOUNT OIL
Northampton / Holyoke
584-4112 • 535-1888
SAME DAY DELIVERY

Kick Butts
QUIT SMOKING
Support Group
Ongoing support group every Wednesday night starting October 23 from 7 - 8PM at the UMASS Campus Center.
Room number posted at elevator
Are you thinking about quitting smoking?
Have you quit and felt it difficult to stay quit?
Do you want to help other people quit and stay quit?
Come to your quit smoking support group.
Get professional advice and counseling, peer counseling and proven quit tips and techniques.
FREEDOM FROM SMOKING
FREE OF CHARGE
For more information call Steve at: 577-5181
Jointly sponsored by: University Health Services Health Education Division, The Family Planning Council of Western Massachusetts and The Massachusetts Tobacco Control Program.

OOPS! Star Lumber Corp.
•Free Estimates
•Lifetime Repair Warranty
•Auto Glass Replacement
•Car & Truck Rental
North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA
549-2880
(One Mile from UMass bus route)

Tonight
RETRO NIGHT
MUSIC OF THE 70s
1/2 Price Appetizers & Nachos
3-5 pm WED-SAT 7-11 pm
THE PUB
15 East Pleasant Street
WEEKLY DRINK SPECIALS
Bacardi Limon & Coke
Vodka & Cranberry
$2.00 16oz Drinks
Red Dog 16oz $1.50

DON'T GO INTO HIBERNATION ON YOUR WINTER BREAK
Winter Intersession
January 2 - 17
...spend that time earning extra credits at UMass Lowell. If you want to move ahead in your educational program, and earn college credit, enroll in UMass Lowell's Winter Intersession. This highly concentrated session is also a great way to earn transfer credits if you're enrolled in another University. This year, make the most of your winter break...at UMass Lowell
DAY CLASSES:
Monday - Saturday, 9am - 12noon
EVENING CLASSES:
Monday - Friday, 6 - 9pm
Saturday 1 - 4pm
Credit Courses (3 credits) available in:
• Liberal Arts • Sciences
• Mathematics • Computers
• Social Sciences • Music
• Management
Cost: $115.00 per undergraduate credit
For a Winter Intersession Course Bulletin, call the Division of Continuing Education/Office of Enrollment Services at (508) 934-2481.
Or just fill out the coupon and mail it to: University of Massachusetts Lowell, Office of Enrollment Services/DCE, One University Avenue, Lowell, MA 01854-2881.
Name
Address
City
State Zip
Phone ( )
Institution Currently Attending
UMass Lowell
UNIVERSITY COLLEGE
Division Of Continuing Education

■ Minutemen

continued from page 12

chance shots.

"I don't think I've ever played against a team that offensive rebounded against us as well as they did," Fresno State coach Jerry Tarkanian said. "The only thing that kept them in the game was they were getting the second and third shot on us."

While Ketner and Basit played hard last night, it is still too early for them to carry the team.

"I can't ask any more of Aj and Lari," Flint said. "they gave me 34 [points] and 18 [rebounds], you can't ask for two guys that have only played six games to carry the team."

Strong post presence isn't worth squat without consistent defense. Case in point — Bull Dogs guard Chris Herren, who abused UMass for 25 points.

Just minutes into the game, Fresno forward Daymond Forney clinked a free throw off the rim, yet the 'Dogs managed to kick it back out to Herren for the trey and an early 3–0 lead.

The Minutemen were just out–hustled. Letting a sharp–shooting guard, hot to impress the hometown crowd like Herren slip through the cracks and laying off the defensive boards doesn't win ball games.

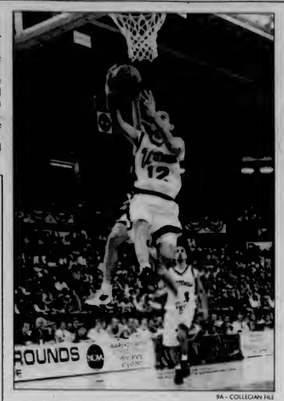
"The guys weren't ready to play from the tip," Flint said. "I learned something today, you have to go with the dudes that want to work hard every day. If you are going to go down, you are going to go down that way, but those guys will help you win some games."

After Thursday's home game against Drexel, the Minutemen head south to face No. 2 Wake Forest a week before mixing it up with No. 11 North Carolina at the Meadowlands.

Let's just hope Flint can find "those guys" soon.

■ hoop

continued from page 12



swered points to record a Mullins Center record for points scored by an opponent with 102. The previous high had been George Washington's 86 points in last year's 86–76 loss.

"If we're going to take L's at least we're going to give an honest effort every night," Flint said. "If a guy's not ready to play, he doesn't deserve to be out there. That's the bottom line."

Ketner and Basit proved to be bright spots on the evening for the Minutemen, as they led the team with 18 and 16 points respectively. Ketner pulled down 12 rebounds, while Basit and Inus Norville had six apiece.

Three other Minutemen were in double figures. Edgar Padilla finished with 10 points and five assists, Carmelo Travieso had 13 points and three assists and Charlton Clarke came away with 12 points and four rebounds.

The Minutemen play again tomorrow night when they host Drexel at 7 p.m.

94 - COLLEGIAN FILE

Senior point guard, Edgar Padilla struggled to control the embattled UMass offense.

■ NHL

continued from page 12

weeks as he sits out with a torn MCL, suffered on his first shift after scoring the game–winning goal midway through the third period.

Koivu is by light years the best thing the Canadiens have going for them, and without the league's third–leading scorer (38 points), and his offensive creativity and scoring skill, the Hab offense disolves.

The bleue, blanc et rouge was further stung earlier in the game when Marc Bureau was lost for three months with both a torn MCL and a torn ACL.

Three other Habs were hurt in the game, but none will miss extended periods of time. They were dancing in the streets of Austin Saturday, but for once, Rue St. Catherine looked nothing like Sixth Street.

• The Kids are Alright:

Just when you thought it was safe to return to the Kiel Center, Mike Keenan and Brett Hull are at it again. After calling a truce in their long–running feud over the summer, the NHL's all–time leader in welcomes worn out is back chewing out his All–World winger.

Hull was a healthy scratch Friday night in Denver against the defending Stanley Cup champion Avalanche. With some solid young players turning the corner for him, Keenan was able to sit the Golden Brett.

Rookie Jim Campbell out of Westboro leads the NHL with five game–winning goals and Harry York has impressed, racking up 17 points a year removed from the ECHL.

So, a year after causing controversy by stripping Hull of his captaincy, Keenan is back to benching him in a feud that rages on forever like Spaceball 1 flying across the screen in the opening to Spaceballs.

If one goes though, look for it to be Hull, despite it representing the apocalypse in terms of ticket sales.

Keenan, meanwhile is sitting on top of a guaranteed contract through 2001 that still owes him $11 million, an awful lot of money to pay a fired coach for a small market team.

St. Louis might join Philadelphia, Chicago and New York as places that have learned to despise Keenan, rolling up their initial welcoming red carpets, but singing the blues or not, it is in Missouri where he'll stay until the magical year by when Stanley Kubrick thought we'd have sent a man to Jupiter.

Leigh Torbin is a Collegian columnist.

Minutewomen host Kent State

By Luke Meredith
Collegian Staff

Home sweet home.

After four games on the road, and a hard–earned 2–2 record to show for it, the Massachusetts women's basketball team returns home tonight for a date with the Kent Golden Flashes at 7:00 in the William D. Mullins Center.

After being spanked by the Stanford Cardinal last Friday night, the Minutewomen redeemed themselves Monday night with a 58–57 nail–biting win over Holy Cross. Freshman sensation Kelly Van Huisen hit an off–balance layup and ensuing foul shot to tie the game late in the second half, and senior Sabriya Mitchell banged home a three–pointer with four seconds on the clock for the win. The win improved UMass to 3–3.

Van Huisen has been the spark all season long for the Minutewomen. The Haverhill product has stepped in admirably in place of the injured Beth Kuzmeski, averaging 14 points a game in her first six games as a collegian. Senior forward Crystal Carroll, a 1995–1996 All Atlantic–10 selection, has picked up where she left off in last year's NCAA season, bagging 17 points and seven boards so far in the young season.

Kent comes to Amherst tired. Tonight's game is the last of a six–game road trip, and the Golden Flashes sputter into the Mullins Center at 1–4. They feature a balanced attack, led by 6–foot junior forward Carrie Templin. Templin averages 11 points and seven rebounds a contest, and is helped out in the Kent frontcourt by behemoth 6–foot–4 center Melanie Henschke, who chips in with 11 points and six rebounds a contest. Their backcourt is experienced, with senior B.J Goldman Smith and junior Ashley Bland combining for 19 points a game.

Old UMass alumni will notice a familiar face running the Golden Flash attack. Kent head coach Bob Lindsay is a 1976 graduate of Massachusetts, and will be facing his old school for the first time. Ironically, Lindsay made his mark on the UMass campus not in the Curry Hicks Cage for Jack Leaman's basketball squad, but rather as a four–year letterwinner for the lacrosse team. He hasn't done too badly for an old lacrosse player. Lindsay is the winningest coach in Kent history, racking up a 122–84 record in eight seasons with the Golden Flashes. Last season, the UMass alum won MAC Coach of the Year honors after leading Kent to the conference title.

Tonight's game will be the last game for the Minutewomen before finals. UMass returns to action Dec. 22 when the Hartford Hawks come to the Mullins Center. The Wagner Christmas Tournament, featuring games with Wagner and either New Hampshire or Colgate, is on the Minutewomen's schedule for Dec. 28 and 29.

THANG VO / COLLEGIAN

Leading scorer, Crystal Carroll leads the 3–3 Minutewomen into a tussle with Kent tonight at the Mullins Center.

■ NFL

continued from page 12

People like Oakland's defensive lineman Chester McGlockton, who is running a guns–for–tickets program. McGlockton, along with several teammates, is offering two tickets to an Oakland game for anyone turning in his/her handguns.

The saddest thing, though, is how much these people are overshadowed by the negative media attention given to people like Michael Irvin and now Leon Lett. It's easy to see how it happens, since those giving to charities are far too often shy about it, or don't want to seem self–serving, but they can't be overlooked.

• The NFL will lose one of its most charismatic members at the end of the season. After years of work, Mason "Red" Cashion is planning to retire.

Cashion became a fan favorite with his signature drawled "first down" calls, but he is also one of the best referees in the game.

Cashion's team of refs not only makes good calls, but they do so without the lengthy conferences other refs repeatedly have.

While Cashion should be commended for leaving before his great ability gets impaired with age, the NFL will have a difficult time replacing him.

• The Patriots' post–season plans took a possible turn for the worse this week when they, despite clinching a playoff berth, possibly lost Sam Gash for the rest of the season to a knee injury.

One of the best lead blockers in the league, Gash has helped Curtis Martin get over 1,000 yards rushing in his first two seasons. Last year, Gash's fullback prowess earned him a spot as a Pro Bowl alternate.

This year, the Patriots' "unsung hero" began shaking loose the one knock against him — that he can't catch the ball. He caught 33 passes for 276 yards before his injury. With his newfound ability, Gash should get a trip to Hawaii at the end of the year along with his more heralded teammates — Drew Bledsoe, Ben Coates, Bruce Armstrong and Martin.

The injury makes even more important the mid–season pick–up of TE/FB Keith Byars. Byars has added a lot of maturity to a young Patriots team and his role will become even larger now.

He'll be sharing time with rookie Marrio Grier, a sixth– round choice out of Tennessee–Chattanooga. Grier has been impressive in his limited playing time, earning his first NFL TD against the Jets on Sunday.

• Being that this is my last column of the semester, it's time to make my final picks of the year. And as much as my heart wants to say the Patriots will win the Super Bowl, my head says differently.

The six challengers for the NFC title will almost certainly be Green Bay, Carolina, San Francisco, Dallas, Philadelphia and Washington.

Look for the Eagles' and Redskins' current problems to continue in the playoffs with first–round losses to the Cowboys and 49ers. Look for those teams to head into either the Panther's or Pack's home field, and like everyone else who's gone there this year, to leave the losers. Then, on the frozen tundra of Lambeau Field the storied Packers should beat the upstart Panthers for another trip to the Super Bowl.

On the other side, look for Denver, New England, Pittsburgh, Buffalo, Kansas City and Indianapolis to vie for the chance to break the NFC's Super Bowl streak.

• The Steelers should take care of Indy again, setting up a great game with New England in Foxboro. The Chiefs will avenge their 1993 AFC Championship game loss to the Bills for the honor of losing to Denver again.

Denver will continue to roll in Mile–High, whether they face the Steelers or Patriots, and John Elway will get one last chance to redeem the quarterback class of '83.

And, disregarding last week's pummeling of the Broncos by Green Bay, he will finally get the job done, earning a ring and making number 13 unlucky for the NFC.

Jacob W. Michaels is a Collegian columnist.

■ Price

continued from page 12

practice, but he helps me because he's so talented."

Helping out captains Ron Tauro and Christian Abbot and coach Ken O'Brien in the leadership department is also on Price's agenda. No longer an underclassman, he's jumped at the chance to take on the responsibility of helping others.

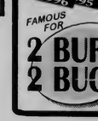
"I'd like to help out the captains," he said. "I want to make sure the underclassmen have a positive attitude, and keep everybody intact.

"And I'm just hoping the team can win the Atlantic 10 conference, and finish in the top five in New England."

And his personal goals for this year?

"I'd like to finish in the top five in New England in the 200m, and get down to at least the 6.40s In the 55m. And hopefully, our relay squad can get into the 3:11's."

All of those things could and should be realized. And he'll be shooting for them every week, regardless of who his "next contestant" is.



COLLEGIAN SPORTS STAFF PREDICTIONS

	UMass
Fred Hurlbrink Jr.	70
Luke Meredith	70
Chris Stamm	80	50
Casey Kane	67	53

U-SAVE AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Weekend Special
Noon Friday to Monday AM - Starting at $59.95
North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd. North Amherst, MA
549-RENT
• Cars • Mini Vans • Trucks • Cargo Vans • 15 Passenger Vans • Low Daily/Weekly/Weekend Rates
• We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 years or Older • Direct Billing To Insurance Co.
(One Mile from UMass bus route)

Pack Your Bags!
Go Skiing!
Go to the Beach!
Go Home!
DON'T PAY RENT WHILE YOU'RE GONE!
Need to Sublet Your Place?
USE US!

TRAVEL SMART!
One Way Roundtrip
LONDON (NOW NY, BOSTON or DC)
$134 $249
FROM NEW YORK
PARIS $224 $427
ROME $259 $489
SAN JOSE, COSTA RICA $235 $446
Scheduled flights. Fares to worldwide destinations. Eurailpasses available.
Weekend surcharges may apply. Customs-immigration taxes apply. Fares subject to change without notice. Int'l. student I.D. cards may be required.
PRISM TRAVEL
342 Madison Ave., NY, NY 10173
212-986-8420*
800-272-9676
*in NYC

PETE'S DRIVE-IN
FAMOUS FOR 2 BURGS 2 BUCKS
ROUTE 9 HADLEY, MA YEAR 'ROUND
http://www.javanet/~mrburger/

MINI '96 MALL
Today thru- Friday December 13 9am-5pm Student Union Ballroom
One-Stop Shopping Extravaganza is HERE
With over 40 vendors
For more information call 549-1710

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

All University Women are invited to attend Alpha Chi Omega Open Rush Holiday Party Thurs 12/12 from 6 8pm Call Sam @ 549-8458 for more info

Mixed DJ Tapes- ZED music, NYC House, Hip Hop, Reggae, Disco, Techno, Latino On sale @ mini-mall 96 Student Union Ballroom, Tues - Fri

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Take over lease for 2 BDR Apt. in Boulders Call 253-3780

Nice 1 Bedroom apartment in Sunderland All utilities included Great for couples! $540/month 665-8727 Leave Message Jan 1st

Puffton Village Large 1 bedroom, dishwasher/AC, $515 Heat included Available Jan 1 Call Helene or Doug 549-0786

AUTO FOR SALE

'82 Chevy Cavalier St Good condition, $500 534-5827

1989 VW Fox 89K miles, A/C, excellent condition, $3300 or B/O Call 256-1588

1986 Chevy Caleb Wagon Auto, black, 140k, runs well, needs nothing! Call Kyle 256-2225 $300 firm

1982 Toyota Supra Good condition, AT/PW/PD/PS/AM/FM Cass Call 546-0657 or 413-624-3982

Vision Quest Vw Hightop 1985 Dodge 350 solo camper, good condition, well maintained $1,995 (508)544-5874

AUTO FOR SALE

1990 Honda CRX SI Red, 16 valve, average mileage, new exhaust & brakes, front end mask, driving lights, AC, new tires, filter charger, moonroof, alloys, stereo/tape $5,500 or B/O Call Derek at 549-9266

'96 Honda Civic AC, runs great, 119,000 miles, $7500.00 or B/O Call John 256-1059

Escort '86 runs good, 2 new tires, battery, etc $800 o/b.o. 546-2398 lv msg.

EMPLOYMENT

Exceptional Summer Opportunity- Camp Wayne, NE PA Sports oriented Counselor/Specialists for all land/water sports including tennis, camping, climbing/ropes, rocketry, roller hockey, sailing/waterskiing, A&C, drama, video Campus Interviews Tuesday, March 11 Please call (800)737-9296

Ski and Save Live in country inn (Southern Vermont) Salary plus room/board Wait tables, cleaning, dishes, prep, etc December to April Call (802)674-4140 after 12/13 Send resume to Three Mountain Inn, P.O Box 180, Jamaica, VT 05343 Interviewing 12/15-22

SPRING BREAK '97! Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica and Florida EARN FREE TRIPS AND CASH Call (800)700-0790

Drivers Wanted Apply in person at Pinocchio's, 30 Boltwood Walk

Clerk's and Shipper-Receivers Needed from late December to late January Flexible schedules $5.25/hour Babson College Bookstore, Wellesley, MA 617-239-4375 Dave

EMPLOYMENT

CHRISTMAS/JANUARY BREAK

EARN $10 UP TO $15/START. International firm has 80 local openings 2-6 week program. All majors considered. Gain business and communication skills. Scholarships & Summer positions possible Apply now. Begin after finals. On-campus accepting applications on Monday & Tuesday, December 9&10 from 9-1 on the Concourse in the Campus Center or call 413-736-3230

WINTERSESSION JOBS TELEFUND IS HIRING $5.50/hour + fantastic bonuses PM hours All shifts available Gain computer skills. Apply today Memorial Hall basement 545-3509

Afterschool Care in our home for our two sons ages 9 & 5 M,T,Th 3:15-5:15, W 1-5 In Amherst Car needed 253-5197 Starting 1/27

TROPICAL RESORTS HIRING - Students needed! Entry-level & career positions available Worldwide Call Resort Employment Services (206) 971-3600 ext. R50013

INTERNATIONAL EMPLOYMENT - Earn up to $25-$45/hour teaching basic conversational English in Japan, Taiwan, S Korea. No teaching background or Asian languages required For info. call (206) 971-3570 ext. J50016

FOR RENT

Cape Cod group & summer rentals. Waterfront houses, Falmouth area (508)477-6000

FOR SALE

EMT Bike Brigestone 18" Shimano LX Triange GS Suspension, $700 or B/O 534-5827

FOR SALE

Leather Jacket- black, classic motorcycle, insulated, very high quality, men's medium, $140 585-8146

Unique X-mas Gift! Name an actual star for someone! $33. The Star Directory (800)663-6927 ext C2 Visa/MC. Framing and Overnight delivery available

12 inch MTX Speakers Mounted in sub box $100 or B/O. 549-9162

Skis For Sale Rossignol 4s skis 205cm. Nordica 967 boots size 12. GEZE 70 bindings Skied on 3 seasons. Great shape All for $250 or B/O Call Brian @ 865-9005

Kawood Car Satte Player $50. Preer Premier 100W AMP $50 Call Joe 253-6381

Epiphone Les Paul w/hardcase $325 or B/O Boss Drum Machine $300 or B/O. Call Joe 253-6381

486 Computer $300. 386- $200/ 286- $100. Printer $10 Steve (413)566-3324 #2

LOST

Lost Black Wallet and Key Contains NYS License, UMass ID and BayBank card. Lost on 12/7 around Brandywine #12 in parking lot If found please, please call Megan at 6-0653

MISCELLANEOUS

Know your rights Do you have questions about your rights? Do you think your civil rights have been violated? Find out! Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

MISCELLANEOUS

New Metabolism Breakthrough Lose 5-100 lbs. Guaranteed $35 (800)776-9503 Doctor Approved

PERSONALS

Congratulations Sarah Cook for a wonderful performance! Your line was the best! Love Always, 2nd floor Gorman Girls: Kristy, Sasha, Felicia and Wendy

12 inch MTX Speakers Mounted in sub box $100 or B/O. 549-9162

ROOM FOR RENT

Room for rent on bus line in 5 bedroom house off Main St Call 253-9727 for info.

Begieeing Joe 1 $200/month. Good location in Northampton Please call for more details 584-3986

One bedroom available in 2 bedroom apt. Jan 1st Free heat and water Call 549-4089

1 Bedroom available as of 1/97. 3 bedroom apartment in Pulfton. $275 per month including heat/hot water. On bus route (male or female) Call Amy @ 549-7082

Room ie 3 bedroom apt in Sunderland- cool housemates, good-sized room, $216.00/month Ask for Jennifer 665-0965 Available 1/1-8/31

Spring Semester Non-smoking female(s) to rent large room near campus & town. Call 549-3992

Three females seeking one non-smoking female to share Mill Valley apartment Jan 1-May 31 Rent negotiable. Call Jess at 253-1797

ROOMATE WANTED

Amherst/ 2 bedroom apt. Available Jan 1; $277.00 Smoker OK, washer/dryer 253-4766

2 Females looking for 1-2 people to share 3 bedroom Puffton Starts Feb 1. Call 549-7123

Looking for female roommates to rent summer house at New Jersey Shore. Call Sue at 546-0407

Easy-going, friendly Coed Apt looking for a similar person to fill a single room. Free heat and water. Jan 1st. Call Jim 549-1081

2 rooms ie three bedroom apt. $267 per month Call 549-8917. On bus route Available Jan 1

Housemate Needed for a large bedroom in a two bedroom apartment on bus route Call 253-4973

House ie Northampton On bus route. $200/per month. Live with 4 others. Call Colin 585-1029

Roommate Wosted Northampton $312 + util/own bath. N/S. 584-5143

Roommate Wosted 2 BDR Apt. in Sunderland. Spring '97. Jan. rent free. Call Becca at 665-8389

Male & Female Couple living on campus looking to switch room with M/F so both couples can live together. If interested call 546-8137 Ask for Ben

Roommate to share two bedroom apartment on Hobart Lane. Available January 15. $375 per month Utilities not included Call 549-5538 Ben or Jason

ROOMATE WANTED

One bedroom available in two bedroom apt. Jan 1st Free heat and water Call 549-4089

One Bedroom Available ie Puffton two bedroom apartment Female wanted On Bus Route 549-9293

SERVICES

Don't abandon your dorm bunny!! Rabbit Rescue can help!! Will find your bunny a new home Ellen 367-0165

Computer Consultant Available WEB Authoring, Software & Hardware Installs, Repairs Call 6-0853

Computer Problems? Need an upgrade? In-house service, call Scream Savers 549-0063

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

TO SUBLET

Reet our house over Winter Break In Hadley on the bus route. $150.00 per person Call 582-0711

TRAVEL

Caribbean/Mexico $189 RT. Europe $169 OW If you can beat these prices, start your own damn airline Air-Tech 587-0001 Northampton

Europe $155, Caribb./Mexico $189 R/T Worldwide Destinations Airhitch Tm 800-326-2009 airhitch@netcom.com or www.rsicom.fr/airhitch

TRAVEL

Wiotor Break Killington with the UMass Ski Club. Five nights lodging, 5 days skiing. During Collegiate Ski Fest $280 Call 545-3437

New Year's in Quebec City 3-5 nights in Quebec Hilton. Optional Skiing at Mont Ste Anne. Starts at $89 Call 545-3437 or 1-800-232-2415

Scuba Spring Break Dive Key Largo, FI Earn 2 credits! March 16-22 Mandatory Meeting 2/28 7pm Herter 227 Call Project Deep @ 800-282-0977

Spring Break '97 Hottest destinations and coolest vacations! Lowest prices guaranteed! Organize small group, travel free! Call for free info (800)426-7710

TRAVELTIME has great deals for group and individual travel plans Call Corinne 587-3011; (413)781-6150

WANTED

Need a ride to Orlando, Florida on January 4th Call Brandy 665-0353

Personals Policy

1. All personals MUST be proofread by Collegian classified employees before payments and acceptance of the classified.
2. Last names MAY NOT be used in personals. ONLY first names and initials are allowed. The only exceptions are for birthday or congratulations personals, in which case the full name may be used.
3. Phone numbers are not allowed in personals. NO EXCEPTIONS
4. Addresses are not allowed in personals, this means dorm room numbers as well.
5. Personals of a threatening or derogatory nature are not acceptable. Personals of a vindictive or libelous nature are not acceptable. Personals may not be used for the purpose of harassment.
6. Profanity may not be used in personals.
7. The personals section is for personals only. The personals section may NOT be used to sell items, seek roommates, advertise meetings, etc.
8. All personals must have the name, signature, and UMass I.D. number of the student placing the as filled in on the insertion order. Non-students must provide a valid driver's license and the license number must be recorded on the insertion order. Use of false identification or misrepresentation is subject to penalties under the law.
9. The Collegian reserves the right to refuse or to edit any personal that does not meet the Collegian's standards in accordance with the statutes of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Standard Headings

Activities
Announcements
Apartment For Rent
Auto For Sale
Employment
Entertainment
For Sale
Found (2 days Free)
Happy Birthday
Houses For Rent
Instruction
Lost
Musicians
Miscellaneous
Motorcycles
Personals
Room For Rent
Room Wanted
Roommate Wanted
Services
Summer Sublet
To Sublet
Travel
Transportation
Wanted to Rent
Wanted

Rates

$2.00 minimum/day

Students

20¢ per word/day

All others

40¢ per word/day

NO REFUNDS
Please write clearly and legibly. We are not responsible for errors resulting from illegible handwriting or type.

Answers to Yesterday's Puzzle

N	O	R	A		P	L	U	M	B		D	U	T	Y
B	I	A	S		E	A	T	E	R		E	L	E	E
A	L	I	T		S	W	E	D	E		A	N	N	A
	S	N	O	U	T	S		D	E	B	R	A	S
		R	N	S		A	L	D	A
	A	L	S	O		T	R	E		B	L	A	B
R	B	I		G	U	M		C	E	A	S	E	D
N	O	B	L	E	S	T		H	O	L	S	T	E	R
A	U	R	O	R	A		O	U	T		I	T	S
	T	A	X	I		D	A	B		O	U	R	S
			C	H	A	T		P	B	S
	S	E	A	S	O	N		B	R	I	E	R	S
F	O	E	S		P	U	R	E	E		F	E	E	S
E	R	L	E		E	B	O	N	Y		U	N	T	O
M	E	S	A		D	E	B	T	S		L	E	S	T

CROSSWORD

ACROSS

1. Livestock pen
5. Woody serves him beer
8. Human
14. For eternity
15. CSN&Y song done in one take
16. Proprietor
17. Olin or Horne
18. ___ pleas (2 wds.)
19. Cohort of Clint and Waylon
20. Gain
22. Casual attempt
24. Bridge expert Culbertson
25. Escorted sojourn
27. Thick piece
29. Allstate, e.g.
32. King Hussein's language
36. One or more preceder
37. "Medusa and the ___"
39. Bagpipe sound
40. Jewels
42. Island seen from the Battery
44. Monsab
45. Certain berth
47. Tuna and patty
49. Mount Hood's st.
50. Of cultural minorities
52. Like the hour before the dawn
54. Hop ___! (2 wds.)
56. Novelist James
57. Type of cup or table
60. Cutting
62. African fly
66. "Good Times" actress
68. High ranking
70. Like an affluent señora
71. Come onstage
72. Blurt
73. Annoying insect
74. Curved letters
75. Actor Randall Cubbertson
78. Candied dish

DOWN

1. Shrill cry
2. Affirm
3. University of Nevada city
4. Sketches
5. Evening song
6. Exclamation of surprise
7. Tatters
8. Castle defenses
9. Fusillade
10. Mother sheep
11. Regarding (2 wds.)
12. Actress Gwyn
13. Flannel colour
21. Chits
23. Montgomery's state: abbr.
26. Domain
28. View from the cooler
29. Unsalted
30. Graceful maiden
31. Angered
33. Texans' ties
34. Like some gases
35. Formally surrender
36. Shivering fit
38. Pale purple
41. "Heaven Must Have ___ You"
43. Tactics
46. Uproar causers
48. Items for mountain travel
51. U.S. spook agcy.
53. Vim and vigor
55. Parcel
57. The Hanging ___ (Gary Cooper film)
58. Long time periods
59. Heights: abbr
61. El ___ California
63. "Private Dancer" singer Turner
64. Sling
65. Beanery ilara
67. Jamie ___ Curtis
69. Bert Bobbsey's sister

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21-April 20

You're in for a good week. Old friendships blossom again, new ones take root. Profit potential is there but take care not to overextend yourself. Overdoing it personally or professionally could backfire, causing a new set of problems.

TAURUS
April 21-May 21

Watch investments closely. Keep an eye on the details. A potential ally is waiting in the wings for the proper moment. Don't ignore exercise and diet. Small changes now could pay big dividends.

GEMINI
May 22-June 21

Play the waiting game. Don't get caught up in the crowd. Study situations before acting. What is in the background will gradually become clear. Take time for romance with your partner. Your domestic situation may require immediate attention.

CANCER
June 22-July 22

Make time for yourself, but be careful. A little extravagance could cost more than anticipated. Keep your work and play in perspective. Finish what needs to be done before taking time off for yourself. Share your concerns with your mate. He/she can provide a fresh perspective.

LEO
July 23-August 23

Stick to a routine. Set priorities and stick with them. Don't be overwhelmed by the pressure of conflicting duties and desires. Your natural abilities shine through if you're in front of an audience. Catch up on your reading.

VIRGO
August 24-September 22

You're on a roll—get your thoughts and ideas down on paper so you won't forget. Education matters require attention. Don't get caught up in little things, try to see the bigger picture. Working hard and staying focused is the key to success.

LIBRA
September 23-October 23

Let others take the lead. Wait and watch for the proper moment to make your move. Don't try to always be right. Letting others come out ahead now could pay off later. A domestic situation will improve if it is given time. Avoid scattering your forces.

SCORPIO
October 24-November 22

Take time to reflect on past performance. See your strengths and weaknesses realistically. Try to stay positive and upbeat. Keep health resolutions—proper rest, diet are essential now. Avoid extremes—the middle-of the-road course is best.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23-December 21

Hit projects hard now for best results. Don't let work pile up—keep on top of it and you'll get ahead. Chances for travel, romance are highlighted. The right question at the right time could lead to a surprising answer.

CAPRICORN
December 22-January 20

Avoid unnecessary expenditures; now is the time to watch your pennies closely. What seems to be a bargain could prove costly in the long run. Look, listen, stay on the sidelines. It may be hard, but this is not the right time to make a move.

AQUARIUS
January 21-February 18

Tie up loose ends, including romantic entanglements. Your partner is willing to help if you allow it. The situation may not change—you may have to decide if you can live with it or be better off without it. A unique source can provide funds for special project.

PISCES
February 19-March 20

Look on the bright side, things could be worse. Help a family member with a problem. Comfort when you can. Increased activities and demands require a healthy outlook. Proper rest and diet are essential. A partner's support is needed for a special project to be successful.

Daily Listings sponsored by:

UMass Basketball on UVC-TV19 DEC. 14 WAKE FOREST 8:30PM [NO PRE- AND POST- GAME SHOWS] Courtesy of ESPN

HSCN Housing Services Cable Network

2 HSCN Bulletin Board
3 CBS/3 Hartford
4 CBS/4 Boston
5 ABC/5 Boston
6 PBS/57 Springfield
7 HSCN Movie Channel
8 UPN/20 Hartford
9 Weather Channel
10 NBC/30 New Britain
11 Fox/61 Hartford
12 PBS/24 Hartford
13 WOCH & HSCN
14 UMATV
17 HSCN Programming
18 TV-19
20 ABC/40 Springfield
22 NBC/22 Springfield
23 CNN
24 CNN/Headline News
25 BET
26 BET on Jazz
27 Laser Video
28 The Learning Channel
30 Comedy Central
31 Popcorn Channel
32 Satellite Programming

http://www-unix.oit.umass.edu/~uvctv19

UVC-TV19

WEDNESDAY EVENING © TVData DECEMBER 11, 1996

		6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	C. Sandiego	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Heroines-Sky		American Experience "Amelia Earhart" (In Stereo)		Heroines of the Sky (R)		Keep 'Em Flying
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Am.Journal	Nanny	Pearl	Kathie Lee-Christmas		Candid Camera's 50th Holiday		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News	CBS News	Ent. Tonight	Nanny	Nanny	Pearl	Kathie Lee-Christmas		Candid Camera's 50th Holiday		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC Wld News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Grace Under	Townies (R)	Drew Carey	Ellen (R)	Primetime Live		News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Fresh Prince	Bizzi	Star Trek: The Next Generation		Grter. Sister	Pinky & Brain	Wayans Bros.	Jamie Foxx	News		Extra	Hollywood
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Wings	Newsradio	Newsradio (R)	Men-Badly	Law & Order "Atonement" (R)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	Simpsons	Rosanne	Home Improve	Seinfeld	Beverly Hills, 90210 (In Stereo)		Party of Five (In Stereo)		News		Murphy Brown	Deep Space 9
WWLP	9	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Wings	Newsradio	Newsradio	Men-Badly	Law & Order "Atonement" (R)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	10	Kratts Creatures	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Caesar's Writers (In Stereo)		Peter, Paul and Mary Holiday Concert (In Stereo)					Charlie Rose
WGGB	17	News	ABC Wld News	Seinfeld	Ent. Tonight	Grace Under	Townies (R)	Drew Carey	Ellen (R)	Primetime Live		News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Beverly Hills, 90210		Seinfeld	Mad About You	Extreme Blue (In Stereo)		Star Trek: Voyager (In Stereo)		News	Martin	Mad About You	Real TV
WTBS	22	Family Matters	Family Matters	Home Videos	Home Videos	NBA Basketball: Miami Heat at Philadelphia 76ers. (Live)						★★½ "Moonraker" (1979) Roger Moore.
A&E	23	Quincy "Stolen Tears"		Equalizer "Race Traitors"		Biography "Gary Gilmore"		American Justice (R)		20th Century		Law & Order "Rage"
CNN	42	WorldView		Moneyline	Crossfire	Prime News	Inside Politics	Larry King Live		American Edge "Frontiers"		Sports Tonight	Moneyline
COM	43	A-List (R)	Dream On	Daily Show (R)	TV Nation	Absolutely	Tracey Ullman	Tick	Dr. Katz Pro.	Hollywood Hockey Cup		Daily Show	TV Nation
CSPAN	41	(4:00) Public Policy Conference		Public Policy Conference		Prime Time Public Affairs						Prime Time Public Affairs (R)
DISC	40	Go for It! (R)		Cyberlife-Buyer's Guide		Wild Discovery "Forest of Fear"		Discover Magazine (R)		Fangs! "Queen of the Bessis"		Next Step (R)	Beyond 2000
ESPN	45	Up Close	Sportscenter		College Basketball:	Michigan at St. John's. (Live)		College Basketball: George Washington at Kansas. (Live)					Sportscenter
LIFE	47	Supermarket	Debt	Hope & Gloria	Designing	Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"A Different Kind of Christmas" (1996, Drama) Shelley Long.				Martha Stewart	Unsolved Myst.
MTV	39	Ren & Stimpy	TBA	Idiot Savants	Singled Out	Ins. Unplugged	George M.	Unplugged (In Stereo)		Real World	Beavis-Butthd	Idiot Savants	Singled Out
NICK	46	Clarissa Expl.	Tiny Toon Adv.	Doug	Rugrats	Hey Arnold!	Happy Days	I Love Lucy	Munsters	M.T. Moore	Rhoda	Taxi	Odd Couple
SCIFI	48	Mann & Machine		Twilight Zone "The Bard"		V "The Visitors" (In Stereo)		★★ "Demonic Toys" (1992, Horror) Tracy Scoggins. (In Stereo)				Twilight Zone	"The Bard"
TLC	49	Furniture to Go	Home Pro (R)	Hometime (R)	Hometime (R)	SeaTek	Ultrascience	Pharaohs and Kings: Quest		Survival in the Sky (R)		SeaTek (R)	Ultrascience
TNT	44	In the Heat of the Night		In the Heat of the Night		"Samson and Delilah" (1996, Drama) (Part 2 of 2) Eric Thal.				"Samson and Delilah" (1996, Drama) (Part 2 of 2) Eric Thal.
USA	50	Renegade "Hog Calls"		Highlander: The Series "Fools"		Murder, She Wrote "Ever After"		★★½ "Die Hard" (1988, Suspense) Bruce Willis, Bonnie Bedelia. (In Stereo)					Silk Stalkings
VH1	51	Video Break		VH1 to One (R)	Video Collection		Artist of-Year	Archives	8-Track Flash.	Big '80s	Am. Bandstand	Legends (R)
HBO	61	★★½ "Days of Thunder" (1990, Drama) Tom Cruise. PG-13				★½ "Under Siege 2: Dark Territory" (1995) R		My Americana	Larry Sanders	High Life		★★★ "To Die For" (1995) R
MAX	63	★★★ "Hell" (1994, Drama) Jodie Foster. (In Stereo) PG-13				★ "It's Alive III: Island of the Alive" (1987) R		★★★ "Bad Boys" (1995, Drama) Martin Lawrence. (In Stereo) R					"Total Eclipse"
SHOW	65	★★★ "Metropolitan" (1990, Comedy-Drama) Carmen Febna. PG-13				★★★ "While You Were Sleeping" (1995) PG		★★½ "Speechless" (1994, Comedy) Michael Keaton. PG-13					"Silver Strand"

Always Wanted One of Those By A. Morse & S. Dumas

Alien Crackbunnies By Darb

Frumpy the Clown Judd Winick

Loold By Roger & Salem Salloom

Remember my friend Wallace, the black African American?

Well, he finally graduated from the university with a masters degree ..... pretty cool.

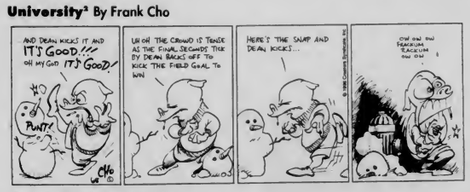
But he says some remarkable things are happening since he's got a job.

Some guys at work are already angry at him because he told them he doesn't know how to play basketball so he can't play on the office team.

The same thing happened in a high school jazz band. That time he gave in... he just stood there on stage holding a saxophone.

They told him,

"Just hold it, Wallace!"



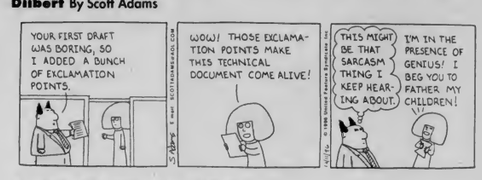
So, he held it.

He's been holding it ever since.

University² By Frank Cho

The Social Norm By Mr. K

The Way Life Is By M.K.



The Unsilent Majority By Luke Meredith

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Dilbert By Scott Adams

8 Years in Braces By Eric Petersen

Close to Home By John McPherson

"Oh yeah. I meant to tell you about that. The icemaker is screwed up."

Quote of the Day

"Did ya ever hear the one about the guy who couldn't afford a personalized license plate so he changed his name to J3L·2044.

–Margie in Fargo"

Farewell from the Fall 96' Tuesday Crew

Tara "THE elf" Connelly ✻ Night Editor
Lisa "the lusty elf" Oliveri ✻ Copy Editor
Elizabeth "the snappy elf" Brown ✻ Photo Tech.
Marc "the ?!#?!# elf" Dionne ✻ Prod. Supervisor
Mark "the vibrating elf" McGrath ✻ Production
Kelvin "the 2-cool elf" Torres ✻ Production

Sports

FSU Bulldogs take bite out of Minutemen at home

HUI GAO / COLLEGIAN

Prop 48 sophomore, Lari Ketner led the Minutemen with 18 points as UMass lost badly to Fresno State, 102-81.

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

The towel never came out from under the bench.

Fresno State men's basketball coach Jerry Tarkanian, who is famous for his crucial–moment towel chomping, never moved for the towel and looked completely relaxed as his Bulldogs ran away with a win over the Massachusetts Minutemen 102–81.

Fresno State 102
Massachusetts 81

"We played like shit," UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint said. "What I want to say I can't really say because you might print it. Guys didn't come to play, guys aren't focused."

Fresno State was sparked by Fall River native Chris Herren, who scored a game–high 25 points in front of his family and friends.

"I'm just happy to be home, happy to have a great game and happy that we won," Herren said.

Herren ran roughshod over the Minuteman defense, dishing out five assists and coming away with three steals on the night.

UMass had its only lead in the game when Ajmal Basit made a lay–up 2:25 into the game to put the Minutemen (2– 4) up 6–4. Fresno State (6–1) responded with an 11–point run that started with a Dominick Young 3–pointer.

UMass closed the gap to three, 18–21, with 12:28 remaining in the first half when a Tyrone Weeks jumper. Weeks, who did not play against Georgetown and Wyoming because of a sprained ankle, saw only 10 minutes of action, all in the first half.

"He gave me all he could, he told me at half–time that he was really hurting," Flint said.

Basit drained a bucket with 8:35 left in the first half to chip away at the Fresno State lead. He followed with four consecutive free throws off a pair of Rashaan Smith fouls to put UMass within one at 30–29.

After a television timeout broke the Minuteman momentum, the Bulldogs went on a tear, ripping off 22 points to UMass' 13 to close the half.

The second half produced more of the same for the Bulldogs, who saw their lead increased to as high as 15 five separate times in the second half alone, before running away in the closing seconds of the game.

UMass was able to cut the Fresno State advantage to nine points three times, all three times keyed by the play of the guards.

"We had opportunities to get back in the game," Flint said. "We were down seven, nine, three and all we needed to do was make a good stop or come up with a good play or maybe get to the line. But we're not doing that."

Fresno State capped the game with six unan–

Turn to HOOP, page 9

Ketner and Basit lead offense Minutemen forget about defense

By Chris Stamm
Collegian Staff

"To be honest with you, and excuse me ladies, but we played like shit," Massachusetts men's basketball coach James "Bruiser" Flint said of his team's 102–81 loss to No. 16 Fresno State (6–1) last night in the Mullins Center.

While no one in the Happy Valley would argue with that assessment, as inconsistency and sloppy defense destroyed the Minutemen (2–4), there were two bright spots on the floor. When the veterans that usually carry the team fell flat on their faces, sophomore Lari Ketner and freshman Ajmal Basit provided UMass' only offensive spark.

Ketner led the way with a double–double (18 points and 12 boards) while Basit was close behind chipping in 16 points of his own. Though Massachusetts was atrocious from outside, shooting a miserable 2–for–15 from 3–point land, the Minutemen's saving grace came from the inside.

They didn't knock down just the easy one's either, as time after time they hammered away at the offensive glass. Of the team's 56 points in the paint, 25 came on second

Turn to MINUTEMEN, page 9

Fresno State 102, Massachusetts 81

FRESNO STATE (6-1)

Forney 4-10 1-4 9, Roberson 5-12 2-2 14, R.Smith 4-7 1-2 9, Young 3-12 4-4 13, Herren 9-14 4-5 25, Terdenge 1-1 4-4 6, Rines 0-0 0-0 0, Meyers 1-1 0-0 2, Stanley 1-4 6-6 8, McCulloch 3-4 3-4 9, Brooks 2-6 2-2 7. Totals 33-71 27-33 102.

MASSACHUSETTS (2-4)

Babul 2-4 0-0 4, Basit 6-9 4-5 16, Ketner 7-15 4-6 18, Padilla 3-10 4-4 10, Travieso 4-18 3-3 13, Clarke 4-14 4-7 12, Burns 0-1 0-0 0, Maclay 0-1 0-0 0, W.Smith 1-3 1-1 3, Kirkland 1-4 1-2 3, Weeks 1-6 0-0 2, Norville 0-1 0-0 0. Totals 29-86 21-28 81.

Halftime-Fresno State 52, Massachusetts 42. Attendance 9,493.

Player of the Game

Lari Ketner – 18 points, 12 rebounds, 3 blocks, 2 steals

Highlights...

Freshman forward Ajmal Basit scored a career–high 16 points and hauled in 6 rebounds in the losing effort. Massachusetts native Chris Herren had a career–high 25 points for Fresno State.

Great One going; former Blues bro., Hull sitting bench

I'm beat.

The unyielding pace of Media Relations, various illnesses that have befelled me lately along with this crummy job, oh yeah and classes too, have reduced me to a veritable lumbering, dazed and confused zombie.

Mellow and apathetic by nature, those feelings are burgeoning within my shrivelling body. I need headlines for these notes though, so since I don't really care; let there be songs to fill the air. (Hey, there's one already).

Leigh Torbin on the NHL

• Oh, but I was so much older then; I'm younger than that now:

Unlike O.J., I'm guilty as charged.

Both yours truly, and my verbose co–writer Jorma Kansanen, felt that the Great One wasn't quite over the hill, but was at least approaching its crest.

Wayne Gretzky was a veritable no–show at the World Cup this summer, struggling across the ice at the Molson Centre, while Team USA blew past him and his mates en route to a monumental victory. Buried beneath unrelenting American checking, Wayne was being prepared by Adam "Grateful" Deadmarsh and his mates for a proverbial sticking of the fork.

Gretzky was done — well done.

So, please excuse me while I wipe the egg off of my face as I glance at today's NHL scoring leaders and see the Blueshirt's latest big name free agent sitting atop the list with 40 points.

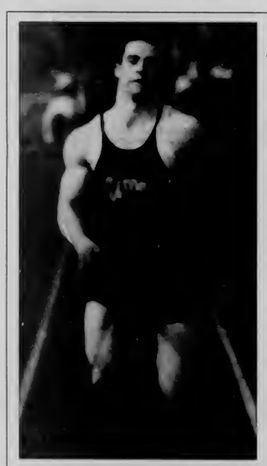
After being shutout in his New York debut, a 4–4 tie at the FleetCenter, he tallied a point in each of his next 15 games, the longest such streak in the NHL this year. Don't look now in terms of streaks either but the Wayne–gers are 6–0–1 in their last seven.

Hopefully, pointing that out jinxed them for tonight's game against the Islanders. It isn't that I mind being wrong, I usually am, but I do mind the thought of the Rangers taking it all this year.

I'll admit, Boston interests be damned, that I rooted for the 1994 Blueshirt team that broke the 54–year Stanley Cup curse. I was ecstatic to see Mark Messier save the franchise for one simple reason. If the team that plays in a building that is neither actually in Madison Square or on Madison Avenue, nor is square itself, can win it all, it conclusively proved that there is indeed hope for the Red Sox.

After taking some time to get reacquainted with the New York chapter of the Oiler alumni association, Gretz is clicking, racking up eight points in his last three games, including a home–and–home sweep of Toronto.

Still though I'm not willing to forgo my prognostication. Today's Dec. 11 and after the remaining 51 games this season and two months of grueling playoffs, I wouldn't expect Gretzky and his team to hold up and stave off injury any more than I expect to see the Holy Grail of hockey being passed in a giant conga line down 33rd Street.



• Bullet With(out) Butterfly Wings:

The hardest working man in show biz Saturday night was not James Brown, the Godfather of soul. It wasn't even Texas quarterback James Brown although he does get a big tip of the cap, even in an NHL column, for crushing the Ex– Conhuskers' national championship chances. (Hey, Luke has the week off and someone has to take some shots).

No, even the unrelenting Mullins Center staff had nothing on the trainer for the Montréal Canadiens. In a bruising original six matchup in Chicago, five Habs went down, two of them for the count, including the one quickly becoming the franchise.

Saku Koivu, the "New Finnish Flash" will only be flashing a shiny new knee brace for the next eight

Turn to NHL, page 9

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

After an injury–riddled season last year, Scott Price is back on track.

Junior runner Price back on track

Sprinter returns to form after nagging injury

By Steven Grant
Collegian Staff

It took a couple of years, but finally, the Price is right.

Scott Price that is, the junior sprinter who is finally fully healthy and hoping — actually, expecting — that this will be the year he comes into his own as a member of the Massachusetts track and field team.

A pulled right hamstring and the mental anguish that accompanied his ailment have thus far prevented the Wakefield, Mass. native from performing at the level he was used to in his high school days. But that is all in the past, as Price will tell you, and all his attention is focused on this season, which marks a new beginning in his collegiate career.

"I'm psyched," said Price. "I'm done with all of the negative mental and psychological aspects that remain long after the injury itself heals. You can't live in the past. I've been thinking about this upcoming season a lot. I'm just ready to go."

Price's time at UMass was going smoothly until last November, when he felt a sharp "explosion" of pain under his thigh during a sprint in practice. He finished his freshman season sixth in New England in the 200 meter dash. His 4x100m relay team had qualified him for the IC4A's, a meet involving the sport's best athletes in the eastern half of the United States. He was physically unable to compete during most indoors, and was mentally hampered for most of the outdoor season.

"After I was injured, I just didn't have that desire to run," he said. "But now that I know I can achieve the goals I'm capable of achieving, the competitive drive is there. My love for track is back."

And so is Price.

Interestingly enough, his resume has a faster time (21.3 sec.) in the outdoor 200m dash than the UMass school record (21.8). Price accomplished the feat, a W.H.S. record, as a senior. And it is such examples of his potential that added to the frustration of his friends, his team and most importantly, and most noticeably, himself.

But many took notice on Saturday, when The Price of Old showed up at Boston University for a preparatory meet with teams like BU, Providence, Yale and UNH. He managed 6.58 and a 6.60 times in the 55m dash, 22.24 in the 200 and a 49.0 time in his leg of the 4x400m, all personal collegiate bests.

"I think Scott is finally back to his old self," relay teammate Dave Cahill said. "He's always been one of the hardest workers on the team, and now we'll all be seeing the results. And his work ethic motivates us (himself and relay teammates Tom Toye and Neil Concepcion), it gets the rest of us to work harder."

"I still haven't reached my high school potential," admits Price, who by the way was recruited unsuccessfully to play football at UMass — he wanted to focus on track alone. "Again, I'm excited for this year. We have a strong relay team, with Tom, Dave and Neil.

"Tom and I train together, and we train hard," he said. "We kill each other in practice. But we both have the same purpose, to do well and help the team. We're always fending each other off in

Turn to PRICE, page 9

XC Walk–on Dunlap leaves mark

Senior captain provides a leader

By Corey Peter Goodman
Collegian Staff

On a spring morning in 1993, Massachusetts women's track coach Julie LaFreniere received a call from Molly Dunlap, a decent long–distance runner from Hingham High School.

Dunlap was graduating in a few months and looking to pursue her dream of competing at the college level. LaFreniere was mildly impressed with her times and told her she would have to walk–on to the team.

Four years and a handful of scholarship runners later, Molly Dunlap is a rock in the Minutewomen lineup. Her success, though, did not come overnight.

"In high school I was a big fish in a small pond," Dunlap recalled. "But I knew that when I got out here I'd be in the back of the pack, and have to work a little harder than everyone else."

In her freshman year, Dunlap pushed herself very hard on and off the track, yet struggled to balance her immense workload.

"I would study all of the time but I just wasn't getting the grades I should have been getting," Dunlap said. "I knew I would turn it around eventually, but it was a tough time for me to get through."

Dunlap's patience dramatically paid off when she received a 4.0 GPA after her spring semester last year.

After two years of extensive training, Dunlap began to emerge as a key contributor going into her junior year.

"I felt a lot more confident about my running junior year, but I still felt that I had to push myself extremely hard," Dunlap said. "I don't have the natural talent that a Rebecca Donaghue has, so I know I have to consistently work hard to see results."

Dunlap's die–hard work ethic has brought her game to the next level this year, as she consistently performed among UMass' top five finishers throughout the cross country season.

Though it appears her success has made life easier, Dunlap knows that her commitment to the program, alongside a part–time job and loads of schoolwork leaves little time for socializing.

"I've been running everyday for eight years now. Running is my life and I love it," Dunlap said. "Sometimes it is hard when I can't go out on a Friday night before a Saturday meet, and I always have to watch what I'm eating, and manage my time well, but I don't have any regrets. No matter what I'm doing, I'd rather be running."

When it comes down to her place on the team, Dunlap realizes that she isn't the star runner, and that her true team value rests in her ability to be an effective captain and leader.

Molly Dunlap

"Being a captain in high school is a lot different than being a captain in college," Dunlap said. "You really have to look out for the other people on the team. You have to try not to be a mother or a coach to them, but a friend they can turn to when they have problems."

"Julie (LaFreniere) is an unbelievable coach, and I love running for her," Dunlap said. "She always taught us to come to her whenever we had problems. She would say 'is our relationship based on lies?' It was a good way to make us feel guilty for keeping something from her."

Dunlap hopes her work habits and positive attitude can rub off on some of the younger athletes.

"I'd like to think that I make people

Turn to Dunlap, page 8

Rozelle dies at 70; Cashion will retire

Before we begin this column it seems fitting to observe a moment of silence.

The National Football League lost one of the most important people in its history last Friday. Pete Rozelle, who served as commissioner from 1960 to 1989, died of brain cancer at the age of 70.

Rozelle had already retired by the time I became seriously interested in football, but it's very possible that without him, I, and many others, would never have become interested at all.

Jacob W. Michaels on the NFL

Rozelle took control of a 12–team league and helped it grow to 20 teams (now 30) with million–dollar television contracts. He created Monday Night Football. He created one of the most–watched events every year, the Super Bowl, before merging the NFL with its then–rival American Football League.

• One of the first reactions I had when I heard about Rozelle's death, and the cause, was that the NFL should set up a fund in Rozelle's name for researching cancer. It seemed a fitting tribute.

It also made me think of how much the NFL does actually do in terms of charity. It isn't just supporting programs like the United Way or giving fines for fights to various charities. So many of the players contribute time and money with little or no recognition.

People like Patriots guard William Roberts who gives money to help research sickle–cell anemia.

Turn to NFL, page 9

The Massachusetts
DAILY COLLEGIAN
Volume CVI Issue 68 New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967 Thursday, December 12, 1996

Roses are red and so is Rosie

Rosie O'Donnell saves daytime television from itself. Find out why she is the Collegian's artist of the year (See Arts & Living, page 5).

Two points too little

Last night, Alison Macfarland and the Massachusetts women's basketball team lost to Kent State by two points (See Sports, page 16).

WORLD

U.N. may fire lawyers if USA doesn't pay

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — U.N. officials may fire 16 American lawyers on loan to the Yugoslav war crimes tribunal because Washington refuses to pay some of their costs.

The funding dispute between the United Nations and Washington could rob the U.N. court of some of its top attorneys if it is not resolved before next Wednesday.

Negotiations are planned in the United States in coming days to try to prevent the mass dismissal, court spokesman Christian Chartier said yesterday.

The lawyers are employed by the United States but have been seconded to the tribunal. Under U.N. regulations, countries donating staff to the world organization have to pay their salaries plus other administrative costs.

The administrative costs — 13 percent of the salary the lawyers would earn if employed by the U.N. — cover such things as stationery, health insurance and travel costs.

Washington has refused to pay the costs, which amount to less than $500,000 in the two years since the lawyers arrived in The Hague, Chartier said.

NATION

Harkin urges parents not to buy certain toys

WASHINGTON (AP) — As Americans watch their children unwrap gifts this holiday season, they should think of the youngsters who probably made them for pennies a day in foreign countries, Iowa Sen. Tom Harkin said yesterday.

He and consumer advocate Ralph Nader asked parents to avoid buying toys and other gifts that could have been made in countries with widespread abusive child labor.

"It's ironic that when consumers buy a can of tuna fish, they know if dolphins are protected, but when they buy their holiday gifts, they don't know if children are protected," Harkin, a Democrat, said.

"In this country, child labor is illegal," Nader said. "But child labor abroad can produce items like carpets and sell them legally in this country."

Harkin advised shoppers to:

• Look for a "Made in the USA" label. While such a label does not guarantee a product wasn't made through "child exploitation or other labor abuses," he said, child labor is largely a problem with foreign–made goods.

• Ask retailers what steps they're taking to stock products that are not made by children and urge them to carry products that are certified "child labor free."

• Contact manufacturers directly and the celebrities who endorse their products to ask what they're doing to ensure their products were not made with child labor.

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 40 LOW: 30	HIGH: 40 LOW: 30	HIGH: 35 LOW: 30

INSIDE

Arts & Living.....page 5
Classifieds .....page 14
Comics.....page 15
Crossword .....page 14
Editorial.....page 4
FYI.....page 2
News .....page 3
Sports .....page 16

Mr. Clean

JENNIFER JUTRAS / COLLEGIAN

Robin Smollen, from the UMass Landscape Services, helps to clean up the mess, left by this weekend's storm, in front of Memorial Hall.

Labor history book distributed

Work to be distributed to all public libraries in Massachusetts

By Victoria Groves
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts state legislature announced recently that a Commonwealth of Toil, a book on the history of Massachusetts workers and labor unions will be distributed to every Massachusetts public library — culminating a project initiated by University of Massachusetts professors and researchers.

The book was written by Tom Juravich, associate professor at UMass Amherst and research director at the Labor Relations and Research Center; William F. Hartford, an independent scholar and author; and James R. Green, professor of history at UMass Boston.

A team of UMass historians at the Labor Relations and Research Center assisted with the book, which was published by the University of Massachusetts Press.

Thomas F. Birmingham, the president of the Massachusetts State Senate, conceived the initiative to ensure that each public library had access to this comprehensive study.

House Speaker Thomas M. Finneran, and Governor William F. Weld have announced their support of the measure.

Approximately 532 books have already been sent to secondary school libraries and 385 to public libraries. Along with the books, Chancellor David K. Scott included a letter that says "the volume provides well–illustrated survey of the history of working people in Massachusetts. It was written in a style that should be accessible to high school and junior high school students, as well as to college students and general readers."

University of Massachusetts Press director Bruce Wilcox said that the book creates "a readable, accessible book... based on solid scholarship, but intended for a broader audience."

Commonwealth of Toil details the 200–year history of labor struggles in Massachusetts and how they preceded the movements that would later occur all over the United States. Beginning with the first industrial workers in the nation — the Lowell "mill girls," and including events from the 1825 strike of Boston carpenters, the book provides "a valuable perspective on the development of the American labor movement," Wilcox said.

Thus far, the book has received favorable reviews in the Boston Globe and the Daily Hampshire Gazette and is already in its second printing. A local branch of the United Steel Workers of America bought over 600 copies for its members.

The University of Massachusetts Press has received dozens of letters from secondary schools and libraries thanking them for the book.

"Through reading your book, we will be granted the opportunity to enhance our understanding of the heritage that shaped the state we call home," read a note signed by the students and faculty of Chatham Junior Senior High School.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy also sent a note of thanks, writing, "I'm delighted to know that it will be in every public school and library in the Commonwealth, where I'm sure it will be an education and inspiration to all who see it."

Interim Dean of Nursing appointed

By Leigh Faulkner
Collegian Staff

Associate professor of nursing Brenda Millette has been appointed as the interim dean of the School of Nursing at the University of Massachusetts effective Jan. 26, 1997, by Provost Patricia Crosson.

Millette will be replacing present dean Melanie Dreher, who is leaving UMass for the same position at the University of Iowa.

"I am extraordinarily pleased that the provost has chosen Brenda Millette as the interim dean. Under her leadership, I know that the school will succeed in attracting just the right dean to take the school into the next millennium," said Dreher said in a press release.

Millette was one of the principal founders of the UMass– Simmons School Health Institute, a professional education program for school nurses which has received several grants from the Massachusetts Department of Public Health.

"I am very pleased to be able to work with this outstanding faculty and staff, to continue the progress made for the School of Nursing under dean Dreher's direction," Millette said.

Millette, who has been a member of the UMass nursing program since 1981, received her bachelor's degree in maternal–child health nursing from the University of Connecticut's nursing program.

She earned her education doctorate from the UMass division of educational policy, research and administration in the School of Education.

"We are in a vital position to contribute to the provision of excellent health care for the commonwealth and the nation," she said. "The School of Nursing continues to be dedicated to excellence in nursing education and to expand the base of knowledge in our field. I am happy to be part of this process."

Millette is also a co–founder of a five–year federal grant program to establish a school–based health clinic at Putnam Vocational High School in Springfield.

A national search is currently underway for a permanent replacement for Dreher.

Israel rounds up illegal foreign workers in tent camps despite internal protest

By Dan Perry
Associated Press

RAMLE, Israel — Israel has begun rounding up illegal foreign workers in a tent prison camp enclosed by barbed wire to await deportation.

Israeli newspapers ran front–page pictures of inmates staring through a barbed wire fence at the compound at Ayalon Prison in Ramle, 15 miles east of Tel Aviv.

Although access was denied to reporters yesterday, the nine khaki and green tents, surrounded by the fence and guard watchtowers, were visible from the roof of a tall industrial building overlooking the prison walls. The inmates sullenly milled around, some shirtless in 55–degree weather.

Labor Minister Eli Yishai first proposed rounding up unauthorized workers into camps last month, but the idea initially drew protest from Israelis for whom it conjured up images of the Holocaust.

The move reflects Israel's growing frustration with the unwanted influx of foreign workers.

The government estimates that there are 300,000 foreign workers from Eastern Europe, Asia, Africa and South America in Israel, two–thirds of whom have overstayed visas and are here illegally. The first arrivals three years ago were contract laborers replacing Palestinians kept from their jobs after Israel began sealing off the West Bank and Gaza Strip in the wake of terrorist attacks.

As Israel's economy grew, other foreigners arrived as tourists and stayed illegally to work as nannies and house–cleaners. Now many are bringing their families, and some neighborhoods have been virtually taken over by the foreigners.

Interior Ministry spokesman Tova Elinson said Israel has issued 1,850 deportation orders this year and the number is rising. Most orders were for citizens of former communist countries, the majority of them Romanians. Officials have argued that the deportations were being held up because there was no place to put the workers after they were caught.

Prison Authority spokesman Moshe Maloul told the Associated Press that the jail camp, established 10 days ago, was a "great solution" and it was "reasonable to assume" use of such facilities would be expanded.

So far, he said, 76 foreigners have been locked up at the one–acre compound inside the maximum–security prison.

Many foreign workers have charged that Israel is treating them unfairly.

Radu Ion, a 37–year–old construction worker from Craiova, Romania, complained that his employer rarely paid the foreign contract workers in full or on time.

"We are treated like slaves," said Ion, who was interviewed recently in Tel Aviv.

"The whole system is illegal and inhuman," said Hannah Zohar, who heads a labor lobby called "A Hand for the Worker."

She said that many contract workers are authorized to work only for one employer, and their visas become invalid even if they leave that employer for a valid reason — like unpaid salaries.

Survey assesses Jewish life; issues found with programs

By Bryan Schwartzman
Collegian Staff

The results from a recent Project Pulse Survey regarding Jewish life on campus revealed that students are relatively aware and satisfied with the programming offered on campus, but raised questions about its quality and how more students can become involved in the Jewish Community.

The survey was jointly facilitated by the Hillel Board of Directors and the Office of Student Affairs, who conducted it. The questions referred to many aspects of programming administered by the Hillel and Chabad Houses, and raised issues as to whether they were too religious, political, or socially oriented.

Last Tuesday, a Joint Program Task Force Committee of Jewish community members met to asses the results of the survey. The committee combined faculty, staff, alumni, and students and discussed the results of the survey in terms of how Jewish Life and Hillel Programming can be improved on campus.

David Wilensky, a UMass alum and member of the Hillel Board of directors said, "the purpose of the survey and of the meeting is to assess the programatic needs of the Jewish Community."

The three central questions raised at the meeting were; is Hillel doing an adequate job in meeting the needs of participating students, does Hillel need to expand its publicity and attract more students and how can Hillel overcome some negative perceptions of it to better serve the community?

Jamie Resnick, second term Hillel president said, "we need to launch a whole new public relations campaign."

Other students that were present responded by saying that Hillel as "too cliquey" and politically conserv–

Turn to SURVEY, page 2

Cities are cracking down on the homeless

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cities are becoming harsher toward homeless people, according to a report yesterday by an advocacy group that found increases in the number of municipalities that ban panhandling and sleeping in parks.

"These ordinances are inhumane," said Maria Foscarinis, executive director of the National Law Center on Homelessnes and Poverty, a homeless advocacy group that focused its latest report on the 50 largest cities.

"By penalizing people for innocent, necessary, life–sustaining conduct, cities are essentially punishing people simply for being homeless," she said.

The center's analysis found that about 75 percent of the cities have laws against panhandling, up from 62 percent in the center's 1994 survey. Fifteen cities have passed new laws in the last four years, the report said.

The survey also found that:

• Thirty–eight percent of cities began crackdowns on homeless people in the past several years.

• More than half recently conducted police sweeps to round them up.

• Half of the cities forbid sleeping or camping in some or all public places.

At the same time, virtually every city has more homeless people than emergency shelter and transitional housing spaces, the report said.

The federal Department of Housing and Urban Development estimates that as many as 600,000 people are homeless across the country on any given night.

Some argue that the restrictions on the homeless are a step in the right direction for cities concerned about image and the quality of life they offer residents.

"No city, regardless of numbers [of homeless], should have to sacrifice its public places," said Rob Teir, general counsel for the Washington–based American Alliance for Rights and Responsibilities, a conservative organization that helps cities draft these laws.

"Most of the communities acting this way are acting with their heads, not their hearts," he added. "It's not unconstitutional for a community to decide that its park is going to be open and accessible to all."

The center labeled five cities — Atlanta, Dallas, New York, San Diego and San Francisco — as having the "meanest streets."

Atlanta Mayor Bill Campbell opposes city laws that make it a crime to "camp" in public places or panhandle aggressively, said spokesman Nick Gold. The laws took effect without Campbell's signature, Gold said.

JENNIFER JUTRAS / COLLEGIAN

A special talent...

Eric Schwartz, a.k.a. The Magic Rice Guy, writes people's names on pieces of rice in the mini mall in the Student Union Ballroom.

For Your Information

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Thursday, Dec. 12

Cancelled — The Dr. Vera Whisman lecture scheduled for 12:30 p.m. in Campus Center room 803 has been cancelled.

Meeting — GEO Membership meeting from 5–7 p.m. in Campus Center room 804. This meeting is to decide how the union should respond to the Administration's Contract Proposals regarding Affirmative Action and Child Care.

Sale — "Keramos," an annual ceramic and art sale, will take place from 3–7 p.m. in the Ceramics Dept. of Munson Annex.

Seminar — The Neuroscience and Behavior Program is sponsoring a seminar by Dr. Laura Lubbers on "Gonadal Steroid Control of the Male Reproductive Endocrine Axis" at 12:15 p.m. in 521B Tobin Hall.

Friday, Dec. 13

Concert — The Doo–Wop Shop will be having a free concert at the Bezanson Recital Hall in the FAC at 8 p.m. Opening will be the female a capella group Meanwhile. Bring an umbrella.

Religious Services — The last services of the semester will be held at 6 p.m. at Hillel House. Dinner will follow at 7:15 p.m. in the Hillel Kosher Dining Room.

Sale — "Keramos," an annual ceramic and art sale, will take place from 10 a.m.–6 p.m. in the Ceramics Dept. in Munson Annex.

Notices

Financial Aid — Financial Aid Services would like to remind students to file their '97–'98 Free Application For Federal Student Aid (FAFSA) or renewal FAFSA by Feb. 15. This is to ensure that your application will be received by the processing center by the UMass March 1 deadline. If you do not receive a renewal form, please fill out an original form available at the following locations: Fin. Aid Services — 255 Whitmore; United Asia Learning Resource Center — Knowlton; New Africa House; Division of Continuing Ed. — Goodell Bldg.; Bilingual Collegiate Program — Wilder Hall.

Information — The UMass Pagan Students will be holding an informational table in the Campus Center Concourse from Wed. Dec. 11 through Fri. Dec 13. For more information, contact Melissa at 546–0476.

Dance — The Northeast School of Dance Studio in Northampton will hold a dance spree every Friday from 8:30 p.m. to midnight every Friday. People can dance to variety of music in a smoke and alcohol–free environment. All ages welcome. Sliding scale. For more information, call 584–8167.

Dancing — UMass Ballroom Dance meetings are every Tuesday and Thursday at 5:15 p.m. in room 101 Totman. Come learn to dance, newcomers welcome. For more information, contact Milly DeJesus at 546–1083.

Health — To help students and their families stay healthy and access University Health Services more easily, members of the Health Reach International team are available to help you find answers to your questions and concerns: Mondays from 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Health Education Dept., UHS room 248 (call 577–5181 for more info) and 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Community Room H–4 North Village; Tuesdays 6:30– 8:30 p.m. in the International Lounge, Prince House (call 545–2299 for more info); Wednesdays 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Community Room, 411 Lincln. All conversations are confidential.

Meeting — Alanon meetings are held Mondays in room 801 and Thursdays in room 802 of the Campus Center from noon–1 p.m.

Meeting — P.O.W.E.R., the Progressive Organization for Women's Rights, holds their weekly meetings on Thursdays at 6 p.m. in the Student Union room 306. All men and women are welcome.

Meeting — The Pakistan Students Association has its weekly meetings every Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. Check for the room number at the information desk. For further details, contact Musharraf at 546–6295.

Meeting — Anthropology Undergraduate Caucus meets every Wednesday at 7:45 p.m. in Machmer 201. All anthropology undergraduate minors and majors welcome.

Meeting — Weekly "Schulchan Ivrit" held every Wednesday at 3 p.m. in the Bluewall Cafe. Make a right as you enter and look for the sign on the table. All Israelis and other Hebrew speakers welcome.

Meeting — The Animal Rights Coalition meetings are every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in room 306 of the Student Union. For more information, call the ARC office at 5–1925.

Menorah Lighting — All are welcome to attend the lighting of the 6–foot menorah in front of the Hillel House, 388 N. Pleasant St., Amherst, at the following times: Tues. Dec. 10 at 4:30 p.m.; Wed. Dec. 11 at 8:30 p.m.; Thurs. Dec. 12 at 6 p.m.

New Organization — WICC (West Indian/Caribbean Coalition) meets every Sunday evening at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center Coffee Shop. Anyone from the West Indies or the Caribbean is encouraged to attend, as well as anyone interested in the culture. For more information, contact Tony at 546–6487 or Nizam at 546–3967.

New Organization — Attention Biracial and Multiracial Students on campus. A new organization is forming and your help is needed. If interested, call Jordan at 546–3548.

Religious — The Muslim Student Association at the University of Massachusetts invites all Muslims in the Amherst area to weekly Friday prayer from noon to 1 p.m. in the United Asia Cultural Center Room (in the basement of Worcester Dining Common). For more information, call Utama at 256–8482 or Laili at 253–0874.

Staff Needed — The UMass Index yearbook needs staff in all departments. Editorial positions are available in Photo, Layout, Copy, and Marketing departments. An assistant copy editor and assistant sports editor are also needed. Meetings are held on Wednesdays at 7 p.m., 304 Student Union, or call 545–0848 if interested.

Submissions Request — Spectrum Magazine is looking for submissions of poetry, prose, artwork, and photos. Submissions can be turned in to the Spectrum office, 406E Student Union. The final deadline for all submissions is Feb. 12, 1997. Anyone interested in knowing more about the Spectrum can call the office at 545–2240.

Support Group — Tobacco cessation support group meets weekly on Wednesday evenings from 7–8 p.m. in the Campus Center to help people quit smoking and chewing tobacco. See schedule by elevators for room number or call Steve at 577–5181 for further information.

Talent Needed — The UMass Asian American Students Association is looking for Asian/American hip hop, reggae, and R&B dancers for next semesters annual Asian Night production to be held on April 11, 1997. Contact Geneva at 546–2714 for audition information.

Volunteer — The Zoo in Forest Park at Springfield has a wealth of diverse volunteer opportunities available for persons who love animals and are committed to conservation education. For further information about the Zoo and to be sent a volunteer application, please call (413) 733–2251.

■ survey

continued from page 1

ative. However, according to the survey, less than 10 percent of those polled agreed strongly with these assumptions.

The survey asked similar questions about the Chabad House and Judaic Studies Program, and Jewish fraternities and sororities. The responses to these questions varied somewhat from the Hillel question.

Later in the meeting, Resnick said that some Jewish students will be reluctant to be become active in the Jewish Community for a variety of reasons and it is difficult to target these students when planning programs.

The Program Task Force Committee will continue to meet and design more specific questions for a survey that is to be administered next semester, said Wilensky. These questions will ask students specifically what type of programs and activities they would enjoy.

The next survey should delve deeper into issues of Jewish life on campus, and will lead to more accommodation politically, socially, and religiously for Jewish students on campus.

Copies of the survey can be attained at the Hillel House.

The Collegian News Department is currently accepting applications for Associate News Editors. These paid positions offer substantial writing experience. News Associates typically cover:

- politics of higher education
- student activism
- state politics
- student government and Registered Student Organizations
- university policy and administration
- police and public safety
- Town of Amherst, Hadley, Northampton, etc.
- court proceedings
- health and environment
- science and technology

Interested students should call Laura Stock, Michael Elliott or Chris Conner at 545–1851, or stop by the Collegian office in 113 Campus Center (basement).

The Collegian is an Equal Opportunity Employer.

Apology

The Collegian apologizes for the content of yesterday's editorial/opinion piece entitled "Shalom, UMass," written by Henry J. Brier. The editorial implies that the 1994–1995 Graduate Student Senate Treasurer knew about the late Robert M. Schapiro's weak heart condition, incited him to cardiac arrest and held a "complacent grin" while Schapiro was being taken to the hospital.

In actuality, the 1994–1995 Graduate Student Senate Treasurer, who was female, not male as Brier's column states, was not present at this meeting, nor did anyone present know of Schapiro's heart condition.

As noted on the Opinion/Editorial page, the views and opinions expressed on the page are those of individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views in the Collegian.

The Collegian regrets the error.

Have a nice break!

So long, farewell, to you and you and you... from the Wednesday night crew, bringing you the biggest, artsiest, livingest paper every week.

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
BE A BARTENDER
747-9888
SPRINGFIELD

EXERCISE!? ARE YOU NUTS?
PLAY HARD!
HAMPSHIRE FITNESS CLUB
AMHERST
256-6446

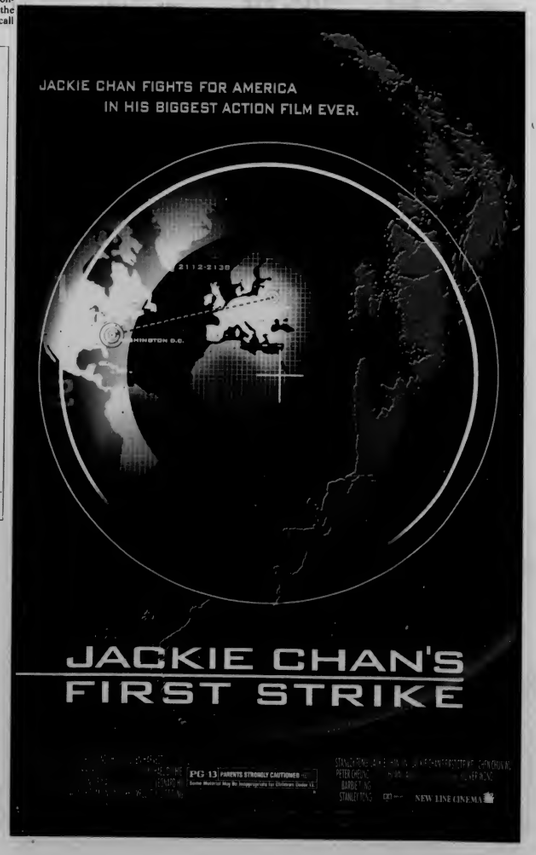
LONDON $149

FRANKFURT	$215
CANCUN	$129
LOS ANGELES	$149
ROME	$249
LISBON	$239
CHICAGO	$100
BANGKOK	$376
TOKYO	$346

CALL FOR A FREE STUDENT TRAVELS MAGAZINE
Council Travel
44 MAIN STREET
AMHERST, MA 01002
(413) 256-1261
http://www.ciee.org/travel.htm
EURAILPASSES ISSUED ON-THE-SPOT!

Go Ahead, Card Me.

Talk about your great deal...the Okemo College VIP Card. For just $25, your first lift ticket (Mon.–Fri.) is FREE, then ski or ride for 1/2 price on weekdays and get $10 off on weekends and holidays for the rest of the season. Snickers, Mountain Dew and HMV Record Stores are throwing in special deals, too! So c'mon up to Okemo - it never felt so good to get carded.



OKEMO
WE'VE GOT YOU THERE

Okemo InfoLine: (802) 228-4041 • 24-Hour Snow Line: (802) 228-5222 • http://www.okemo.com

Some College Season Pass for $99*. Never Ride Cheap Again.

Holiday periods are 12/25/96-1/1/97, 1/17-19/97, 2/17-21/97. For the season pass, present your college I.D. and proof of full-time student status at the Okemo Main Administrative Office.
*The price of the College Card and Season Pass include Vermont 5% sales tax.

"Winter Session"
Aerobic Instructor Training & Certification
548-8807
(ACE and C.E.C.'S)
"For Certified Instructors"

JENNIFER JUTRAS / COLLEGIAN

Music man...
Russ Baker, an undecided continuing education student, played his guitar outside the Student Union yesterday afternoon.

CPI change may hurt the poor

Calls for bipartisan group to look at the recommended changes

By Alan Fram
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Poor and older Americans would be hit hard if the government's inflation gauge were ratcheted downward, due chiefly to their heavy reliance on Social Security, federal pensions and other annually adjusted benefits.

Last week, a Senate advisory panel said the Consumer Price Index overstates inflation by 1.1 percent and should be replaced by a more accurate measure. The proposal would reduce budget deficits by $691 billion over a decade by reining in cost-of-living increases for many federal benefits, the earned income tax credit for the working poor, and the personal exemption and standard deduction that most taxpayers use.

A little-noticed analysis the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office conducted of a similar plan in 1995 illustrates its consequences. The budget office said Americans earning $30,000 annually or less would bear 34.9 percent of its costs, even though they earn roughly 16.5 percent of the nation's income.

Inversely, people making $100,000 or more — accounting for 31.9 percent of the country's income — would pay just 16.9 percent of the pricetag of changing the CPI calculation, CBO said.

It also analyzed the plan another way, comparing different income groups' average earnings before and after the proposed inflation change. Measured this way, lower-income Americans would lose a larger share of their projected income to both lower benefit payments and higher taxes than those better off.

The CBO study assumed the Consumer Price Index would be reduced by 0.5 percent.

The statistics reflect that there are more low-income than high-income Americans. Also, poorer people tend to get a greater portion of their incomes from inflation-adjusted federal benefit payments like Social Security and retirement and veterans' pensions. One affected program, Supplemental Security Income, is paid only to low-income elderly and disabled people.

On the tax side, the consequences of the change are more complicated.

As a group, the well-off would bear a heavier burden than the poor if there were smaller annual inflation increases for income-tax brackets, the personal exemption and standard deduction. That is because most poor people owe little or no taxes, while higher earning people generally pay much more.

On the other hand, low-earning taxpayers as individuals would lose a greater portion of their incomes than the wealthy if the personal exemption and standard deduction grew more slowly. That is because each extra dollar a low-income person pays is a greater proportion of their earnings than each extra dollar a better-off person pays.

Scant mention was made last week about how the proposal's burden would be shared, although some liberal groups hammered at that point. Sen. Edward Kennedy (D-Mass.) warned against "an unfair back-door benefit cut that hurts senior citizens and working Americans."

White House officials and many lawmakers of both parties, eyeing balanced-budget talks next year and a long-range effort to keep Social Security solvent, called for a bipartisan look at the commission's recommendations.

Both sides are tempted by the savings the plan would produce, but leery of unilaterally embracing a proposal that would reduce projected retirement and veterans benefits and raise taxes for tens of millions of Americans.

"Inaccurate government statistics, particularly one as important as the CPI, are unacceptable," said Senate Finance Committee Chairman William Roth (R-Del.) who helped appoint the commission.

Most critics, such as House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt (D-Mo.) argued that any adjustments should be made by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, which believes a smaller adjustment and further study are probably needed.

The AFL-CIO, the American Association of Retired Persons and others are already gearing up against the proposal, complicating its already politically sensitive prospects.

"This is about whether we are going to say to tens of millions of Americans on the cusp of the poverty line, 'We're going to reduce your income for the next 10 years,'" said AFL-CIO public policy director David Smith.

Clinton begins by balancing budget

By Robert Burns
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In his first political speech since his re-election, President Clinton today outlined second-term policy priorities he said reflect Americans' desire for bipartisan cooperation.

"The public wants us to work together, and our progress demands that we work together," Clinton told a Democratic Leadership Council policy forum.

At the top of his agenda for 1997, the president said, is forging an agreement with the Republican-led Congress on balancing the budget while reforming Medicaid and Medicare.

Other top priorities are improving public education, finding work for welfare recipients, fighting "gangs and guns" on the streets, expanding the Family and Medical Leave Act and enacting campaign finance reform laws, Clinton said.

"While the era of big government is over, the era of big challenges is not," he told the centrist Democratic group which he helped create in 1985.

"To make this democracy work we must create a vital center that is a place of action," he said. Most Americans want not only a government that is smaller and less intrusive but also one that is more effective and efficient, the president said.

He said the underlying goal of his legislative priorities would be to create a "national community of purpose [to] help communities help themselves."

Clinton recalled his speech to the Democratic Leadership Council a year ago when a budget fight with the Republican-led Congress led to a shutdown of the federal government.

"That day, I said the great question before us was can the center hold? Well, today the clamor of political conflict has subsided, a new landscape is taking shape. The answer is clear: the center can hold, the center has held, and the American people are demanding that it continue to do so," Clinton said.

Clinton's victory over Republican Bob Dole was widely attributed to his move to the political center after the 1994 midterm elections and his advocacy of welfare reform, deficit reduction and modest government initiatives in the area of targeted tax cuts and incremental health care reform.

"We have clearly created a new center," he said. "Not the lukewarm midpoint between overheated liberalism and chilly conservatism, but instead a place where throughout our history people of goodwill have tried to forge new approaches to new challenges."

Winter Intersession
January 2 - 17

...spend that time earning extra credits at UMass Lowell. If you want to move ahead in your educational program, and earn college credit, enroll in UMass Lowell's Winter Intersession. This highly concentrated session is also a great way to earn transfer credits if you're enrolled in another University. This year, make the most of your winter break at UMass Lowell.

DAY CLASSES:
Monday - Saturday, 9am - 12noon

EVENING CLASSES:
Monday - Friday, 6 - 9pm
Saturday 1 - 4pm

Credit Courses (3 credits) available in:
- Liberal Arts
- Mathematics
- Social Sciences
- Management
- Sciences
- Computers
- Music

Cost: $115.00 per undergraduate credit

For a Winter Intersession Course Bulletin, call the Division of Continuing Education/Office of Enrollment Services at (508) 934-2481.

Or just fill out the coupon and mail it to: University of Massachusetts Lowell, Office of Enrollment Services/DCE, One University Avenue, Lowell, MA 01854-2881.

Name
Address
City
State Zip
Phone ( )
Institution Currently Attending

UMass Lowell
UNIVERSITY COLLEGE
Division Of Continuing Education

Over ~500~ Microbrews
Spirit Haus
Specialty Beverage Center
FULL REDEMPTION CENTER
Attention Grad Students: Take 10% off Regularly Priced Fine Wines

MICROBREWS

Redhook Ales (E.S.B., Porter, I.P.A., Ryc Hole Weizen)	$4.99/six
Ipswich (Ale, Dark Ale)	$5.99/six
Saranac (Black+Tan, Pale Ale, Amber, Golden, Wildberry)	$4.99/as $18.99/case
Sam Adams Lager 12-pack bottles	$9.99/six

BEER SPECIALS

Rolling Rock case bottles	$13.99
Bud 16 oz. bottles	$2.99/4-pack
Bud Dry 12-pack cans	$5.99
Corona 12-pack bottles	$8.99

SPECIALS

Myer's Dark Rum	$10.99/750ml
Jameson	$15.99/750ml
Frangelico	$15.99/750ml

HALF KEG SPECIAL
Petes Summer Brew $75.00

DISCOVER VISA MasterCard
Micro-Brewed Beer Kegs in Stock
Wine Coolers • Ice • Mixers Mini Kegs • Beer Glasses
Rt. 9 East College Street • 253-5384
one mile east of Amherst Center on Rt. 9E

SNOWBOARDERS!
KLEIN'S ALL★SPORTS IS WHERE IT'S AT!
NALE ZEKE SNOWBOARD PICTURED NALE RIDE PRO'S
$329.99
HUGE SELECTION OF BOARDS! NITRO, K2, MORROW, OXYGEN & NALE!
NEW 1997 LINES ARE IN!
Great Holiday Savings Going On Now In All Locations!!
AIRWALK SNOWBOARD BOOTS Advantage $159.99
All The Hottest Styles In Snowboard Clothing
Stuff CONVERT
BLACK DIET
FREE GORE MOUNTAIN LIFT TICKET With Purchase Of Any Snowboard Package
Hampshire Mall, Hadley • Berkshire Mall, Lanesboro

TOC Bar & Grill
Munchie Specials Mon - Fri 4 - 7 PM
Tonight Dec.12 at 7:00pm
UMASS vs. Drexel
Free Popcorn Draft Beer Drink Specials & Micro Brews
UMass
11th Floor Campus Center
Mon.-Fri. 4PM - 12:30AM
Sat. 3PM - 12:30AM

DAILY COLLEGIAN
The Massachusetts New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967
113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592
http://www.umass.edu/tso/collegian

Jacob W. Michaels Editor-in-Chief Chris Taylor Connet Managing Editor
Alycia Hines Business Manager G. Tony Morse Production Manager Pete Servais Advertising Manager
David Voldan Advertising Production Manager Lisa Chiu Senior Diversity Editor

Mike Burke Arts & Living Editor
Humphrey brown III Black Affairs Co-Editor
Gregory Cesmir Black Affairs Co-Editor
Sunanda Ghosh Developing Nations Editor
Mark McGrath Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jamie Smithemier Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Bryan Schwartzman Jewish Affairs Co-Editor
Sarah Kummel Jewish Affairs Co-Editor
Lisa Chiu Multicultural Affairs Editor
Michael Elliott News Editor
Elizabeth Brown Photography Editor
Casey Kane Sports Co-Editor
Chris Shamm Sports Co-Editor

Michelle Hillman Women's Issues Editor
Josh Sylvester Editorial Production Manager
Sean Horgan Systems Manager
Eric R. Remillard IV Finance Manager
Rob McDonald Circulation Manager
Ryan Courtemanche Subscription Manager
Feisal Ahmad Marketing Manager
Renee LeBlanc Classifieds Manager
Lyle A. Henry Operations Manager
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Puppas Classified Advertising
Thomas F. Sweeney Jr. Graphics Advisor/Instructor
David Ulaki Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Opinion/Editorial

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

In denial

Tara MK Connelly

There are many things in life that I wish I could do over again and I guess when it comes to college — that would be one of them. Now as I end my four years and one semester at this fine learning institution, I am no closer to having a clue then when I arrived here in 1992. In fact, if the truth be known, I think I had more of a clue way back then.

There are things I regret, things I remember with great fondness and things I just shake my head at and ask, "why?" In a perfect world, I suppose I would have no regrets and see my mistakes as learning experiences created solely to better myself.

However, we all know that a perfect world exists only in Dr. Seuss' books where no one is discriminated against, everyone is willing to try green eggs and ham, and your heart has the ability to grow despite a sucky Christmas.

I think the first thing I would have done was take major advantage of TAs, office hours and extra help sessions. I wish I had spent more time trying to absorb knowledge than creating a social life.

It's not that I slacked or that I'm extraordinarily lucky (or popular for that matter), but sometimes I wish I pushed a pencil instead of coasting along on my God-given talent.

The second thing I would have done was take a semester abroad in France, therefore ensuring my ability to pass the goddamn language requirement. I realize that you need to be immersed in a language to learn it. But, I can't help but picture myself spending a year in Paris getting awfully good at pointing, holding up my fingers and acting like a mime. Does that qualify as sign language in France?

Thirdly, I would have gotten a real job, one that made money over the summers. I would have thrown away all those enticing and evil credit card applications and just said "No." I would have spent summers working to accumulate some sort of savings instead of spending it on stuff, liquor, clothes, hanging out at the beach, watching surfers, surfing... who am I kidding? I totally would have blown all my summers on hanging out; it was the best part of college.

But good things have happened. Despite my many, many, many protests against any type of physical activities, I have been rather drawn to my athletic side. Some of it has to do with my frequent interest in the Women's Sports & Fitness magazine, some of it has to do with my boyfriend's need to reach athletic perfectionism (some not all, dear, just some) and a lot of it has to do with my own piece of mind.

When I was younger I seemed to have been a boundless bouncing bundle of energy. I could swim for hours in 40 degree ocean water, run forever during bouts of "war," and would protest mightily when being snubbed during a soccer game. I would proudly display battle scars, scraped knees and oozing scratches. My metabolism was miraculous. I was up for anything. And now...

And now I'm almost 23 years old and feel like I'm 60. I get up in the morning complaining about my back. I get winded when I have to run for the bus (hell, I get winded when I have to walk to the bus). I throw "like a girl" and I punch even worse.

For some reason I give the illusion of a fit and toned body held up by gravity and people's poor eyesight. Sucking in my stomach has become an art. I can no longer scarf down three hamburgers, two fries and a shake from McDonald's (well actually, I can, but now I feel guilty).

Victor (yeah, his name is Victor) can't believe that I have lasted as long as I have. Recently accompanying me to a routine check-up, he yelled at the nurse, "What! That can't be right, how can her blood pressure be so low!? That is impossible! She eats fast food, salt, candy bars! She's a mess."

And the same was to be said for my cholesterol level, my weight and other assorted lab tests which I assure you that you do not need to know about or care for that matter.

So yeah, I'm trying to live up to my body. I try not to eat salt or lots of fattening food (I fail a lot of the times, but I'm trying). I get on a stationary bike (key word, stationary), and I hate the bike when I get off it 40-odd minutes later, but for the first time in a long time I feel like I've done something productive. Sometimes I go to free swim. I'm the one that takes 15 min. to lower my body into the pool, 20 more to kick across, five more to rest on the opposite end and an indeterminable amount to venture back. It's okay though: I'm "having fun."

Another interesting venture included going to the Boyden weight room when I attempt to lift, push and pull at barbells and other weights only to kill myself laughing. I know I don't belong there, everyone who's watching me knows I don't belong there, and I feel really stupid sitting in front of a mirror watching myself grimace and sweat while trying to do flies with 5 lb. weights. Pathetic, yes, but the next time someone asks me if I lift I can say, "yes" and not merely be referring to a fork laden with luscious cheesecake and strawberries.

Now I may never be fit enough for a triathalon, decathlon or any "lon" at all. I may never run a marathon, be on a national team or haunted by any type of scouts (including "girl scouts" although I might, considering how yummy their Samoas are). But for now I will be content with the few pounds I shed, the few inches I lose and the small amount of muscle I amass.

And if I leave this University with one thing, it will be with stronger hands from typing out editorials, sharper eyes from staring at a terminal and a sharper tongue for dealing with idiots that ask about the horoscope. I bid you all adieu for a wonderful four and a half years and if you ever see me jogging — please, please offer me a ride home.

College truly is what your make of it and, unlike high school, you don't have anyone to kick your ass. You have yourself and whatever group of support you can scrounge up.

The "real world" is like a bitch slap to someone who won't shut up about their nail polish. Suddenly pastel blue or Inca gold seems immaterial to being able to pay rent and buy food. Somehow being able to funnel and burp on cue isn't quite as "useful" as a decent GPA and Lotus 1-2-3.

But more importantly, you want to be able to look back at your generation and say, "sure we may seem to be a bunch of apathetic, pot smoking, beer swilling fashion hogs — but damn we knew how to party!" — just making sure you were paying attention.

Seriously, you want what Hemingway, Monet, Beethoven, Einstein and Armstrong had and will always have: a lasting impression on a planet we squander our time so heedlessly on until we become part of its top soil. Or maybe you're content with being written down as the owner of the largest "Beevis and Butthead" video collection — it's all up to you.

Tara MK Connelly is a Collegian columnist and damn proud of it.

The logos are that bad...

Bob Dunn

Well, it's gearing up for playoff time again so get set to kick back on Sunday and watch your favorite teams face off. Maybe you're a big Kansas City Chiefs fan or perhaps you prefer to settle in and watch the Washington Redskins tear up the gridiron.

Maybe you don't enjoy football all that much. Well, baseball season is just a few months away. It'll be time to break out the 'ole mitt and root for those Cleveland Indians or even Ted Turner's pocket cash generating Atlanta Braves.

Does anyone else see a problem here?

I'm usually the first one to give up my seat on the Politically Correct bandwagon, but this time I think I'm going to be sitting put.

Fairly often a flap about sports mascots will flare up and most of them are usually pretty flimsy and largely a waste of time and breath. The teams mentioned above, though, have moved beyond simply adopting a mascot or logo that's "too male" or "too aggressive" or "too white" and gone into the realm of completely insulting an entire race of people.

I don't think that it's beyond the grasp of anyone's sensibilities to realize that on their best day, Native Americans in this country have been dealt a brutal hand of cards. Ever since Europeans began colonizing this country, Native Americans have been subject to systematic slaughter of both their culture and their people. Do we really need to add insult to injury by dangling grotesque caricatures and slurs in front of them under the guise of professional sports logos?

Maybe you're sitting out there, reading this and thinking to yourself, "Well, come on. Those team names really aren't that bad." O.K., that being the case lets take a look at some other potential team names using the same guidelines as above and see if these are found offensive.

The Atlanta Dagos? The Cleveland Micks? Maybe we could start up a Detroit Frogs franchise, maybe they could face off against the Toronto Krauts.

Do you begin to see the problem here?

Ask the franchises about it and they'll cry poverty and inconvenience. "We'll have to retool all the merchandise, change all the logos blah, blah, blah." I'm sorry. I understand that professional sports are businesses and as such they need to put financial concerns on the table, but I'm sure that the self-respect of an entire race of people should come in at a point significantly above the bottom line.

The biggest hypocrite in this entire fiasco is Ted Turner, himself. Turner owns the Braves and not only hasn't done anything about changing the team logo (he's the owner, I'm sure he could if he wanted to) but he also until recently even participated in the even more offensive "tomahawk chop." Turner's response to all of this was to simply not "chop" during Braves games and to suddenly develop some sort of world consciousness and begin producing movies for his television stations featuring sympathetic views of Native Americans throughout history.

The sickest thing about these films is the absolute transparency of Turner's plos. Does he honestly think that he can distance himself from his actions in the stands and his inaction in the Brave's boardroom by suddenly making movies?

"See, I'm a nice guy. I like Native Americans. Some of my best movies feature Native Americans." Give me a break.

In an age where we pretend to be so enlightened and break our arms patting ourselves on our backs for being so sensitive to the plights of others, let's stop talking about it and give Native Americans back at least one thing we took from them. Their self respect.

Bob Dunn is a Collegian columnist.

Power struggle

Evan Young

Has anyone out there ever been without light? Light, that is, other than the sun? Have you ever tripped over things in your house that you knew were there, but couldn't see because it was really dark? Ever try to read in the dark? Change your clothes? Eat? Well, all of the above things become a lot tougher without at least a little bit of light.

But, being without electric light isn't really so bad, now, is it? People own flashlights, candles, other means of providing light. How bad can a power outage be if you have enough candles? Okay, so you don't have TV for a little while. No big loss. Read a book by candlelight.

Now, imagine this: You're sitting in this candlelight, getting drunk, or reading, or singing, when you notice that hey, it's starting to get colder. Then you realize that the way in which your house is kept warm in the winter is by electric heat. For the same reason that your lights are off, your heat is off. You start to get very cold and uncomfortable. You pile on clothes, but to no avail. The cold has crept into your soul.

So, the only way to cure that deep-down cold feeling is with a nice cup of hot chocolate, or coffee, or something along those lines. But have a lasting impression on a planet we squander our before you realize that your microwave or oven range wouldn't work anyway, you try to fill up a pot with some crisp, fresh tap water. But guess what? Guess what you don't have? Water, the giver of life, the most essential chemical compound known to human existence, the main ingredient in a cup of coffee — not available!

So, naturally, you're pissed. So you throw some gear on, strap up your boots, and brave the snowy blizzard that has thus far ruined your evening. You go out to your car, planning to drive to someone's house who hasn't lost everything. But wait, you just remembered — your car doesn't work anymore because when you were driving in the snow you slid into an embankment and ruined it! You can barely go forward, let alone steer.

Your car is now a big piece of metal crap sitting in the driveway.

So you go back inside, angry, but figure, hey — how long could it possibly take to get the power working again? You live in Western Massachusetts, the Pioneer Valley, the place where snow in the winter is as natural a part of life as a blue sky in the afternoon. People around here know how to handle things like this. They are prepared to fix those problems that a snowfall creates, and fix them quickly, right?

NO! You have NOTHING, and the wonderful, on-the-ball Western Massachusetts Electric Company, the same company that you have been pumping hundreds of dollars at every year, the company that should be able to afford to fix the sun if it ever went out, can't get your power back. Not that night, nope. But surely they'll turn it on by the next morning, right? No, not by morning. Next afternoon? Night? The morning after that? What are they, a bunch of absolutely incompetent unprepared fools? That's impossible!

Nobody can go for two days and nights without power, heat, or water, right? What is this, Greenland? Should I clear a plot in the backyard to make room for a spit to roast the venison I hunted with my bare hands? Maybe Western Massachusetts Electric, in lieu of electricity, could at least bring a couple of chunks of flint and a few logs over to our house as a sign of holiday good will. Maybe they could bring over one of those patented Chanukah-brand Miracle Oil Lamps.

Okay, so maybe I have taken a few things for granted. I'm used to having a car. I pay all my car bills, I pay to have it fixed, for all my gas, I check the oil all the time. I use it for work to deliver calzones to earn money to keep it running. I take it for granted that it will start every time I turn the key in the ignition. I take it for granted that I will be able to drive down the road to the store to get some food. Well, now my car is gone. Totaled during a delivery to Delta Chi (my thanks go out to Tim Sauvigne, for letting me use his phone). But my car is something under my control, and while I do take it for granted, when I lose it I realize it's my fault.

But what happens when a storm hits and the electricity doesn't work? It's beyond your control. It sucks, and it makes you realize how much you take for given. But isn't that the way life is? You only realize that you are taking things for granted once they are taken away. Little dumb things like lights for dark places. Big dumb things like heat at night. I have papers to do this week, but they are all trapped on a computer that won't turn on. I have, ridiculously enough, Massachusetts jury duty to try to get myself to on Wednesday morning. I'm not even from this state — thank god — and don't pay in-state tuition fees, but they can use me to decide the fate of their criminal suspects. When they can't get my power fixed. Well, unless the accused can turn my power on, he gets a big fat guilty verdict from me. Somebody has to pay.

Evan Young is a Collegian columnist.

Commercialism shafts the holidays

C. Taylor Conner

I returned to consciousness from my turkey-induced coma to find myself the Gulliver of the holiday set, tied down in tinsel and wrapped in ribbon.

It had been perhaps a half an hour since we, the Conner family, had finished eating Thanksgiving dinner, and already there was a wreath-shaped noose around my neck, ready to choke me into Christmas submission.

The yearly ordeal had arrived.

A few days later, I was talking to a friend back in Amherst. He brought up an interesting point — the holiday we'd just celebrated was the last remaining major American holiday reasonably untouched by Madison Avenue.

It was sadly true. To run down the list is to find nothing but a cavalcade of grossly opportunistic marketing ploys ingrained into our collective psyche over time to beat us down and suck us in.

The evidence is striking:

• A history text we read in high school noted that business wizards circa 1920 had created both Mother's and Father's Day to boost greeting card, flower and gift sales. A brilliant concept, save for the fact that the parents of younger children get the shaft — right on — by having to endure a series of eerily Dali-esque potholders, doilies and cozies through the entire elementary school level.

Maybe these were appreciated before parents learned that fetuses in their second trimester working in Kathie Lee's sweatshops could make 5,000 perfect two-tone polyester jumpsuits in the time it took their kid to make a felt whatever-the-hell-it's-supposed-to-be that reads, "I Lov yu, mOom — kisses!"

• Correct me if the following doesn't sound like an outtake from the Beatles' ill fated Magical Mystery Tour film: a rabbit with pastel fur prances about carrying a basket full of multicolored poached eggs, gleefully hiding these products, which appear to have fallen out of the shaft — damn right! — of Chernobyl's finest chicken.

Jesus would turn over in his grave. Irony intended.

• Valentine's Day. Not only are we forced to endure more pink fluff than a homophobic filmmaker's vision of San Francisco, but we all know that those with and without significant others must suffer through this faux cuddle-fest.

Couples are placed in the precarious position of having to expertly and wholly communicate through material means the true depth of their love in one annual fell swoop.

To put this in perspective, imagine if the one criterion for proving Michael Iordan is the greatest baller of all time were his Feb. 14 stats. What if they just happened to suck that day? What a motherf... — shut your mouth! — I'm just talking about a shaft.

And people wonder why so many lovers call it quits shortly before or after Feb. 14 — I'd almost rather be single.

• Take all the non-Irish people who celebrate St. Patrick's Day with ungodly amounts of special sauce and divide it by the number of people within that same group who actually know the history of the holiday.

Wow, the numerator becomes the answer — basic arithmetic was never so easy!

• Martin Luther King Day is... well, I guess there's no marketing tie-in or Shaft reference here. But both MLK and Richard Roundtree are black icons.

Okay, that was a stretch.

• And, finally, although the premise of an elf-employing, obese white guy in cherry red, white-trimmed duds shimmying his way down a sooty black shaft — can you dig it? — is slightly less ridiculous an image than Demi Moore as Hester Prynne, at least there were people bearing gifts on the first XMass.

C. Taylor Conner is a Collegian columnist.

God bless America

Miranda Pirnell

This column is dedicated to Claire and Claire, in no specific order.

I'll be back in the land Down Under in twelve days. In less than two weeks I'll be watching cricket, drinking beer, hitting the beach and enjoying a true Australian Christmas. I can hardly wait.

With the end of the semester drawing perilously close, everyone's mind seems to be turning to thoughts of home. Maybe it's because we're all sick of talking about the snow, or that we're trying to avoid thinking about those impending exams, but it seems that every second person you meet asks you if you are looking forward to going home. As an international student it's even worse. There appears to be some unwritten rule that people cannot strike up a conversation without asking how you feel about going home.

Now this shouldn't really be a problem for me. After all it is fairly obvious that I'm counting the days until my Qantas plane lands at Charles Kingsford Smith Airport in Sydney. I can already feel the tears, which well up every time I fly in over the Harbour Bridge and Opera House, forming in the corners of my eyes. It is a feeling that anyone who's ever spent anytime away from home should be able to understand. Yet often when I tell people how much I want to go home, they are shocked and amazed. Some have even accused me of insulting them or being ungrateful.

Believe me when I say that this is the last thing I would ever want to do. When I left home to come here, people warned me that I would change. They didn't really have a reason or an explanation for this, they just said it. "You'll change, Miranda," they whispered waving me off, as though it was the last time I would ever see them. I had no idea what it all meant but I was sure it couldn't be as bad as they were making it seem.

So I arrived and threw myself into UMass life, waiting for the day to come. Each morning I would rigorously investigate my person, unsure of what I was looking for but assuming that I would know it if I found it. When I spoke to friends back home they asked me how I was going and I took to replying, "still no change," and they would mutter praise and approval down the phone line.

It is only now that I sit here, desperate for a warm beer and a cold meat pie like only the Sydney Cricket Ground can deliver, that I realise I have changed.

A native of the original nation of knockers and the home of the 'tall poppy syndrome,' I have come to know what people sitting at home, whining about the economy and moaning about taxation, cannot possibly hope to understand, I've learnt to love my country.

And for this I have only the United States of America to thank. By welcoming me to your nation and your way of life, you allowed me to turn my gaze inward to my home country and look upon it with fresh and objective vision. As I had always secretly hoped and expected, I liked what I saw.

But just because I am excited about going home doesn't mean I'm happy to be leaving here. I'm not. How could I be? The USA has taught me just how much I love my country and for this I will be ever grateful. So if you will allow me just one more moment of self indulgence to utter those words I have been dying to say, God bless America and I'll see you all in Sydney, 2000.

Miranda Pirnell is a Collegian columnist.

Film • Music • Theatre • Lifestyles • Books • Art
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
ARTS & LIVING
Thursday December 12, 1996
Weekend Edition • Volume CV Issue 68

A LOOK BACK AT 1996

January

• Madonna, 37, starts off her new year testifying against stalker Robert Dewey Hoskins on Jan. 3

• George Burns marks his 100th birthday on Jan. 20

• Millionaire John E. DuPont, 57, murders Olympic freestyle wrestler, Dave Schultz, 52.

• Michelle Kwan becomes the youngest ladies national figure skating champion since Peggy Fleming in 1964.

• Rent, a musical conceived, written and composed by Jonathan Larson, opens off Broadway on Jan. 25 to rave reviews.

February

• Lisa Marie Presley ends her marriage to Michael Jackson.

• Elizabeth Taylor files for divorce from hubby number seven, Larry Fortensky, after 52 months of marriage. Says she has no intention to look for an eighth husband.

• Princess Diana agrees to divorce Prince Charles.

• Figure skater Ekaterina Gordeeva returns to the ice for the first time after the death of her husband and partner, Sergei Grinkov.

March

• In one of the worst mass murders in British modern history, gunman Thomas Watt Hamilton, 43, opens fire on school children at the Dublane Primary School in Dublane, Scotland, on March 13. Sixteen children between the ages of five and six and their teacher, Gwenne Mayor, are killed.

• In their second trial for murder, Lyle and Erik

Turn to LOOK BACK page 11

The Year in Review

ARTIST OF THE YEAR
ROSIE O'DONNELL

How Rosie talked talk television

She loves t... Cruise – but ... Funny and ... waves of dey... revamp talk a... it. And while ... their collective ... O'Donnell were ... did exactly tha... vented the talk ... When the actre... dian decided to ... own talk show, ... was already ... with the likes ... Lake, Jenny ... and Sally Jessy ... Add to that mix ... comers, Cara ... Tempest, and ... really seem to ... landish topics ... for Rosie.

But O'Donnell ... ent ideas, ... She had no ... stooping to the ... her competitors ... would be no ... Jenny Jones' ... secret crushes.

Instead, the ... dubbed the "... a parade of ... their shows, ... selves. All the ... differentiating ... phere that allowed both guests and audience members to feel comfortable.

Typically, when she comes out, she greets the audience and does a monologue describing what she did the night before. Then she introduces the guests and chats with them for about 15 minutes. Later in the show, a musical guest or band performs.

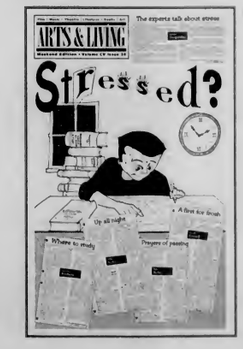
Every now and then, O'Donnell places a gift ... many audience member's seat. Gifts ... from copies of Toy Story to ... In addition, O'Donnell ... Christmas ornaments ... by children. When ... ornaments come in, ... shows them on the air ... then hangs them on ... little tree.

... not only does O'Donnell ... to make talk more ... entertainable and enter... ing, she also mixes in ... with her show.

... probably the funniest – ... cutest – moments are ... she talks about the ... of her dreams, Tom ... Cruise. Mind you, Rosie ... didn't want Cruise to do ... anything but be in her ... and mow the lawn. ... Cruise's wife has ... thing to worry about, ... according to O'Donnell, ... ding up two fingers, ... says "Nicole ... man] and I are like ...

... Cruise on her show ... Tuesday, when he ... his new movie, Jerry ... Cruise was equal to O'Donnell's ... and presented her with a bouquet ... colorful flowers.

Perhaps the best thing about Rosie O'Donnell is not just that she is nice – it's more that she is a genuinely nice and caring person who has subtly revolutionized daytime television in a profound way. To be blunt, O'Donnell saved talk television from itself, turning it into a positive force. It's for that reason the Collegian Arts & Living staff picked Rosie O'Donnell as Artist of the Year.



Seema Gangatirkar is a Collegian columnist.

Design by Josh Sylvester & Mike Burke • Photo Courtesy

~THE YEAR IN MUSIC~

The death of rock 'n' roll

1996: where has the now sound gone?

Maybe rock 'n' roll is finally dead. In the 40 years since BILL HALEY AND HIS COMETS broke onto the music scene, few periods of music have been as stagnant as the post–Nirvana alternative rock world.

This alternative rock movement has nearly suffocated — of the 'big' albums of the year, perhaps BECK'S Odelay will be the only one that won't be found in every used CD store getting old next to copies of Jesus Jones and Poison.

Do you really think anyone will listen to HOOTIE & THE BLOWFISH in 2006? In fact, did anyone really listen to Hootie in 1996? From record sales it looks like the answer may be no, or at least not many.

Mike Burke

Perhaps Hootie's dismal record sales (as well as Sheryl Crow's, Pearl Jam's, Nirvana's...) shows that America is waking up from this alternative rock nightmare realizing that BUSH has much more in common with CINDERELLA than artists like TRICKY or THE ROOTS or TORTOISE who are making new music.

Oh, but my critics may bitch and whine, while hollering "look at Alanis." I looked at ALANIS and shut my eyes. Hopefully when I open up them, she will be gone. The only rational explanation for Alanis selling 13 million albums is the dumbing down of America. Just look at the facts. She releases two albums in Canada. What does she get — — comparisons to DEBBIE GIBSON and TIFFANY. She releases an album in the states and (cue for explosions and fireworks) she outsells every female artist ever. Something is wrong here! Are we really that stupid? Before you go write off a letter to the editors, give this column five years and then read (and weep).

In this age of post–Nirvana, no rock artist has stood up with such a strong and unique voice as Beck. He may well be the last rock 'n' roll singer alive (at least according to the mainstream media... yes, I know about STEREOLAB, Tortoise, Tricky, UNWOUND, WEDDING PRESENT but MTV doesn't want you to know — not yet). By combining elements of rock, folk, country, hip–hop, jazz and lots of other wacky sounds, Beck has created the sound of the '90s.

But while rock 'n' roll may be dead, or at least on its death bed, the same can not be said about the hip–hop world which survived a rollercoaster year. In many ways 1996 marks a pivotal point in the evolution of hip–hop. THE FUGEES, an extremely talented and perhaps over–exposed band, hit the Top 40 chart with a bang, ruling the summer airwaves. Even with cries of sell–outs, the Fugee's The Score can not be ignored.

The Score also set a trend away from the gangsta rap scene which suffered a horrific blow with the death of TUPAC SHAKUR. His death not only marks the passing of a top–notch musician, but possibly the end of gangsta–rap as we know it. With the CEO of Death Row records under FBI watch, one must question how much longer the genre can last before self–destructing.

On a mellower note, THE ROOTS, DE LA SOUL and TRIBE CALLED QUEST re–established themselves at the top of the industry with fantastic albums.

While 1996 may have been the year of hip–hop, artists like Tricky and MATTHEW SHIPP continued reshaping their musical worlds. Jazz fans may remember Shipp's fabulous show with WILLIAM PARKER in the Augusta Savage Gallery. The duo honestly took jazz, and music in general, to a new level.

The Amherst area has been receptive, and even a Mecca, for this experimental, cutting edge jazz. Anyone who questions the future of music should get out of Newbury Comic's top 20 bin and take a peak into the Conway New Music series.

While it is comforting to see artists continue to break down musical barriers and precedents, this stagnation of the rock scene leaves fans wondering: what is next?

Even at close examination of the underground rock scene, there is not great hope. While there may be great bands still floundering in clubs across America, where is the new sound. Or the now sound?

Even in the underground, the now sound seems fixated on the past. And only the artists like Stereolab who borrow heavily from the past with plenty of gimmicks and quirks, have been able to find their own sound.

Loosely related to Stereolab is the space–rock scene linked directly to artists like Tortoise, Trans–Am and Fuxa. Their pretentious music, while enjoyable, is basically an updated version of prog rock.

Pretentious attitudes flood the space rock scene, but nearly on the level of the noise scene. Need an example? Japanese noise magician Merzbrow plans to release a 50 CD set! The noise scene is like your average graduate student; they may have a lot to say, but they never shut up.

Unlike me.

Michael Burke is a Collegian columnist.

Collegian music staff explores the best records of 1996

The Collegian music staff looks back at 1996 picking their favorite albums as well as the biggest disappointment and best live show.

Mike Burke (Arts & Living Editor):

1.) BECK Odelay — No white artist since the Beastie Boys has captured the innovative essence of hip–hop like Beck. But on Odelay, Beck covers far more ground, dipping into country, folk, blues, rock, jazz and just about everything else. Beck may be the only artist that really matters anymore.

2.) STEREOLAB Emperor Tomato Ketchup — England's quirkiest reached a new plateau on this amazing collection combining the best of yesterday's avant–garde with the ground–breaking work of bands like Tortoise. Space rock never sounded so fun.

3.) HEAVENLY Operation Heavenly & TALLULAH GOSH S/T — For the last 10 years, Amelia Fletcher has been the queen of indie pop. These two albums find her at her dandiest.

4.) THE FUGEES The Score — For once Top 40 radio programmers had their head on straight.

5.) JIMMIE DALE GILMORE Braver New World— — Country's finest singer released this absolutely steering album which still leaves goose–bumps everytime I hear him. In cogcert he was even better.

Biggest Disappointment — R.E.M. New Adventures in Hi–Fi — After releasing such gems as Murmur and Automatic For the People, I have set high expectations and this just didn't cut it.

Best live experience — seeing the world's greatest live band, the WEDDING PRESENT, three times.

Lisa M. Oliveri (Arts & Living Associate Editor):

1.) CELINE DION Falling Into You — She is the Diva. I am in the process of trying to acquire all of her albums, and thus far, I haven't gotten very far. Finding really early Celine (the French stuff) is très difficile. But, anyhow, this gets my number one vote for CD of the year because it's one of her best to date.

2.) BUSH Razorblade Suitcase — Yup, call me crazy, but I actually like Bush, and no, not just because Gavin Rossdale is "so hot." Well, that is the reason, but who the hell cares, this is my top 5.

3.) NOA Calling — This is the debut album by this fabulous Israeli singer, Noa. I hope more people will take the opportunity to give her a chance. I almost never give CDs an "A," but this one I did. It's really fantastic. Trust me. Check this one out.

4.) TORI AMOS Boys for Pele — Even if this album isn't her best, it makes my top 5 just because Tori is so great. I don't think Tori could possibly produce anything less than stunning, so while it lacks the charisma of Under the Pink, it's still better than most of the crap that was released this year.

5.) EVITA Complete Motion Picture Soundtrack — Well, if Entertainment Weekly, the end–all authority on music says its a good album, it must be. But what do I know? I've never taken three years of vocal lessons, or anything.

Biggest Disappointment: I really love TORI AMOS — in fact, she is probably one of my favorite artists of all time. And I put Boys for Pele on my list because it's one of the better albums this year. But I was very disappointed with it because I expected so much more, especially after her past two albums.

Best Live Experience: Hands down, the best show for me was MELISSA ETHERIDGE at the Mullins Center. She played for over two hours, and her music is just so much more enthralling live.

Bradley Skaught (Arts & Living Staff):

1.) JIMMIE DALE GILMORE Braver Newer World — Exactly everything that country music, or any music for that matter, should be. Adventurous, passionate, imaginative and beautiful. Truly brave, and most definitely new.

COURTESY ANTON CORBIJN

R.E.M. returns to the top (yet again) with their latest album, New Adventures in Hi–Fi.

2.) THE LOUD FAMILY Interbabe Concern — Scott Miller's dark, complex power pop masterpiece. The most tragically ignored band around makes good with this breathtaking album.

3.) JOE HENRY Trampoline — Henry marries his bittersweet lyrics and dusty country to atmospheric funk. The result is an impossible to categorize journey through Henry's wonderfully twisted world.

4.) GO SAILOR S/T — Rose Melberg's voice is so unabashedly sweet, and her songwriting so infallibly catchy, that almost any Melberg related project is bound for greatness. Listen carefully to the lyrics, though, because there's a whole lot more to Melberg than sweetness and bubblegum hooks.

5.) R.E.M. New Adventures in Hi–Fi — The most consistently brilliant band in pop comes through again with one of their best and the promise of lots more to come.

Biggest disappointment: DONOVAN Sutras — He traded hippy–dippy psychedelic fun for over–earnest spiritual reflection. yawn.

Best live show: JIMMIE DALE GILMORE at the Iron Horse Music Hall — Somehow he managed to translate the promise of Braver Newer World into an intense and moving live show. A rare chance to see one of the greatest country musicians of all time.

Adam Dlugacz (Arts & Living Staff):

1.) DE LA SOUL Stakes Is High — This album easily surpasses any hip–hop album released this year and might be one of the all–time best. Yet what really makes this album so special is the creativity and intelligence that no group from any genre has displayed this year.

2.) H_2O S/T — Anyone who knows me probably could have guessed this would be up here. What you have here is a bunch of great guys bringing back the old–school flavor and showing how hardcore should be: fun and fast.

3.) SENSEFIELD Buildings — The most beautiful album of the year. John Bunch's voice is magnificent and he is aptly backed by some of the most innovative musicians to produce a great album.

4.) DESCENDENTS Everything Sucks — It's the Descendents, need I say more?

5.) AVAIL Friday 4PM — A great hardcore album that will make you sing along and think at the same time. If you don't like these guys, chances are you're listening to too much Slayer.

Biggest Disappointment — The Sex Pistols, Circle Jerks, The Misfits, and a ton of other bands getting back together. With the exception of The Descendents a ton of punk bands got back together and all of them sucked. Not only did they do it to make money and rip off all the people who still support the scene, none of them even did a good job or re– create the vitality that made them so special in the first place — pathetic.

Best live experience — Doc Hopper, Deadguy, Weston and The Marshes in the basement of Butterfield. Without any super big names on the bill and with each band playing their own style the

Turn to BEST, page 7

RUSSELL'S
Discount LIQUORS Discount
18 Main St. Downtown Amherst 253-5441

Featuring, "Saranac" $16.99 case (your choice)

Bud Dry bots. $9.99 case

Now Open Sundays 1-5 P.M.

Busch & Busch "light" $11.99 30/pk. cans

"Micro"Bonanza Continues!
Catamount - All flavors including the popular "X-Mas Ale!"
Sam Adams - All flavors incl "Fezziwig, Cranberry, & Winter Lager!"
Smuttynose - Old Brown Dog, Shoals Pale Ale, & "Chuck Wheat Ale!"
New Amsterdam - Amber, Ale, I.D.A. & Blk& Tan!
Middlesex - Brown Ale, Rasp. Wheat & Oatmeal Stout!
Mix/Match "two": 6/PKs . . . $9.95

Baileys $14.99 Pleiger Jouet Champagne

Glenfiddich $18.99 Courvoisier VS $17.99

Vodka 80° $8.99

All Beers Plus Deposit OPEN 9:00AM - 11:00PM VISA/MASTERCARD •Delivery Available•

January
Winter Session at UMass Boston

Please send me information about UMass Boston's January Winter Session.
Name
Address
City, State, Zip
Return to: Division of Continuing Education UMass Boston 100 Morrissey Blvd. Boston, MA 02125 Fax: 617 287-7922

Make the most of your January break by taking a course or two at UMass Boston. You can choose day or evening classes in a variety of disciplines. Courses meet January 2 through January 24. The undergraduate course fee is $135 per credit, and you can charge your fees to a MasterCard, VISA, or Discover account. To receive a copy of our Winter Session schedule, send in the coupon, email us at dce@umbsky.cc.umb.edu, or call

617 287-7904

Appears at no cost to the Commonwealth.

UMass Boston

* Banking transactions are free. Optional Bill Payment feature costs $3.50 per month, waived for the first three months. Free Calendar Creator software offer through December 31 or while supplies last.

~THE YEAR IN MUSIC~

■ best

continued from page 6

turnout at this show was surprising. What made it even better was the fact that everyone there danced, sang along, and had a good time.

Joshua Boyd (Arts & Living Staff):

1.) COWBOY JUNKIES Lay It Down — Strong, strong album by a band that floundered for a little while in the late '80s–early '90s, but has lots of energy back, with a totally different sound from Trinity Sessions.

2.) JERRY GARCIA & DAVID GRISMAN Shady Grove — Great acoustic music by two of the genre's masters, all unreleased from guerilla recording sessions in early '90s.

3.) JOSHUA REDMAN Freedom In The Groove — A jazz ride with a few twists and turns, as well as straightaways where the listener can just coast.

4.) DAVE MATTHEWS BAND Crash — Jazzier than Under The Table and Dreaming, but more great songwriting and performance in here.

5.) SIXTEEN HORSEPOWER Sackcloth & Ashes — A great new band that I hope will stick around for a while. Great diversity with howling gospel vocals, banjo, slide guitars, and a great Deep–South haunting feel to it.

Disappointment — BLACK CROWES at the Mullins Center: mid–tempo boring song after mid–tempo boring song with one or two crowd–pleasing old hits. Just not happening, guys.

Best live experience — MEDESKI, MARTIN AND WOOD at the Northampton Center For The Arts, Sept. 27. Great danceable jazz/funk/soul hybrid. A barrage of sonic cosmos.

John Hendrickson (Arts & Living Staff):

1.) R.E.M. New Adventures In Hi–Fi — Not only my pick for album of the year, but also the best R.E.M. record since Life's Rich Pageant. From the glam–rock of "Wake Up Bomb" to the county twang of "Electrolite," R.E.M. proves yet again why they are the greatest band in the world.

2.) SEX PISTOLS Filthy Lucre Live — If 1991 was "the year punk broke," 1996 was "the year punk was broke and toured because they needed the money." Eighteen years after breaking up, the Sex Pistols reformed (with original bassist Glen Matlock on board), reminded everyone why they changed music forever, and made no secret that they wanted to be paid accordingly. Steve Jones is still a guitar god and Johnny Rotten, though "fat and forty," is still as much of a snide bastard as he was 20 years ago.

3.) THE MISFITS Box Set — Finally, after dwelling in obscurity for years, the Misfits got some much–delayed recognition. Everything except for 1982's Walk Among Us LP is included here, and most of it has been out of print for the last 15 years. New Jersey's homegrown fiends wrote the book on horror–punk so well that nobody else even tried it. However, avoid the Glenn Danzig–less reunion tour at all costs; he was the best thing about the band to begin with.

4.) DESCENDENTS Everything Sucks — More songs about coffee and girls. The Descendents are back with a reunion album better than most of their original work.

5.) THE FIGGS Banda Macho — Ithaca, N.Y.'s Figgs picked up where Too Much Joy left off — snotty, suburban white boys bitching about girls and how they can't get any. The pop–punk album of the year, hands down.

Biggest Disappointment — The new SOCIAL DISTORTION album, White Light, White Heat, White Trash, took four years to make — and it sounds exactly like their last two. Sorry, guys, but you're starting to get a bit boring.

Best live experience — DESCENDENTS at Lupo's Heartbreak Hotel in Providence.

Dan Bodah (Arts & Living Staff):

1) VARIOUS ARTISTS Shadow Music of Java — This is the first–ever CD release of music from the famous Javanese shadow puppet dramas. Enormously abridged for the CD, these performances last a whole night, and consist of Hindu myths enacted with gorgeous leather puppets to the accompaniment of a music that's almost narcotically relaxing and pleasant. The musicians play a soft style of gamelan music, and the singers recite the characters' lines in voices as delicate and airy as flutes. To augment your listening experience, read Antonin Artaud's essay on Javanese ritual first. Wow.

2) MICHAEL GIRA Drainland — Gira, lead singer of the notorious band, the Swans, is irrepressible. This latest work combines his always–brutal lyrics, the soft, almost lullaby–like music of recent Swans albums, and unforgettably psychotic musical environments. Warning: this album is known to mentally disturb otherwise healthy Collegian night editors.

3) INTI–ILLIMANI Arriesgaré La Piel — This politically–active, poetic band from Chile has made another music–have album. Perfect music for simulating a summer night during December in Massachusetts.

4) songs.ohia Passion 7" — New Drag City act songs:ohia promises to make twangy ukulele folk/country all the rage with memorable, and hummable, songs.

5) FLYING SAUCER ATTACK Further — Psychedelia for the noise generation, FSA plays resonant acoustic songs, at times burying them in overwhelming waves of distortion and feedback. Somehow they manage to make the jagged and the ethereal meld into an ecstatic whole.

Biggest Disappointment — The new Luaka Bop label releases. After such gems as Dance, Raja, Dance, I expected more from this label. Their new albums just don't live up.

Best Live Experience — SWANS at the Fantasy Niteclub in Cleveland. Swans performances are no longer experiments in unadulterated brutality and negation, as they used to be. But they still do a show with profound physicality. Gira's voice was almost subconscio in depth; Jarboe, now a practicing Buddhist, combined breath meditation and singing. But best of all were the repetitious instrumental fugues in which Gira, with the new drummer and bassist, packaged all the formerly sprawling anguish of early Swans into fierce, tight rhythm.

■ look back

continued from page 5

Menendez are convicted of murdering their parents, Kitty and Jose Menendez.

• Nelson Mandela, 77, files for divorce from his wife, Winnie, age 61.

• Susan Sarandon is named Best Actress for her role in Dead Man Walking. Nicholas Cage takes Best Actor honors for Leaving Las Vegas.

• Lee Teng–hui is elected president of Taiwan in the island nation's first popular election.

April

• Theodore John Kaczynski, 53, is taken into custody by the FBI under suspicion that he may be the Unabomber.

• Martin Bryant, 28, killed 25 men, women and children and injured 18 others in Tasmania, Australia.

• Jonathan Larson wins posthumous Pulitzer for Drama for Rent.

• Sister Diana Ortiz begins a protest vigil in Washington D.C. in an attempt to get the Pentagon to release all information on human rights violations committed during the 35–year–long Guatemala Civil War.

• Nadia Commaneci, 34, who won a gold medal in gymnastics 20 years ago, marries United States Olympic gold medalist, Bart Conner, 38. Conner, who won his medal in 1984, and Commaneci ties the knot in Commaneci's native Romania.

• Jessica Dubroff, age seven, dies in a failed attempt to become the youngest pilot to fly across the country. Her father, Lloyd, and instructor Joe Reid also die in the April 11 crash.

• The Duke and Duchess of York separate after nine years of marriage.

• Sotheby's auctions off Jackie Onassis' possessions. A piano valued between $3,000–5,000 sold for $167,500.

• Tonya Harding and Michael Smith announce plans to divorce.

• Bill Gates, 40, and his wife, Melinda French Gates, 31, welcome their daughter, Jennifer Katharine, on April 26.

May

• Valujet Flight 592 plunges into the Florida Everglades, killing 105 passengers and five crew members on May 11.

• O.J. Simpson makes a trip to England and lectures 900 students at Oxford.

• Julie Andrews, 60, declines her Tony nomination for Best Actress in a musical on grounds that no one else from Victor/Victoria received any nominations.

• Kathie Lee Gifford draws fire when it is discovered that sweatshops were used to manufacture her line of blouses for Wal–Mart. Later, Gifford's husband, Frank, passes out checks, paying workers who hadn't been paid in months.

• Ten–year–old Alexandra Nechita wins praise for her Picasso inspired paintings, along with mucho bucks.

June

• Princess Diana pays a visit to Chicago, visiting hospitals, raising money for charities and dances the

Turn to LOOK BACK, page 11

We have plenty of Gift Ideas for the Holidays!!
LIQUORS 44 Don't Drink and Drive

WINE OF THE MONTH
JEKEL VINEYARDS CHARDONNAY & CABERNET SAUVIGNON 750 ML $7.99

WINE OF THE MONTH
FETZER EAGLE PEAK MERLOT 750 ML $7.99

BAG IN A BOX
ALMADEN CHABLIS, BURGUNDY, RHINE, BLUSH CHABLIS, WHITE GRENACHE, GOLDEN CHABLIS 5.0 LITER SALE 7.49 MAIL-IN REBATE -2.00 FINAL COST $5.49

CITRA WINES MONTEPULCIANO, TREBBIANO, SANGIOVESE 1.5 LITER $5.49

SUTTER HOME WHITE ZINFANDEL, SOLEO, SAUVIGNON BLANC, ZINFANDEL 1.5 LITER SALE 6.49 MAIL-IN REBATE -2.00 FINAL COST $4.49

GEORGE DUBOEUF BEAUJOLAIS - VILLAGES NOUVEAU 750 ML $5.99

FREIXENET CORDON NEGRO BRUT & EXTRA DRY 750 ML SALE 5.99 MAIL-IN REBATE -1.50 FINAL COST $4.49

MARTINI & ROSSI ASTI SPUMANTE 750 ML SALE 7.99 MAIL-IN REBATE -2.00 FINAL COST $5.99

HARVEYS. BRISTOL CREAM. 750 ML SALE 9.49 MAIL-IN REBATE -2.00 FINAL COST $7.49

MOET & CHANDON WHITE STAR CHAMPAGNE 750 ML $19.99

KORBEL CHAMPAGNE BRUT & EXTRA DRY 750 ML $8.49

CHATEAU STE MICHELLE CHARDONNAY 750 ML $7.49

Coors & Coors LIGHT 30 PACK CASE OF 30-12 OZ CANS SALE 15.49 MAIL-IN REBATE -3.75 FINAL COST $11.74 + DEP

BECK'S BEER & BECKS DARK 12 PK. BOTTLES $8.99 + DEP

HARPOON I.P.A. & MIXED PACK 12 PK. BTS $8.99 + DEP

CATAMOUNT CHRISTMAS ALE & ALL FLAVORS 6 PK. BOTTLES $4.69 + DEP

BUSCH & BUSCH LIGHT CASE OF 24-12 OZ. BAR BOTTLES $9.49 + DEP.

30 PACK
Miller HIGH LIFE. CASE OF 30-12 OZ. CANS $11.79 + DEP.

1A PACK
MICHELOB & MICHELOB Light CASE OF 18-12 OZ. CANS $9.49 + DEP.

RED HOOK BREWERY WINTERHOOK & ALL FLAVORS 6 PK. BOTTLES $4.99 + DEP.

1/2 KEGS BUD, BUD LT, BUD ICE, LITE, MICH, MICH LT, MICH AMBER BROCK, RED DOG, & ICEHOUSE $39.99 + DEP.

COKE - DIET COKE SPRITE - DIET SPRITE CANADA DRY GINGER ALE 2.0 LITER 99¢ + DEP.

SMIRNOFF VODKA 1.75L $13.99

Canadian Club. 1.75 LT. SALE 15.99 MAIL-IN REBATE -5.00 FINAL COST $10.99

BACARDI RUM LIGHT & DARK 1.75 LT. SALE 13.99 MAIL-IN REBATE -3.00 FINAL COST $10.99

CROWN ROYAL 750 ML $12.99

AMARETTO DI SARONNO 750 ML $14.49

DEWARS SCOTCH WHITE LABEL 1.75 L $26.49

KAHLUA COFFEE LIQUOR 750 ML SALE 12.99 MAIL-IN REBATE -3.00 FINAL COST $9.99

BAILEYS IRISH CREAM REGULAR & LIGHT 750 ML $14.49

COURVOISIER V.S. COGNAC 750 ML $17.49

CANADIAN MIST 1.75L SALE 10.99 MAIL-IN REBATE -4.00 FINAL COST $6.99

JIM BEAM 1.75L $13.49

DRAMBUIE 750 ML $16.99

Seagram's 7 WHISKEY 1.75L SALE 12.49 MAIL-IN REBATE -3.00 FINAL COST $9.49

JOSE CUERVO GOLD TEQUILA 750 ML $9.99

We Accept Cans and Bottles for Redemption

AT THE STOP & SHOP PLAZA
HADLEY 253-9344 NORTHAMPTON 586-3007 HOLYOKE 534-4555

SALE PRICES THURS. 12/12/96 THRU WEDS. 12/18/96

NOT RESPONSIBLE FOR TYPOGRAPHICAL ERRORS

Always in Bloom
Flowers for all the times that are important to you.
Fresh • Silk • Dried
220 N. Pleasant St. Amherst, MA (413) 253-5545
World Wide Delivery
major credit cards accepted

Jonathan Reid LTD.
THE COMPLETE MEN'S STORE
HAMPSHIRE MALL, HADLEY, MA
We Specialize In Dressing Men for Interviews, Banquets or any Casual Outing, with Prices to Fit ANY Budget.
When Appearance Counts, Count on JONATHAN REID LTD.
We Pride Ourselves on Friendly, Professional, and Courteous Service.
Bring in This Ad When Purchasing any Suit or Sport Coat and Get 20% OFF ALL Accessories.
exp. 3/30/97
Buy 1 Suit ⊛ Get 1 Free

MICHAEL'S BILLIARDS
$5/Hr Everyday Unlimited Players!
Best! 1996
8
• 60" Big Screen T.V.
• 8- 9 ft. Tables
• Live Entertainment Every Fri. & Sat.
• All Sporting Events
• Every Thursday Night $5 Cash 8-Ball Tournament 7:30 pm
10A Belchertown Road Amherst, MA 01002
This Saturday December 14th "The Mill River Band" 256-8284

SEE IT! A UMass Dept. of Theater Production
Horton Foote's exploration of kinship, music, loss, and love:
LILY DALE
Thurs. - Saturday December 12 - 14
LAST THREE DAYS!
ONLY $3.50 FOR STUDENTS!

CURTAIN THEATER 8 p.m.
IT'S GOOD!

IRON HORSE
MUSIC HALL
20 Center St. Northampton

ALL AGES
ALL THE TIME

thursday, december 12 • 7 pm
BOILED IN LEAD
celto-garage-world-beat • $10

thursday, december 12 • 10 pm
JIGGLE the HANDLE
& LETTUCE
Forgot yer finish, come out & dance • $5

friday, december 13 • 10 pm
ye!! & SNAPPIN' GOMEZ
very funky grooves • $7

saturday, december 14 • 10 pm
SPACE pussy
P-TOWN's finest gay/glam/transvestite R&R • $6

sunday, december 15 • 7 pm
LEON redbone
the great american eccentric • $18

monday, december 16 • 7 pm
THE BACON BROS.
featuring KEVIN BACON
the movie star rocks

tuesday, december 17 • 7 pm CHRIS WHITLEY solo joke opens • $10

weds & thurs, dec. 18 & 19 • 7 pm
ARLO GUTHRIE

saturday, december 21 • 7 pm
jorma KAUKONEN's
CHRISTMAS SHOW
with Michael Falzarano & Peter Sears • $14.50

MUSIC SEVEN NIGHTS A WEEK
Celebrate SIX NIGHTS OF FIRST NIGHT: December 26-31:
NRBQ, Livingston Taylor, Clean Living, Acoustic Junction,
NEW YEAR w/ Luther Guitar Jr. Johnson
TICKETS: At the door, For the Record in Amherst, at the Northampton Box Office or call 586-8686 to charge by phone.
24-hour Concert info:
413.584.0610

~THE YEAR IN MOVIES~

The best films of 1996... so far

By Jeremy Brothers
Collegian Staff

It seems slightly futile to make a top-ten list when a significant number of films that 1996 will be remembered for haven't even opened up yet. I'm thinking specifically of those mounds of hype — Parker's Evita with Madonna, Forman's The People versus Larry Flynt with Woody Harrelson and Courtney Love and Branagh's Hamlet with what seems to be almost everyone under God's green earth.

Making lists, however, seems to be what looking at a year in review is all about — and I've never really been one to break with tradition. So, keeping in mind the plethora of fine films which will be released in the coming days (I, for example, am very excited for Mars Attacks! ..) these are the top 10 films of 1996.

1. Fargo

It's unusual that a film released so early in the year can still remain on one's mind for so long. But, then again... these are the Coens we're talking about here — unusual is their forté. Once you move past the Minnesotan accents (in other words, stop laughing,) you can find a completely engrossing film that delivers some performances of a life- time. Both William H. Macy ("E.R.") and Frances McDormand (Short Cuts) deserve not only to be recognized by the academy for their performances, but to win out-right. McDormand's characterization is really the high-point of the film — not once do we ever feel like her Marge is an idiot or something to be laughed at because she exudes an innocence combined with intelligence that you can see all over her face.

2. Big Night

If "food movies" can be considered a trend in the cinema for the past few seasons, then it should stop — it will be too hard for any future film to match Big Night. Stanley Tucci and Campbell Scott have created a small film that is so lovingly done, that almost every shot is as much a work of art as the dishes that the characters create. Boasting one of the most competent casts this year, the film features stellar performances by Tucci, Tony Shaloub (of "Wings" fame,) Minnie Driver, Isabella Rosellini and Ian Holm. Especially memorable is Shaloub as Primo, the older brother who feels alienated as a recent immigrant to America.

3. Trainspotting

Smack hasn't had a soundtrack this good since the '60s. Danny Boyle's loud, sarcastic, and rocking love-letter to life is a slap in the face to both recovering drug addicts and fecal-freaks everywhere. However "cool" the film becomes, the fact of the matter is that it is not, has never been, and will never be a pro-drug movie (arresting images of animated dead babies and starving kittens will ensure it.) Boyle's first major release, Shallow Grave, is just as captivating, carrying similar themes of trust and friendship, but its noisier attitude is what makes Trainspotting so much fun to watch.

4. Bound

The cheap thrills and explicit lesbian sex scenes that make up this first release from the Wachowski brothers' first release would make Alfred Hitchcock blush, but it could possibly be one of the best thrillers of the decade. From the opening sequence, we get the feeling that we're watching the story through a fun-house mirror. Thankfully, the film remains unapologetic in regards to both its love of the female figure and mob clichés. In regards to performances, no matter how good Gina Gershon (Showgirls) is as the butch, and squeaky Jennifer Tilly (Bullets over Broadway) as the femme, both are over shadowed by Joe Pantoliano (The Fugitive) tearing up every scene as the mob goodfella.

5. Flirting With Disaster

Anyone who saw Spanking the Monkey, the first release by Amherst Alum David O. Russell, might have been turned off by his subject matter (a black-comedy about incest) but no one could deny his talent for comedy. Flirting, his sophomore release, is a bigger, brasher film — with a larger and more talented cast starring Ben Stiller as a new father who feels he needs to find his real parents before he can give his newborn son a name. Also featured are Patricia Arquette as his wife, Mary Tyler Moore and George Segal as his adoptive stereotypical neurotic Jewish parents and Lily Tomlin and Alan Alda as his biological ones.

FILE PHOTO
Trainspotting has secured itself a spot in the top ten movies of the year.

The standout comes from Tea Leone (from "The Naked Truth," which was recently revived as a mid-season replacement for NBC) as the sexually insecure inept social worker who tries to help Stiller find his parents.

6. Sleepers

A powerhouse cast heads the front of Barry Levenson's drama of rape and revenge that successfully spans decade. Four young boys are sent up the river for accidentally killing a man, and years later they extract justice from their vicious tormentors. As the narrator, Jason Patric navigates himself a comeback, even though the scenes that he actually appears in aren't nearly as gripping as those set in his character's youth. Highlights and performances for the Academy to watch for come with Robert DeNiro as the boy's local priest and Dustin Hoffman as the alcoholic prosecuting attorney.

7. Get On The Bus

Spike Lee's low-budget film capturing the trek of a group of men to Washington D.C. might seem slightly contrived at first, but it's the contrasts that Lee creates between the many different characters that makes it so interesting. Never afraid to tackle issues, Lee questions the march itself as an effective tool in this effort which proves to be his most solid effort since Malcolm X. Andre Braugher ("Homicide") stands out of all the passengers as an obnoxious out-of-work actor who is looking to become "the next Denzel." Congratulations, you're on your way.

8. The English Patient

Who cares if some of the dialogue sounds like a bunch of rejected lines from a Harlequin romance novel? Some of the most lush visuals of the year come from Anthony Minghella's adaptation of Michael Ondaatje's World War II novel. Classic themes of love and fidelity are breathed new life through Ralph Fiennes' (Schindler's List) retelling of his love affair while on a map-making expedition in Northern Africa at the onset of WWII. Willem Dafoe's (Platoon) portrayal of Carravagio seems like one of the few things that get's lost in the translation — at times he seems like he's only there to hear the story as the film nearly neglects his own character's baggage.

9. The Pallbearer

One of the most under-rated films this year, The Pallbearer also functions as "the other" Gweneth Paltrow film. An absurdist revision of The Graduate? A hypothetical exercise in Freudian thought? It's heard to compare this completely unique tale of an unaggressive loser's troubles as he gets picked to be the pallbearer for a man he went to high school with — the catch? He can't remember the guy. Fortunately, the movie moves beyond that one-joke plot to find our hero caught in an affair with the dead guy's mother while lusting after Paltrow, the "girl who got away" in high school. Oh yeah, that David Schwimmer guy from "Friends" is in it, too...

10. Swingers

Independent films come and go, but there's something completely charming about this homage to L.A., cocktails, and a way of life that's gone the way of the Rat Pack. East Coast sensibilities constantly contrast with the film's California environs. It's this kind of static that director Doug Liman seems to be striving for, lining the film with the hip jargon that the characters speak to each other. The film should be especially proud of its ability to capture realistic conversations between men trying to pick up women at parties.

Now, rather than try to come up with a list of 1996's stinkers, not for lack of them mind you, I'm just going to point out one. My nomination for the worst movie of the year...

The Island of Dr. Moreau

Maybe someone caught wind of the literary adaptation breeze that was blowing through Hollywood. Maybe someone thought it would be a good idea to see Marlon Brando looking like a fat "Casper, the friendly ghost." Maybe someone forgot to try to have the movie make sense after they finished the spectacular opening credits sequence. Maybe I should have gotten my money back for wasting over two hours of my life — a feeling I haven't had in a long time... since Wyatt Earp, actually.

Auto Glass Center
Service at a Garage
• Same Day Service
• Billed Directly To Insurance Company
• Windshields Replaced
North Amherst Motors
A Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
549-2880
(One Mile from UMass)

$1 Sushi
Rock & Roll
10pm – 3pm
Thur-Sat Nites
BIRTHDAY PARTY: CHEF'S FREE MEAL & PICTURE - 4 PERSON TABLE
Authentic JAPANESE Restaurant
Gift Certificates Available
ICHIBAN
One Roundhouse Plaza, Northampton
(413)585-1185
Tatami Room Special for the HOLIDAY SEASON
15% Discount with 6+ person party
Reservations Required

The Smashing Pumpkins
Infinite Sadness Tour '96
On Sale Now!!
MULLINS CENTER
University of Massachusetts Amherst
JANUARY 28
7:30 PM
TICKETS ON SALE NOW AT THE MULLINS CENTER BOX OFFICE, TICKETMASTER OUTLETS: FILENE'S • VIDEO HOME STUDIO • MAIN MUSIC SHOP • BLISS VIDEO • VIDEO PARADISE. CALL-FOR-TIX: (413) 733-2500. FOR MORE INFO CALL (413) 545-0505. EVENT DATE & TIME SUBJECT TO CHANGE.
PRODUCED BY METROPOLITAN ENTERTAINMENT GROUP

TRAVEL SMART!
One Way / Roundtrip
LONDON FROM NY, BOSTON or DC
$134 $249
FROM NEW YORK
PARIS
$224 $427
ROME
$259 $489
SAN JOSE, COSTA RICA
$235 $446
Scheduled flights. Fares to worldwide destinations. Eurailpasses available.
Weekend surcharges may apply. Customs-immigration taxes apply. Fares subject to change without notice. Int'l. student I.D. cards may be required.
PRISM TRAVEL
342 Madison Ave., NY, NY 10173
212-986-8420*
800-272-9676
*In NYC

~THE YEAR IN MOVIES~

Dead Man highlights a dead year

Adam Levine

Although this year has surely not been one of Hollywood's better displays of the fine art of cinema, there were some notable surprises. As the last round of movies for the year are now invading both arthouses and multi-plexes, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences is debating what will receive nominations. As 1996 closely draws nearer to an end, lets take one last look back to the movies which shaped this year. In my oh-so humble opinion, I have listed my personal top 10 favorite flicks and five which made me cringe.

1. DEAD MAN

Director Jim Jarmusch, for the first time in his career, leaves his image of the bored and decaying urban city and takes us back in time to the old frontier. Dead Man is a poetically disturbing western based on the writings of William Blake. The film stars Johnny Depp as a lost soul in an unfamiliar world, who happens to share the same name as the legendary British poet. When Blake finds himself a wanted man by both the local authorities and a group of bounty hunters, he finds companionship with an outcast Native American who chooses to go by the name Nobody. At times hilarious and at others quite dramatic, this is one of the most intriguing films of the decade.

2. STAR TREK: FIRST CONTACT

Since Star Trek creator and executive producer Gene Roddenbury died a few years back, it seemed his brilliant prophesies of the future were doomed to passionless franchise politics. First Contact came around just in time to save Roddenbury's dream from all-new boring Voyager episodes and more space station soap operas. It seems new producer Rick Berman did exactly what Roddenbury must have done for Star Trek 2. After a previous bomb they went back and watched every episode of the series over again and made a movie from there. Part 8 is as exciting as The Wrath of Kahn and very similar in a lot of ways. This time defending earth from the Borg, Picard and company never looked so cool. The film's only flaw was the absence of Q, because, after all, he did introduce the crew to the Borg in the first place.

3. LONE STAR

John Sayles has had quite an interesting career as a filmmaker. Since his early days as a screenwriter for B- grade horror flicks like Alligator to more recent Academy award contenders such as Passion Fish, Sayles has become one of the kings of the independent film world. Lone Star is no exception to Sayles' greatness. It is a sensitive and endearing story about the characters that make up three generations of a small boarder Texas town. The film serves as a description of the triangle of prejudice between the blacks, whites, and Hispanics that live there. Lone Star, however, has even more to offer and its story's primary focus is really about fathers and sons. The narrative follows the new sheriff as he struggles to understand that his father's beloved memory may not be as wonderful as the town remembers. Despite a disturbing ending, Lone Star is the most thought provoking story of the year.

4. FARGO

Fargo is as equally intense and quirky as all the Cohen Brother's films to date, and although it may not compare in greatness to Miller's Crossing, it still is one of the best movies of the year. Insane humor is brilliantly intertwined within a complicated context to create the most absurd murder mystery in quite some time. The over dramatized accents may get on your nerves after awhile, but the excellent performances by Francis McDormand and Steve Buscemi will more than make up for it.

5. SECRETS AND LIES

Secrets and Lies has already won the Cannes festival with flying colors and soon we will see how well it does at the Academys. Far more traditional of Leigh's usual work than his last film Naked, Secrets and Lies is a close up look into the miscrable lives of a London working class family. Filled with excellent dialogue and sympathetic characters, this is one film that actually displays the family unit as an imperfect system, but contains enough optimism to express there is hope for improvement.

6. I SHOT ANDY WARHOL

This fact based account of the attempted murder of pop icon Andy Warhol and the life of his hopeful assassin is one of the most intelligent comedies to be seen in a long while. Lill Taylor soars as the emotionally unstable feminist, Valerie Solonis. When Warhol refuses to publish her play, she decides to seek retribution. This fast paced eccentric biography takes us right into the heart of the '60s pop-art movement.

7. THE FRIGHTENERS

After the success of the seriously dramatic Heavenly Creatures, Peter Jackson has decided to return to his roots as an exploitive horror director. Filmed in the beautiful hills of New Zealand (because Jackson refuses to leave his island) The Frighteners stars Michael J. Fox as a wannabe ghostbuster, who finds himself mixed up in a rather deadly predicament. This bizarre dark comedy is at times terrifying, but is careful not to take itself too seriously. The end result is some of the best special effects of the year and a fascinating and completely original story that never stops for a second.

8. LAST MAN STANDING

Suckers for violent excitement, which steers far away from cheeziness, will love this western adventure starring Bruce Willis. Based on the film Yojimbo by the great Japanese director Akira Kurosawa, Last Man Standing is the familiar story of the lone hero fighting more for personal gain than justice. Excellent choreographed fight scenes and a strong supporting role by Christopher Walken, make this one of the best new school westerns.

9. MAN WITH A PLAN

Whoever thought documentaries have to be fact-based and dull, have to see this brilliant political satire. Following the campaign trail of an elderly Vermont native named Fred Tuttle, Man With a Plan is a hilarious mockery of modern day American politics in action.

10. BOUND

Bound excels as an exciting new age noirish thriller. Its slick exterior helps to break the confines of male-oriented buddy films. Gina Gershin and Jennifer Tilly are two very different women from opposing

Turn to FILMS, page 11

COURTESY PARAMOUNT FILMS
Data looks on as Dr. Crusher treats Lily.

Pearl Street Nightclub
Live Music & Dance Club
EVERY MONDAY
INTERNATIONAL NIGHT
FEATURING WORLD BEAT, SOCA, CALYPSO, ASIAN, INDIAN & LATIN MUSIC
Sponsored by Amherst Cafe
EVERY WEDNESDAY
IT'S DREAM ALL OVER RAVE NIGHTS
WED. DEC. 11TH... SPAWN, LAZER LIGHT SHOW
WED. DEC. 18TH... GERRY KING OF SKY LAB
EVERY THURSDAY
THE BEER BISCUIT
HIGH ENERGY Dance Party
Hosted by Adam Wright of Today's 99.3
EVERY FRIDAY 9-2am
FREE BEFORE 10:00PM
RETRO NIGHT
MUSIC FROM THE 70's, 80's & 90's
EVERY SATURDAY 9PM-2AM
FREE BEFORE 10:00PM
PIME PARTY
Hosted by Dom Jones of Today's 99.3
THIS WEEK LIVE
Thurs. Dec. 12 @ 7:00 pm
ORANGE 9MM
SHIFT/V.O.D.
Fri. Dec. 13 @ 7:00 pm
HATEBREED
GRIMLOCK/FURY OF V/ONSLAUGHT
Sat. Dec. 14 @ 9:00 pm
SLIP KNOT
COTTONMOUTH
Fri. Dec. 20th @ 7:30 pm
M.O.D.
SLAB/PREPETUAL DOOM/SHADOW'S FALL
Sat. Dec. 21 @ 8:30 pm
THE RAY MASON CHRISTMAS SPECIAL
Tues. Dec. 31 @ 8:00 pm
13TH ANNUAL NEW YEAR'S EVE BASH
POP A CHUBBY
BIG BAD BOLLOCKS
COMING TO PEARL STREET
Thurs. Jan. 2 ALL AGES
DESPAIR
Sat. Jan 11 21+
JOHN CAFERTY & THE BEAVER BROWN BAND
Tues Jan 21 18+
JESUS LIZARD
Wed Jan 29 ALL AGES
EARTH CRISIS
Advance tickets available at the Northampton Box office, 586-8686, 1-800-THE TICK, Strawberries Record Stores, For The Record in Amherst, About Music in Greenfield, Tix Unlimited at U Mass, Pickerpup Records in Brattleb. & Music Outlet in Enfield
10 PEARL STREET, NORTHAMPTON
http://umass.virtual-valley.com/pearl-street
413-584-7771

THURSDAY-FRIDAY -SATURDAY
WEEKLY DRINK SPECIALS
RED DOG 16oz $1.50
BACARDI LIMON & COKE $2.00
VODKA & CRANBERRY $2.00
DANCE MUSIC BY PURE ENERGY
NO COVER BEFORE10
THE PUB
15 EAST PLEASANT STREET

CAMPUS ACTIVITIES AT THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PRESENTS
A WEEKLY PROGRAM SERIES:
SOMETHING EVERY FRIDAY
FEATURING STAND UP COMEDIAN
ROCK REUBEN

Rock Reuben

FREE
BLUEWALL CAFE
December 13, 1996 - 8:00 pm
"A TIME TO KILL" Immediately Following
CIRCADIAN RHYTHM
A GRIPPING STORY
A TIME TO KILL
For more information check out our website:
http://www.umass.edu/campact/events/calendar.html
This series is made possible by a grant from Auxiliary Services, the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, and DAILY COLLEGIAN

The day that we don't have extra space is the day that you come and write for the Collegian!
545-3500

GEO Membership Meeting
December 12th 5 pm -7 pm
Campus Center 804
This meeting is to decide how the union should respond to the Administration's Contract Proposals regarding:
Affirmative Action
Child Care
Your Presence and Your Voice will help set the direction the union will take on these important issues.
If you have questions or suggestion for the agenda, please stop by the GEO Office -- Room 201 in the Student Union Building, Or call 545-5317
For More Information, Check out the GEO Home Page http://www-unix.oit.umass.edu/~geo

COMPUTER FAIR
MULLINS CENTER
DEC 14
10AM-4:00PM
Tri-State Fairs: Original Area Shows since 1987
Buy at wholesale prices directly at the show from nearly 50 independent competing companies under one roof. From full systems to shareware, it's all here
Located on the campus of UMass. Rte 9 onto Rte 116N at Staples taking first exit, turn right
This is a discount ticket. General admission is $7.00 each. Clip or photocopy this ad and save $2.00 ea- Student I.D. only $2 ea admission
Our dealers feature the IBM/PC marketplace. Join us four times a year. Kids under 10 free with parent
Don't over sleep, one day show only!
ONE MONTH FREE INTERNET AT THIS SHOW FROM TIAC
Try Tri-State Fairs Computer Shows

R&P Liquors
• Weekly Specials on Regular Beers
• Fine Wines
• Largest Selection of Micro-Brews in S.Amherst
• Fridge Rentals
505 West St. • South Amherst
Minutes from Mill Valley, The Brooks, & The Boulders
253-9745

MINI MALL '96
Today thru- Friday December 13 9am-5pm Student Union Ballroom
One-Stop Shopping Extravaganza! With over 40 vendors
is HERE
For more information call 549-1710

Beavis & Butt–head do the big screen

BEAVIS AND BUTT–HEAD DO AMERICA
Directed by Mike Judge
With the voices of Mike Judge, Bruce Willis, Demi Moore
Opens Dec. 20

With their first foray onto the big screen, America's dumbest duo tackle the open road in search of their stolen TV — the lifeblood of MTV's most idiotic videos. This is the impetus for the plot, and interestingly, it is what makes the movie watchable.

I should explain myself — I don't like "Beavis and Butt– Head." I mean, I don't like the television show. What I do find redemptive about Beavis and Butt–Head do America is that now I can finally pin down exactly why I don't like them.

The problem with the show, originally based on short pieces of animation by Mike Judge (who also does the voices of the intellectually challenged pair), is one that comes with its presence on MTV — for every minorly amusing thing that happens, there's a music video that follows it and for three–and–a–half minutes you're assaulted with a barrage of "Huh–Huh's" and comments that by now are as trite as the latest Stallone movie which opened last weekend.

With the abduction of their television in the feature film, Beavis and Butt–Head thankfully have less to do without videos to critique. The film does compensate by adding a few musical sequences that prove to be extremely amusing. One in particular — a parody of '70s cop show theme songs like "Starsky and Hutch" and "Charlie's Angels" features the eponymous wackos camping it up in "bell–bottom" pants and "afro" hair–dos.

Judge also steps aside from his typical animation style for a sequence done by Rob Zombie, of White Zombie. The scene seems closely related to an animated version of the cartoons that Zombie has contributed for his band's album covers.

In the midst of their quest to get a new TV and lose their virginity, Beavis and Butt–Head unbeknowingly stumble upon an international plot to smuggle a secret bio–chemical toxin across the country. If there is a place where Judge's "rough" animation truly works, it comes in this film with the introduction of the sly villainess who tricks Beavis and Butt–Head into carrying her special "package" to Washington D.C.

The voice of the villainess and her nefarious husband are voiced by Demi Moore and Bruce Willis, which seems like an especially raunchy throwback, since one of Moore's last projects was the voice of Esmerelda in The Ilunchback of Notre Dame and Willis lent his vocal talents to God–only– knows how many of those Look Who's Talking pictures.

It becomes a fun and distracting game for the audience, listening to the voices that fill out the supporting cast. Robert Stack is an especially funny addition as the law–enforcement agent bent on capturing Beavis and Butt–Head, convinced that they are conspiring with the bio–chem weapon.

Little does he know how stupid they really are. Fortunately, we do, and those who enjoy the television series will indubitably relish in the big–screen translation. Those who know better will stay away because once you move beyond the fact that the videos are missing, it becomes apparent that there's still not a treasure to be found, just a few base pleasures. C–

Jeremy Brothers

Courting the man behind the scenes

Mike Judge does not look like what you might expect from the man who created "Beavis and Butt–Head." His balding hair is closely cropped, and instead of a rock t–shirt, he sports a neat button–down shirt that even tucks into his jeans. Freshly shined Doc Martins replace any notion of grubby sneakers that might come into your mind.

Then he speaks.

His voice, which closely echoes the character of Butt–Head, is disarming. One would not expect it coming from this seemingly upstanding man. It reminds us too much of one–half of those chaos–inducing malcontents Judge created so long ago for "Spike and Mike's Sick and Twisted Animation Festival."

"I had done a few cartoons before [Beavis and Butt–Head,] just trying to break into something — comedy or writing or something. I was kind of thinking that Terry Gilliam did these shorts for Monty Python — I was going to try to take that angle and try to get on a show. But there's something funny about animation. People spend so much time on it, you lead the tracks, you find where every word lays down... It just takes forever. I thought it would be kind of funny to have it service two dumb guys going 'huh–huh...'" Judge says.

But that was years ago, long before MTV got wind of them and made them a staple of the cable TV channel, and also pop icons. What's the secret to their endurance?

"I'd like to thing that it's just a good show, and that's the reason why it's lasted for so long, people like the characters," Judge said. "I remember at the beginning, people were saying these guys are just one–note characters, how are you going to get 65 episodes out of that? There was a lot of talk that maybe we ought to make them smarter, and I was pretty adamant against that. I kept saying look at the Three Stooges, they worked for years and years. So, maybe it's just like an Abbot and Costello thing."

But that was years ago, and now people are questioning if this movie is coming too late. Have Beavis and Butt–head peaked?

"I kind of think that the characters are maybe a little bit more developed in the film. Of course, when you say developed, I mean... that might not be the right word. But the idea was to make the movie stand alone for someone who's never seen the show, like they could just watch it and get the idea, because there's a huge audience out there that doesn't get cable," he said.

After so many seasons of these two, why would audiences want to see something that they can get from watching three episodes?

"The movie is going to be a different experience. It looks a lot better that the show. It's bigger, y'know... It's a movie — uninterrupted — and it's a bigger story. It just looks better, better sound," he said.

"My dream had always been to write a movie, I just never thought it would be for this. If I could do some more things with them before I finish... I guess I'd like to see them go to Europe. I don't know if I'd ever like to see them score. That would be like Charlie Brown and Lucy with the football. She always pulls it away at the last minute. If he ever got a piece of that football, it'd be the end of Charlie Brown. Maybe when it's time to stop all of this, then that might happen," Judge said.

Judge smiles, "There might be a sequel..."

COURTESY MTV

Creator Mike Judge is fulfilling a dream by taking his animated icons to the silver screen.

UMass
Division of Continuing Education

Winter Session 1997

January 2-23

- More than 100 credit courses both day and evening
- Professional development courses, seminars, workshops
- Courses for recertification points for teachers

Register Now!

Call for a free course catalog - (413) 545-0107
e-mail: contined@admin.umass.edu

Division of Continuing Education · University of Massachusetts Amherst
Explore our Web site at http://www.umass.edu/contined/

DISTRIBUTION MANAGER
WANTED FOR SPRING SEMESTER
Must be available between 7:45am and 11:00am Monday through Friday

Come to the Collegian to apply, or call Ryan Courtemance or Alycia Hines at 545-3500

Scott's LIQUORS
OPEN: Mon.- Sat. 9a.m.-11 p.m.
Tel: 549-2692.

Shop Scott's & Save Lotts! THANK YOU FOR YOUR PATRONAGE

Bud Ice & Ice Light 30packs $15.99 +dep.
Bass Ale 6-packs $5.99 +dep.
Miller High Life 30-packs $11.99 +dep.
Amstel Light 12-packs $9.99 +dep.
Coors Extra-Gold 30-packs $11.99 +dep.

Happy Holidays from Scott's

Cider Jack 6-packs $4.99
Boones Wines 5 for $10.00
YIKES! Jagermeister 750ml $14.49
Captain Morgan 750ml $8.49
Seagram's Gin 1.75 Liter $15.99

Go Yellows

Open Sunday Now "Till '97" ! (12-12)

Check Out Our Other Great In Store Specials
6 University Drive
at Newmarket Center, Amherst

MasterCard VISA MasterCard Tele-Check for your personal check

Refreshers · Alumni Stadium · University Drive · SCOTTS · Victory Markets · Super Pumper Gas Stations

~THE YEAR IN REVIEW~

■ look back

continued from page 11

nights away.

- Robert Downey Jr. is arrested for speeding and drug possession.
- The bikini turns 50 years old.

July

- Lyle Menendez, 28, and his brother, Erik, age 25, are seitenced to two consecutive life sentences without parole on July 2.
- Newsweek columnist Joe Klein admits to being "Anonymous," the author of the best–selling Primary Colors.
- TWA Flight 800 explodes mysteriously shortly after take–off. Two hundred and twenty–nine people are killed in the accident.
- Kerri Strug performs her famous vault. The women's gymnastics team walks away with the coveted gold medal, beating out the Russians, Chinese and Romanians.
- Olympic festivities are interrupted by a bombing at Olympic Park on July 26. Alice Hawthorne, 44, is killed and hundreds of others are injured. Security guard, Richard Jewell, 33, is the primary suspect.
- Dr. Jack Kevorkian helps Rebecca Lou Badger, 39, commit suicide.

August

- Richard Allen Davis receives the death penalty verdict for the murder of Polly Klass.
- On Aug. 10, Bob Dole picks Jack Kemp as his running mate.
- Grady Carter, 66, and his wife, Millie, 52, receive $750,000 in their lawsuit against the tobacco industry.
- Binti Jua wins hero of the year award after the West African gorilla saved a three year–old boy when he fell into the gorillas' cage at the Brookfield Zoo in Brookfield, Ill.
- Princess Stephanie of Monaco files for divorce from husband, Daniel Ducruet, after pictures of him cavorting with a topless model are published in a magazine.
- Dick Morris resigns from the Clinton campaign after prostitute Sherry Rowlands reveals their affair.

September

- John F. Kennedy Jr., marries Carolyn Bissette on Sept. 19 at the First African Baptist Church on Cumberland Island.
- Kelsey Grammer checks into rehab. His hit television series, "Frasier," is currently on hiatus pending his recovery.
- Commissioner Thomas Schulte of family court in Orange County refuses O.J. Simpson's request for preliminary custody of his two children, Sydney and Justin. The children currently live with their grandparents, the Browns.

October

- The trial of Jonathan Schmitz, 26, begins for the March '95 slaying of Scott Amedure, 23. Schmitz and Amedure were both guests on the "Jenny Jones Show" about secret crushes. Schmitz was so embarrassed by Amedure's revelation that Schmitz shot Amedure.
- Mandy Allwood, 32, miscarries her last five fetuses. She was originally pregnant with eight fetuses and was offered $487,000 by the London tabloid, News of the World, if she succeeded in delivering all eight babies.
- Pope John Paul II, 76, undergoes appendectomy in Rome.
- Madonna gives birth to baby girl, Lourdes Maria. The father is Madonna's boyfriend, Carlos Leon.
- The O.J. Simpson wrongful death civil law suit begins. Judge Hiroshi Fujisaki presides.
- Tennis player Gabriela Sabatini, 26, retires from tennis. She defeated Steffi Graff in 1990 to take the U.S. Open title.
- Princess Diana is dropped from the list of royal family members included in a prayer recited by members of parliament before the beginning of every session.
- Separate trials are granted to Oklahoma City bombing suspects, Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols by U.S. District Court Judge Richard Matsch.

November

- Prof. Anita Hill resigns from the Oklahoma University Law School.
- The San Jose Mercury News breaks story about Contra– cocaine drug connection.
- O.J. Simpson takes the stand and denies murdering Nicole Simpson and Ron Goldman. He also denies allegations of abuse and instead suggests that Nicole abused him.
- Amy Grossberg and Brian Peterson Jr., both 18, confess to the murder of their infant son on Nov. 13.

Turn to LOOK BACK, page 13

■ films

continued from page 9

walks of life. When they team up together to rip off Tilly's abusive mob boyfriend, the excitement takes on new heights of stylistic intrigue.

Now for the five most disappointing movies of the year!

1. THE LONG KISS GOODNIGHT

Another boring, rehashed action film with few redeeming values. Geena Davis plays a ridiculous role as a small town school teacher turned secret agent (could we be anymore cliche?). Director Renny Harlin did nothing more than remake all his other box–office duds and for some reason some movie executive gave him more money to do it.

2. STRIPTEASE

I don't care how good the book was! Demi Moore got paid enough money to save the economies of at least four third world countries, all for this awful film. I would have expected more from the director of The Freshman, but then again maybe the movie would have been better if wasn't trying to be Showgirls with a conscience.

3. MISSION: IMPOSSIBLE

Its unfortunate that Brian De Palma's first bad film has to be his biggest hit, but I guess these things happen in Hollywood. I'll try not to be too judgmental of the director and place the blame rather on producer/star Tom Cruise. First of all, this confusing action flick is not nearly as clever as some people liked to believe. On the contrary, Mission: Impossible is all about watching Cruise perform death defying stunts and look like a dork doing it.

4. THE NUTTY PROFESSOR

Remember when Eddie Murphy was the funniest man in America? His latest flop, despite some entertaining special effects, relies on fart jokes and other forms of pre–juvenile humor for laughs. Perhaps one of the least memorable films of the year.

5. DRACULA: DEAD AND LOVING IT

As if Francis Coppola's version wasn't disappointing enough, leave it to Mel Brooks to try to cash in on another stale spoof. This is his failed attempt to poke fun at the gothic darkness of the vampire legacy.

Adam Levine is a Collegian Staff member.

R.E.M. highlights a solid year in the world of pop

Bradley Skaught

Despite all the signs that suggested otherwise, pop music is alive and well in 1996. In fact, 1996 dished out some of the best pure pop to hit the record stores in decades, with strong new albums by both established artists and exciting newcomers. Most surprising, perhaps, is that some of the better pop albums out this year are major label albums, one of the few signs of life trickling down from the corporate monsters.

Speaking of monsters, R.E.M. inked an $80 million record deal and cut loose with New Adventures in Hi–Fi, an album that finds the Athens, Ga., quartet still at the height of their creative powers. Details of their contract maybe be something of a mystery, but rumor has it that some of the small print landed cult hero Robyn Hitchcock a Warner Bros. contract, resulting in Moss Elixir (and its companion Mossy Liquor.)

Moss Elixir is a solid turnout from Hitchcock— one of his more consistently satisfying albums despite the absence of former backing band The Egyptians. Hitchock fans will also be excited to know that Filmmaker Jonathan Demme is following Hitchock around on his latest tour, capturing performances for a release sometime next year.

There was some bad news, too, however for some major label artists. Power Pop heroes The Posies got dropped from Geffen with their latest album, Amazing Disgrace, and the rest of their catalog on its way to the cut out bins. Latest word has The Posies "on hiatus"— truly an unfortunate development. Former Replacement Paul Westerberg has yet to be dropped from his label, but after the terribly disappointing Eventually one has to wonder if it's just a matter of time.

Luckily, the rest of the Ex–Replacements came shining through in '96, with drummer Chris Mars leading the pack. His latest, Anonymous Botch, finds Mars still riding the DIY train, but with an increasingly psychedelic vibe wrapped around his typically amazing power pop. Guitarist Slim Dunlap delivered his sophomore effort, and Tommy Stinson unveiled, his new combo, Perfect. All three ran circles around Westerberg, but Mars is the one to watch — time to quit with the drummer jokes.

It was a surprisingly good year for debuts as well. At the top of the heap is upstart Brendan Benson whose Virgin Records debut, One Mississippi, is a wonderful collection of gloriously sloppy pop — snappy, infectious, and witty. Fountains of Wayne, too, have drenched their debut in sugary sweet hooks, making their debut a shamelessly bubblegum fuzz pop treasure. Another youngster to keep an eye on is Daniel Tashian. Rootsier, and given the studio sophistication of producer T–Bone Burnett, Tashian's debut, Sweetie, is a beautiful, atmospheric album full of imaginative guitar work and mature beyond his years songwriting.

So far a quick trip to the local chain store will unearth any one of these gems, but you might have to dig a little further to find some of the year's best. Chris Von Sneidern's GO! is probably best purchased through his record company, Mod Lang, but it's the worth the hunt. Von Sneidern plays it straight with tasteful, understated arrangements giving full reign to his three minute masterpieces. Von Sneidern can also be found on the latest John Wesley Harding album, New Deal, which finds Harding stripping down the arrangements and making the best of his melodic gifts (the two are on tour as well — definitely worth checking out.)

P. Hux's Deluxe is a similar trip through '60s pop territory with ringing guitars and shimmering harmonies framing a nearly flawless collection of songs from this underground hero.

One woman band, The Astropuppees, makes a glorious noise, too, on You Win The Bride, a DIY pop treasure that seems destined for cut–out greatness.

Indie–pop queen Rose Melberg pulls the opposite move of John Welsey harding by stripping back up to a three piece after the whispery glory of The Softies. Go Sailor's debut is chock full of Melberg's stunning vocals and overwhelming sweetness — an adorable slice of songwriting magic that you can dance to.

A little easier to find, perhaps, but no less obscure is the latest album by The Loud Family, Interbabe Concern. Frontman Scott Miller is probably the best songwriter around today and public ignorance of his genius is a musical tragedy. Anyone who's willing to push the limits of power pop and get inside some of the most exciting and rewarding music around should check out Interbabe Concern — a beautifully challenging masterpiece.

Bradley Skaught is a Collegian columnist.

THE FINEST SINCE 1976

Handmade diamond engagement rings & featuring ideal cut
Lazare Diamonds®
Setting the standard for ...BRILLIANCE™
Gifts from glass to gold.

silverscape designs
GOLDSMITHS GEM GALLERY
One King St., Northampton 584-3324
264 N. Pleasant St., Amherst 253-3324

FlavorBay Productions proudly presents:
ABSOLUTE FASHION AIDS BENEFIT at CLUB METRO
Saturday, Dec. 14th
Doors Open @ 9pm
18 to Party - 21 to Drink
I-91 North or South Exit 18. Turn Left 1/4 mile up on right above Car Wash
INFO LINE: 413.582.9666
492 Pleasant St. Northampton, MA 01060

DOMINO'S PIZZA

CHEESE PIZZA SALE

$4.99 — MEDIUM CHEESE PIZZA TOPPINGS $.99 EXTRA — LIMIT 10 AT A TIME
$6.99 — LARGE CHEESE PIZZA TOPPINGS $1.25 EXTRA — LIMIT 10 AT A TIME
$8.99 — EXTRA LARGE CHEESE TOPPINGS $1.50 EXTRA — LIMIT 10 AT A TIME

DOMINO'S PIZZA AMHERST 256-8911 OPEN TILL 4AM

Expires 12/30/96 NOT GOOD WITH ANY OTHER SPECIAL

If you get this booklet, you won't need a form. Just a phone.

This year, millions will file their tax returns by phone — using TeleFile, a free service from the IRS. The call is easy and refunds are fast. Check your mail for a TeleFile booklet.

Department of the Treasury
Internal Revenue Service
http://www.irs.ustreas.gov

TeleFile
It's free. It's fast. It works.

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS CLUB

Winter Special starts December 14th

The Area's Most Complete Club • 256-6446

90 Gatehouse Road
"Off Rt. 9 2 miles East of Town Center"
•PVTA bus route to Rolling Green • pool •
• aerobics • aqua-aerobics • steps • nautilus •
• racquetball • free weights • jacuzzi •
• sauna • massage • bikes •
• indoor tennis & basketball •
•rowers • treadmills •

Join now for our 15 week Semester Special ($159) & get a free HFC T-Shirt!

MacFarland

continued from page 16

test.

With just over six minutes to play and the Minutewomen trailing 45–43, MacFarland hit a triple to give the Minutewomen yet another slim advantage.

MacFarland's heroics were far from over. With 3:58 left to play, she took a feed underneath the bucket from Van Huisen, drew contact and made a lay–up giving the Minutewomen a 48–47 lead before her free throw attempt.

Then, youth and inexperience checked back into the zone MacFarland had found in the second half. She missed the free throw and Kent won the scrum for the loose ball. On the break, Billie Jean Smith–Goldman converted a three–point play after scoring on a twisting off–balance lay–up to give the Golden Flashes a 50–48 lead.

Three possessions later, with 30 seconds, and a 51–49 UMass deficit, showing on the scoreboard, the Minutewomen had a chance to tie the game or go ahead on a three–pointer. But a MacFarland turnover negated any chance the Minutewomen had to come away with a win.

The young freshman, obviously tired and frustrated with the outcome, showed maturity beyond her experience in responding to the game.

"I'd rather score two points and win than score 17 points and lose," she said.

When she puts it all together, Mac will be a keeper.

Drexel

continued from page 16

where the court is, no matter who is out there, no matter the temperature or the time. Players play, no matter what."

Drexel (3–1) comes into its first–ever meeting with UMass on the heels of a three–game winning streak that saw the Dragons beat up on not–quite–powerhouses Monmouth, New Hampshire and Maine.

Four Drexel players average in double digits in scoring. Jeff Myers paces the pack with 15.2 ppg and Chuck Guittar and Mike DeRocckis have each chipped in with 14.2 ppg.

DeRocckis has twice been the high scorer for the Dragons this season and Guittar has twice been the leading assist man. Freshman Joe Linderman has stood atop the rebounding chart three times this season.

While Flint is preparing for the Dragons, he is focusing on his team. Tonight he will see who wants to be out on the floor.

"I talked to my team about that and I was like, what do you want me to be?" Flint asked. "You want me to be an asshole, or you want me to be a guy that coaches you? That's the bottom line. I guess when you become an asshole sometimes you get what you want. So I guess I'm going to have to go back to being an asshole."

basketball

continued from page 16

MacFarland had her best game to date in a UMass uniform, scoring 17 points.

"My shot was on today, but I'd rather score two points and win than 17 points and lose," MacFarland said.

O'Brien was blunt at the post–game press conference.

"It's time to put up or shut up," O'Brien said. "Everybody had a chance to make a play and change the outcome of the game and nobody did it, especially in the last five minutes, and that's very disappointing."

Carroll led all UMass players with 19 points and seven rebounds, and Mitchell added six points and six assists.

swimming

continued from page 16

the year," Wisniewski said.

"I'd like to make the NCAA finals, the NCAA meet," he said.

The problem coming up for Yarworth and the rest of the UMass swimming and diving team is the 23 days from now until the next meet, in Puerto Rico. Finals are coming up, and then winter break. It will be tough for everyone to stay focused and prepared come Jan. 4.

"I just have to keep my goals in sight, that's the only way you can do it," Wisniewski said.

Look for Brian Wisniewski to guide UMass to a repeating A–10 victory, as well as reaching his other goal by going to the NCAA finals.

Atlantic 10 Men's Basketball Round — up

Last Night in A-10 Men's Hoop

Dayton 67
Louisville 80

St. Bonnaventure 89
Morgan State 54

This Weekend...

...Saturday

Temple at Tulsa
Drexel at LaSalle
Georgia at Virginia Tech
Illinois at DuQuesne

...Sunday

Wisconsin at St. Bonnaventure
Hofsta at Xavier

Don't stick that in your mouth!!!
Stick in the Daily Collegian Classifieds instead.
Collegian Classifieds, they work!

COLLEGIAN SPORTS
WE GOT BALLS

7pm, Dec. 13th at the MULLINS CENTER University of Massachusetts Amherst
Division 1 Hockey East
UMass Hockey
VS
PRINCETON Hockey

Pick up your tickets at:
- Curry Hicks Cage
- 'TIX' in the Student Union
- Hockey Table in the Campus Center
- At the Game

Be a Part of the Action

FRYDAY DECEMBER 13

Pack Your Bags!

Go Skiing!
Go to the Beach!
Go Home!
DON'T PAY RENT WHILE YOU'RE GONE!

Need to Sublet Your Place?

USE US!

88.5fm WFCR
Public Radio for Western New England

Radio Board Operator for WFCR
(Departmental Assistant)

Operate broadcast equipment for WFCR at another site in Amherst. Hours available, 10 am - 6 pm Monday - Friday. Some radio board operator experience; excellent reliability; ability to follow station policies and procedures. Transportation needed. Hourly rate $6.00, no benefits. Some training for qualified applicants. Complete application and resume and three references by February 16, 1997 to search 532, Employment Office, 167 Whitmore, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, MA 01003-8170. The University is an Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity Employer.

memories

continued from page 16

volleyball and the ball came bouncing my way and I got to touch it. But this, this is different...

Old–timer's league

Jorma Kansanen — Oh, woe is me... where shall I start? These things are so hard, especially for us idiot sports reporters who supposedly have the feelings of Bob Dole on Quaaludes, but I'll suck it up. One thing that almost brought a "tear to me aye, laddy" was the retirement of the Boston Bruins' Cam Neely. In the timeline of the last 50 years in Boston sports, this man will be remembered just for his sheer physical presence on the ice, irregardless of his silky smooth scoring touch. He will be missed as much as Larry Bird to me. But there's something else...

Looking at an extremely dejected Rebecca Myers on the bench, for the rest of her career, in the Minutewomen's first loss of the season against Dartmouth was hard. She was a gamer, and having her career end in some place called La Salle sucked big–time, for all involved. But what almost brought on the flood was on a soccer pitch in the middle of nowhere; otherwise known as Kingston, R.I.

Having to watch Dayton hoist our A–10 trophy after their 3–2 win was one thing, but watching UMass' reaction to it was a totally different taco. It was awful. It was beyond awful. It was heinously awful. I wanted to slit my throat. Seeing a majority of this team, and also the UMass contingent present, on the verge of tears, was awful. Awful.

Damn... Danielle, would you get me a tissue?

Leigh Torbin — I've seen bigger wins but I had never seen a more memorable moment than Rachel LeDuc scoring with 1.4 seconds left in double overtime in the NCAAs until now. There are certain moments you take and carry with you for the rest of your life, ones that even a full frontal lobotomy could never fully exhume from my cluttered mind. While they have yet to provide one of those top wins, the Reds have now given me each of my top two moments.

Triple overtime in the NCAAs in my own backyard, Harvard's Ohiri Field, as thrilling a match that has ever been played, starring Danielle Dion as Peter Schmeichel in the UMass goal, is literally unforgettable. My heart stopped on several instances, resuscitated only by the euphoria of (gasp) an own goal served off the foot of someone plenty familiar with Andres Escobar to top it off.

I feel like I could just keel over and die now, 'been sick for two weeks straight, but that feeling of being lost on the field just looking for people to hug, has really kept me from becoming too bogged down on my death bed. That, and the six fine seniors (to whom I'll offer a tip of the ever–present cap in case I don't live to see the Year in Sports issue in May) who made this the most enjoyable beat I've ever covered. Made out the 1997 Softball quick facts in MedRel the other day and it was genuinely painful writing any name besides Amy Powell's beside the number 11 on the roster. I don't look forward at all doing the same this summer with 2, 7, 8, 11, 13 and 14. If I currently feel like I've been tied to the whipping post, I'll feel like I've been Lynched then.

Pawtucket Red Sox (Triple A)

Fred Hurlbrink, Jr. — Here are a plethora of memories that, though they won't make me misty, will remain in my jumbled heap of miscellaneous sports knowledge that I call a brain, just because.

Here goes — Learning what a "Booty Schwag" is; covering my first men's hoop game, for two reasons: "Hey No. 21!" and the "Go Fred" cheer from selected members of the Hoop Band; Boyden Bowl; Scarfoe's Packie somewhere in crusty Connecticut; UMass 39, UConn 38; Roger striking out 20; yeah, I know they were Tigers, but come on — 20! (Clemens' departure would be an unmitigated disaster of nearly apocalyptic proportions for Red Sox fans, especially if he dons the pinstripes); Water polo media day; leaving the Collegian at 4 a.m., and being back at 9:30; Bagelball with Isaiah and Candy cane; working 30 hours a week and getting paid for five; working with Stamm, Casey and Luke, the best Sports editorial staff ever assembled; spending time with the wily, witty and wacky Collegian sports staffers who deserve a lot more respect than they get, and molding the young sports writing minds of Isaiah, Place and Corey as they plot to overthrow me someday.

Luke Meredith — It's been a fun ride this semester. My most misty little memory is driving from the hotel to Villanova Stadium way back in September to cover my first college football game. We were lost, and everyone in the car was yelling at each other, and I was getting really annoyed until I realized what I'd be doing that day. For a kid who has loved college football my whole life, you can't imagine how awesome that was. Best memory — watching the Minutemen come back from disaster against UConn and save their season, and seeing an embattled Coach Hodges as happy as a man can be. If you've ever played sports, you knew how special that comeback was to those kids.

Seeing Mike Corey at a party on Hobart, hammered, brought a tear to my eye, as did seeing half the paper at my house for a little part–hey a few weeks back. "Which housemate is she dating?" Coming to grips with past mistakes involving Dartmouth women's soccer players; "hey, it was just a summer thing!" Doing a men's hoop game was sweet; having people call me the "Booty Schwag Man" is strange and cool at the same time (Am I the only one utterly sick of the Booty Schwag?); battles with Hurlbrink, and pretty much everyone else, (what Hall of Fame editorial?).

Thanks to all the Collegian staff who were patient when I didn't have a clue about layout, (Casey, Stamm, Tara and Lisa) and everyone who said you read me all the time, 'cause it really does mean a lot.

Boston Red Sox (The Show)

Casey Kane — Seeing the field hockey team win the A– 10 Tournament; walking out onto Press Row for Midnight Madness; the UMass football team's comeback win over UConn; playing makeshift field hockey in the office with the Mayor; Torbin on his 21st; and (this one goes all the way back to the summer, but...) getting a one–on–one interview with Rick Pitino at the NBA Draft all rank as past semester favorites.

Seeing the men's hoop team fall to Fresno State; seeing Bruiser after that same loss; finding out Stamm and I couldn't go to Hawaii; and finding out the field hockey team lost to Northeastern in the NCAAs are all on the flip side of the coin.

One hectic semester after taking over the reigns of the sports desk (alongside the one and only Chris Stamm) and I love this job more than ever. To Jeremy "I got my philosophy" Adams, Jon "I want a golf column" Place, C.P. "the #&% Michigan fan" Goodman and Chris "the Kreindog" Krein: keep it up, you guys have caught on fast, but we expect more features next semester. To the Flying Finn, Mike Corey, Little Rock, Blip Chop or whatever the hell your name is, and Nam: thanks for everything this semester, but we need features from you guys too (not you, Jorma!). Torbin write! Luke, you are the Pimp Daddy, and worth any trouble you cause. Mr. Mayor, couldn't have done this without you. You and I started together, we'll finish together, even if it is in the next century. Stamm, one semester down, bring on the next one. We've done a damn good job, and we should have gone to Hawaii.

Finally, thanks to our Business and Graphics departments for putting up with us. Thanks to UMass Media Relations and the Athletic Department for, well... everything.

Chris Stamm — Here we go, running the anchor leg (I know, it doesn't fit in with the whole baseball motif, but what can I say, I was never any good on the diamond anyway).

JENNIFER JUTRAS / COLLEGIAN

Season's greetings!

The Collegian sports staff hopes you enjoy winter break. (l–r) Jorma Kansanen, Fred Hurlbrink, Jr., Casey Kane, Luke Meredith, Jon Place, Leigh Torbin and Chris Stamm (seated).

look back

continued from page 11

December

- Madeline Albright secures nomination as secretary of state.
- Michael Jackson marries the mother of his child, Debbie Rowe, in Australia.

...and a look at some of the people who left us this year.

- Rep. Barbara Jordan, the first African–American woman elected to the House of Representatives since Reconstruction, died on Jan. 17. She was 59.
- Jonathan Larson, 35, composer/author of Rent, died on Jan. 25.
- Gene Kelly, 83, dancer and movie star, died on Feb. 2
- Adurey Meadows, 69, who played Alice Kramden on the "Honeymooners," died on Feb. 3
- McLean Stevenson, 66, died on Feb. 15. He played Lt. Henry Blake on "M.A.S.H."
- Tommy Rettig, 54, who played Jeff Miller on "Lassie," died on Feb. 15.
- Comedian George Burns, 100, died on March 9.
- The First Lady of Jazz, Ella Fitzgerald, 79, died in June.
- Tupac Shakur, 25, died of injuries sustained in a shooting. The rapper died on Friday, Sept. 13.
- Spiro Agnew, former vice–president, died at the age of 77 on Sept. 21..

What made me misty: Getting pummelled by Fresno State and learning 1. Jerry Tarkanian is WAY too short to be a hoop coach and 2. Chris Herren is a missing member of House of Pain (Bust a nut inside your eye); watching Little Rock interview a certain athlete while said athlete diddled with his nether regions; swatting bees in the luxurious press box at Garber with the Kreindog; spending hours on end with the gang down in the basement putting together the hoop preview magazine (sleep? what's that?); getting called out HARD-CORE in front of the Mayor, the Pimp Daddy, and Casey late one stressful night; getting to know Mr. Webster and Mr. Roget on a first name basis on nights trying to edit Leigh and Jorma's stories; becoming familiar with almost every song lyric ever written editing Torme and Torbin's stories ("It's not so much that I really like the dead — I went to prep school"); Best of all, getting to know all the new guys: Isaiah, Corey Goodman (and their corresponding initials), the Krein Dog, and Placeness solid first efforts, only more greatness to come (Golf column?). To the vets — Mike Corey, LT, and Jorma, way to step up and lead the charge. You guys busted your butts, especially early on when we were in transition. The Mayor — Ducking the charge with you, bro. (Arc we a package deal?) What can I say? Your level headed collectedness has been much appreciated. The Pimp Daddy — MVC represent. Lunches at the hatch, pushing the envelope with the Schwag and bringing life to da place, (I gots your back). My partner in crime — Case, one thing to say: Solid. One down and one to go, needless to say I'm looking forward to it.

Party Time.

ZANNA downtown Amherst

Hand Poured Hand Scented

Heritage Candle Co.

236 N. Pleasant Street, Amherst
256-4749
open 7 days

50% off 10 oz. Jar with any 16oz. or 26oz. jar purchase

iron, wire and tin • votives • tapers • novelty candles• and much more!

TV Comedy Writing and Acting

January 2-24, 1997

Join comedian Steve Sweeney in exploring the genre of situation comedy from both sides of the camera.

Sponsored by the UMass Boston Theatre Arts Department.

To learn more, call
617 287-7915

Appears at no cost to the Commonwealth

UMass Boston
Division of Continuing Education.

[cranial] COLLISION
From NYC
MR. KLEEN • YOUNG
COWBOY • LOTUS • LAU'd
BROS. • HUSH • AARON S.
LIVE DJs SPINNIN'
jungle - house - techno - hip hop - tribal
CASH BAR! (21 + ID)
$6 all ages
FRIDAY DECEMBER 13th 1996
Campus Center Auditorium
UMASS 7pm - 2am
Tickets available at TIX Unlimited
Student Union, 545-0412

Great Gifts
Bags Stocking Stuffers Hats
Jewelry Natural Fiber Scarves
Blouses Skirts Dresses
Earrings Rings Bracelets Chains Sweaters Toys India Print Bedspreads Candles
Gloves Socks Leather Sale Mugs Merry X'mas Cards Chinese Shoes Dresses
Sale 20 to 50% off selected Clothing
The Mercantile
Weeknights 9PM Dec. 5-22
Sun 12-5 Daily 10-6
Northampton-18 Center St. Amherst-Carriage Shops

EXPERT AUTO BODY REPAIRS, AUTO PAINTING and GLASS REPLACEMENT
MARSHALL STEINBECK
PROFESSIONAL COLLISION WORK
• OVEN BAKED URETHANE FINISHES
• FREE ESTIMATES & CLAIMS ASSISTANCE
• INSURANCE APPROVED GLASS REPLACEMENT
• PROFESSIONAL UNIBODY REPAIR AND FRAME STRAIGHTENING
256-8157 256-1385
53 South Prospect Street, Amherst, Massachusetts

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Chinese Food Kai Chi delivering Sunday-Thursday to 2am, Friday and Saturday to 3am

All University Women are invited to attend Alpha Chi Omega Open Rush Holiday Party Thurs 12/12 from 8-9pm Call Sam @ 549-8459 for more info

Mixed DJ Tapes- ZEO music, NYC House, Hip Hop, Reggae, Disco, Techno, Latino. On sale @ mini-mall 96 Student Union Ballroom, Tues - Fri

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Help Take Over My Lease Starting Jan. or Feb. One Bdrm @ Brandywine. $585 includes utilities, spacious room. Close to campus. Call Marie @ 549-1537

Take over lease for 2 BDR Apt. in Boulders Call 253-3780

AUTO FOR SALE

Puffton Village Large 1 bedroom, dishwasher/AC, $515. Heat included. Available Jan 1 Call Helene or Doug 549-0786

1 BDRM Puffton Apt. New carpet, paint, appliances. Available January 1st, $515/month Call Doug 549-746

AUTO FOR SALE

NEED TO SELL
Eagle Conquest TSI 1987, turbo, 5spd., pwr wind, leather, auto Climate, AM/FM cass with EQ, alloys, 97kms $2,000 O.B.O. 546-4779 Lve Msg. for Ben

1987 Mazda Automatic Sedan 95K, excellent condition 256-1743 or 603-897-1954

AUTO FOR SALE

'82 Chevy Cavalier St Good condition, $500. 534-5627

1989 VW Fox 89K miles, A/C, excellent condition, $3300 or B/O. Call 256-1588

1982 Toyota Supra Good condition, AT/PW/PD/PS/AM/FM Cass Call 546-0657 or 413-624-3982

'90 Honda Civic AC, runs great, 119,000 miles $2500.00 or B/O Call John 256-1059

Escort '86 runs good, 2 new tires, battery, etc. $800 o/b.o 546-2398 lv. msg

EMPLOYMENT

January Job- Small Northampton design/publishing firm looking for P/T data entry for January. MAC based. Call 584-8804

Exceptional Summer Opportunity- Camp Wayne, NE PA Sports oriented Counselor/Specialists for all land/water sports including tennis, camping, climbing/ropes, rocketry, roller hockey, sailing/waterskiing, A&C, drama, video. Campus Interviews Tuesday, March 11. Please call (800)737-8296

Drivers Wanted Apply in person at Pinocchio's, 30 Bothwood Walk

Clark's and Shipper-Receivers Needed from late December to late January. Flexible schedules $5.25/hour. Babson College Bookstore, Wellesley, MA 617-239-4375 Dave

EMPLOYMENT

WINTERSESSION JOBS TELEFUND IS HIRING $5.50/hour + fantastic bonuses. PM hours. All shifts available. Gain computer skills. Apply today. Memorial Hall basement. 545-3509

Afterschool Care in our home for our two sons ages 9 & 5. M,T,Th 3:15-5:15, W 1-5. In Amherst. Car needed. 253-5197. Starting 1/27

TROPICAL RESORTS HIRING - Students needed! Entry-level & career positions available. Worldwide. Call Resort Employment Services (206) 971-3600 ext. RS0013

INTERNATIONAL EMPLOYMENT - Earn up to $25-$45/hour teaching basic conversational English in Japan, Taiwan, S. Korea. No teaching background or Asian languages required. For info. call (206) 971-3570 ext. J50016

FOR RENT

Cape Cod group & summer rentals. Waterfront houses, Falmouth area. 508/477-6000

FOR SALE

Big Color TV, Small Fridge, 549-1485

TREK 800 Mtn. Bike Bought $425.00, Sell $200.00 Call Steve 6-1996

BIG BED FOR SALE! Moving off campus? Need a bed? Box spring, mattress included. Like new. Call Jason 549-4832

Table & four chairs, wood $75, large metal desk $50, typing table $25, wooden washstand $20, chest of drawers $15. 549-5052

FOR SALE

MT Bike Brigestone 18" Shimano LX Trange GS Suspension, $200 or B/O. 534-5827

Leather Jacket- black, classic motorcycle, insulated, very high quality, men's medium, $140. 585-8146

Unique X-mas Gift! Name an actual star for someone! $33. The Star Directory (800)663-6927 ext. C2 Visa/MC. Framing and Overnight delivery available

12 Inch MTX Speakers. Mounted in sub box. $100 or B/O 549-9162

Skis For Sale Rossignol 4s skis 205cm. Nordica 867 boots size 12. GEZE 70 bindings. Skied on 3 seasons. Great shape. All for $250 or B/O. Call Brian @ 665-9005

486 Computer $300, 386- $200/ 286- $100. Printer $10. Steve

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

(413)566-3324 #2
LUKE GOLDSTEIN: Happy 21st Birthday! Get ready for lots of fun!

LOST

Lots of Love, Schmoopie

Lost Diamond Ring 12/11 Huge Reward. Boyden Parking Lot Call 584-5149

Lost Black Wallet and Key Contains NYS License, UMass ID and BayBank card. Lost on 12/7 around Brandywine #12 in parking lot. If found please, please call Megan at 6-0653

MISCELLANEOUS

New Metabolism Breakthrough Lose 5-100 lbs. Guaranteed $35 (800)776-9503 Doctor Approved.

PERSONALS

Melissa P. I have a good feeling about this. You amaze me. T

Jill and Attia Good luck on finals. We love you!

To My Bluewall Family, My sisters, and my twins. Thank you everyone for being so wonderful. You have listened, cried and laughed with me. I know everyone won't be here when I come back so I wanted to tell you that I've spent some of my best times with you, my best friends. So enjoy the holidays and next semester. I'll see you in 6 mos. ALOHA! Diva K-Blackball EM-S:)

ROOM FOR RENT

1 bedroom available in 4 bedroom apt. in Sunderland at Squire Village. Jan. 1. $180. Call Leslie 665-6742

1 bedroom in a three $245/month including utilities. Available now. Adam 256-4793

Room for rent on bus line in 5 bedroom house off Main St. Call 253-9727 for info.

Beginning Jan 1 $200/month. Good location in Northampton. Please call for more details. 584-3986

One bedroom available in 2 bedroom apt. Jan 1st. Free heat and water. Call 549-4089

1 Bedroom available as of 1/97. 3 bedroom apartment in Puffton. $775 per month including heat/hot water. On bus route (male or female). Call Amy @ 548-7082

ROOM FOR RENT

Three females seeking one non-smoking female to share Mill Valley apartment Jan. 1-May 31. Rent negotiable. Call Jess at 253-1797

ROOMMATE WANTED

Looking for female roommates to rent summer house at New Jersey shore. Call Sue at 546-0407

Female Wanted to share bedroom in renovated Puffton Apt. beginning Jan 1 or ASAP. Call 413-527-7711 or 549-4748

Master bedroom available in Mill Valley. Has own bathroom and entrance. Need roommate(s) ASAP. For more info call 253-9606

Spring rental Great price, Jan rent free. Becca 665-8389

Apartment to share with female grad or 21 plus in Mill Valley 1 Bdrm, 1 Bathroom, washer, dryer. Everything included, $350 a month

Share house in Amherst non-smoking female, grad preferred, $335 inclusive, start 1/15. 549-8622

Amherst 2 bedroom apt. Available Jan 1, $277.00. Smoker OK, washer/dryer. 253-4766

2 Females looking for 1-2 people to share 3 bedroom Puffton. Starts Feb. 1. Call 549-7123

2 rooms in three bedroom apt. $267 per month. Call 549-8917. On bus route. Available Jan. 1

Housemate Needed for a large bedroom in a two bedroom apartment on bus route. Call 253-4973

Roommate Wanted Northampton $312 + util/own bath. N/S 584-5143

ROOMMATE WANTED

Male & Female Couple living on campus looking to switch room with M/F so both couples can live together. If interested call 546-6137. Ask for Ben.

Roommate to share two bedroom apartment on Hobart Lane. Available January 15. $375 per month. Utilities not included. Call 549-5538 Ben or Jason

One bedroom available in two bedroom apt. Jan 1st. Free heat and water. Call 549-4089

One Bedroom Available in Puffton two bedroom apartment. Female wanted. On Bus Route 549-9293

SERVICES

Have you been ripped off by a retailer? Contact the Student Legal Services Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995

Computer Problems? Need an upgrade? In-house service, call Scream Savers 549-0083

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK AND ALL OTHER TRAVEL. SPECIAL RATES FOR STUDENTS. INSIDE NJ CALL 201-533-0300. OUTSIDE NJ CALL 1-800-699-4988

Spring Break Trips Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica & Florida. Best prices, best parties. Group Discounts. Space is limited. For free brochure Call Today 1-800-959-4SUN

TRAVEL

Caribbean/Mexico $189. RT Europe $169. OW. If you can beat these prices, start your own damn airline. Air-Tech 587-0001 Northampton

Europa $155, Caribb./Mexico $189 R/T. Worldwide Destinations Airhitch Tm. 800-326-2009 airhitch@netcom.com or www.isi.com.fr/airhitch

Winter Break Killington with the UMass Ski Club. Five nights lodging, 5 days skiing. During Collegiate Ski Fest $260. Call 545-3437

New Year's in Quebec City 3-5 nights in Quebec Hilton. Optional Skiing at Mont Ste Anne. Starts at $89. Call 545-3437 or 1-800-232-2415.

Scuba Spring Break Dive Key Largo, Ft. Earn 2 credits! March 16-22 Mandatory Meeting 2/28 7pm Herter 227 Call Project Deep @ 800-262-0977

Spring Break '97 Hottest destinations and coolest vacations! Lowest prices guaranteed! Organize small group, travel free! Call for free info (800)426-7710

WANTED

Need a ride to Orlando, Florida on January 4? Call Brandy 665-0353

Personals Policy

1. All personals MUST be proofread by Collegian classified employees before payment and acceptance of the classified.
2. Last names MAY NOT be used in personals. ONLY first names and initials are allowed. The only exceptions are for birthday or congratulations personals, in which case the full name may be used.
3. Phone numbers are not allowed in personals. NO EXCEPTIONS.
4. Addresses are not allowed in personals, this means dorm room numbers as well.
5. Personals of a threatening or derogatory nature are not acceptable. Personals of a vindictive or libelous nature are not acceptable. Personals may not be used for the purpose of harassment.
6. Profanity may not be used in personals.
7. The personals section is for personals only. The personals section may NOT be used to sell items, seek roommates, advertise meetings, etc.
8. All personals must have the name, signature, and UMass I.D. number of the student placing the ad filled in on the insertion order. Non-students must provide a valid driver's license and the license number must be recorded on the insertion order. Use of false identification or misrepresentation is subject to penalties under the law.
9. The Collegian reserves the right to refuse or to edit any personal that does not meet the Collegian's standards in accordance with the statutes of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

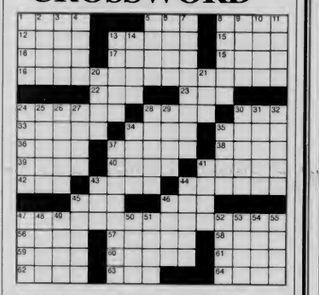
Standard Headings

Activities
Announcements
Apartment For Rent
Auto For Sale
Employment
Entertainment
For Sale
Found (2 days Free)
Happy Birthday
Houses For Rent
Instruction
Lost
Musicians
Miscellaneous
Motorcycles
Personals
Room For Rent
Room Wanted
Roommate Wanted
Services
Summer Sublet
To Sublet
Travel
Transportation
Wanted to Rent
Wanted

Rates

$2.00 minimum/day

Students
20¢ per word/day



All others
40¢ per word/day

NO REFUNDS
Please write clearly and legibly. We are not responsible for errors resulting from illegible handwriting or type.

Answers to Yesterday's Puzzle

Y	A	R	D		N	O	R	M		B	E	I	N	G
E	V	E	R		O	N	I	O		O	W	N	E	R
L	E	N	A		C	O	P	A		M	E	R	L	E
R	R	O	E	I	T		S	T	A	B		E	L	Y
			T	O	U	R		S	L	A	B
	I	N	S	U	P	E	R		A	R	A	B	I	C
A	N	Y		S	N	A	I	L		C	O	R	O	N	E
G	E	M	S		E	L	L	I	S		S	L	E	D
U	P	P	E	R		M	E	L	T	S		O	R	E
E	T	N	N	I	C		D	A	R	R	E	S	T
			T	O	I	T		C	A	I	N
T	E	A		T	A	R	T		T	S	E	T	S	E
R	O	L	L	E		A	O	N	E		R	I	C	A
E	N	T	E	R		C	R	A	C		G	N	A	T
E	S	S	E	S		T	O	N	Y		Y	A	M	S

CROSSWORD

ACROSS

1. Persistent cough
5. ___ and gown
8. Tree fluids
12. "Courtly" Arthur
13. Bikini or Tarawa
14. Gray's subject (abbr.)
16. Beatles song
17. Oil-bearing rock
18. ___ Bikini World (1965 film) (2 wds.)
19. Irreconcilable differences
22. Poetic time of day
23. Asner and Bagley
24. Boston hill
28. Toledo's state
30. Rat's kin
33. Plant e new crop
34. Entreaty
35. Canadian Indian
36. Author Knight
37. Black-eyed ___
38. Wartin' look
39. Verdi's princess
40. Type of school, for short
41. Lie in the arms of Morpheus
42. Actress ___ Wallace Stone
43. Chir
44. Cool one's sunglasses
45. Strange norm
46. Payable now
47. Medium's lorta
50. "... baked in ___" (2 wds.)
57. Greek goddess of wealth
58. "___ My Own" (Frost)
59. Stone
60. Forty-
61. Tug's burden
62. Signs
63. Fuel
64. Mauls

DOWN

1. Spy Mata
2. Straight ___ arrow (2 wds.)
3. Elegant
4. Lotto's kin
5. Cover with paint
6. ___ Desire (Stanwyck film) (2 wds.)
7. Common
8. Emulates Dennis Conner
9. Person in opposition
10. Tense start
11. Court order
13. Trembling tree
14. "Younger ___ Springtime"
20. Angora's sound
21. Bride's vow (2 wds.)
24. Dagwood dividers
25. Frightening
26. Under-the-breath comment
27. The ___-Cola Kid (1985 film)
28. Ole of vaudeville
29. "It takes a ___ o' livin'..."
30. Encouraged
31. Confused fight
32. Chick sounds
34. Sound of contentment
35. Drink flavor
37. Jilting
41. NL sports locale
43. Rod
44. Less dubious
45. Steals a glance
46. Frank Herbert novel
47. Madras wear
48. "Once ___ a midnight dreary"
49. Eat without gusto
50. Lakme highlight
51. Addition column
52. Speech therapist's concern
53. Manco Capac's empire
54. Put in storage
55. Cuts the grass

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21-April 20
Enjoy a week filled with holiday cheer and try to relax—stress will prevent you from making the most of a family gathering. Ignore a busybody's cruel remarks if you possibly can.

TAURUS
April 21-May 21
Practice tact throughout this holiday week, in the interest of family harmony. Someone close to you is feeling the effects of a difficult season. Try to help, if you can.

GEMINI
May 22-June 21
Exciting holiday gatherings may take most of your time, but try to make contact with someone distant who may be in need of a little attention. You'll be glad you did.

CANCER
June 22-July 22
A bold move earns you respect from an unexpected quarter. Follow it up with some solid background, and you could really make a big impression on someone whose opinion really counts. Don't be afraid of a backbiter at work.

LEO
July 23-August 23
Someone who's bothering you may be doing so as a result of a deep insecurity. Try to defuse any impression of competition between you, and see if that doesn't alter the chemistry.

VIRGO
August 24-September 22
It's possible this week to alter someone's opinion of you. It could go either way, so be sure to put on a happy face. Holiday gatherings are a source of pleasure and excitement for you and your family.

LIBRA
September 23-October 23
Someone who shares your interests in most areas could be the other half of a holiday romance for you. Don't be afraid to put out feelers to see where their interests lie.

SCORPIO
October 24-November 22
Changes at work could be causing you to worry. Get as much information as you can. It will ease your mind to know what's really happening. If your stress level continues to rise, confide in an intimate associate for some sound advice.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23-December 21
Don't neglect last-minute chores in your holiday excitement. A list will help you organize your time. Institute a new family tradition, to make this holiday a memorable one.

CAPRICORN
December 22-January 20
Fulfilling a promise, even if it's difficult, is a big part of making this holiday go smoothly for you. If you've forgotten something, or are feeling overwhelmed, ask for help.

AQUARIUS
January 21-February 18
Professionalism is the key throughout a tense office situation. Spreading (or starting!) gossip could really hurt your reputation, reduce your effectiveness, and hurt someone's feelings, so don't indulge.

PISCES
February 19-March 20
Pay close attention to holiday finances. You may be tempted to spend more than you had planned, but you will regret it later if you do. Plan travel carefully, and allow for potential bad weather, if that's a factor.

Daily Listings sponsored by:

UMass Basketball on UVC-TV19 DEC. 14 WAKE FOREST 8:30PM (NO PRE- AND POST- GAME SHOWS) Courtesy of ESPN

HSCN Housing Services Cable Network

2 HSCN Bulletin Board
3 CBS/3 Hartford
4 CBS/4 Boston
5 ABC/5 Boston
8 PBS/57 Springfield
7 HSCN Movie Channel
8 UPN/20 Hartford
9 Weather Channel
10 NBC/30 New Britain
11 Fox/61 Hartford
12 PBS/24 Hartford
13 WOCH & HSCN
14 UMATV
17 HSCN Programming
18 TV-19
20 ABC/40 Springfield
22 NBC/22 Springfield
23 CNN
24 CNN/Headline News
25 BET
26 BET on Jazz
27 Laser Video
28 The Learning Channel
30 Comedy Central
31 Popcorn Channel
32 Satellite Programming

http://www-unix.oit.umass.edu/~uvctv19

UVC-TV

THURSDAY EVENING — © TVData — DECEMBER 12, 1996

		6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	C. Sandiego	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Jean Houston, The Possible Human			Speaking With Your Angels: A Guide			This Old House	Furniture-Mend
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Am.Journal	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		Moloney (In Stereo)		48 Hours (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News		CBS News	Ent. Tonight	Diagnosis Murder (In Stereo)		Moloney (In Stereo)		48 Hours (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC Wld News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	High Incident "Christmas Blues"		Murder One "Chapter Eight"		Turning Point		News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Fresh Prince	Bizzi	Star Trek: The Next Generation		★½ "Santa Claus" (1985, Fantasy) Dudley Moore,				News		Extra	Hollywood
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends	Single Guy	Seinfeld (R)	Sudden-Susan	ER (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	Simpsons	Roseanne	Home Improve.	Seinfeld	Martin (R)	Living Single	New York Undercover (R)		News		Murphy Brown	Deep Space 9
WWLP	9	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends	Single Guy	Seinfeld (R)	Sudden-Susan	ER (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	11	Kratts Creature	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Woof! Woof! Uncle Matty's Dog Training			Klondike & Snow			World of National Geographic	Charlie Rose
WGGB	12	News	ABC Wld News	College Basketball: Drexel at Massachusetts (Live)					TBA	Turning Point		News	Nightline
WSBK	13	Beverly Hills, 90210 (In Stereo)		Seinfeld	Mad About You	★★★ "One Magic Christmas" (1985, Fantasy) Mary Steenburgen,				News	Martin	Mad About You	Real TV
WTBS	72	Family Matters	Family Matters	Home Videos	Home Videos	★★★ "Monsoon" (1963, Adventure) Roger Moore, Mazid Adams,						★★★ "Thunderball" (1965)
A&E	11	Quincy "To Clear the Air"		Equalizer "Suicide Squad"		Biography: Marie Antoinette		Ancient Mysteries (R)		Mysteries of the Bible		Law & Order "Helpless"
CNN	15	WorldView		Moneyline	Crossfire	Prime News	Inside Politics	Larry King Live		World Today		Sports Illus.	Moneyline
COM	19	A-List (R)	Dream On	Daily Show (R)	TV Nation	★★½ "Carbon Copy" (1981, Comedy) George Segal,				Dream On	A-List (R)	Daily Show	TV Nation
CSPAN	17	(4:00) Public Policy Conference		Public Policy Conference		Prime Time Public Affairs						Prime Time Public Affairs (R)
DISC	42	Go for It! (R)		Beyond 2000	Next Step (R)	Wild Discovery: Red Bear		Movie Magic	Next Step (R)	Time Traveler (R)		Next Step (R)	Beyond 2000
ESPN	21	Up Close	Sportscenter	NFL Pro Bowl Selection (Live)		College Football Awards (Live)						NFL's Greatest	Sportscenter
LIFE	22	Supermarket	Debt	Hope & Gloria	Designing	Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★★ "Always Remember I Love You" (1990, Drama) Patty Duke,				Martha Stewart	Unsolved Myst.
MTV	31	Ren & Stimpy	Sports (R)	Idiot Savants	Singled Out	Prime Time (In Stereo)		Yo! (In Stereo)				Idiot Savants	Singled Out
NICK	33	Clarissa Expl.	Tiny Toon Adv.	Doug	Rugrats	Secret of Alex	Happy Days	I Love Lucy	Monaters	M.T. Moore	Rhoda	Taxi	Odd Couple
SCIFI	35	Mann & Machine "Torch Song"		Twilight Zone	Tales-Darkside	V "The Littlest Dragon" (R)		★ "Dollman vs. the Demonic Toys" (1993)			Tales-Darkside	Twilight Zone	Tales-Darkside
TLC	37	Furniture to Go Home Pro (R)		Hometime (R)	Hometime (R)	Medical Detect	Trauma-ER	Kat. Mysteries	Hist. Mysteries	Survival In The Sky (R)		Medical Detect	Trauma-ER
TNT	40	In the Heat of the Night		In the Heat of the Night		How Grinch Stole Christmas		Flintstones Christmas (R)		★★★ "The Greatest Story Ever Told" (1965, Drama)		Max Von Sydow,
USA	27	Renegade "Pilot" (In Stereo)		Highlander: The Series "Finale"		Murder, She Wrote (In Stereo)		Figure Skating	Skating Romance			Silk Stalkings "Pulp Addiction"
VH1	29	Video Break		VH1 to One (R)	Duets "Melissa	Etheridge" (R)		Artist of Year	Preacher Party	Beatles Today	Phil Collins Live (R)	Legends (R)
HBO	45	(5:30) ★★½ "Final Knight" (1995, Adventure) Sean Connery, "PG-13"				★★ "Bushwhacked" (1995) Daniel Stern, "PG-13"			★ "Sucker Boyz" (1995) Michael Dudikoff, "NR"			Inside the NFL (In Stereo)
MAX	46	★★ "Last of the Dogmen" (1995, Adventure) Tom Berenger, "PG"				★★★ "Driving Miss Daisy" (1989) Jessica Tandy, (In Stereo) "PG"			★★ "The Road Killers" (1995) Christopher Lambert,			"Tango & Cash"
SHOW	49	★★½ "Prick's Way Home" (1995, Adventure) Michael Riley, "G"				★★★ "GoldenEye" (1995, Adventure) Pierce Brosnan, "PG-13"			Sherman Oaks	Full Frontal		★½ "Cookbooked" (1995) "R"

Always Wanted One of Those By A. Morse & S. Dumas

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Drabble By Kevin Fagan

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Frumpy the Clown Judd Winick

A Headless Horseman Christmas By Eric Petersen

Leold By Roger & Salem Salloom

Leold's Second Personal Ad

Looking for someone who has absolutely no sense of their own personal worth. Would be willing to relocate away from friends and family, refuses to see a psychotherapist under any circumstances, has a family history of physical infirmity and has already suffered from post traumatic stress disorder at least once, for picnics. 587-3453

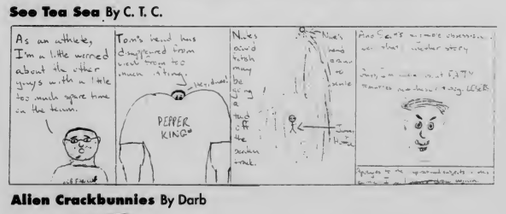
University² By Frank Cho



Close to Home By John McPherson

Generation X By Chris Lehman

See Tea See By C. T. C.

Alien Crackbunnies By Darb

Quote of the Day

"Always do what your Rice Krispies tell you to do."

–post script

Quote of the Day

"When I was a kid, I used to think the Celtics' Leprechaun lived in my walls."

–Overheard

Today's Staff

Jacob W. Michaels
Night Editor

Lisa Chiu
Copy Editor

Jennifer Jutras
Photo Technician

Josh Sylvester
Production Supervisor

Joylyn Lombard
Jack Myers
Production

Today's D.C. Menu
Call 545-2626 for more information.

Franklin

LUNCH: Chicken drenched in fine burgundy sauce with a variety of garden vegetables.

DINNER: Lightly grilled swordfish with a touch of butter, parsley, rosemary, sage, and thyme.

Hampshire

LUNCH: 2 lb. fresh Maine lobster. Choose your own and watch it boil alive.

DINNER: Chilled monkey brains flavored with a variety of tropical fruits.

Worcester

LUNCH: Spotted dick, bangers and mash, rashers, doner kabobs finished off with fried brie.

DINNER: Human liver with fava beans and a fine chianti. (Must be over 21, don't drink and drive)*

Berkshire

LUNCH: Alcoholic special: sterno, or your choice from a variety of cheap liquor. (Must be over 21, don't drink and drive)*

DINNER: Fried goat and chicken pot pie (goat well used).

*(anyone under 21 must starve)

Sports

Minutewomen lose second straight at home, 53–51

By Luke Meredith
Collegian Staff

Last year the Massachusetts women's basketball team went 12-0 at home.

This year, they're 0-2.

Two free throws by Kent guard Dawn Zerman pushed a 51–49 lead to a four point edge with 15 seconds on the clock, and that was enough to power the Kent Golden Flashes past the Minutewomen 53–51 last night at the William D. Mullins Center.

Massachusetts	51
Kent	53

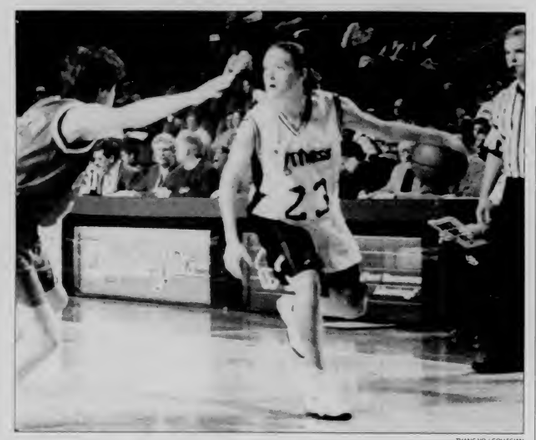
UMass freshman forward Alison MacFarland hit a jumper as time expired, but it wasn't enough to stop the Minutewomen from falling to 3–4 on the season.

"It's nice to come here and win one," Kent head coach Bob Lindsay said. "This is a tough place to play. They don't get beat at home too much."

Kent and UMass swapped leads for most of the second half, and when forward Crystal Carroll was fouled with 59 seconds left, Kent put her on the line holding a tenuous 50–48 lead. Carroll made the first free throw, pushing the Minutewomen to within one, but she missed the second, and Kent regained possession. Zerman made one of two free throws after an ensuing MacFarland foul, putting Kent back up by two, 51–49. MacFarland turned the ball over on the next UMass possession, on a pass that hit a Kent player's foot, giving the Golden Flash the ball back and forcing senior guard Sabriya Mitchell to foul Zerman.

"I honestly thought the ball was kicked; why they didn't call it I don't know," said Joanie O'Brien, UMass head coach, of the controversial non-call on MacFarland's pass that brought the 754 in attendance to its feet. "There were a lot of things that happened tonight that seemed to go unnoticed by the people out there [the officials]."

The Golden Flash freshman's two free throws sealed it, ending Kent's six–game road swing on a winning note. Kent improves to 2–4 with the win.



"It's pretty simple," O'Brien said. "Lay–ups and free throws... and we didn't do either of them. Crystal [Carroll] and Alison [MacFarland] shot the ball pretty well, but nobody else. We played tired, we didn't suck it up when we needed to. You can't play with two players."

A 28–25 Golden Flash lead became a 35–25 Kent advantage with 16:51 left in the second half, powered by six straight points by Carrie Templin, leaving her with 22 at that point. Templin finished with 24 points, but she would pick up her third foul three minutes into the second half, and the Minutewomen would exploit her absence. They broke off a 17–5 run, finally taking their first lead since the 15:21 mark of the first half on a Crystal Carroll perimeter jumpshot, putting them up 42–40 with 9:34 in the contest. Two three pointers by Kelly Van Huisen, her only baskets on the night, highlighted the run.

"She [Van Huisen] is a very talented player, and we needed to control her offense," Lindsay said of the Haverhill, Mass., freshman, who was just named A–10 rookie of the week. "We had to go box–and–one on her just to try to take her out of the game, break the flow. She's going to be a heck of a player in the Atlantic–10."

The Minutewomen trailed for most of the first half. Kent built up an early 18–11 lead on the shoulders of Templin, who had 16 of the Golden Flashes 21 points. But the Minutewomen chipped away, and a MacFarland three pointer, one of three treys for the freshman, brought UMass to within three at 26–23 with 2:42 left in the half.

Turn to BASKETBALL, page 12

THANG VO / COLLEGIAN

Freshman guard Kelly Van Huisen was shut down by a tough Kent State defense last night as UMass fell 53–51.

MacFarland hits career–high

By Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.
Collegian Staff

A profile in youth.

Freshman guard/forward Alison MacFarland was a main contributor for the Massachusetts women's basketball team last night, but her career–high 17 points were not enough to pull the Minutewomen over the hump in a disappointing home loss to Kent.

MacFarland, a burgeoning long–range threat, came off the bench to hit three treys (two in the major second half rally) in the contest, taking advantage of a Golden Flash defense that was keying on freshman sensation Kelly Van Huisen and daring MacFarland to take the open three–pointer.

"[MacFarland] hadn't shot the ball as well as she shot it tonight, up until this point. We were going to give her some open shots," Kent coach Bob Lindsay said. "She knocked them down, that's a credit to her."

The Brick, N.J., native had thrown up 27 attempts from downtown, connecting on just eight (a mediocre, at best, .296 shot percentage) before last night's solid 3–for–7 showing. Overall, prior to the clash with the Golden Flashes, she was shooting a dismal 25 percent from the floor and was averaging nearly three turnovers per game.

MacFarland has thus far been able to show merely sporadic signs of confidence in her game while constantly getting an earful from empassioned coach Joanie O'Brien.

Even tonight, without having a Kent defender within five feet of her for most of the first half, she was reluctant to put up the open jumper. It seemed that her reluctance to shoot has translated into total apprehension on her part, and fear to make a mistake.

That is, until tonight. In particular, the second half.

MacFarland was the only Minutewoman to tally double figures in the second half; for that matter, she was the only player in either uniform to notch 10 points in the latter 20 minutes of action.

"Crystal [Carroll] and Alison shot the ball pretty well, but nobody else played," O'Brien said. "Crystal got was averaging nearly three turnovers double– and triple–teamed all night and the only one to step up and make plays was Alison."

And make plays she did. Big plays. In a huge momentum swing that eventually knotted the game at 36, Van Huisen drilled a three–ball to pull the Minutewomen within three. Carroll followed that with a clean block on the next Kent possession, and on the UMass break, MacFarland nailed a spot–up trey that started the back–and–forth action for the duration of the contest.

Turn to MACFARLAND, page 12

'Newski swimming his way to the top

By Jonathan M. Place
Collegian Staff

It's five minutes of six, the swimmers are cooling down and slowing their paces considerably, and coach Russ Yarworth yells to one of the swimmers that he has an interview in five minutes. With a half embarrassed grin, seeing the reporter, the swimmer nods his head. After hearing a few wise cracks from his teammates and a loud, stretched "Newski!" cheer from one of his coaches, he finishes his remaining laps.

Brian Wisniewski is swiftly becoming one of the best swimmers in Massachusetts history. Not only did the speedy sophomore make a lasting impression at the Philadelphia Invitational last weekend, by breaking some of this year's best times in the 200 IM and 100 backstroke, but he has earned the respect of his coaches for his ability and work ethic.

"He is one of the most aesthetically appealing swimmers on the team. He swims smooth. I wish I could train everyone to swim like him," said Yarworth. the Massachusetts swimming and diving head coach. "He's come a long way in two years. He has a great work ethic. If he keeps up his work ethic, he'll go down as one of the best swimmers in UMass history, which he already is."

Wisniewski is a 6–foot–2 freestyle and backstroke swimmer from Edison, N.J. Last year, as a freshman, he made an immediate impression on the club. Not only did he finish first in three events and place second in five, but he managed to set a school record for the 100 backstroke last year during the Atlantic 10 Championship, at a finishing time of 50.85.

For anyone, be it a student or an athlete, the transition from high school to college takes some getting used to. Wisniewski has handled it extremely well, and enjoys the fact that he feels he is not only helping himself but helping a championship organization as well.

"At the collegiate level, there is more of a team emphasis, as before, on the U.S.S. team and back in high school, it's more individual, you know, get your own times fast," Wisniewski said.

For UMass, Wisniewski doesn't have to worry about getting his times fast, because they already are. On top of the school–record time in the 100 backstroke that he holds, he also ranks second on the UMass all–time chart in the 200 backstroke (1:51.36), seventh in the 500 free (4:38.86), and was part of the school–record–setting 400 medley relay team last year during the A–10 Championship (3:24.53).

Apart from the praise he has gotten about his technique from his coaches, Brian does have an opinion on his own performance.

"If I have to do something, for the most time I can pull through and do it, but I also sometimes wuss out, and make up excuses, and don't do it," Wisniewski said.

Having a year of experience on the team, now Wisniewski only has to concentrate on getting the job done.

"I feel that I'm more a part of the team now that I am a sophomore. When as a freshman, I was trying to prove that I could be a part of it, and I wanted to be a part of it. Now that I'm a sophomore, I'm in the groove," Wisniewski said.

Since receiving the A–10 Championship last year with his team, Wisniewski has his sights set on a repeat.

"I just want to help our team make the A–10 title again, and if I achieve somewhat a goal above that, it's all the better," Wisniewski said.

The aquatics program at UMass has been extremely successful over the past few seasons. With water polo making the final four tournament two years in a row, and the swimming and diving team winning the A–10 Championship last year, the waters are not as choppy as they would be for a team in the cellar.

"I like it [the atmosphere] a lot. It's relaxed, but you know you have to do what you have to do. There's not too much stress, but everyone knows what you have to do," Wisniewski said.

"He works hard. Once he gets in the pool," assistant coach Ben McBride said, "it usually takes him about two months to get motivated to swim."

This last weekend in Philadelphia answered any concerns McBride might have had about Wisniewski's competitive nature.

"What I did this weekend was really positive for me. It's boosted my attitude and my motivation, and that will just carry me through the rest of

Turn to SWIMMING, page 12

Against Drexel, Flint looking for players

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

There might be some surprises in the starting line–up when the Massachusetts and Drexel men's basketball teams tip off tonight at 7 p.m. at the William D. Mullins Center.

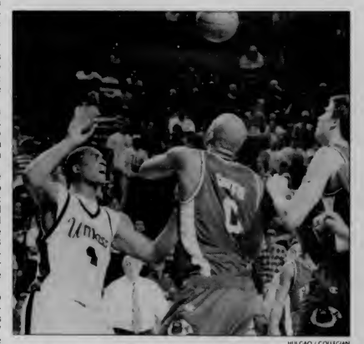
After Tuesday night's performance against Fresno State, Minuteman coach James "Bruiser" Flint was prepared to re– evaluate the work ethic of his team.

"You have to come focused every day," Flint said. "We'll get the guys out there who come to practice every day and work hard. If a guy's not ready to play, he doesn't deserve to be out there. That's the bottom line.

"I learned something, that, Bru, you go with the dudes that want to work hard every day. And if you're going to go down, you're going to go down that way, but those guys will help you win some games," he said.

So there may be a new look to the line–up. One thing that is expected to remain unchanged is the frontcourt tandem of Lari Ketner and Ajmal Basit. The underclassman duo posted the top two point totals for the Minutemen against Fresno, with 18 and 16 points respectively. The two–some also dominated on the glass for the Minutemen — Ketner alone pulled down 12 rebounds.

Together the pair has gotten the job done. Since Basit moved into a starting position three games ago, he has averaged 12 points per game and 7.7 rebounds per game. In those same three games Ketner has recorded 15.3 ppg and 9.7 rpg in addition to blocking 11 shots.



"What can you say about Lari and Ajmal?" Flint said. "But I can't ask those two to come and carry my team."

In the backcourt, sophomore Charlton Clarke has surged lately, scoring a career–high 22 points against Wyoming. Against Wyoming, Clarke contributed 12 points and four rebounds.

But it is not the play of these athletes that concerns Flint, but the attitude of his other players.

"Players play, no matter who's on the court." Flint said. "No matter

Turn to DREXEL, page 12

HUI GAO / COLLEGIAN

Lari Ketner and the Minutemen look to redeem themselves after Tuesday's 102–81 loss against Drexel tonight.

Sports staff shares misty–eyed memories of the semester past

This is a true story about 14 people plucked to live/work in a basement. Find out what happens when they stop getting stories and start getting misty.

Lowell Spinners (Single A)

Jeremy Adams — 'Twas three weeks before Christmas and late in the day, we writers were wishing we'd something to say. We'd bitched about this, and raved about that, not a reader would stir if we knew nothing 'bout that. So Fred with a bagel and I with a plank, invented a winter sport to chase doldrums away. Like Naismith once chartered that game for the tall, we are the ones who've now made Bagelball. In the newsroom the baked goods all flew through the air, we swung with the might of a Chicago Bear. Off computers and desks bounced the bagel so stale, 'til grumpy old Conner was afraid to get nailed. We scrambled all 'round the newsroom to see, where the pieces had flown of the bagel from the D.C. With crumpled up pieces of bread–stuff in hand, the "tappity–tap" hush of computer keys settled over the land.

Thanks to my surrogate family in the dank corner of the newsroom, especially Fred, Jorma, and da boyz for putting me in my place when I got carried away. Thanks to Place for giving me all those bruises and lacerations at that hockey game; see if I ever give you beer again. Casey, "we can be happy underground." Thanks to Stamm for giving an unknown freshman a chance at an important volleyball article. Thanks to Grant for cutting and/or combing his hair.

Jonathan M. Place —Schwag, Walt Whitman, laegermeister, Keyser Soze, classic '80s tunes, middle initials, first initials, and just a little slice of love. Where would one find such a potluck supper? No, not a movie festival or drum circle up in Central, or even on the bathroom stall doors in Baker, but in the lovable corner of Collegian, known as Sports.

El Torbino, the fabulous Finnish fly boy, the pimp daddy, Fred, Isaiah Adams, "Little Rock" Grant, and the Kreindog, led by Casey and Chris. These are the poets, the glue that is the high of the Collegian. Their words slip down from their brain to their fingertips onto the keyboard like a gumball machine. With wisdom and wit, they create a world far beyond the imagination of any mortal man. These poets in grunge clothing. How they toil with our minds. Don't forget Fred Hurlbrink Jr. who masters the art of water polo and baseball, and Mike "Swing Kid" Corey, who manages to dedicate his time to MUA and the Collegian. What men!

I'm just proud to be a part of it. Now maybe after kissing their ass, I'll get my golf column. That's what I'm really crying about. Unfortunately, that will never happen. Sob!

Trenton Thunder (Double A)

Mike Nam — I'll never forget Jorma's impassioned speech at the winter staff party telling us how much he truly loves the sport of hockey. Stamm taking me aside when I was constantly MIA and asking me if I really wanted to do this... and I found that I did; the women's tennis team's success this season (I always seemed to make the rained out matches); and Casey for being the bundle of energy she is.

Finally, as a lonely figure of a Yankee fan on staff, I'll never forget the World Series and Fred's columns. In the end, I was the one going to a parade (oh, I'll tertainly never forget that).

Notice I didn't mention 'booty schwag.'

Mike Corey — I always have a tough time with these things. It's so tough to squeeze in all the great times and memories from this semester and do justice to everyone that has made it fun.

I must start off though with saying that covering the football team with Luke Meredith was definitely a blast this past fall, and jumping down into the stands in the last game of the year, to watch their 20–point come–from–behind win was spectacular. The road trips were always a blast, and listening to opposing team's media ask dumb questions always gave us something to harp about on the way home. It was sweet, Mr. "Booty Schwag."

It was always good to hang out with the staff, and just talk sports, especially since I don't get any coverage of them from our cable in the dorms. The parties with the crew were fun, hanging out at Luke's, and the end of the semester bash uptown.

Campus center basement has always been a second home, both with the Collegian, and WMUA. Spending more time writing articles than doing homework was a trend for me, but it doesn't nearly compare to the amount of time all the rest of the staff puts down here in our little corner of Collegian Sports.

I can always count on coming down here and getting a high–five from Jorma, one of the most dedicated members we have, and for our editors Chris and Casey — keep up the good work. Thanks to all Sports staff gurus, new and old, for making it fun, and here's looking forward to a great time again in the spring.

Steven "Crazy Legs"/"Little Rock"/"Blip Chop" Grant — By far my favorite moment of the semester is now, writing my misty–eyed memory. Lord, I... I just can't explain it. Sure there was the time I was covering

Turn to MEMORIES, page 13

The Massachusetts
DAILY COLLEGIAN
Volume CVI Issue 69 New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967 Friday, December 13, 1996

Minutemen slay Dragons

Inus Norville sparked the Massachusetts men's basketball team to a home win over Drexel last night, 69–48 (see Sports, page 12).

Deck the Halls

Death Row records recently put out a Christmas album highlighting many top artists. Check out what the Collegian thinks about this CD (see Arts & Living, page 5).

WORLD

Saddam Hussein's son injured in ambush

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Saddam Hussein's eldest son, sometimes described as his heir apparent, was slightly wounded yesterday when attackers ambushed his car.

Odai Hussein was rushed to a hospital where he was reported in stable condition, Youth TV reported. The station, which is owned by Odai, interrupted its programming to announce that he was attacked while driving in the upscale al–Mansour district of Baghdad.

"He was the target of a cowardly attack which led to a light wound," the television reported.

It was at least the third assassination attempt against the 32–year–old Odai, who heads Iraq's trade and information ministries and is considered one of Iraq's most powerful figures.

He has been involved in several violent personal incidents, and reportedly had been targeted for revenge following a dispute with in–laws late last year. In 1988, he was temporarily forced into exile in Switzerland after he bludgeoned to death his father's favorite servant.

Last year, Odai shot one of Saddam's half–brothers in the leg during a family quarrel.

NATION

Disney's Ovitz quits; can't work with Eisner

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Hollywood power broker Michael Ovitz quit yesterday as Walt Disney Co.'s No. 2 executive after trying for a year to share power with Michael Eisner, a friend for 25 years who never worked out as his boss.

He is the latest top Disney executive to leave in recent years after chafing under Eisner's apparent unwillingness to cede control.

"It is important to recognize when something is not working," Ovitz said in a statement released by Disney.

Ovitz officially departs Jan. 31. Disney said there were no plans to replace him, potentially reopening a debate about the company's future if Eisner, who has had quadruple heart bypass surgery, should develop serious health problems. Company officials say Eisner, 54, is in good shape.

Eisner has run Disney since 1984, building on its theme park and family–movie base to create a powerhouse in film and TV production, home video, broadcasting, sports and consumer products. All the world, it seems, loves the Magic Kingdom, the Lion King, Snow White, Pocahontas, Cruella DeVil and the 101 Dalmatians she covets. And after acquiring Capital Cities/ABC, including the ABC and ESPN networks, Disney is second in size only to Time Warner Inc. among entertainment companies.

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 35	HIGH: 40	HIGH: 35
LOW: 30	LOW: 35	LOW: 25

INSIDE

Arts & Living.....page 5
Classifieds .....page 10
Comics.....page 11
Crossword .....page 10
Editorial .....page 4
FYI.....page 3
News.....page 3
Sports .....page 12

Marya, Dale discuss racism issue

GSS president Marya challenges Dale to carry out promises

COURTNEY SMITH/COLLEGIAN

Student Government Association representative Lia Wong and Graduate Student Senate President Deepika Marya addressed campus racism concerns with Business and Facility Services Director Elizabeth Dale yesterday evening at the campus center.

By Jonathan Liberty
Collegian Staff

Racism continued to be a subversive and fundamental issue at a University of Massachusetts meeting between student leaders and members of the Campus Center Administration, organized by Graduate Student Senate (GSS) President Deepika Marya and Student Government Association (SGA) member Lia Wong.

News Analysis

Marya cited several reasons for yesterday's meeting, including student concern of not seeing signs of development of what was promised at an Oct. 25 meeting and communication problems between Elizabeth Dale, Director of Business and Facilities Services, and Asian, Latino, African and Native American (ALANA) student leaders (namely Marya).

"We feel that there has been a breech of faith between Dale and the Student Government," Marya said. "We gave her a chance to show that she is not just going to another white administrator."

Dales' supervisor, Director of Auxilliary Services Ashoke Ganguli responded, "I know racism exists and all that, but the problem that needs to be changed is the governance of the whole complex [Campus Center–Student Union]."

Marya returned the focus of the conversation back to the fact that she did not receive a letter from Dale, which she was promised by Dale.

Dale responded to Marya's allegations, saying, "The oversight [involving

Turn to Racism, page 3

SGA, Chancellor review Sex Offender Registry

By Laura Stock
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association (SGA) undergraduate Senate recently confronted the issue of sex offenders living on the University of Massachusetts campus with a new motion calling for University police and the town of Amherst police to register all UMass students who are convicted sex offenders.

News Analysis

The controversial issue came to the attention of the UMass community and its officials on Nov. 25, when Channel 40 News in Springfield began a series on a convicted sex offender found living in a residence hall on the UMass campus.

However, once the initial reaction to this incident died down, the real issue behind the story emerged: how should sex offenders attending the University be required to register, as per the Massachusetts Sex Offenders Law, Ch.6, Sect. 178C?

SGA Senator Bill Ramsey (Commuter Area), drafted the motion (which was vetoed Wednesday night by SGA President Maurice Caston–Powe, and will require a two– thirds majority Senate vote to be overturned) regarding the Sex Offender's Registry which SGA discussed on Dec. 4.

According to Stacey Shackford, SGA Senator (Central – at large and chair of the Women's Issues committee), who revised the now–vetoed motion, about 40–50 SGA members were present at the meeting where it was passed after several amendments.

"The main opposition to the bill was people who were opposed to warning about sex offenders," Shackford said.

The final draft, which Ramsey and Shackford presented to Chancellor David K. Scott and Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Tom Robinson in a meeting last Friday, contained proposed acts such as "...convicted sex offenders, in addition to registering with the city of Amherst as is mandated by law, also be mandated to register with the UMass campus police in order to enable students increased access to information about sex offenders on campus."

According to UMass Chief of Police John Luippold, the law does not currently mandate that students who are convicted sex offenders register with the UMass police, since it is not considered a local police station.

"In a training session that all police departments had during the summer, which we attended, the Criminal History Systems Board indicated that the specific statute did not include campus safety, college police deparments or state police," Luippold said.

In fact, current interpretations of the law, which are being reviewed by the state's Attorney General, are such that unless a student is originally from the town of Amherst, he or she is not required to register with Amherst Police.

Concerned students, however, do have access to Registry information, despite the fact that individu–

Turn to SGA, page 3

UMass hosts orientation for new state legislators

By Joseph Fountain
Collegian Staff

State Representative Paul Frost (R–Auburn), a University of Massachusetts alumnus and other newly elected state legislators gathered at UMass over the past few days to participate in a University–run orientation session. In all, 32 representatives took part in the event.

"The level of participation has been excellent," said Arthur Benard, assistant to the president of UMass.

The first day of seminars discussed press relations and workforce development in their offices. The day ended when Chancellor David K. Scott hosted a dinner at his home later that night.

On the second day, the seminars dealt with federal legislation and its affect on Massachusetts, directions in telecommunications industry, leadership skills and a mock legislative session concerning the death penalty.

According to Representative Thomas O'Brien (D–12th Plymouth District), the seminars "take us out of our normal habitats to really focus on our work. I love it here, I was here two years ago and seems like they have everything except and airport. It's like a small city."

Today, the seminars conclude with discussions on ethics in the legislature and how to work with the leadership already in the State House. The seminar will end after lunch with closing remarks given by Representatives John Rogers (D–Norwood) 12th Norfolk District and Nancy Flavin (D– Easthampton).

"It's given me a lot of good insight into the type of work I'll be doing," Frost said.

"I am very happy to be back. The basketball team was very good when I was here. I never went to any games because I couldn't get tickets but I always watched them on T.V., tonight is the first game I am going to," Frost added.

He went on to say, "If you were going to show anyone the University system you would show them here first. I am really proud of this University."

"I lived in J.Q.A. for two years and Coolidge for two years. It's good to be back," Frost said.

New events office opens in CC; Office to make organization easier

By Beth McCarthy
Collegian Staff

While the Campus Center concourse was buzzing with pre– holiday activity yesterday, a small group of about 25 were gathered upstairs on the eighth floor for the ribbon cutting of the new Events Office.

The new Events Office, now in room 819 of the Campus Center, will consolidate the offices of conference sales, catering services and scheduling in an effort to "serve people better," said Matthew Auger, chair of the Campus Center/Student Union Commission.

According to Auger, these three offices had previously been scattered around the Campus Center in different locations.

Jane Podlesny, the scheduling coordinator, said that their office used to be located on the second floor of the Campus Center.

"That was a storage area," Podlesny said. "It wasn't even supposed to be an office space."

The conference office moved from the ninth floor while the catering office just had to scoot down the hall.

"It's one stop shopping for our customers and students," said Meredith Schmidt, the associate director who was at the center of organizing the opening of the Event Office.

Ashoke Ganguli, the director of Auxiliary Services who was also heavily involved in the new office, said that this has been nearly a year long project that was recommended by "a team of users, students and staff" last spring.

According to Ganguli, the money to finance this new office came out of their budget.

"We had set aside some money for this project when we had decided to go ahead with the project," Ganguli said.

To cut costs, Schmidt said that she and the crew that had been assigned to organize the consolidation had ventured out to visit discount furniture stores.

Amy Arruda, a junior HRTA major who's also the caterer's assistant, said that she was very happy with the results.

"I think it's great," Arruda said. "The office is really great looking."

Auger said that the Campus Center administration has been attempting to consolidate space and staff to allow for a more efficient environment.

Those who had worked on the second floor in the scheduling office were extremely pleased to be able to look out a window.

Paul Paige, the Vice Chancellor of Administration and Finance, said in a speech before the cutting of the red ribbon that the Events Office will enhance the "quality of service we provide" and make it easier for people to organize events on this campus.

The only setback that Podlesny said she noticed was that "it doesn't seem like we've been getting as many people coming in."

"It could be the time of the year with everyone on winter break," Podlesny said. "We still have the same amount of business over the phone but just less customers walking in."

Saudi pilot spots green flare

By Pat Milton
Associated Press

EAST HAMPTON, N.Y. — A Saudi Arabian Airlines pilot flying in the area where TWA Flight 800 exploded reported seeing "a green flare" in the sky early yesterday that authorities could not immediately identify.

"There was no initial report of them feeling the plane was in any jeopardy or them taking any evasive action," said Federal Aviation Administration spokesman Bob Ropelewski.

"They reported what they described as a green flare," he said. "I'm interpreting it as they saw a single beam or point of light bright enough to attract their attention."

The FBI is investigating the report, but Ropelewski noted that a similar siting last month was chalked up to be a natural phenomenon.

The Boeing 747 en route from Riyadh to Kennedy International Airport was at 12,000 feet yesterday when it spotted the flare about 15 miles southwest of the Long Island town of East Hampton, Ropelewski said.

East Hampton is about 30 miles east of Center Moriches, the point of land closest to where TWA Flight 800 went down July 17.

Ropelewski said he didn't know how far the light was from the plane, which landed at Kennedy 20 minutes later before continuing to Dulles Airport near Washington, where a report was filed with the FAA.

A call to Saudi Arabian Airlines was not returned.

Numerous people along the shoreline of Long Island reported seeing a streak of light in the sky about the time Flight 800 exploded. At the time, the TWA jet was rising above 13,000 feet. Seconds later, Flight 800 smashed into the ocean in fiery pieces. All 230 aboard were killed.

The cause of the TWA explosion remains a mystery. The FBI and the National Transportation Safety Board are still investigating three theories: a missile, a bomb and mechanical failure.

Ropelewski said the FBI has taken over the investigation of the sighting by the Saudi Arabian Airlines crew. He compared it to the report last month by a Pakistani International Airline jet pilot who said he saw a light streak across the path of his plane shortly after he left Kennedy

COURTNEY SMITH/COLLEGIAN

CCSU chair Matt Auger and vice chancellor of Administration and Finance Paul Page cut the ribbon to welcome the new events office in campus center room 819.

For Your Information

PIPs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an PIP, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Friday, Dec. 13

Concert — The Doo-Wop Shop will hold a free concert at the Bezanson Recital Hall in the FAC at 8 p.m. Opening will be the female a capella group, Meanwhile. Bring an umbrella.

Religious Services — The last services of the semester will be held at 6 p.m. at Hillel House. Dinner will follow at 7:15 p.m. in the Hillel Kosher Dining Room.

Sale — "Keramos," an annual ceramic and art sale, will take place from 10 a.m.–6 p.m. in the Ceramics Dept. in Munson Annex.

Speaker — The UMass Dept. of Philosophy presents Ruth Garrett Millikan from UConn, who will speak on "Images of Identity" in room 212 Bartlett Hall.

Notices

Financial Aid — Financial Aid Services would like to remind students to file their '97–'98 Free Application For Federal Student Aid (FAFSA) or renewal FAFSA by Feb. 15. This is to ensure that your application will be received by the processing center by the UMass March 1 deadline. If you do not receive a renewal form, please fill out an original form available at the following locations: Fin. Aid Services– 255 Whitmore; United Asia Learning Resource Center– Knowlton; New Africa House; Division of Continuing Ed.– Goodell Bldg.; Bilingual Collegiate Program–Wilder Hall.

Information — The UMass Pagan Students will be holding an informational table in the Campus Center Concourse from Wed. Dec. 11 through Fri. Dec 13. For more information, contact Melissa at 546–0476.

Dance — The Northeast School of Dance Studio in Northampton will hold a dance spree every Friday from 8:30 p.m. to midnight every Friday. People can dance to variety of music in a smoke and alcohol–free environment. All ages welcome. Sliding scale. For more information, call 584– 8167.

Dancing — UMass Ballroom Dance meetings are every Tuesday and Thursday at 5:15 p.m. in room 101 Totman. Come learn to dance, newcomers welcome. For more information, contact Milly DeJesus at 546-1083.

Employment — The Department of Consumer Studies is seeking a candidate to fill the position of Computer Coordinator. The applicant must be a grad student. Please send resume with references to: Dr. Sheila Mammen, Dept. of Consumer Studies, 101 Skinner Hall, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Ma, 01003. For more information, contact Dr. Mammen at 545–2391.

Health — To help students and their families stay healthy and access University Health Services more easily, members of the Health Reach International team are available to help you find answers to your questions and concerns: Mondays from 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Health Education Dept., UHS room 248 (call 577–5181 for more info) and 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Community Room H–4 North Village; Tuesdays 6:30– 8:30 p.m. in the International Lounge, Prince House (call 545–2299 for more info); Wednesdays 4:30–6:30 p.m. in the Community Room, 411 Linclon. All conversations are confidential.

Meeting — Alanon meetings are held Mondays in room 801 and Thursdays in room 802 of the Campus Center from noon–1 p.m.

Meeting — P.O.W.E.R., the Progressive Organization for Women's Rights holds their weekly meetings on Thursdays at 6 p.m. in the Student Union room 306. All men and women are welcome.

Meeting — The Pakistan Students Association has its weekly meetings every Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. Check for the room number at the information desk. For further details, contact Musharraf at 546–6295.

Meeting — Anthropology Undergraduate Caucus meets every Wednesday at 7:45 p.m. in Machmer 201. All anthropology undergraduate minors and majors welcome.

Meeting — Weekly "Schulchan Ivrit" held every Wednesday at 3 p.m. in the Bluewall Cafe. Make a right as you enter and look for the sign on the table. All Israelis and other Hebrew speakers welcome.

Meeting — The Animal Rights Coalition meetings are every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in room 306 of the Student Union. For more information, call the ARC office at 5–1925.

New Organization — WICC (West Indian/Caribbean Coalition) meets every Sunday evening at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center Coffee Shop. Anyone from the West Indies or the Caribbean is encouraged to attend, as well as anyone interested in the culture. For more information, contact Tony at 546–6487 or Nizam at 546–3967.

New Organization — Attention Biracial and Multiracial Students on campus. A new organization is forming and your help is needed. If interested, call Jordan at 546–3548.

Religious — The Muslim Student Association at the University of Massachusetts invites all Muslims in the Amherst area to weekly Friday prayer from noon to 1 p.m. in the United Asia Cultural Center Room (in the basement of Worcester Dining Common). For more information, call Utama at 256–8482 or Laili at 253–0874.

Staff Needed — The UMass Index yearbook needs staff in all departments. Editorial positions are available in Photo, layout, copy and marketing departments. An assistant copy editor and assistant sports editor are also needed. Meetings are held on Wednesdays at 7 p.m., 304 Student Union, or call 545–0848 if interested.

Submissions Request — Spectrum Magazine is looking for submissions of poetry, prose, artwork and photos. Submissions can be turned in to the Spectrum office, 406E Student Union. The final deadline for all submissions is Feb. 12, 1997. Anyone interested in knowing more about the Spectrum can call the office at 545–2240.

Support Group — Tobacco cessation support group meets weekly on Wednesday evenings from 7–8 p.m. in the Campus Center to help people quit smoking and chewing tobacco. See schedule by elevators for room number or call Steve at 577–5181 for further information.

Talent Needed — The UMass Asian American Students Association is looking for Asian/American hip hop, reggae, and R&B dancers for next semesters annual Asian Night production to be held on April 11, 1997. Contact Geneva at 546–2714 for audition information.

Volunteer — The Zoo in Forest Park at Springfield has a wealth of diverse volunteer opportunities available for persons who love animals and are committed to conservation education. For further information about the Zoo and to be sent a volunteer application, please call (413) 733–2251.

Campus Police Log

Animal Complaint
Dec. 11
A horse was reported loose on Massachusetts Avenue. The animal was caught and returned to its owner.

Annoying Behavior
Dec. 11
An individual reported snowballs being thrown at windows in Moore Residence Hall.

Assist Agency
Dec. 10
UMass police assisted Vermont State Police in contacting an alleged rape victim in Vermont. The case is under investigation.
Dec. 11
There was a false 911 call from Coolidge Residence Hall.

Burglary/Breaking and Entering
Dec. 10
An individual reported that her purse was stolen from her vehicle parked on Stadium Drive.

Drug Law Offenses
Dec. 10
The odor of marijuana was reported in John Quincy Adams Residence Hall.
The odor of marijuana was reported in Washington Residence Hall.
The odor of marijuana was reported in John Quincy Adams Residence Hall.
The odor of marijuana was reported in Cashin Residence Hall.

Family Offenses, Domestics
Dec. 11
Joel M. Decosta, 19, of 9 Parlowtown Rd., Marion, arrested on Clark Hill Rd. for domestic assult and battery.

Larceny
Dec. 10
A radio was stolen from a vehicle in the Campus Center Garage.
Dec.11
An individual reported that two wallets and a coin purse were stolen from a display table in the Campus Center.
A radio was stolen from a vehicle in parking lot 44.
An individual reported that an art sculpture was stolen from the lawn area at the Art Foundry.
A vacuum was reported stolen from Tobin Hall.

Lost/Found Property
Dec. 10
An individual reported that they lost their keys in Hasbrouck.

Vandalism
Dec. 10
A vending machine was broken into at Brown Residence Hall.
Dec. 11
A window was smashed on a vehicle in parking lot 22.

Warrant Service
Dec. 11
Leah D. Mastromatteo, 21, of 5 Ruby Ave., Marblehead, MA was arrested on Fearing Street on a warrant

Collegian Graphics
TICK...TICK..TICK.....

COLLEGIAN GRAPHICS

MINI-MALL '96
Today thru- Friday December 13 9am-5pm Student Union Ballroom
One-Stop Shopping Extravaganzal With over 40 vendors
is HERE
For more information call 549-1710

88.5fm WFCR
Public Radio for Western New England
Radio Board Operator for WFCR (Departmental Assistant)
Operate broadcast equipment for WFCR at another site in Amherst. Hours available, 10 am - 6 pm Monday - Friday. Some radio board operator experience; excellent reliability; ability to follow station policies and procedures. Transportation needed. Hourly rate $6.00, no benefits. Some training for qualified applicants. Complete application and resume and three references by February 16, 1997 to search 532, Employment Office, 167 Whitmore, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, MA 01003-8170. The University is an Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity Employer.

TOC Bar & Grill
Munchie Specials Mon - Fri 4 - 7 PM
Saturday Dec.14 at 8:30pm
UMASS vs. Wake Forest
Free Popcorn Draft Beer Drink Specials & Micro Brews
U Mass
11th Floor Campus Center
Mon.-Fri. 4pm - 12:30am
Sat. 3pm - 12:30am

RSO
POH YNG'S FAVORITE
Thank you for advertising with the Collegian. It has been fun working with you.
Have a Great Holiday & Look Forward to seeing you Next Semester.
Your Ad Rep

Racism

continued from page 1

the absence of the letter] was certainly not deliberate. I did not mean to exclude you from the process."

Wong, who served as a mediator at the meeting, said, "How do we go about amending the breech of communication so we do not have to have another emergency meeting like this?"

It was agreed that communication would be done through e–mail in the future to ensure that all members at all of the meetings were informed.

Dale then gave then an update of the Campus Center\Student Union Security Initiatives which include: Research Security practices at other college\university stores; deterrence rather than apprehension; review of the Student Judiciary Process for the University Store; Hiring a Security Consultant to Investigate Electronic Security Measures; conducting diversity training for Campus Center\Student Union employees; Collect data and prepare a report on Staff Diversity for CC\SU Complex; Target Senior Level Professional Position at the University Store; and increasing the number of students of color employed at the campus center.

"I feel that the quality of the work that has been done is 100 percent," Dale said. "I have initiated all of these steps.

"We have started to lay some major changes in the building," Dale said. "We have done a tremendous amount in a short period of time."

"In 13 years here at the University, I have never seen an administration move as fast as Dale," said Sid Ierreira of CCEBMS.

Another major concern for Marya was the fact that all of the initiatives had deadlines except for, "Increase number of students of color employed at the Campus Center," which the timeline noted ASAP [as soon as possible].

"If you [Dale] are serious, then there would be a deadline," Marya said. "You have made no commitment. How seriously do you want us to take you?"

Dale responded saying that the problem was one of semantics, "I believed that ASAP denotes a top priority."

It was agreed that a deadline would be set at an upcoming meeting for around mid to late February.

"I still don't know what I can believe and how much confidence I can have," Marya said.

According to Marya, statistics which Dale published about the percentages of the ALANA workforce in the CC/SU were incorrect.

The statistics came from the University Human Resources Department which gave a list of employees to every CC/SU manager, the managers then identified their employees ethnicities.

Marya claimed that this was not the case. She went to two places in the CC\SU and asked about the number of ALANA students who worked at these jobs. The information which she collected conflicted with the statistics.

"You are throwing these figures out that are guess work," Marya told Dale. "And these figures are fudged."

It was agreed that Marya and persons of her choice will begin working with Dale and another CC\SU administrator in the next collection of the statistics in February.

The meeting ended with Marya saying that she still did not know what to believe. Dale left the meeting saying that the best way to solve this problem is to get together and form better methods [security and hiring] for the future.

The meeting lasted for about an hour and a half. In those 90 minutes, it was only decided that people would meet at other times to discuss the issues.

Even though the tension was high, no action took place, nothing changed. The players simply stated and restated their view points.

Ganguli, said, "Civility is a basic fundamental. We can agree to disagree, but in a civil way, and I am talking as a person of color."

Yet, at this meeting, "civility" only led to banter, which ultimately led to stagnation.

Apathy is not the problem here, instead it is the method of action which ALANA students are using as a vehicle towards change. This "civility" which Ganguli spoke of has lead ALANA students nowhere, especially at this University.

The most effective action taken at UMass has been direct action, including the takeovers of 1986, 1992 and 1996. Students need to realize that if they want change, they need to take direct action.

SGA

continued from page 1

als who are convicted sex offenders are currently required to register in their hometown and not necessarily where they currently reside.

"Individuals on campus have access to the Sex Offender Registry either through the UMass Police Department or through the Amherst Police Department to determine whether or not someone in their living area is registered," Luippold said.

The process entails filling out a two–page form about the individual in question and sending it to the Criminal History Systems Board in Boston. According to Luippold, the form can be filled out and mailed privately or with the assistance of the police.

Access to information for the well–being of the public was the issue behind the Sex Offender Registry Act, also called "Meghan's Law." However, there is a statement printed on the Registry form warning that information issued about sex offenders not be used to illegally discriminate or harrass an offender.

Since current interpretations of the law do not include provisions for college campuses, it would appear that the University is in a tough position — but this issue has received, and is receiving, much attention both in Boston and on campus.

In fact, according to Shackford, during the meeting with Scott and Robinson, the Chancellor said he plans to look at the University's options and issue a response soon.

Shackford said that Scott and Robinson told them that if a type of registry were to be devised on campus, that "they would think about letting us [SGA] in on it."

Administratively, the process may be a bit slow, but students' hands are not tied. Information about the registry is within reach. Individuals who wish to enact change should not only look to University officials, but to the office of the Attorney General in Boston. Only they can make amendments to the law to define where a University student is considered to be a resident — the address on their driver's license or the address on their college I.D.

The Collegian News Department is currently accepting applicatons for Associate News Editors. These paid positions offer substantial writing experience. News Associates typically cover:

- politics of higher education
- student activism
- state politics
- student government and Registered Student Organizations
- university policy and adminstration
- police and public saftey
- Town of Amherst, Hadley, Northampton, etc.
- court procedings
- health and environment
- science and technology

Interested students should call Laura Stock at 545–1851 or stop by the Collegian office in 113 Campus Center (basement).

The Collegian is an Equal Opportunity Employer.

Read the Mass Daily Collegian and everybody will see you as a–oh, wait. This is the last issue. I guess you won't be able to read it until February, right? Oh, well. Never mind.

DAILY COLLEGIAN

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592
http://www.umass.edu/rso/collegian

Jacob W. Michaels Editor-in-Chief Chris Taylor Conner Managing Editor
Alycia Hines Business Manager G. Tony Morse Production Manager Pete Servais Advertising Manager
David Voldan Advertising Production Manager Lisa Chiu Senior Diversity Editor

Mike Burke Arts & Living Editor
Humphrey brown III Black Affairs Co-Editor
Gregory Cuamir Black Affairs Co-Editor
Sunanda Ghosh Developing Nations Editor
Mark McGrath Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jamie Smsheimer Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Bryan Schwartzman Jewish Affairs Co-Editor
Sarah Kimmel Jewish Affairs Co-Editor
Lisa Chiu Multicultural Affairs Editor
Michael Elliott News Editor
Elizabeth Brown Photography Editor
Casey Kane Sports Co-Editor
Chris Stamm Sports Co-Editor
Michelle Hillman Women's Issues Editor
Josh Sylvester Editorial Production Manager
Sean Hogan Systems Manager
Eric R. Remillard IV Finance Manager
Rob McDonald Circulation Manager
Ryan Courtemanche Subscription Manager
Feisal Ahmad Marketing Manager
Renee LeBlanc Classifieds Manager
Lyle A. Henry Operations Manager
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Merry Pappas Classified Advertising
Thomas F. Sweeney, Jr. Graphics Advisor/Instructor
David Quint Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Bi-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Opinion/Editorial

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Sexism lives

Michelle Hillman

It seems fair to say that Amherst may be inundated with harassers, sex offenders and rapists. Although Amherst may be no different from any other college town or campus, the number of publicized events that have occurred on this campus and in this area should prompt local officials, administrators and the community to respond to these issues with immediate action and severe penalties.

Men, sex offenders, invisible rapists living side by side with women are practically handed opportunities to act on their desires. How can I say things like this? Since I have attended this University, there has been a rape march against fraternities, the institution fostered by "brothers," and several situations where rape has occurred, including Orchard Hill, Southwest, Pi Kappa Alpha and Sigma Epsilon. These are only a few incidents in which women had the courage to speak against their assailants — who knows how many other cases have gone unreported?

From the time these incidents occurred, the University has taken no direct action to improve safety on campus. Several projects are "in the works," but what does that say to women? Your safety is important, but not at the moment. There have been no new help phones, added escort vans or walking escorts. Also, there are plenty of resources to utilize after a woman has been raped or harassed, but there are no existing preventive measures that the University has pursued rigorously such as increased lighting in dark areas of campus. Only this semester was there a proposal that passed in the SGA to light the "rape trail."

The problem of women's safety extends beyond the University because women realize if they waited for administrators to take measures to protect them, they would be waiting (and have been waiting) a long time. The next available resource would be the police, our friends, our protectors — right? Wrong. The police are just as sexist and apathetic as the administration.

This entire semester I have had the privilege of living above an apartment that has a speaker the length of a full living room wall, feeling the floor vibrate beneath my feet, closet doors rattling and coffee table shaking. The parties involved refused to lower their stereo every night at 2 a.m. or 3 a.m. on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday nights after my roommates or I had politely asked them. At first these beer-guzzling, super senior meat-heads simply responded by saying something to the extend of "why don't you come down and listen to the stereo with us and then it won't bother you?"

The next measure was to report them to the manager of the building, and when that didn't work, the police. After several forms of harassment from these people I can only refer to as scum, including vandalism and verbal assault, it was time to contact the authorities. It only makes sense that when parties or victims make complaints that they be kept confidential. Apparently, the officers who responded to our complaint felt the need to tell our lovely neighbors that we had called, which only further fueled them.

Finally, after one of these "guys" confronted us, he assured us it was a waste of our time to contact the police because they are the biggest joke in our society and, coincidentally, the guys are friends with the officers who responded to the call. This is not the end. My roommate then contacted the Amherst Police Department in utter rage that our safety was not protected but put in danger, and the sergeant responded not by saying that it was unfortunate that something like this had to occur, but in utter denial of the incident. He stated something to the fact that "his officers" would never do something like that. Although I was not talking to him at the time, I could sense my roommate's frustration at his targeting us as the problem of the situation. I began talking in the background and my roommate instructed me that the Sgt. said to tell the girl in the room to "shut her mouth."

Although this situation does not at all equivalent to rape or sexual assault, it confirms the existence of "old school" views of women from the very institutions that are trying to protect them and their rights. Sexual harassment, abuse and rape are some of the biggest problems that exist on this campus. I am left to wonder whether, if men were put in constant danger each and every day on this campus as women are, fluorescent "safety" notecards circulated to residential areas would be satisfactory.

Michelle Hillman is a Collegian columnist.

Notes from the Campus Center Basement

Mike Burke

Question of the Week: What do stupid boys get for being stupid?

***

The W.E.B. Du Bois Library is still erect.

***

Jack Kemp is still alive.

***

If you play with gerbils over winter break please be careful. Matches plus gerbils equals broken noses on fire.

***

How about that basketball team? They might be the only team that does better with the lights out.

***

Date rape during a black-out must be really easy. The frats must have loved it. The basketball team aren't the only ones who can score when the lights go down.

***

Billy Bulger, it was nice to know you — are you still going to visit our campus now that our basketball team sucks?

***

And now for a few holiday gifts for some of our favorite campus celebrities and other notables. Apologies for forgetting you:

For you Billy Boy Bulger: I will buy you a road map of western Massachusetts.

Bruiser Flint: a how-to guide on coaching basketball.

UMass Basketball: early reservations for Motel 6 for the N.I.T. Tournament.

Frat Row: Flashlights for the next black-out. Without the lights–on who knows what (or who) you are doing.

Dining Commons: a replacement to their outdated guide to cooking Grade D meat. I heard Alpo has a tasty cookbook.

Chancellor David K. Scott: a bottle of bubbly and a tape recorder to catch all those wonderfully catchy sound bites.

Amherst College: a big apology from the "UMass mob" to all the "geeks." We don't all want you killed.

President Clinton: a clue.

Governor Weld: a designated driver.

Beavis & Butthead: Patricia McKinnon & Andrea Dworkin

Rethinking Marxist panelists: a very long moment of silence.

Doctress Neutopia: an email connection to God so she can complain directly to the Man.

Spike Lee: a screenplay for Hit By the Bus: The Story of a Millennial Prophet.

Michael Carlson: a new name.

Tom Cruise: a mission to produce a good movie — that might be impossible.

Alternative rock fans everywhere: a life.

Pearl Jam: a giant bowl of jelly to drown in.

The Hemp Lady: reservations in Butterfield Residence Hall.

McDonald's: a thank you note for leaving town.

Pizza Hut: a note hoping you're next.

Mahar Hall: new seats. Is that too much to ask for?

Well let's hope some of these semi-celebrities have better luck in 1997 than 1996. If the UMass basketball team gets any worse we are in for a very long semester. Happy new year.

Mike Burke is a Collegian columnist.

Letters to the Editor

Mea Culpa

To the editor:

On Oct. 22, 1996, the Daily Collegian printed within the "Campus Police Log," information regarding a motor vehicle accident that occurred on campus. The next day, having become aware that the individual named as having received a motor vehicle citation was not correct, the Collegian printed a retraction with the correct information.

However, recently, an editorial appeared in the newspaper criticizing the Collegian for their error in printing this information.

As a result, I would like to reiterate that the information the Collegian received from the Public Safety Daily Log was correct as printed by the newspaper. However, the misidentification of the person receiving the citation was an error in the Public Safety Daily Log.

I would like to apologize to you and the staff of the newspaper for this misprint as well as to the person misidentified. We recognize the importance of issuing timely police logs and the need to insure such information is accurate.

Chief John Luippold
Public Safety

Article shouldn't have been printed

To the editor:

Each day I read the Collegian to catch up on UMass news and to read the opinions of people on certain recent events. On Tuesday, I read an account of a rather infamous night, Saturday, Dec. 7. As I read the account, I was disturbed by the student's pleasure in wreaking havoc and the joy he took in watching the "stupid girl cry." But, what disturbed me more than that was that the Collegian would print this. I was hard-pressed to find any bit of news worthiness or literary value in the story. By printing the piece, you were giving more fame to a group of individuals who sought to hurt other people and damage our campus. In fact, the student who wrote the article, whom I know, was so proud that he taped the article to his door. Basically, by printing this story you did nothing but hurt the University's reputation and give an open forum to a group of immature, riotous students. Maybe next time an event such as this one takes place, you'll realize the stupidity of the individuals and not give them the chance to show it by writing about it in our paper.

William Getty
Southwest

Don't let this upset you too much

Nicole Cournoyer

All right. As you know, it's the last day of classes, winter break is just around the corner and the holiday season is upon us. This is a cheery time of year for most, and I hate to put a damper on that once-a-year joy rosying your cheeks, but I'm going to anyway.

So, what's on my mind? Love, of course.

To put it bluntly, I don't believe there is such a thing as love. Depressed yet? Wait, there's more.

See, the surprising thing is, I am not a hopelessly depressed person who wears black all the time, has no social life and is always one step away of blowing her head off. I don't go around mumbling under my breath, "There is no such thing as love. There is no such thing as love." This realization didn't come to me in my ordinary, everyday thoughts. It came in one of those philosophical, introspective moments that always complicate life.

I simply think that the type of love you see in movies or hear people talk about cannot possibly happen. There is so much psychology involved in people's attraction toward each other. A lot of "love" is a result of selfishness, co-dependence and other non-idealistic, depressing factors. I think that true intimacy is elusive, that romantic feelings eventually fizzle out and that any sort of powerful love-like emotion is impossible to truly achieve — at least for me. When you get down to the nitty-gritty and pick apart the idea of "love," it somehow disintegrates and you're left with nothing to hold on to.

In truth, you can probably say this about any abstract notion, especially emotions. What is emotion after all? Have you ever really concentrated on fully experiencing an emotion as you're feeling it? Have you ever tried to pick it apart, examine what makes it what it is? When I do this, I lose it somehow. Perhaps I'm trying to apply logic to an arena where it doesn't belong. Perhaps you cannot look objectively at something that is, by definition, subjective.

For whatever reason, when I think this way, there no longer seems to be anything there to examine, and I'm left with an emptiness I fear is my core. There is no real emotion then. I feel like I'm in some kind of "Twilight Zone" limbo where what I used to think was reality hovers somewhere on the periphery of my vision, just out of my reach. So, if all that I was experiencing was imagination, rationalization, mirrors and shadows, a delusion, the product of a lonely intellect, then what the hell is real? This hollow shell? Why can't I feel anything? Have I stepped outside of myself? Have I gone too far?

Maybe the world of self-delusion is the only reality we have. Emotion is what makes us human, separates us from fish and lizards. By stepping out of the sphere of emotional experience, we may be denying our essence. Obviously, if we were to remain in this state of mind, removed from ourselves, feeling absolutely nothing, we would not be able to function properly.

It's like if you pondered whether or not everything around you, including your body, existed. You would inevitably come to the conclusion that you could not prove the existence of a single thing outside of your own consciousness. If you decided you wouldn't believe in anything you couldn't prove existed, you would cease to work, play, move, eat or do anything but think because anything else would be interaction with the un-real. You would cease to be a part of the world and wither away, trapped in your own self-centered consciousness.

Likewise, just because, when you're deep in philosophical thought, you discover you cannot feel anything because emotions are too intangible to be given credence, doesn't mean that you can live your life that way. If all this is true, life hardly seems worth living. Instead, you've got to pull yourself out of this state of mind and let your emotions come without disruption, without subjection to your philosophical or psychological microscope.

So, to get back to love, let me try to make my thoughts on it clear and concise. I have never been in love. I don't think I ever will be, or, if I am, I don't think it will last for any extended period of time. But, I know I am also the type of person who thinks too much and too deeply into things and comes up with — yeah, you guessed it — nothing. The prospect that nothingness is all that really exists scares the hell out of me. Presumably, like with all bad moods, I'll eventually get tired of feeling this way and pull myself out of it. I'll get tired of doubting, of thinking that all this is just a sham, a big deception. Eventually, if I let myself believe that love is possible and that I am capable of it, maybe, just maybe, it'll happen. But until then... Skeptic is my middle name.

Nicole Cournoyer is a Collegian columnist.

The true meaning of Christmas

Humphrey brown III

Here it is. The one column you've all been waiting for since Thanksgiving. It's the good ol' "True Meaning Of Christmas" column. And it's being brought to you by someone who once didn't understand what the true meaning of Christmas really was.

We all start out on the same track. You're 9-years-old, it's Christmas Eve and your mother has told you that if you don't get to sleep, Santa will skip over your house and you won't get any presents. So, you run to bed extra early.

You made sure you set out the cookies and milk for Jolly Old Saint Nick and are now lying in your bed, staring at the ceiling. Of course, you're too excited to sleep so a million and one thoughts course through your brain.

You think of what you had asked the funny smelling Santa in the mall for and how many big gifts you saw under the tree. You think about how many times you told Mom, syllable by syllable, the name of the newest Transformer or the latest Barbie fashion.

Finally, as you're thoughts begin to get more and more distorted, you fall asleep and have dreams of sugar plum fairies and pixie dust.

You forgot to tell God goodnight.

With a burst of adrenaline (at 4 a.m.), you jump out of your bed and rush to look under the tree. Amazed are your eyes as you see the soft glow of the Christmas tree lights on all the nicely wrapped gifts.

"Dad, is it okay to open the presents?" you ask your sleeping father who grunts an, "I don't care," and makes you the happiest kid on the block. You know what comes next. By the end of the day, you've eaten till you can't eat anymore and you're room has become cluttered with new toys. Christmas has been good to you.

It's 10 years later and you've reached the age where the excitement you had when you were younger has faded, due to harsh realities.

Someone told you there is no Santa. You notice that Christmas sales start in October. Since you've started watching the news, you find that in certain parts of the world and even the United States, people are still hungry and kids still die on Christmas day.

You get depressed. You feel guilty and you start to feel like you've kind of been missing out on the true meaning of Christmas.

Now comes the time of redemption. You begin to act a little nicer. You tell God goodnight before you hit the sack. You call all the relatives you haven't been in contact with in a while and you tell them how much you love them. You feel good. You've even started to put change in the little Salvation Army buckets that you pass on the street. You've discovered true meaning of Christmas and you're eyes are all a glow once again.

It's now February. You've gotten back in to the daily grind and life has you stressed once again. You've gotten too busy to stop and put money in the buckets. You don't have the time to call your crazy relatives. You're overworked and have bills to pay. On the rare occasions that your head hits the pillow at a decent hour, you're out like a light.

Once again, you've forgotten to tell God goodnight.

What's really happened? For about a month, you were a little nicer, a little more generous and a little closer to God. Now, it isn't Christmas anymore and you've forgotten what the guilt felt like.

In all reality, you really never grasped the true meaning of Christmas. You've only made a mockery of it. Christmas was nothing more to you than an excuse to do good things. Now that it's past, you no longer have that excuse. You never had a clue.

I'm only going to say this once, for the cheap seats:

Christmas is not just a holiday! It's a way of life!

If we continue to pimp Christmas the way we do, our level of decency and humanity will continue to plummet. It's as simple as that. No long speech. No tears. Have a very Merry Christmas and God Bless.

Humphrey brown III is a Collegian columnist.

The joys of holiday shopping

Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.

Is it just me, or do most mall-goers check their brains at the double glass doors before they enter the Halls of Shopping Hell?

If you've ever been to the cultural wasteland that is your local corner mall, you know that it isn't just me.

Even now, in the season of good tidings and joy, a time of giving and sharing, the mall is crawling with little 12-year old gangstas packin' their egg nog-filled Super Soakers waylaying behind a giant Tickle Me Elmo display waiting for the instant you come around the corner to bust a cup in yo' face.

Then there is the mom who has her newborn twins in the 2000 model duplex stroller in front of her, a two-year old in the baby backpack, and her four and five year olds running around the already cluttered mall pretending they're airplanes, more emulating Flight 800 than an F-16. Her husband trails 20 yards behind carrying the 47 different bags that are necessary for proper care of their pride and joys. As proud papa trips over a dropped bottle, the two aircraft head for Victoria's Secret, mommy freaks out, and all three of her precious little bundles of joy start whaling as if Oscar just kicked Big Bird in the teeth.

She's freaking out because there are no Tickle Me Elmos left, not because she's lost two kids and her dearly beloved is being trampled by the stampeding herd of desperate (and suddenly possessed) parents headed for KayBee looking for a Tickle Me Elmo. Little does anyone know.

And then... yeah, there's more. And then there are the Mallrats. No, not Brodie and Silent Bob, they're cool. They are harmless wastes of space, rather than the felonious delinquents that frequent the Taco Bell, and terrorize the Food Court.

The real Mallrats walk in files of eight across the corridor, creating a back-up in mall traffic, and then when they finally decide to stop off in the bathroom and roll a fatty or seven for the fifth time that morning, the throngs of shoppers that built up in their wake bursts like a 13-year old's first zit throughout the mall, gushing into every toy store, software store, pet store, lingerie store, record store, drug store, shoe store, book store... you get the picture.

Then, the reefer-reeking 'Rats come stumbling into the Gap, where you're looking for anything that you can buy for under $50. The dumb-looking one... no, the dumb-looking one with the eyebrow ring... no, the dumb-looking one with the eyebrow ring, tongue ring and tattoo on his forehead, no the other one, yeah... he starts hitting on the blonde in the front of the store. You get repulsed when he proceeds to feel her up, because she's a mannequin.

Then, after the first dumb-looking one tries on 54 pairs of Gap boxers, the 'Rats leave the store, and you settle on a plain white Gap T-shirt that you have to put on your credit card.

The final, and maybe biggest annoyance of going to the mall, are the Mallmice: the teenage girls that seem to flock to any window that says Visa, Mastercard and American Express accepted here.

These little girls are similar to their male counterparts in that they generally travel in large packs with nearly 20 members to a group. They too, migrate to their respective restrooms together, but rarely to toke up. Mostly the young ladies spend eons in front of the wall mirror redoing their make up and bathing in cheap imitation perfume so they can locate each other if one gets dropped from the pack.

When they finally emerge from the bathroom, the little women move slower than a three-legged sloth with a limp, and giggle incessantly about topics as important as the weather in Uruguay next Tuesday.

Finally, there are people like me who are just there to shop, and break the escalator, making everyone use the stairs.

Fred Hurlbrink, Jr. is a Collegian columnist.

Arts & Living

Death Row Brings Christmas to the Ghetto

By Humphrey brown III
Collegian Staff

Are you ready for a little holiday cheer? If you are, then let me tell about the newest Christmas album on the block. That's right, all you G's and playas, it's Christmas On Death Row and it's in stores now.

No, this in not a joke. The same label that brought you such classics as Doggy Style, Murder Was The Case and The Chronic, has put out a Christmas album. It was a shock to everyone, but don't sleep. This album does have its moments.

With all the controversy surrounding Death Row, the last few months, you'd wonder how they could, of all things, release a Christmas album. Apparently, the departure of Dr. Dre, imprisonment of CEO Suge Knight and death of the biggest selling Death Row artist of all time, Tupac Shakur, just wasn't enough to stop the Row from spreading a little holiday cheer.

If you just listened to the first cut and judged the album solely on it, you would return the CD from whence it came. "Santa Clause Goes Straight to the Ghetto" is probably the worst rap cut on the whole album, even though, it was done by the biggest name on Death Row, Snoop Doggy Dogg. The song has good intentions like a lot of the songs on the album, but the production is weak and repetitive.

Luckily for this album, the track immediately following "Santa Goes Straight to the Ghetto" is "Christmas Song," sung by the savior of this album, smooth, soul singer, Danny Boy.

Were it not for Danny Boy, you would definitely have to think twice about even pulling this album out during the holidays. His cover of "Christmas Song" is definitely the best of the six traditional Christmas songs covered on the album and is probably the best cut, period. Danny Boy also shines on "Peaceful Christmas" and "This Christmas." All three cuts let Danny Boy blow (and he can blow) and each song individually captures the Christmas spirit of togetherness and family.

"Silent Night," "White Christmas" and "Have Yourself a Merry Little Christmas" are good enough to play on Christmas morning. Unfortunately, they should have left "Silver Bells," "O Holy Night" and "Frosty the Snowman" alone.

Christmas isn't quite ready for Death Row rap. The only bright spot for rap on this album comes from the track "I Wish," produced by Dat Nigga Daz and performed by The Dogg Pound (Daz and Kurupt "The Kingpin"). "I Wish" captures Christmas, according to The Dogg Pound, while still maintaining The Dogg Pound style and sound. If you're looking for rap, this is as good as it gets.

"Be Thankful," performed by Nate Dogg, comes close but falls short in comparison to his Death Row, partner in song, Danny Boy. Other close, but no mistletoes include, "On This Glorious Day" by 816, "Christmas Everyday" by Guess and "Party For Da Homies" by Sean Barney Thomas, featuring J. Flex. These cuts mean well, but just miss the mark.

COURTESY DEATH ROW RECORDS
A Christmas album uniting many of rap's top artists

Everyone loves Christmas. And it's good to see, if not good to hear, that saying holds true, even on Death Row. Happy Holidays, everyone.

A.L.P. program provides educational student interships

By Jeremy Brothers
Collegian Staff

Although pre-registration is officially finished, students are still thinking about their schedules next semester, and more and more students are looking away from campus to get more than simply credits. "Experience" is becoming key to finding work in the dreaded world after college.

Students don't need to worry, though — there are plenty of ways one can gain practical work experience during the school year. Remember, internships don't have to be far away, nor do they have to suck your summers away. In fact, the Pioneer Valley has some creative opportunities for UMass students.

Eric Sutton, a senior majoring in Spanish with a minor in Latin American relations, is finishing his internship with one of the Hampshire Educational Collaborative's Alternative Learning Programs, (A.L.P.) Sutton spends about 16 hours a week working with the program's special needs students.

"I was working a lot of times one-on-one with students, guiding them through the classes. Helping them with whatever they needed, following lesson plans for the days. I hadn't thought of being a teacher, but when I got there and met some of the Spanish students, I was able to break down some of the lessons in Spanish," Sutton said.

"The interns are an integral part of the program. We rely on them to help out, but it's really a pleasure to have UMass students participate," said Ted McCarthy, the head teacher of the Transitional Alternative Learning Program (T.A.L.P. 3).

Students who intern with the A.L.P. programs are eligible for up to 6 credits, not only lightening up their course load, but giving them the opportunity to connect with local youth.

"Apart from the classwork, I think I was able to give a lot of direction to

Turn to Program, page6

Dre Brings Rap and R&B Together in The Aftermath

By Humphrey brown III
Collegian Staff

When 10 year rap veteran, Dr. Dre left Death Row Records this year, everyone thought he was crazy. Death Row was peaking. With the late Tupac Shakur's All Eyez On Me reaching the quintuple platinum mark and Snoop Doggy Dog's new album, The Dogg Father, on the way, it seemed as if everything was bright and rosy in sunny California.

Little did we know that the man who founded Death Row Records with Suge Knight in 1992 wasn't feeling all too happy with what was going down. Rumors circulated that Dre and Knight were having creative differences on the direction Death Row was going.

Other rumors said that Tupac had a major problem with Dr. Dre during Snoop Dog's murder trial, which Dre conveniently stayed commentless on, and it was Tupac that had Dre forced out of Death Row.

To hear Dre tell it, it was all simply a matter of growing up.

"It took about five months for me to realize this, five months when I happened to be by myself in jail when I really had time to think about what was really important to me. Before then, I just reacted, you know," Dre said in a press release statement.

"I realized it was time to just re-route my entire fuckin' life. I got married and made a lot of changes in the direction I was headed. I decided to start my own company and try something new and different."

Whatever the reasons, Dr. Dre did leave the beloved Death Row and found his own new label, Aftermath Entertainment. Now Dre has a new compilation album, The Aftermath, and is making moves towards proving that Dre is still the man with the master plan.

The strength of this album comes from its versatility. There are eight rap artists and seven R&B movers on this album, making this the most musically diverse piece Dre has ever done.

Co-producing The Aftermath with Dre are Flossy P, Glove, Stu-B-Doo and BUD'DA. This album brings together East and West coast artists to do what both Coasts claim to do best, make music.

The first single release from The Aftermath, "East Coast/West Coast Killas," is definitely the best rap track on the album. Combining four of the best rappers on the block (RBX, KRS-1, NAS and B-REAL) under the common name of Group Therapy, "East Coast/West Coast Killas" puts the beef in the fridge and gets to some real hip hop.

Other prime rap cuts are "Blunt Time" by RBX, "Been There Done That" by Dr. Dre and the surprise hit of the album (as far as rappers go) "L.A.W." by previously unsigned Brooklyn native, Sharief.

Sharief was featured in The Source magazine recently as an unsigned "diamond in the rough." Now, Sharief is signed and working on his debut album. Falling off on the rap tip are veteran rapper King-T, newcomer Nowl and old schooler Mel-Man.

Turn to Dre, page6

COURTESY ALPS PROGRAM

Interning may be just right for you!

Got 10 minutes? File your taxes.

This year, millions will file their tax returns by phone — using TeleFile, a free service from the IRS. The call is easy and refunds are fast. Check your mail for a TeleFile booklet.

1996 TeleFile

Department of the Treasury
Internal Revenue Service
http://www.irs.ustreas.gov

TeleFile
It's free. It's fast. It works.

DON'T GO INTO HIBERNATION ON YOUR WINTER BREAK

Winter Intersession
January 2 - 17

...spend that time earning extra credits at UMass Lowell. If you want to move ahead in your educational program, and earn college credit, enroll in UMass Lowell's Winter Intersession. This highly concentrated session is also a great way to earn transfer credits if you're enrolled in another University. This year, make the most of your winter break... at UMass Lowell

DAY CLASSES:
Monday - Saturday,
9am - 12noon

EVENING CLASSES:
Monday - Friday,
6 - 9pm
Saturday 1 - 4pm

Credit Courses (3 credits) available in:
• Liberal Arts • Sciences
• Mathematics • Computers
• Social Sciences • Music
• Management

Cost: $115.00 per undergraduate credit

For a Winter Intersession Course Bulletin, call the Division of Continuing Education/Office of Enrollment Services at (508) 934-2481.

Or just fill out the coupon and mail it to: University of Massachusetts Lowell, Office of Enrollment Services/DCE, One University Avenue, Lowell, MA 01854-2881.

Name: _____
Address _____
City _____
State _____ Zip _____
Phone ( ) _____
Institution Currently Attending _____

UMass Lowell
UNIVERSITY COLLEGE
Division Of Continuing Education

[cranial] COLLISION
From NYC

MR. KLEEN • YOUNG COWBOY • LOTUS • LAU'd BROS. • JUSH • AARON S.

LIV DJs SPINNIN'
jungle - house - techno - hip hop - tribal
CASH BAR! (21 + ID)

$6
all ages

FRIDAY DECEMBER 13th 1996
Campus Center Auditorium
UMASS 7pm - 2am
Tickets available at TIX Unlimited
Student Union, 545-0412

DOMINO'S PIZZA

CHEESE PIZZA SALE

$4.99 MEDIUM CHEESE PIZZA TOPPINGS $1 EXTRA LIMIT 10 AT A TIME

$6.99 LARGE CHEESE PIZZA TOPPINGS $1.25 EXTRA LIMIT 10 AT A TIME

$8.99 EXTRA LARGE CHEESE TOPPINGS $1.50 EXTRA LIMIT 10 AT A TIME

DOMINO'S PIZZA
AMHERST 256-8911
OPEN TILL 4AM

Expires 12/30/96
NOT GOOD WITH ANY OTHER SPECIAL

New book explores lesbian correspondence

By Lisa M. Oliveri
Collegian Staff

KAY TURNER
Between Us: A Legacy of Lesbian Love letters
Chronicle Books

Letters are as meaningful to our society as much today as they have been in the past. Sometimes letters are the only way one can express innermost thoughts and feelings. Words are often the most powerful form of communication, and through letter-writing, some of our most prominent authors such as Virginia Woolf, Gertrude Stein and Radclyffe Hall show different sides to their personalities. Without letters, an integral part of communication falls apart.

Kay Turner explores different facets of letter writing in her new book, Between Us: A Legacy of Lesbian Love Letters.

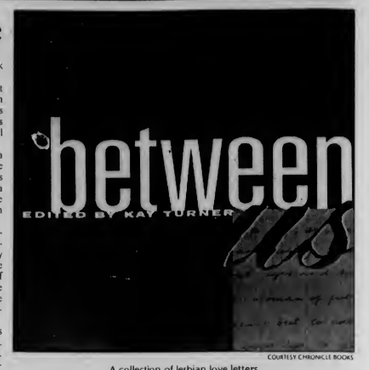
It's hard to not get enraptured in this book — the way it's presented draws the reader in, at first for the colorful packaging and then by its content. The letters included in this collection are both sad and loving, hurtful and frolicking.

Much like Leslea Newman's My Lover is a Woman — a collection of poetry by and about lesbians — Turner has compiled a assortment of letters, poems and anecdotes written by women to their lovers. Including both break-up letters and declarations of love, Turner presents lesbianism in not only a social and sexual context, but also with a historical perspective. Letters from famous women such as Emily Dickinson mesh wonderfully with the contributions from ordinary women, giving this book a sensual, yet comforting feel.

One of the most striking letters was written by Dickinson to Susan Gilbert, a women to whom she remained devoted, even after her marriage to Dickinson's brother. She pines for her with such eloquent words as, "I think of love, and you, and my heart grows full and warm, and my breath stands still. The sun doesn't shine at all, but I can feel a sunshine stealing into my soul and making it all summer, and every thorn, a rose."

But not all of the letters are so sweet, some utilize very brash and abrasive language. Tatiana writes to Gloria: "I believed in our dreams of sharing a life together. Feeling tiny in my king-sized bed, I made a space that waited for you, I wore your ugly knotted gold earring like a trophy. I HATE YOU FOR MAKING ME LOSE FAITH IN LOVE."

The letters encompass may different styles and textures of writing. Often the letters are very cryptic, and many of the writers use metaphors for their love for one another; perhaps in part because they were afraid of admitting or having their sexuality discovered.



Interspersed throughout the book are pictures, drawings and paintings, as well as original artwork by Turner and Sheri Tornatore.

This feature adds an originality that isn't present in many conventional books. It shows an even more personal side to the authors, and accentuates the already poignant words. Much of the artwork is quirky and loving, and some is very serious, but all of it completes the ornate packaging.

One of the more creative pictures accompanies a 1976 letter to Beth Levine, written by Debbie Friedman, and includes them both. What makes this interesting is the way the two have meshed a modern day picture of themselves with Gustave Courbet's painting Women Asleep, creating an innovative collage.

Whether lesbian or not, these letters are both titillating and exciting to read. They demonstrate passion and love with such grace, bringing to life many of these women's emotions and fantasies. With the drawings and pictures, it is easy to envision one of the writer's actually composing her letter, and the personal nature of the writing really adds a nice touch. One gains a deep understanding of the writers upon completion.

Between Us: A Legacy of Lesbian Love Letters is a unique book that should not go unnoticed. Turner's two years of research has clearly paid off. For pleasure reading on a cold night by the fireplace with your special someone, Between Us is a great choice.

COURTESY CHRONICLE BOOKS

A collection of lesbian love letters

■ Program

continued from page 5

the students there. I could relate to a lot of the students. I was definitely there as a role model," Sutton said.

Aside from needing the intern's assistance for day-to-day activities, the A.L.P. programs often look to the interns for future staff — a real plus for those students who are considering staying in the area after graduation, but have no definite job plans.

"I think I realized that teaching is not an easy job, and in order for the students to learn, you have to be patient. You also have to be disciplined. This internship definitely helped me with that. After spending a couple of hours with these students you're on their level, when you do get there, you realize that what you say in this classroom, the guidance that you give them, can set the pace in their lives, they get to see what you're saying, they might even see the importance of an education," Sutton said.

"Interns are able to teach the students in a one-to-one setting. They really get a feel for what it is like to teach in a classroom and help students in their academic work. The interns bring a new perspective to the classroom and the students find that refreshing," McCarthy said.

"If you're planning on pursuing a career in education, then you should definitely think about taking advantage of the A.L.P. programs, it's hands-on experience that gives you a sense of what to expect when you teach in a real school," Sutton added.

For more information on internships in the Valley next semester, call the Mather Career Center at 545-6265. T.A.L.P. 3 is also looking for interns — call Ted McCarthy at 549-2822.

■ Dre

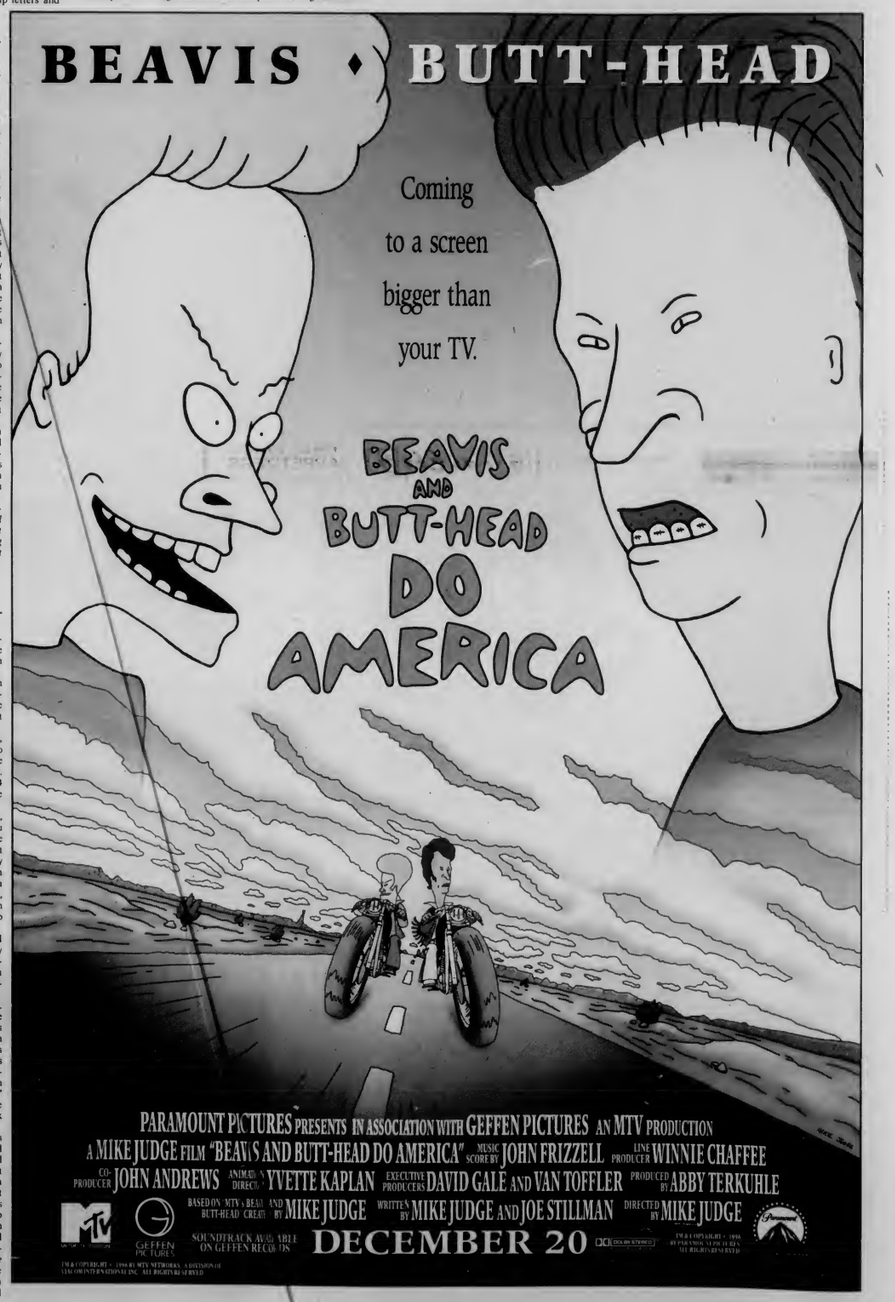
continued from page 5

The R&B cuts range from repetitive to hit makers. The definite stand outs are newcomers Kim Summerson and Jheryl Lockhart.

Summerson is lovely on "Choices," a soulful cut that samples the Isaac Hayes classic, "The Look of Love." Summerson does it justice and represents nicely.



Jheryl Lockhart will, no doubt, bring a lot of record sales to Aftermath Entertainment. His voice is nice and his song writing is fresh. He comes off great on the cut "Do 4 Love." Expect to see a lot more from him soon.

The female group, Hands On, represents on the harmony tip. You would think that with all the female singing groups that are out now-a-days, there wouldn't be any room for any more, but Hands On is surprisingly nice. The trio has a fresh combination of street charm, class and romance. They have an old school R&B sound laid over hip hop tracks.

Never heard that one before, I know, but these ladies are actually good. "Got Me Open," their contribution to the album, will have you wanting to hear more from this sultry trio.

RC, aka Ruben Cruz, is an L.A. native that has been making a name for himself on the West Coast. He's the only artist that appears twice on the album. On "Sexy Dance," RC is bringing hard on the sexual tip. This is the better of the two. On the second cut, "Fame," you wouldn't even believe it was the same guy. "Fame" is a poor take on the David Bowie classic by the same name. Don't ask why.

All in all, The Aftermath reasserts that Dr. Dre is still the best record producer on the West Coast and may be, pound for pound, the best in the business — period. Such a claim is definitely debatable, but you can't deny the facts. Dre has probably developed more hip-hop artist than any other producer in history. If you count the record sales of all the albums Dre has produced and had a hand in (i.e. The Chronic, Doggie Style, etc.) those sales add up to about 20 million copies. Damn the doctor; just call him "the man."

Learning the art of layering

Drink a lot and learn how to layer before lacing up your ice skates, hitting the ski slopes or taking a trek across campus. The art of layering clothing and drinking the right amount of fluids are vital winter strategies against the nordic winds that whip through the University of Massachusetts campus.

Don't let sunny winter days fool you, the weather is still frightful and can be very harmful to your health. New England winters are known for their severity and many often become victims to extreme temperature variations and fierce wind speed.

The combinations of wind and low temperatures produces what is known as "wind chill." The effect of wind chill should not be taken lightly and can be life threatening. A temperature of 0 degrees Fahrenheit and a 15 mph. wind speed can cause the skin to freeze in a matter of minutes. If clothing is wet, the negative effect of wind and temperature can be greater.

Layering is the art of wearing non-cotton clothing which does not hold moisture and can be adapted to change in the weather and level of activity. A typical layered clothing system consists of a layer of long underwear which transports moisture away from the skin, an insulating layer of synthetic pile or wool and an exterior layer of an insulated wind/water proof parka/ski jacket.

Polypropylene is a very popular synthetic pile and is found in long underwear, turtle necks, socks, gloves and tee-shirts. Polypropylene provides the body excellent insulation — it's not itchy or allergenic and efficiently winks sweat away.

When layering, clothing should not be skin tight. Loose garments maintain a layer of insulating air between the clothes and the skin. Clothing that is tight against the skin may be warm, but once it is wet, the fabric will wick the heat away.

Wearing a hat that completely covers the top of your head is crucial to protect your body from heat loss. Dry and warm socks, mitts or gloves are vital in order to protect your hands and feet from frost bite. Once again, the most efficient way to protect your head, hands and feet is with polypropylene fabric.

It is also very important to maintain your energy before going out into the cold with fluids and foods that are high in calories. Winter activity significantly increase the body's need for caloric and fluid intake, however the cold often diminishes the body's desire to eat or drink. If you plan to participate in any strenuous winter activities, be sure to consume at least 5000 calories and four quarts of water during the day of the activity.

Frost bite and hypothermia are two silent but dangerous conditions that can occur if you are not properly dressed or low in energy. Hypothermia happens when your body's core temperature drops and is unable to warm itself again.

This condition can be avoided if you stay warm and dry, drink plenty of fluids and don't get unduly fatigued. Symptoms of hypothermia include shivering, slurred speech, loss of coordination, confusion, apathy and irrational behavior.

Frost bite is the actual freezing of the skin and underlying tissue. It appears in white waxy blotches and the skin feels firm to touch. Immediate treatment of frost bite is imperative. Rewarm the affected area with a warm hand. Do not rub the frost bite because it leads to serious tissue damage.

Don't chance getting hypothermia, frostbite or the flu during the most important week of the semester. When you go outside dress accordingly and protect yourself from Mother Nature's winter elements.

Liz Anderson is a Collegian columnist.

Alfresco News with Liz Anderson

Oscar buzz points out hopefuls for honor

By Lynn Elber
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Picture Madonna striking this pose: gracefully accepting the best actress Oscar for Evita come March.

The prospect may be enough to send the pop icon's fans into a frenzy, but they're best advised to restrain their enthusiasm.

While Madonna is getting a modest share of Oscar buzz, she's got serious competition.

A host of critically acclaimed films, many featuring juicy performances from veteran actresses, are vying for Academy Award nominations. Ballots go out Jan. 8, with the nominations to be announced Feb. 11.

Academy voters have a rich field to consider, including likely best picture contenders Shine, The English Patient and The Crucible.

Here, culled from rampant industry speculation, is a list of leading contenders and less-certain hopefuls for nominations in top categories:

BEST PICTURE:
Breaking the Waves, The Crucible, The English Patient, The People vs. Larry Flynt, Shine.

Hopefuls: Big Night, Evita, Fargo, Ghosts of Mississippi, Jerry Maguire, Lone Star, William Shakespeare's Romeo & Juliet, Secrets and Lies, Trainspotting.

BEST ACTOR:
Daniel Day-Lewis, The Crucible; Ralph Fiennes, The English Patient; Liam Neeson, Michael Collins; Ron Rifkin, Substance of Fire; Geoffrey Rush, Shine.

BEST ACTRESS:
Frances McDormand, Fargo; Debbie Reynolds, Mother; Winona Ryder, The Crucible; Gena Rowlands, Unhook the Stars; Kristin Scott Thomas, The English Patient.

■ hoop

continued from page 12

after Christmas when they hop the ferry to enter the Wagner Christmas Tournament on Dec. 28-29 on Staten Island in New York. UMass will face the host Wagner Seahawks in the first round, while Colgate will tip-off with New Hampshire in the other bracket.

The New Year brings on the Atlantic 10 schedule for the Minutewomen as they host Rhode Island on Jan. 4 to open the conference slate. UMass finished second to the Lady Rams in the A-10 East last season. Senior forward Tasha King leads the Rhody contingent after recording 17.4 ppg last season.

After another couple of days off, the Minutewomen will take to the road to run with the A-10's other Rams, Fordham, and then they travel to rustic Olean, N.Y. to take on an equally lowly St. Bonaventure team.

On Jan. 16, the La Salle women will be exploring the Pioneer Valley as the Minutewomen enjoy an extended one- game homestand. The Explorers had an excellent season last year in the A-10 West, finishing second in the league.

The Minutewomen take to the road twice more over the educational intermission. They will head to Pittsburgh to take on the Lady Dukes of Duquesne on Jan. 18, and then down to Kingston, R.I. to go against the Lady Rams on Jan. 21.

UMass concludes its break with a two-game homestand against teams at opposite ends of the women's hoop spectrum. They host powerful St. Joseph's on Jan. 23, and then the anemic Temple Owls on Jan. 25 before the UMass community reconvenes on Jan. 28.

SPORTS... Live it, Breathe it, Eat it, Snort it!

■ hockey

continued from page 12

was the team's handling of it, and how the Minutemen would use that experience to their advantage.

"Well, even though we went 1-6 in the first seven games, and knowing the type of competition we played, I really wasn't discouraged," Mallen said. "I thought we could have a great season, because we had a good team.

"In these last seven games, we have proved that thinking correct, but I still think we have a long way to go, and a lot to improve on. There's a saying that you can't get too high with the highs, and too low with the lows, it's a long year."

Princeton has had a nice start to the season, with its 7-2-2 overall record and 6-2-1 record in the ECAC, a testament to that fact. The Tiger offense has been led by Scott Bertoli, topping their scoring leaders with 14 points (6 goals, 8 assists). Jason Given and Jean Verdon are right behind him, tallying nine points apiece. Goaltenders Erasmo Saltarelli and Nick Rankin have been spent equal time in net, but Rankin has had the success of the two with a 4-1 record, with a 2.25 GAA and a .928 save percentage.

Dartmouth (4-3, 2-3 in ECAC) has only played seven games this season, but one of its wins was its biggest in recent school history. Last Nov. 22, the Big Green beat up on No. 10 Vermont big-time, defeating the Catamounts by a 4-1 score at home. Forward David Whitworth led the team with two goals in that game, and also leads the team in scoring with nine points (4g, 5a). Freshman Jason Wong has stepped into the net admirably in his first season, posting a 3-1 record on a 2.46 GAA and a .904 save percentage.

"The thing that concerns me is for us to play with the same intensity we played against Providence against Princeton and Dartmouth," Mallen said. "If we can play with the level of intensity, we can play against anybody.

"One of the things is with their forwards, and with both teams, their forwards are very fast. We need to slow their forwards down, and work against their defense and get some good scoring opportunities. It seems like right now, though, the difference is about containment."

The forwards for UMass have stepped up to another level, with Rob Bonneau (9g, 13a, 22pts) and Warren Norris (8g, 10a, 18pts) atop the scoring list. Sophomore Steve MacKinnon has enjoyed his promotion to the first line with Bonneau and Norris seven games ago, racking up 11 points (5g, 6a) in that span. But this week, the forward of note for the Minutemen has been one who has not spent a minute on ice for the team this season.

Tim Lovell, a transfer from the University of Maine, has been officially redshirted for the 1996-97 season. Along with former Black Bears Jeff Tory and Blair Allison, Lovell left the Maine after the NCAA placed postseason sanctions from its investigation of coach Shawn Walsh and his program.

Last year for the Black Bears, Lovell was a preseason and postseason All-Hockey East selection, and a member of the U.S. Select team with fellow Minuteman Brad Norton that played in the Tampere Cup in Finland. In a 115 game collegiate career, Lovell has amassed 108 points, 51 of them as goals.

Due to NCAA regulations concerning transfers and academic credits, he could have donned a UMass jersey after the 1st of January. But, he would have only been allowed to play the second half of this season.

With Lovell's decision, he can now join the team next season for the full campaign. This will be a more than adequate resource for the Minutemen to rely on, because they will lose two of their top forwards in Bonneau and Norris to graduation.

For Lovell, it all came down to two things with his decision, school and the game.

"It was a tough decision for me, but I think I've made the right one," Lovell said. "Playing next season will give me a chance to complete my degree, which has always been one of my primary goals."

Mallen would have been more than happy with either choice Lovell made, but this choice will only help both the team and the star transfer in the end.

"The key is that I think he enjoys what's going on here, and sees that the program is moving forward," Mallen said. "I think it's in his best interest to pursue the academic side, and get a degree here, as well as help our program move forward. Right now, it would be great for him to come on board and help us out with the positive momentum we have.

"But in the long run, the best thing for Tim Lovell and UMass is to have him play one full year, as opposed to a half a year. Next year, there's no doubt in my mind that he would be a preseason All-Hockey East favorite, All-American candidate and even to the extent where if he had a good year, he would be in the hunt as a Hobey Baker candidate."

Minuteman Notes: With his three assists in last weekend's games against Providence, Bonneau (76 career assists) has now surpassed Pat Keenan's career assist mark of 75... senior co-captain Tom Perry is expected back in the UMass lineup on Jan. 6 versus Boston College. Perry has missed the last four games with a broken left wrist... junior defenseman Mike Gaffney has been on a hot streak himself in the last seven games. The St. John's (Shrewsbury) product has tallied nine points (3g, 6a) in that time, after 11 points in his first two seasons... after this weekend's games with Princeton and Dartmouth, and the RPI Invitational on Dec. 27-28, UMass will move back into it's HE schedule for Wintersession. The Minutemen will see their first action against the Eagles of Boston College (Jan. 6 and Jan. 24) and the Huskies of Northeastern (Jan. 17, 18 and 25). The HE rubber game against Providence on Jan. 11th. Only the Jan. 17th game versus Northeastern will be at the Mullins Center, with the Jan. 14 game versus ECAC opponent Yale also being played at home... at 4-6 in the HE, UMass now stands in sixth place, one point out of a tie for fourth place.

AMERICAN CREW
Quality Grooming Products For Men
Regency Hairstylist
189 N. Pleasant St.
253-9526
We Use and Recommend the Best in Men's Haircare.

We Deliver
Kai Chi
To UMass
Chinese-American Cuisine Restaurant & Bar
Mt. Farms Mall, Rt. 9 Hadley • 586-2774
Open Sun-Thurs 12-11 pm
Fri-Sat 12-3 am
Enjoy HALF PRICE APPETIZERS
9 pm - Close • 7 Days a Week
Many Selections!
Example: Pu Pu (for 2) Reg. $11.99 Now $5.99
No other promos apply • EAT IN ONLY

Aerobic Instructor
Training & Certification
548-8807

Jobs! Jobs! Jobs! Jobs!
GREAT INTERSESSION JOBS
Johnson & Hill Staffing Services will be interviewing at The Campus Center Rm. 811/815
Friday, Dec. 13th 12:00 - 4:00 pm
Temporary Positions pay between $6 - $8/HR.
Phone Work or Light Industrial Openings
Stop by or call
Johnson & Hill Staffing Services
Springfield (413) 746-3535
Northampton (413) 586-6609

UMass Student Legal Services Office
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995
CALL TODAY!
922 CAMPUS CENTER

Great Gifts
Bags Stocking Stuffers Hats
Jewelry Natural Fiber Scarves
Blouses Skirts Dresses
Earrings Rings Bracelets Chains Sweaters Toys India Print Bedspreads Candles
Gloves Mugs Merry X'mas Cards Socks Leather Sole Chinese Shoes Dresses
Sale 20 to 50% off selected Clothing
The Mercantile
Weeknights 9PM, Dec. 5 - 22
Sun 12-5 Daily 10-6
Northampton-18 Center St.
Amherst-Carriage Shops

Party Time.

ZAMA
downtown Amherst

COMPUTER FAIR
Tri-State Fairs: Original Area Shows since 1987
Buy at wholesale prices directly at the show from nearly 50 independent competing companies under one roof. From full systems to shareware, it's all here
MULLINS CENTER
Located on the campus of UMass. Rte 9 onto Rte 116N at Staples taking first exit, turn right
DEC 14
This is a discount ticket. General admission is $7.00 each. Clip or photocopy this ad and save $2.00 ea- Student I.D. only $2 ea admission
10AM-4:00PM
Our dealers feature the IBM/PC marketplace. Join us four times a year. Kids under 10 free with parent
Don't over sleep, one day show only!
ONE MONTH FREE INTERNET AT THIS SHOW FROM TIAC

Tri-State Fairs Computer Shows
WHAT DO YOU MEAN THEY'RE NOT COMPATIBLE?!
WHY DON'T THEY JUST DO WHAT THE REST OF THE INDUSTRY DOES?!
WHAT DOES THAT MEAN?

■ horn

continued from page 12

in Reggie Freeman and Kris Clack.

Nobody thinks of the Horns as a basketball school because they're so good at football (or at least they used to be), but watch out. Texas will be nasty come tournament time.

• You can't guard me, the Secret Service couldn't guard me! (Once again, I apologize)

• I realize he's a punk, he talks too much, he shoots too much, and his concept of an "assist" is to make a pass at the Sixers ball girls, but I have to give it up for Allen Iverson.

He brings instant excitement to the league. Seriously, if you have to watch the Sixers play, who else you gonna watch? He brings an aura to the court that makes you watch him, just to see what he'll do next. A sick cross-over, an endless amount of speed and a complete and utter lack of respect for his elders is something to admire. So, Allen, you are the man. Go on with your bad self!

• NFL? I still like Green Bay to go all the way. Why? Because they learned last year about how to win in the playoffs, and with the Cowboys coming to Lambeau this time out, (and they will, mark my words) the G-men will be ready to make that final push from almost to champs.

My pick in the AFC? Does it really matter? I just hope the Broncos choke before they get to the Super Bowl so my boy John Elway doesn't have to lose again.

• Hey Tyra, you !eft your toothbrush at my house (I just can't help it).

• Hey, what's the deal with the Sacramento Kings? You're good, you're bad, you're good, you're bad, pick a level of play and stick with it!

• You know, kids, BYU got screwed by the bowl alliance. I mean screwed. They deserve to be in the Fiesta Bowl, not Penn St. They deserve to be in the Orange Bowl, not Nebraska. Since when were two losses better than one?

• Hey, the Mets raised ticket prices for 1997. That makes sense. I mean, a crappy team should have crappy prices, right? It really doesn't matter, though, because it's just New York, and we all know the whole city's crap, right? I really hope George Steinbrenner dies this holiday season.

Okay, that was a bit much.

• P.S. You can't be having anymore pool parties. You can have regular parties, but look at this, the filter's messed up... Yeah little Penny!

Luke Meredith is a Collegian columnist.

Merry Christmas from the Collegian Sports Desk!!!

Massachusetts 69, Drexel 48

MASSACHUSETTS (3-4)

Babul 2-3 0-2 4, Basit 3-6 2-3 8, Kenner 5-9 3-4 13, Clarke 5-10 7-8 17, Travieso 4-13 2-4 11, Burns 0-0 0-0 0, Padilla 3-9 1-2 9, Maclay 0-1 2-2 2, Smith 0-4 0-0 0, Kirkland 1-1 0-0 2, Norville 1-4 1-2 3 Totals 24-60 18-27 69

DREXEL (3-2)

Myers 5-16 0-0 12, Giuttar 2-8 4-5 9, Linderman 5-11 1-7 11, Coursey 2-6 3-6 8, DeRocckus 1-11 6-6 8, Caffrey 0-0 0-0 0, Neuler 0-2 0-0 0, Dearborn 0-1 0-0 0, Frey 0-0 0-0 0, Yoder 0-0 0-0 0 Totals 15-55 14-24 48

Halftime — Massachusetts 27, Drexel 21

3-Point goals — Massachusetts 3-10 (Travieso 1-4, Padilla 2-4, Clarke 0-2), Drexel 4-24 (Myers 2-8, Giuttar 1-6, Coursey 1-2, DeRocckus 0-7, Dearborn 0-1)

Fouled out — Drexel (Linderman)

Rebounds — Massachusetts 52 (Basit 11), Drexel 37 (Myers-Linderman, DeRocckus 6)

Attendance — 9,493

Player of the Game

Charlton Clarke
17 point
7-8 free throws

Santa: sport me some wishes!

Jonathan M. Place

The time has come for my first–ever annual "Christmas List and New Year Resolutions." It has taken me a long time to conjure up the spirits to guide me along my way in choosing this year's worthy recipients.

The Christmas List

For Christmas, let's be as selfish as we possibly can. I'm going to go out on a limb, and ask ol' Kris Kringle to make the Elvis–impersonating New England Patriots strong enough to carry their season to Jan. 26.

All the big guy has to do is make it so that Drew Bledsoe tosses no interceptions and Curtis Martin runs over 100 yards in each game for the rest of the season. Don't tell me he can't do it. If he can fit his overflowing ass down a chimney, he sure enough can fit a slim, toned Curtis Martin between the tackles.

And even though he's hurt, make it so that Sam Gash gets voted into the Pro Bowl as starting fullback. He deserves it.

• All right, that's two down. Next off, let's get off the grid iron, and step onto the ice rink. How about 20 games without a loss for the Boston Bruins. Hey, I'll throw in some extra cookies for you, Santa.

I'll even give Rudy a whole bag of carrots, and a copy of PlayDeer to share with the rest of the reindeer. They don't have to win every game, give them a tie, give them a few, just don't let a number fall in column two.

For a finishing touch, put a little extra spit on the snowball, to make it so that the B's don't make it to the playoffs. Have their record half right at the number nine spot, at the end of the regular season. Sorry boys, that may be the only way that Kasper will get fired, and that drunk, Harry Sinden will realize something is wrong with the Bruins organization that he has constructed.

• Finally, (and this should really piss the sports staff off) I would like you to whisper into the ears of the sports editors, Casey Kane, and Chris Stamm, while they're dreaming of sugarplums during the winter break, to allow me to get my golf column.

It may pain them to let me have it, but for reasons they will not understand or will ever fathom, they will allow me to write about Tiger Woods, and the rest of the PGA gang. Both of them will go home at night and cry themselves to sleep about caving in, but a weird sensation, as if they have done something for the good of humanity, will come over their bodies. And that will be thanks to you, Claus, because you can do things like that.

Now for the New Year Resolutions

Here are four resolutions for 1997, in regards to Collegian sports.

1. I promise for the good of the Collegian, and to save Luke Meredith's eyes, to stop using the word 'as' in every paragraph I write as long as... oops!

2. I will try to make the community of UMass understand the importance of men's swimming and diving. From columns, features and game stories, I will create something quite new and special that people, other than the ones wearing the Speedos, can enjoy.

3. I promise, and I mean this, to wipe the world clean of the New York Yankees organization. The Red Sox will prevail, and the pinstripe wonders will find themselves in the basement. Long live Fred Hulbrink, Jr. He is truly the Mayor! He'll kick Mayor Giuliani's butt any day.

4. And finally, (thank God) I promise to start an NBA column for the sports department. Even though it pains me to say it, I will watch and read up on those parquee–running freaks, making over $100 million.

That way, all the shiny, happy people on campus who enjoy hoop will love me, even though I will tear apart their favorite sport in the general public's eye. Hey! At least there will be a column.

So that's that. We needed to fill space, and I came up with the first annual "Jonathan M. Place's Christmas List and New Year Resolutions." Know what I mean, Nudge!, Nudge!

Good luck to the Patriots, I know they will make us proud. Isn't it ironic that the one year the Patriots have a chance to make a run for the big show, that the rest of our season sucks.

Well, the Red Sox don't suck, but they have a lot of work to do before they have a chance at their own big show. I don't believe I need to address the Celtics.

And as far as my boyz skating in FleetCenter, I'm behind you all the way, even though you are just a bunch of goons. Keep up the defense, and pray Harry Sinden gets his head smashed by one of the many whiskey bottles stashed in the bottom right hand drawer of his desk.

Whatever the hell I've been talking about, enjoy your eggnog, whatever might be added to it, don't sneak a peek at your presents, give lovin' to everyone you know and care about, because 1996 was a grand year.

Season's Greetings from the golf man.

Jonathan M. Place is a Collegian staff member.

COMES SEE THE HANDIWORK OF SATANBOY THE WEBMASTER ON OUR WEBSITE: HTTP://WWW.UMASS.EDU/RSO/COLEGIAN

Fair–weather fans damper UMass spirit

Chris Stamm

Last week, the William D. Mullins Center was sent into darkness because of snow.

This week, the Mullins Center forecast calls for increasing fair–weather fans.

While on paper the attendance of last night's men's basketball game against Drexel was posted as a sell–out 9,439, the only sell–outs were the students.

As a junior, I have been to every home hoop game while classes are in session with the exception of last year's game against UNC– Wilmington ('nough said) and last night's crowd was the worst I've ever seen.

Last season, everywhere you went you could hear students complaining about the number of non–students in the Mullins Center. Where are you guys now?

While, with 10 minutes before tip off there were still front row seats to be had on the student's side of the arena, the "other side" was packed from top to bottom. The endzones? The only maroon I saw came from all the empty cushioned seat backs.

Since its opening in 1993, the opponents from around the nation have dreaded playing in Mullins.

The fans are usually loud, usually relentless, and usually packed from floor to ceiling. Anyone who has been to a Temple or George Washington game knows how loud and chaotic the place can be. Last night, and for the past two home games, things have been different.

Here's an indicator of how lack–luster last night's crowd was.

In the post game press conference, Drexel coach Bill Herrion remarked, "If there was ever a time Drexel University could beat UMass, [last night] was the night.

It wasn't a full house, I came out and said, this is great, 4,000 people. I like this."

Hello! This game was in our back yard! Do we really want opposing coaches to like playing in Mullins?

Granted the Minutemen have taken their lumps early, and may even be a little ugly at times, but what do you expect?

With the exception of Tyrone Weeks, who is sidelined with an ankle injury, the squad's frontcourt is gone. While their replacements are a talented and hard–working squad, they have only played seven games together.

To their credit, those fans in attendance last night were into the game and got to see some solid basketball. Where was everybody else?

I know that finals are approaching, but there are some things that are important to a university, school spirit is one of them. In the past, UMass has had to fight to pull the spotlight from the large number of schools in Boston, and the men's basketball team has led the way in gaining recognition for our school.

Our school lacks tradition as it is, we do not want to blow off what little of it we have. Besides, the coaches and players work too hard for that.

It is one thing to come and scream your brains out when your team is No. 1 and bound for the Final Four. I think it's a pretty sad commentary when those same fans were nowhere to be found the night UMass' Final Four banner was unveiled.

Chris Stamm is a Collegian columnist.

THE UNIVERSITY STORE

YOUR HOLIDAY GIFT HEADQUARTERS

❖Clothing ❖Books ❖Art Supplies ❖Gifts ❖Imprinted Gifts and Much More

SPECIAL SAVINGS THROUGHOUT THE STORE

Open Saturday 10am to 5pm for your shopping convenience

UNIVERSITY STORE

Campus Center
545-2619

Hours
M-F 9am-5pm
Sat 10am-5pm

■ preview

continued from page 12

Duncan and Co. last year, 64–46.

For UMass (3–4) Wake poses a formidable challenge. The Minutemen are without All–America center Marcus Camby, a cog in the line–up that dominated the Demon Deacons last year; and UMass has struggled out of the gates in coach James "Bruiser" Flint's first season.

While Duncan toils in the spotlight, he is not by any measure the sole offensive threat the Demon Deacons have. A talented crop of upperclassmen lead Wake, as seniors Allen and Ricky Peral and juniors Tony Rutland, Steven Goolsby and Jerry Braswell all lend a hand.

Rutland is a major factor in what success this year's Wake team will have. Last year he led the Deacons in steals and assists and was second in scoring, but the guard tore his ACL in last year's ACC Championship against Georgia Tech and had to have reconstructive surgery this spring.

• • •

After a tough battle with the Deacons, UMass gets a break right? Of course not. On Dec. 20, the Minutemen travel to to the Meadowlands where they will face nationally–ranked North Carolina in the Jimmy V. Classic.

Two days after the Minutemen mix it in the Meadowlands, they'll face the Tar Heels' little brothers UNC–Wilmington. This game is the second contest between the two schools that was arranged by former UMass coach John Calipari.

New England hoop fans finally get what they wanted for Christmas on Dec. 27, when the Minutemen face the Huskies of Connecticut in the Hartford Civic Center for the inaugural "U" Game.

The Minutemen return home after the New Year, to host Davidson on Jan. 2, as a prelude to the Atlantic 10 Conference schedule.

The A–10 season starts with a visit from St. Joe's on Jan. 5 at 2 p.m. UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint and UMass assistant Geoff Arnold's alma mater took UMass to overtime twice last season, before falling victim to the Minutemen both times.

After St. Joe's, the Minutemen visit Philly on Jan. 8, where they will square off against La Salle in the CoreStates Spectrum.

Ace Custis and Virginia Tech come calling on Jan. 12, in what will be Hokie coach Bill Foster's first and last visit to the Mullins Center (Foster will retire at season's end).

The Minutemen travel to Olean, N.Y., the site of Marcus Camby's collapse last year, to face off with St. Bonaventure on Jan. 14.

The second installment of the Commonwealth Classic will see UMass mix it up with intrastate rival Boston College at FleetCenter on Jan. 18.

On Jan. 21, last year's A–10 Rookie of the Year Antonio Reynolds brings his Rhode Island team into the Mullins Center.

UMass' last Wintersession tilt sees the Minutemen travel to Philly to face long–time rival Temple in McGonigle Hall on Jan. 25.

■ Minutemen

continued from page 12

But before Basit could start on his offensive output, he faced a spell on the bench.

With 17:40 left in the first half Basit was charged with a technical foul and he didn't sub back in until there were just over four minutes left before halftime.

"I had to sit out for a long, long time," Basit said. "Sometimes I play with too much emotion and I get carried away, that's what they told me in high school.

"But ain't nobody else going to help me play well but me, so I just have to go out there and play as hard as I can play."

While UMass did receive energetic play from its starters, Inus Norville's appearance on the floor off the bench sparked the Minutemen in the first half.

The junior big man did his work under the glass for UMass, as he grabbed seven rebounds, four on the offensive end. Hustling at both ends of the court, he also added three points to the UMass cause.

"One person who I thought came in and turned the tempo of the game around was Inus Norville.

He had a couple blocks, he got some rebounds and he got us going there when we were down early," Flint said.

With 1:41 remaining in the first half, Norville grabbed the ball under the basket, and put up two tries before finally coming away with an off–kilter basket to put UMass up by three, 24–21.

Flint also got players in the form of his senior guard tandem. After not starting point guard Edgar Padilla, both halves of the duo stepped up, as Travieso fired off 11 points and Padilla nine. Padilla also dished out eight assists and Travieso had three thefts.

The highlight, at least for many of the fans, was the pair's play early in the second half.

Just 58 seconds into the second frame Travieso hit a 3–pointer to increase UMass' lead to eight points, 32–24.

A minute and a half later Padilla hit his first three of the night, and followed with his second 30 seconds later.

"I thought [Padilla] had a great game today," Flint said. "He didn't start because the coach didn't want him to."

Padilla did not play much of the second half, after falling to the floor with a contusion to the lower right leg with 11:24 remaining in the game.

"He said it's OK," Flint said about Padilla's injury. "He said he got bent over underneath the basket and I guess the guy fell down on him."

Several other freshman also contributed to the UMass win. Mike Babul, who got the start, had a pair of blocks and four points. Winston Smith pulled down seven rebounds and Chris Kirkland had five boards.

MASSACHUSETTS MEN'S BASKETBALL

UMass basketball

WINTERSESSION OPPONENTS

GO UMASS

Tim Duncan — Wake Forest, Joel Coliseum, December 14 • 8:30pm — La Salle, CoreStates Spectrum, January 8 • 8:00pm

Shammond Williams — North Carolina, Meadowlands, December 20 • 9pm — Virginia Tech, Mullins Center, January 12 • 8:00pm

Lamont Franklin — UNC–Wilmington, Trask Coliseum, December 22 • 3:30pm — St. Bonaventure, Reilly Center, January 14 • 7:00pm

Kirk King — Connecticut, Hartford Civic Center, December 27 • 7pm — Boston College, FleetCenter, January 18 • 2:00pm

Mark Donnelly — Davidson, Mullins Center, January 2 • 6pm — Rhode Island, Mullins Center, January 21 • 7:30pm

Dmitri Domani — St. Joseph's, Mullins Center, January 5 • 2pm — Temple, McGonigle Hall, January 25 • 12pm

Mike Gizzi

Ace Custis

Shandus McMillan

Dana Abrams

Tyson Wheeler

Mark Jackson

CAMPUS ACTIVITIES AT THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PRESENTS

A WEEKLY PROGRAM SERIES:

SOMETHING EVERY FRIDAY

FEATURING STAND UP COMEDIAN

ROCK REUBEN

Rock Reuben

FREE

BLUEWALL CAFE
December 13, 1996 - 8:00 pm
"A TIME TO KILL" Immediately Following

CIRCADIAN RHYTHM

For more information check out our website:
http://www.umass.edu/campact/events/calendar.html

This series is made possible by a grant from Auxiliary Services, the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, and DAILY COLLEGIAN

REGISTER TO WIN

2 FREE TEDDY BEARS

24" "BIGFOOT" BEARS

Will be given Away to Two Lucky Winners.

CAMPUS CENTER 545-2619 UNIVERSITY STORE HOURS: M-F 9am-5pm Sat 10am-5pm

ENTRIES CLOSE TUESDAY DECEMBER 17

ENTRY FORM

ENTRIES CLOSE TUESDAY DECEMBER 17 • DRAWING WEDNESDAY DECEMBER 18

NAME_____ LOCAL PHONE_____

LOCAL ADDRESS_____

HOME ADDRESS_____

UNIVERSITY STORE EMPLOYEES ARE INELIGIBLE

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Mixed DJ Tapes- ZED music, NYC House, Hip Hop, Reggae, Disco, Techno, Latino. On sale @ mini-mall. 96 Student Union Ballroom, Tues.-Fri.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Hatp Take Over My Lease Starting Jan or Feb One Bdrm @ Brandywine $585 includes utilities, spacious room. Close to campus Call Marie @ 549-1537

Take over lease for 2 Bdr Apt. in Boulders Call 253-3780

Puffton Village Large 1 bedroom, dishwasher/AC, $515. Heat included. Available Jan.1 Call Helene or Doug 549-0766

1 BDRM Puffton Apt. New carpet, paint, appliances. Available January 1st. $515/month. Call Doug 549-7463

AUTO FOR SALE

Chevy Caprice '85 190K miles, $400 or best offer Call 549-5863 (Wes)

Mazda 323 Sedan '86 138K miles, just inspected, winterproof $1300 or B/O Call 549-8852

NEED TO SELL
Eagle Conquest TSI 1987, turbo, 5spd., pwr. wind, leather, auto. Climate. AM/FM cass. with ED, alloys, 97Kms. $2,000 O.B.O. 546-4779 Lve. Msg. for Ben

1987 Mazda Automatic Sedan 99k, excellent condition 256-1743 or 603-897-1954

'82 Chevy Cavalier St Good condition. $500 534-5827

1989 VW Fox 89K miles, A/C, excellent condition, $3300 or B/O Call 256-1588

1982 Toyota Supra Good condition, AT/PW/PD/PS/AM/FM Cass. Call 546-0657 or 413-624-3982

AUTO FOR SALE

'90 Honda Civic AC, runs great, 119,000 miles $2500.00 or B/O. Call John 256-1059

Escort '86 runs good, 2 new tires, battery, etc. $800 o/b.o. 546-2398 lv. msg.

EMPLOYMENT

Ski and Save Live in country inn (Southern Vermont)! Salary plus room/board. Wait tables, cleaning, dishes, prep, etc. December to April. Call (802)874-4140 after 12/13. Send resume now to: Three Mountain Inn, P.O. Box 180, Jamaica, VT 05343 Interviewing 12/15-22

January Job- Small Northampton design/publishing firm looking for P/T data entry for January. MAC based. Call 584-8864

Drivers Wanted Apply in person at Pronzche's, 30 Boltwood Walk.

Clark's and Shipper-Receivers Needed from late December to late January. Flexible schedules. $5.25/hour. Babson College Bookstore, Wellesley, MA. 617-239-4375 Dave

WINTERSESSION JOBS TELEFUND IS HIRING $5.50/hour + fantastic bonuses. PM hours. All shifts available. Gain computer skills. Apply today. Memorial Hall basement. 545-3509

Afterschool Care in our home for our two sons ages 9 & 5. M,T,Th 3:15-5:15, W 1-5. In Amherst. Car needed. 253-5197 Starting 1/27

TROPICAL RESORTS HIRING - Students needed! Entry-level & career positions available Worldwide. Call Resort Employment Services (206) 971-3600 ext. R50013

INTERNATIONAL EMPLOYMENT - Earn up to $25-$45/hour teaching basic conversational English in Japan, Taiwan, S. Korea. No teaching background or Asian languages required. For info. call (206) 971-3570 ext. J50016

FOR RENT

Cape Cod group & summer rentals. Waterfront houses, Falmouth area (508)477-6000

FOR SALE

MUST SELL! Futon, desk, dining table, side table, dressers. Call 534-9177

Selling Kitchen Utensils. 2 All terrain bikes, furniture Call 549-8852

Big Color TV, Small Fridge. 549-1485

TREK 800 Mtn. Bike Bought $475.00. Sell $200.00 Call Steve 6-1996

BIG BED FOR SALE! Moving off campus? Need a bed? Box spring, mattress included Like new Call Jason 549-4832

Table & four chairs, wood $75, large metal desk $50, typing table $25, wooden washstand $20, chest of drawers $15, 549-5052

MT Bike Brigestone 18" Shimano LX Trange GS Suspension, $200 or B/O 534-5827

Leather Jacket- black, classic motorcycle, insulated, very high quality, men's medium, $140. 585-8146

Unique X-mas Gift! Name an actual star for someone! $33 The Star Directory (800)653-6927 ext C2 Visa/MC. Framing and Overnight delivery available

486 Computer $300. 386- $200/ 286- $100. Printer $10 Steve (413)566-3324 #2

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

E Blunt Happy 21st- FINALLY!! I hope you're ready- it's time for payback. I hope you're ready! Love, SASS

Happy 21st Birthday Regina Wolfray Love, Andrew XOXO

LOST

Lost Diamond Ring 12/11. Huge Reward. Boyden Parking Lot. Call 584-5149

MISCELLANEOUS

New Metabolism Breakthrough Lose 5-100 lbs Guaranteed. $35 (800)776-9503 Doctor Approved.

May the Sacred Heart of Jesus Be Adored, Glorified, Loved and Preserved, Now and Forever. Sacred Heart of Jesus, Pray for us. St. Jude, worker of Miracles, Pray For us, St. Jude, Helper of the Hopeless, Pray for Us. Thank You. M.M

PERSONALS

Tony (S), I want to say I am very proud of you for putting so much effort into this semester! I also want to wish you a very Merry Christmas and all the best the New Year has to offer. I love you very much and look forward to spending many more happy holidays with you. All My Love, Jenny (P) P.S. Good luck on your finals!! (I'll send you my lucky vibes again!)

STEVEN HILL, Well it "looks like we made it". Congratulations on graduation! You are the "ideal" man and I'm so proud of you. Through thick and thin you've always been my best friend and I thank you for all the memories I love you, Julie

Aunties Alycia, Jae and Amy; Thank you very much for taking of us! We love you even though you corrupted our little minds. Daddy says when he gets a job he'll take you out to dinner for putting up with us! Love, Kitty and Elmo

TO ALL COLLEGIAN STAFF, Thank you for making my time at UMass one of the best experiences of my life. Good luck in everything you do next semester and in the years to come! Sincerely, Pete Servais

Alyc-dog, Thanks for being a friend and confidant. Thanks for helping me with all the stresses of my social life. Good luck with life and with the E-dog. We have to make one more business meeting before I go! Pete

PERSONALS

AD REPS! Maybe you'll finally read a note from me. Thanks for being the ultimate kick-butt-take-ads-sales team. You guys made the proud to work at The Collegian. GOOD LUCK! Pete Servais

Eliza,
Life is a box of Ronzoni,
Let's Disco Bowl in its starchy splendor
You make me conscious of my breathing
I'll be Ringo.
Won't you be my Edie?
Luke

To The Sisters of Sigma Sigma Sigma, You ladies are the best! I'll miss you! Sigma Love, Jen W

Jen, Matty, Shiang, Rob & Lisa, Kenny, Jim, Matt and Lucy and all the other SOM MBA's, Good luck on finals! Congratulations to those of you who are graduating (Shiang)! Looking forward to tonight and MLK Weekend! Happy Holidays too! Pete S.

Melissa P. I have a good feeling about this. You amaze me. T

To My Blunwall Family, My sisters, and my twins. Thank you everyone for being so wonderful. You have listened, cried and laughed with me. I know everyone won't be here when I come back so I wanted to tell you that I've spent some of my best times with you, my best friends. So enjoy the holidays and next semester I'll see you in 6 mos. ALOHA! Diva K-Blackball EM-S:)

ROOM FOR RENT

Available for Spring Samestar only $170/month plus all utilities Rt. 9 Belcher town. Call Amy 323-1153

Room available in four bedroom house in Belchertown $275+/month Washer/garage, on bus route Call 323-7670

Female Wanted to share bedroom in Puffton. Starts Jan. 1 Call 549-4374

ROOM FOR RENT

1 bedroom available in 4 bedroom apt. in Sunderland at Squire Village Jan. 1. $180. Call Leslie 665-6742

1 bedroom in a three $245/month including utilities. Available now. Adam 256-4793

Room for rent on bus line in 5 bedroom house off Main St. Call 253-9727 for info.

Beginning Jan 1 $200/month. Good location in Northampton Please call for more details 584-3986

1 Bedroom available as of 1/97, 3 bedroom apartment in Puffton. $275 per month including heat/hot water On bus route (male or female). Call Amy @ 548-7082

Three females snaking one non-smoking female to share Mill Valley apartment Jan. 1-May 31. Rent negotiable Call Jess at 253-1797

ROOMATE WANTED

One bedroom in a three bedroom South Amherst apt. Call 256-8035

GREAT HOUSE! One bedroom available in four bedroom house, 2 baths and more! If you want to share the room w/a friend, line! 3 1/2 miles from UMass! Call 549-9162, ask for Mike F.

Room in a 4 bedroom apt. On the bus route. 2 baths, utilities included CHEAP! Call ASAP 253-0823

Looking for female roommates to rent summer house at New Jersey shore. Call Sue at 546-0407

Female Wanted to share bedroom in renovated Puffton Apt. beginning Jan 1 or ASAP Call 413-527-7711 or 549-4748

Master bedroom available in Mill Valley Has own bathroom and entrance Need roommate(s) ASAP For more info. call 253-6606

ROOMATE WANTED

Spring sublet Great price, Jan. rent free Becca 665-8389

Apartment to share with female grad or 21 plus in Mill Valley. 1 Bdrm, 1 Bathroom, washer, dryer. Everything included, $350 a month.

Share house in Amherst non-smoking female, grad. preferred, $335 inclusive, start 1/15 549-8622

Amherst 2 bedroom apt. Available Jan 1, $277.00 Smoker OK, washer/dryer 253-4786

2 Females looking for 1-2 people to share 3 bedroom Puffton. Starts Feb 1. Call 549-7123

2 rooms in three bedroom apt. $267 per month. Call 549-8917. On bus route. Available Jan. 1

Housemate Needed for a large bedroom in a two bedroom apartment on bus route. Call 253-4973.

Roommate Wanted Northampton $312 + util/own bath. N/S 584-5143

Male & Female Couple living on campus looking to switch room with M/F so both couples can live together. If interested call 546-6137. Ask for Ben

Roommate to share two bedroom apartment on Hobart Lane. Available January 15. $375 per month. Utilities not included Call 549-5538 Ben or Jason

One bedroom available in two bedroom apt. Jan 1st. Free heat and water Call 549-4089

One Bedroom Available in Puffton two bedroom apartment Female wanted. On Bus Route 549-9293

SERVICES

Computer Problems? Need an upgrade? In-house service, call Scream Savers 549-0083

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance. 549-1906

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK TRIPS Cancun, Bahamas, Jamaica and Florida Best prices. Best parties and GROUP DISCOUNTS Space is limited! For a free brochure, call today (800)959-4Sun

Caribbean/Mexico $189 RT Europe $169 OW !! you can beat these prices, start your own damn airline Air-Tech 587-0001 Northampton

Europe $155. Caribb./Mexico $189 R/T. Worldwide Destinations Airhitch Tm. 800-326-2009 airhitch@inetcom.com or www.is-com.fr/airhitch

Winter Break Killington with the UMass Ski Club. Five nights lodging, 5 days skiing. During Collegiate Ski Fest $260 Call 545-3437

New Year's in Quebec City 3-5 nights in Duebec Hilton. Optional Skiing at Mont Ste Anne. Starts at $89 Call 545-3437 or 1-800-232-2415

WANTED

Need a ride to Orlando, Florida on January 4? Call Brandy 665-0353

The Collegian Classifieds Crew wishes Renee, this semester's graduating Classifieds Manager, the best of luck in the future.

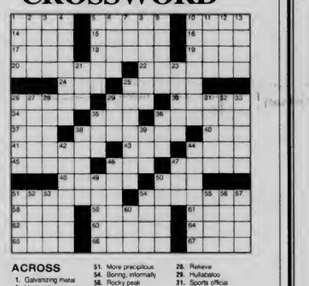
Personals Policy

1. All personals MUST be proofread by Collegian classified employees before payment and acceptance of the classified.
2. Last names MAY NOT be used in personals. ONLY first names and initials are allowed. The only exceptions are for birthday or congratulations personals, in which case the full name may be used.
3. Phone numbers are not allowed in personals. NO EXCEPTIONS.
4. Addresses are not allowed in personals, this means dorm room numbers as well.
5. Personals of a threatening or derogatory nature are not acceptable. Personals of a vindictive or libelous nature are not acceptable. Personals may not be used for the purpose of harassment.
6. Profanity may not be used in personals.
7. The personals section is for personals only. The personals section may NOT be used to sell items, seek roommates, advertise meetings, etc.
8. All personals must have the name, signature, and phone # of the person placing the personal filled in on the insertion order. Non-students must provide a valid driver's license and the license number must be recorded on the insertion order. Use of false identification or misrepresentation is subject to penalties under the law.
9. The Collegian reserves the right to refuse or to edit any personal that does not meet the Collegian's standards in accordance with the statutes of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Standard Headings

Activities
Announcements
Apartment For Rent
Auto For Sale
Employment
Entertainment
For Sale
Found (2 days Free)
Happy Birthday
Houses For Rent
Instruction
Lost
Musicians
Miscellaneous
Motorcycles
Personals
Room For Rent
Room Wanted
Roommate Wanted
Services
Summer Sublet
To Sublet
Travel
Transportation Wanted to Rent
Wanted

Rates



$2.00 minimum/day

Students
20¢ per word/day

All others
40¢ per word/day

NO REFUNDS
Please write clearly and legibly. We are not responsible for errors resulting from illegible handwriting or type.

CROSSWORD

ACROSS
1. Galvanizing metal
5. Hindu religious teacher
10. Blood or drivng
14. ___ call (form of baseball)
15. Ruth's successor
16. New Haven university
17. Prevaricator
18. Stench
19. Golfing teachers
20. Minimally (2 wds.)
22. Fights back
24. English cathedral city
25. Foolish birds
29. Didn't enroll
29. She-deer
30. Complete
34. Bally dancer's assets
35. AFL...
36. Sheltered
37. Language suffix
38. Atlas Shrugged author (2 wds.)
40. Time division (abbr.)
41. Related
43. Attain through effort
44. Hasidim, e.g.
45. Spills the beans
46. ___ volatile
47. Humble pies
48. Exalted
50. Labor or birth follower
51. More precipitous
54. Boring, informally
58. Rocky peak
60. Inkert
61. Ark skipper
62. Distinctive quality
63. Circumvent
64. ___ with the Wind
65. Going
66. Title role for Dustin
67. Flower part

DOWN
1. J'accuse author
2. Acronym unit (abbr.)
3. Actress Patricia
4. Lists
5. Loopy
6. Scottish inventor
7. Jackie's second
8. Actress Marilyn
9. Readed the presses
10. Predecessors of word processors
11. Dumbo's were jumbo
12. Vacancy
13. Guarding ___ (1994 comedy)
21. High, in music
23. Healthy
25. Room's entrance
26. Cradling ___ (Thomas Hart Benton)
27. Passage
28. Relieve
29. Hullabaloo
31. Sports official
32. ___ of Nantes
33. Fissures
35. Dancer Charisse
36. Bed-and-breakfast spot
38. The Hare and the Tortoise author
39. Be under the weather
42. Illicit
44. Proverbs
46. Endeavor
47. Author Amy
48. Wild
50. Pop
51. Strike replacement
52. Factual
53. Justice Warren
54. Blood's pathway
56. "Fanny ___"
57. Attention getter
60. Cambodia's ___ Noi

Answers to Yesterday's Puzzle

H	A	C	K				C	A	P		S	A	P	S
A	S	H	E		A	T	O	L	L		A	N	A	T
R	A	I	N		S	H	A	L	E		I	T	S	A
I	N	C	O	M	P	A	T	I	B	I	L	I	T	Y
			E	E	N			E	D	S
B	E	A	C	O	N		O	H	I	O		U	M	P
R	E	S	O	W		P	L	E	A		C	R	E	E
E	R	I	C		S	U	S	A	N		O	G	L	E
A	I	D	A		P	R	E	P		S	L	E	E	P
D	E	E		B	U	R	N		S	H	A	D	E	S
			P	A	R			D	U	E
S	U	P	E	R	N	A	T	U	R	A	L	I	S	M
A	P	I	E		I	R	E	N	E		I	N	T	O
R	O	C	K		N	I	N	E	R		S	C	O	W
I	N	K	S		G	A	S				P	A	W	S

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21-April 20
Step finitfish- plans may change but situations will work out. Small setback now could lead to bigger and better things. Watch out for your interests. A friend may not be as big an ally as you thought and could be holding an old grudge.

TAURUS
April 21-May 21
Take it easy and trust your instincts. Take an honest look at your strengths and weaknesses. Work starting a long-term project. An unexpected source offers reassurance and advice. Be receptive but don't get caught up in elaborate schemes.

GEMINI
May 22-June 21
Stay on the sidelines and watch. Now is a time for caution, not daring. Adding your opinion to a volatile situation could bring matters to a head. Cool off and stay focused on task at hand. Trying to split your forces in too many directions will cause problems.

CANCER
June 22-July 22
Family relationships need some attention. Don't overlook others problems and concerns--they could turn out to be very important. Take a break with friends soon. It will refresh you and provide an alternative outlook that could pay benefits.

LEO
July 23-August 23
Use your imagination to see all the possibilities. Support and solutions will come from the most unlikely places. Be alert to changes professionally and personally. New groupings and alliances are forming, and you don't want to be caught off guard.

VIRGO
August 24-September 22
Think big thoughts, dream big dreams. Be original and creative. People you were unsure of will now enthusiastically support you and your ideas. With all the success surrounding you, staying humble will pay off.

LIBRA
September 23-October 23
Take steps to safeguard health and property, but don't go overboard. Try to go with the flow of events--you'll be happier and get more accomplished. Forgive past slights and keep things in perspective--not all problems are major problems.

SCORPIO
October 24-November 22
You have passed through a trying time and come out ahead. Bypassing obstacles will work better now than tackling them head on. Don't be bullied by an old friend; stand up for what you know is right, and people will flock to your side.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23-December 21
Keep forging ahead toward a long-range goal. You'll see progress and what you thought was beyond reach comes into view. Brief break now gives you strength to keep moving forward. A series of small advances moves you closer to your objective.

CAPRICORN
December 22-January 20
The pressure is on but you can handle it. Enlist support from a friend or relative. Enthusiasm about a project or plan will get you even more backing. Make a list of what has to be done, don't rely on memory alone. Catch up on your reading.

AQUARIUS
January 21-February 18
Finish one project before starting another. Take comfort in routine activities. Everyday tasks help you wind down and see clearer picture of situations. people. Now is the time to take a well-deserved rest. Take time for yourself and put your feet up.

PISCES
February 19-March 20
Make sure others are pulling their share of the load. Don't take all the pressures and problems on yourself. Have your facts in order before confronting an opponent. Wait out a storm of activity. Be patient and remember time is on your side.

Daily Listings sponsored by:

UMass Basketball on UVC-TV19 DEC. 14 WAKE FOREST 8:30PM (NO PRE- AND POST- GAME SHOWS) Courtesy of ESPN

HSCN Housing Services Cable Network

2 HSCN Bulletin Board
3 CBS/3 Hartford
4 CBS/4 Boston
5 ABC/5 Boston
6 PBS/57 Springfield
7 HSCN Movie Channel
8 UPN/20 Hartford
9 Weather Channel
10 NBC/30 New Britain
11 Fox/61 Hartford
12 PBS/24 Hartford
13 WOCH & HSCN
14 UMATV
17 HSCN Programming
19 TV-19
20 ABC/40 Springfield
22 NBC/22 Springfield
23 CNN
24 CNN/Headline News
25 BET
26 BET on Jazz
27 Laser Video
28 The Learning Channel
30 Comedy Central
31 Popcorn Channel
32 Satellite Programming

http://www-unix.oit.umass.edu/~uvctv19

UVC-TV

FRIDAY EVENING — DECEMBER 13, 1996 — ©TVData

	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH 2	C. Sandiego	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Wash. Wee	Wall St. Week	Spontaneous Healing (In Stereo)				McLaughlin	People+Here
WFSB 3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Am Journal	Dave's World	Raymond	Forces of Nature (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ 4	News		CBS News	Ent. Tonight	Dave's World	Raymond	Forces of Nature (In Stereo)		Nash Bridges (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB 5	News	ABC Wld News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Family Matters	Boy Mts. World	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	20/20		News	Nightline
WLVI 6	Fresh Prince	Bizzz	Star Trek: The Next Generation		* "Miracle on 34th Street" (1947, Comedy) Maureen O'Hara.				News		Extra	Hollywood
WHDH 7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		Dateline (In Stereo)		Homicide: Life on the Street		News	Tonight Show
WTIC 8	Simpsons	Roseanne	Home Improve.	Seinfeld	Crypt Tales	Crypt Tales	Millennium "Pilot" (R)		News		Murphy Brown	Deep Space 9
WWLP 9	News		NBC News		Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		Dateline (In Stereo)		Homicide: Life on the Street	Tonight Show
WGBY 11	Kratts Creatures	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Three Sopranos (In Stereo)						Atlanta Symphony Gospel Christmas (In Stereo)	(Off Air)
WGGB 40	News	ABC Wld News	Songs of the Season		Family Matters	Boy Mts. World	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless	20/20		News	Nightline
WSBK 38	Beverly Hills, 90210 (In Stereo)		Seinfeld	NBA Basketball	Boston Celtics at Indiana Pacers (Live)				News	Martin	Med. About You	Real TV
WTBS 49	Family Matters	Family Matters	Home Videos	Home Videos	* "Goofinger" (1965, Adventure) Sean Connery, Gert Frobe.						 "The Man With the Golden Gun" (1974)
A&E 45	Quincy "Into the Murdering Mind"		Equalizer "Endgame"		Abbott and Costello-Bio.		 "Brain a Song" (1971, Drama) James Caan.			Am. Justice	Law & Order
CNN 46	WorldView		Moneyline	Crossfire	Prime News	Inside Politics	Larry King Live		World Today		Sports Illus.	Moneyline
COM 43	A-List (R)	Dream On	Billy Crystal: Midnight Train to Moscow (R)				Dennis Miller: Black & White (R)	Tim Allen: Men	Dennis Miller: They Shoot		Allen Rewires	Tim Allen: Men
CSPAN 42	14:00 Public Policy Conference		Public Policy Conference		Prime Time Public Affairs						Prime Time Public Affairs (R)
DISC 48	Go for It! (R)		Beyond 2000	Next Step (R)	Wild Discovery: "Lion Queen"		Invention	Beyond 2000	Wings "Steel Rain" (R)		Next Step (R)	Beyond 2000
ESPN 51	Up Close	Sportscenter		Heisman Prev.	Up Close	NHL Hockey: Chicago Blackhawks at St. Louis Blues. (Live)						Sportscenter
LIFE 50	Supermarket	Debt	Hope & Gloria	Designing	Intimate Portrait "Women Spies"		 "Home for Christmas" (1990, Comedy-Drama) Mickey Rooney.				Martha Stewart	Unsolved Myst.
MTV 52	Ren & Stimpy	Real World	Idiot Savants	Singled Out	Music Videos (In Stereo)				Beavis-Butt.	Sports (R)	Idiot Savants	Singled Out
NICK 53	Clarissa Expl.	Tiny Toon Adv.	Doug	Rugrats	Kablam!	Happy Days	Love Lucy	Munsters	M.T. Moors	Rhoda	Taxi	Odd Couple
SCIFI 55	Mann & Machine		Plan of Attack	SF Vortex	Sightings (In Stereo)		Friday the 13th: The Series		Friday the 13th: The Series		Friday the 13th: The Series
TLC 56	Furniture to Go	Home Pro (R)	Hometime (R)	Hometime (R)	Quest	World War I	Surviving Waco (R)		Down In Flames (R)		Quest (R)	World War I
TNT 57	In the Heat of the Night		In the Heat of the Night		NBA Basketball: Golden State Warriors at Cleveland Cavaliers. (Live)					Inside the NBA	 "The Lost Boys" (1987)
USA 59	Renegade "Ransom" (In Stereo)		Highlander: The Series		Renegade "Father's Day"		 "Lily in Winter" (1994, Drama) Nicole Colle. (In Stereo)				Big Easy "Snake Dance" (R)
VH1 61	Top 10 Video Countdown		VH1 to One (R)	Storytellers (R)		Artist of Year	 "Streets of Fire" (1984, Drama) Michael Pare, Diane Lane.				Legends (R)
HBO 01	(5:15)  "Clueless" (1995)		Inside the NFL (R) (In Stereo)		 "Disclosure" (1994, Drama) Michael Douglas. (In Stereo)		R	"The Ex" (1996, Suspense) Yancy Butler. (In Stereo)			NFL
MAX 04	 "Star Trek Generations" (1994) Patrick Stewart.				 "Nick of Time" (1995) Johnny Depp.		R	 "Nine Months" (1995) Hugh Grant.	PG-13		Erotic Confessions (In Stereo)
SHOW 05	 "Cruise" (1998, Drama) Axton Quinn, Ade Sapara.		PG-13		 "Hackers" (1995, Drama) Jonny Lee Miller. (In Stereo)		PG-13	 "White Tiger" (1996, Drama) Gary Daniels.	R		Bedtime	(R)

Always Wanted One of Those By A. Morse & S. Dumas

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Drabble By Kevin Fagan

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Frumpy the Clown Judd Winick

8 Years in Braces By Eric Petersen

Leold By Roger & Salem Salloom

I finally got a job... a paper route, but each week I end up owing the paper $3.48.

I've got some senior citizens on my route. They're so nice to me. America loves it's paper boys and girls.

When the front page news was bad I used to cut out the articles so it didn't upset & shock my customers. But that took too much time.

So, nowadays, I just deliver the paper a day late.

Nice guy, heh!
Life is good.

University² By Frank Cho

Close to Home By John McPherson

"How long ago did she develop this appetite for throw rugs?"

Social Norm By Mr. K

Ledee By Mike Rybicki

Alien Crackbunnies By Darb

Today's Staff
Laura "Lolo" Stock
Night Editor
"Seemstress" Gangatirkar
Copy Editor
Courtney "Goin' to Cali" Smith
Photo Technician
Christopher "Adios" Brown
Production Supervisor
Matt "Grinch" McCarthy
Dan "AWOL" Bodah
Production

Happy Holidays from the Thursday night staff. We're out of here!

Quote of the Day

"I took it easy today. I just pretty much layed around in my underwear all day. Got kicked out of quite a few places, though.

–Earl

from Max Cannon's RedMeat

Collegian Graphics

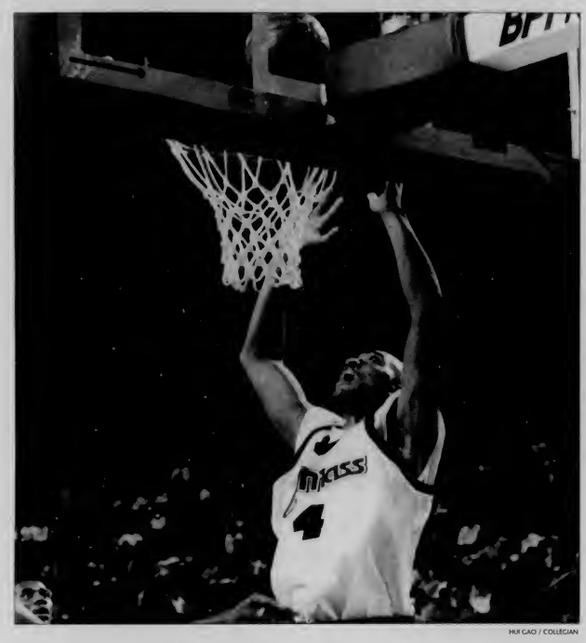
Joke of the Day

Q: Why didn't Mississippi wear Missouri's New Jersey?

A: Idaho, Alaska!

Dining Commons Menu

Menu unavailable. Please refer to this guide to help you decide where to eat.



1. First, go get some dice (6 sided, preferably).
2. Find one you like, and roll it.

If you roll:

- Go to Franklin D.C. for dinner.
- Go to Berkshire D.C. for dinner.
- Go to Hampshire D.C. for dinner.
- Go to Worcester D.C. for dinner.
- Get Pizza for dinner!
- Roll again.

Sports

Men's hoop pulls away and leaves Drexel draggin'

HUI GAO / COLLEGIAN

Lari Ketner was a force inside for UMass last night, in the Minutemen's 69–48 win over Drexel.

By Chris Stamm
Collegian Staff

After allowing No. 16 Fresno State to score 102 points in the William D. Mullins Center Tuesday night, the Massachusetts men's basketball team held Drexel (4–2) to fewer than 50 in last night's 69–48 win.

Massachusetts	69
Drexel	48

With senior guard Edgar Padilla on the bench at the start of the game (he had 56 consecutive starts excluding senior nights before last night) the Minutemen (3–4) came out sluggish. Meanwhile, the Dragons were on fire scorching UMass with a 14–4 lead 8:26 into the first frame. Drexel held UMass to just two points in the first eight minutes of play.

For the Dragons, forward Jeff Myers knocked in 12 points to lead the squad, while guard Bryant Coursey added 11 of his own.

"We just weren't aggressive," Massachusetts coach James "Bruiser" Flint said, "They double teamed us, we didn't react well and took some bad shots. Drexel made some baskets on us."

With 2:42 remaining in the half, the Minutemen attacked Drexel with an 18–2 run which was capped off by a Carmelo Travieso jumper to give UMass its first lead of the game 20–18.

After Tuesday's loss, Massachusetts coach James "Bruiser" Flint said tonight he would be looking for players that could come out and play with intensity. He found such a player in junior Inus Norville (five rebounds, two points, one block) who pounded the glass, dove for lose balls, and knocked down one of his most memorable buckets with 1:41 to go in the first.

After missing a second-chance shot, Norville drove the lane and while falling out of bounds tossed back a no-look, over the shoulder ball off the glass putting UMass back 24–21.

"I'll tell you one person who came in and turned the tempo of the game around, that was Inus Norville," Flint said. "He got a couple blocks, he got some rebounds and he got us going when we were down early."

Another emotional leader for the Minutemen came from freshman forward Ajmal Basit. While Basit's enthusiasm got him in a little hot water when he drew a technical foul just over three minutes into the game, he led UMass in board crashing, pulling down 11 rebounds.

In the final seconds of the half, sophomore Charlton Clarke drove the lane for two on a set play from Padilla sending the Minutemen into the locker room with a 27–21 advantage. This was the first time UMass held the lead at the half since its win over Chaminade in the Maui Invitational.

UMass lit it up in the second half, opening it up with a 15–0 run after Drexel's Jeff Myers knocked down a 3–pointer 15 seconds in.

Padilla, who has struggled with shooting outside the arc making just three of his last 25, knocked down a pair of three-balls in 35 seconds. The second came when Travieso penetrated inside, dishing it in mid-air to Padilla who sunk the trey, giving UMass a 42–24 lead.

With 11:24 remaining in the game, Padilla went down and suffered a contusion to his lower leg when a Drexel player fell on him under the basket.

From then on the Dragons could not narrow the lead any closer then 10 as the Minutemen coasted on to win.

Once again, despite the fact that Tyrone Weeks is still benched with an ankle injury, it was UMass' impressive inside game that propelled them to victory, out-scoring Drexel 40–27 in the paint. With slashing penetration, Clarke led the squad with 17 points, while Ketner knocked down 13 points of his own.

"That's all I ask from my team, play hard and play with some intensity," Flint said. "If we do, we have an opportunity to win. That's all we want to do right now. We're young, we're inexperienced but we can make up for that by playing hard and playing with intensity. The other stuff comes with experience and playing together."

On Saturday, UMass travels south to face No. 2 Wake Forest. For a complete look at Wintersession competition, see page nine.

Flint's players step up to power UMass to win

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

After Tuesday night's loss to Fresno State, Massachusetts men's basketball coach James "Bruiser" Flint said that he was looking for players.

"Players play, no matter what," Flint said.

Last night against Drexel (3–2), especially in the second half, Flint had players.

Those players, who had trailed the Dragons by as many as 12 in the first half, came out firing after intermission to run away with a 69–48 UMass (3–4) win at the William D. Mullins Center.

"I found a few," Flint said when asked if he had found any players. "I thought we played great defensively, and I thought we played with a little more intensity than in the last game."

That intensity came in the form of a pair that has been the centerpiece of the Minuteman line–up — Ajmal Basit and Lari Ketner — and a surging Charlton Clarke.

Clarke led the scoring charge for UMass with a game-high 17 points, while Ketner and Basit did work on the boards and with blocks. Ketner recorded 13 points and five blocks, while Basit chipped in for eight points and a game-high 11 rebounds and came away with three blocks of his own.

"[Charlton] had a good game tonight," Flint said.

The Ketner–Basit frontcourt produced its share of SportsCenter worthy highlights. Two minutes into the first half, the two combined to block a Drexel shot, with Ketner adding another stop before being charged with a foul. With 12:33 left in the second half, Ketner got the crowd into the game with a rim–grabbing dunk. With 3:48 remaining in the game, Basit, disagreeing with a call, bounced the ball hard off the floor, before flashing a innocent smile to the ref.

Turn to MINUTEMEN, page 9

Big names line men's hoop schedule

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

On May 8, when Tim Duncan finally made up his mind to buck the trend and stay at Wake Forest for his senior year, there was no happier group than his teammates and coaches.

"It was like hearing someone you loved made it through surgery," Demon Deacons senior Sean Allen told Sports Illustrated.

Now, Duncan is on a mission — to win a national title.

But before Duncan and the Deacs can travel to Indianaoplis' RCA Dome, they must first make it through the regular season.

Next on the regular season menu for Wake is a rematch with Massachusetts, a team that shut down

Turn to PREVIEW, page 9

Mullins crowds need to get going

Ahh... the last paper of the year, and finally, an Around the Horn for me. With finals starting tomorrow, I really don't have time for this, but what the hell. It's not like I've done any work this semester anyway. Why start now?!?!

Hey, did anybody else think that the crowd at the Mullins Center has flat–out sucked these past three games? I realize we're going through some rough times, but the point of a fan is to stand behind your team, not bail out at the first sign of struggle.

Bruiser has been ripped apart in the early going, and undeservedly so. You have to realize that when Coach Cal skipped town because it got too hot for him (I hope the Nets go 4–78, by the way) he left Bruiser with five freshman, a Prop 48 sophomore, and a schedule that would make even Pat Riley cringe. Stick up for your team, kids. It doesn't matter if you loved them when they made the Final Four if you can't love them now.

• Have you heard the good news, kids? Yeah, the Sox are gonna win the World Series next year, now that they've signed Bret Saberhagen to a minor–league contract this week.

Relax, I was being sarcastic. Saberhagen has been about as healthy as Katherine Hepburn the past five seasons, which made him a must sign for Dan Duquette.

Question: who's next for the Dalton Dunce? Dave Steib? Joe Magrane?

I have serious problems with Duquette. First of all, he fires Kevin Kennedy because he didn't like him, and hires Jimy Williams to replace him. Williams last managed the St. Louis Browns, I believe. Second, he seems to have no concept of how much we need Roger Clemens back. Even if Roger isn't what he used to be, I still want him to finish his career in Boston. Is that so wrong?

• I know my spot, fool! (Sorry, but I can't help it)

• I'm gonna let you in on a secret. Texas is my college hoop sleeper of the year. Why? They're in a real conference now, the Big 12, and they have two of the most underrated players in the country

Turn to HORN, page 8

Lovell–less hockey prepares for winter break

HUI GAO / COLLEGIAN

The UMass hockey team faces a pair of Ivy Leaguers to start its Wintersession slate.

By Jorma Kansanen
Collegian Staff

As of late, seven has been a lucky number for the Massachusetts hockey team. Last weekend's home and home series sweep of Providence College capped a seven game string where UMass (7–7, 4–6 in Hockey East) went 6–1, and with those wins over the Friars, got back into the HE race.

But at the beginning of the season, seven was the Minutemen's unlucky number, and a 1–6 record to start the season dug an early hole.

This weekend, UMass will finish its schedule before the start of the holiday season with a duo of games against ECAC opponents. Tonight at the William D. Mullins Center (7 p.m.), the Minutemen will faceoff with the Tigers of Princeton, and tomorrow at Thompson Arena in Hanover, N.H. (7 p.m.), the Big Green of Dartmouth will host the maroon and white.

Wins over these two teams will be key to keep the momentum UMass has developed over the last seven games, and into the RPI Invitational held the 27th–28th of this month.

Coach Joe Mallen knew the first seven games would be a tough go, with No. 2 New Hampshire and No. 4 Boston University as opponents. The key

Turn to HOCKEY, page 7

Full schedule on tap for UMass teams

By Jeremy Adams
Collegian Staff

The women's gymnastics team tops a list of Massachusetts squads in action during Wintersession. Coach Dave Kuzara's teams' first meets are on the road against George Washington and Penn State, on Jan. 10 and 18, respectively. The meet with Penn State is a tri–meet with New Hampshire as well.

The Minutewomen's first home meet will be on Jan. 25 at 6 p.m. in the William D. Mullins Center against Michigan — the first time gymnastics will be in the arena.

• Men's gymnastics

Massachusetts men's gymnastics has already started its season, hosting and winning the UMass Open on Dec. 7. The Minutemen's next meet is the West Point Open on Jan. 10 and 11. They continue on the road in a dual meet with Navy on Jan. 24.

• Men's and women's skiing

Bill MacConnell's teams starts their down–hill crusade with their lone home meet, the UMass Tournament, at Charlemont on Jan. 18 and 19.

The teams next trade the comfy slopes of the Berkshires for the imposing White Mountains at Plymouth State and Waterville Valley, N.H. on Jan. 25–26.

• Men's and women's swimming and diving

In the grand tradition of the waterpolo team, which is comprised of a small portion of the men's swim team's roster, the UMass swimmers seek out warmer climates this Wintersession. The Minutemen and women take part in the San Juan Invitational on Jan. 4, before continuing their conference schedule at the Rhode Island Open in Kingston, R.I. (not Jamaica), Jan. 10–11.

The Massachusetts squads host Dartmouth on Jan. 19, and New Hampshire on Jan. 25. All home meets are held at Joseph R. Rogers, Jr. Pool in Boyden Gymnasium.

• Men's and Women's indoor track and field

The track and field teams next compete in the New England Challenge Cup tournament. Women's trials are on Jan. 10 in Orono, M.E., with finals on Jan. 18 at Hanover, N.H. Men's trials are Jan. 11 at Orono, M.E., finals are Jan. 17 at Providence, R.I.

The men continue with a tri–meet at New Hampshire with Holy Cross on Jan. 25, and the women compete in the West Point Invitational on the same day.

Massachusetts has no home meets in either men's or women's indoor track and field.

Minutewomen have full slate for wintersession

By Fred Hurlbrink, Jr.
Collegian Staff

If the lights stay on in the William D. Mullins Center, the Massachusetts women's basketball team will have a heaping helping of hoop opponents during its so–called winter break.

The Minutewomen's first tilt after finals will take place on Dec. 22 at home against the Hartford Hawks. The Minutewomen will be looking to climb back up to the .500 mark after dropping a disappointing home contest to the Golden Flashes of Kent.

The nearby Hawks are coming off a 15–13 showing last season, and they return four starters from last year's squad. Their top scorer is senior forward Heather Weindorfer who notched 17.8 points per game in 1995–96.

The Minutewomen are back in action just three days

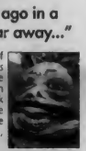
Turn to HOOP, page 7

The Massachusetts

DAILY COLLEGIAN

Volume CVI Issue 70 • New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967 • Tuesday, January 28, 1997

Diversity 102



Check out the second semester's special section dedicated to and created jointly by The Collegian's Diversity desks (see pages 5–9).

A Month of Minutemen Madness

Catch up on all of the UMass sports action from wintersession, including game reviews of men's and women's basketball and hockey, as well as NFL, NHL and NBA wrap-ups (see Sports, Section B).

"A long time ago in a galaxy far, far away..."

The rerelease of Lucas' Star Wars trilogy has the Arts/Living section jumping. Check out our coverage of the event. (see Arts & Living, Section A).

Visit the Collegian's website at www.umass.edu/rso/collegian

INSIDE

Arts & Living.....page 1-A Diversity.....page 5
Editorial.....page 4
FYI.....page 2
News.....page 3
Sports.....page 1-B

Felons to face screening process for housing, according to policy

By Laura Stock
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts created a new policy last month which could restrict access to on-campus housing for students who have been convicted of a felony.

Jo-Anne Vanin, dean of students and associate vice chancellor for student affairs, issued a statement on Dec. 23, 1996 outlining the policy, which will be implemented in March.

"We have decided to expand our housing application form to add a question asking if the applicant has ever been convicted of a felony," the statement read. "Applicants who answer 'yes' will be sent a questionnaire requesting further information.

"Housing staff and staff from the dean of students office will review the questionnaire prior to making a housing decision."

Each housing decision will be made on a case-by-case basis. Academic admission to the University will not be affected by this policy.

Should a student's past felony conviction be discovered subsequent to a negative response, Vanin said the University would take judicial action, as providing false information on an application would be a violation of the Code of Student Conduct.

Refusal to answer the new question will not be permitted, Vanin said.

Concern over lack of SGA input in decision-making

The decision to create this policy, made largely in response to the discovery of a convicted rapist living on campus last semester, resulted from a series of discussions involving Chancellor David K. Scott, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Tom Robinson, Vanin, Housing Services and legal council for the University.

As with all University policies, Vanin said the final approval was made by the Chancellor, who felt that the best place to administer such a policy was through Housing Services.

Members of the Student Government Association (SGA) were not consulted in the decision process.

David Nuñez, a senior history major and Housing Assignment office employee, is opposed to the lack of student contribution to the new policy.

Nuñez feels that by adding the criminal history question to the housing application, administrators are making a "fundamental change" in the Housing Contract — a document which undergoes approval from the SGA's Board of Trustees.

"It should go before the Board of Trustees since it applies to the Housing Contract," Nuñez said. "The administration is trying to slip it by us... The Chancellor is not God."

"Trustee documents can only be changed by the Board of Trustees, and there appears to be changes," said Sean Carter, SGA trustee.

Vanin, however, stated that the new policy is a "University policy, not a Housing policy," and therefore would not apply to the Housing Contract.

"I don't think it was necessary to get student review on this," Vanin said.

Vanin felt that the administration "received student communication through the newspaper last semester... where the pros and cons of the issue were dealt with."

SGA President Maurice Caston Powe said that he understands the importance of the situation and believes something should be done, but the thinks issue should be "put aside until we [SGA] can address it firmly.

"It is issue that Channel 40 brought to light and the campus reacted to it," Caston Powe said, regarding the television news broadcast in November 1996 which revealed that a convicted sex offender was living in a residence hall. "But there has been no discussion with students, just an administrative response."

Both Caston Powe and Carter said that the new policy was not on the agenda of the academic and student affairs meeting last Wednesday.

Student safety a priority for administrators

"The decision was made after careful consideration of the needs of our students and future students," Vanin said. "Housing Services staff believe that individuals who have been convicted of violent crimes against people or property, but who are still eligible to attend the University, could pose a threat to the security of the residence hall community if they are allowed to live on campus."

Felonies, convictions of which tend to carry state imprisonment sentences or fines, include but are not limited to: violent crimes against individuals (domestic assault, rape, assault and battery, murder); violent crimes against property (arson, malicious destruction or larceny of property over $500); distribution of illegal substances; and possession of altered motor vehicle licenses.

Vanin said that "because freshmen and sophomores are required to live on campus, but often do not have complete control to select either their residence hall or their roommate and must rely on the University for appropriate controls, we thought it best for all concerned to have individuals live off campus who have been convicted of violent felonies of physical harm to persons and/or property."

"People may have made mistakes, they're young," Nuñez said. "If you were punished, convicted and did time, you should be allowed to attend the University and take advantage of all facilities on campus.

"It's a violation of students' rights, and all students have the right to privacy."

"I don't think it's discriminating," Vanin said. "We're not denying anyone a University education. On-campus residence is a valuable piece of the University experience, but as long as we are not denying education, then we are not violating anyone's rights."

Students denied housing because of a prior conviction will not be restricted from any campus activities other than residence, Vanin said.

"My hope is that we've struck a balance between creating a safe environment for students and not denying people who have paid their debt to society an education," Vanin said.

Campus credit union closes; Five College FCU merger offers students new services

KENNETH W P. SCOTT/ COLLEGIAN

The Five College Credit Union will handle all of the UMass Credit Union members as a result of a merger.

By Laura Stock
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Federal Credit Union has merged with the Five College Federal Credit Union, resulting in the closure of the on-campus location in the Student Union Building and the loss of volunteer employment opportunities for UMass students.

Though the process has been ongoing for several months, the merger became official yesterday. The UMass Credit Union closed permanently on Jan. 22 for computer conversion.

As a result of the merger, all UMass accounts will now be handled by the Five College Credit Union. Before students can utilize the new services, they must go to the Five College Credit Union at 67 University Drive in the Victory Supermarket Plaza and receive new account numbers.

President and CEO of the Five College Credit Union Katharine Hutchinson explained how the merger arose.

"We started discussions with students during the summer about how we could help provide additional services," Hutchinson said.

Melissa Tong, a senior finance major and president of the UMass Credit Union, said "Our Board of Directors spoke with the Five College Board of Directors, who gave us the proposal of a merger."

Both Tong and Hutchinson said that before the merger could occur, it had to pass a vote by both credit unions' board of directors and by the members of the UMass Credit Union.

The merger passed when the majority of members who replied to the ballot, which they should have received by mail, voted affirmatively.

A meeting was also held for members opposed to the merger to voice their opinions, but, according to Hutchinson, "the turnout was low."

The Five College Credit Union will handle checking accounts the same way as the UMass Credit Union. Passbooks for savings accounts will be converted into a statement of savings. Any student with an outstanding loan who has received a bill in the past will receive a bill for the month of January, but in February loan payment will convert to a coupon book system. Auto deduction loans will remain the same.

New services offered by the Five College Credit Union, such as the Automated Teller Service with free ATM cards and the Member Audio Teller — a telephone automated system to review account information, transfer balances and balance checkbooks — are the reason Hutchinson feels the merger will be beneficial to UMass students.

"ATMs are only part of it," Hutchinson said. "We will be able to provide electronic access through the internet and our homepage."

Hutchinson said plans are also underway for members to conduct banking online from their homes in 1998.

"Because of our size, we can also issue Visa cards and conduct more lending for student loans, computer loans and car loans," Hutchinson said.

Even though the Five College Credit Union can provide more updated services for members, students have

Turn to CREDIT UNION, page 3

Sex offender act clarified

By Laura Stock
Collegian Staff

Questions left unanswered last semester regarding the application of the Massachusetts Sex Offender Registry Act to the University of Massachusetts Police Department have been resolved by the state's Attorney General.

UMass Chief of Police John Luippold said that the interpretation his department was working under last semester (that they were not considered a local police department, and therefore not responsible for registering UMass students who are convicted sex offenders) was upheld by the Attorney General.

"The University received an informal policy from the Attorney General's Office regarding the interpretation of the law as defined by the legal council for the Sex Offender Registry and Criminal History Systems Board," Luippold said.

"They responded with the decision that the University Police Department is not considered a local police department, but did believe sex offenders living on campus should register with their local municipality, which would be the Amherst Police Department," he added.

Massachusetts state law requires that all convicted sex offenders register with the Criminal History Systems Board through their local police stations. Information compiled by the Board is public and available to people who are concerned that a sex offender may reside or work in their community.

The dispute over where convicted sex offenders who are UMass students should be required to register arose in November 1996 when Channel 40 News in Springfield aired a three-part series about a convicted sex offender who was found to be living in a UMass residence hall.

Channel 40 obtained an opinion from the legal council for the Sex Offender Registry, alleging that UMass police were responsible for registering sex offenders.

Luippold, however, was told in August 1996 that the UMass police were not responsible. In fact, until that point the law did not specify whether or not students required to

Turn to OFFENDER, page 3

Complaint filed against alleged UMass rapist

University of Massachusetts police filed a complaint last month against a University student for committing an alleged acquaintance rape against another student in a Southwest Residential Area residence hall in October 1996.

According to police sources, a female UMass student reported on Dec. 3, 1996 that Nathaniel Atkins, 18, of 279 Auburndale Ave., Auburndale, allegedly raped her. Following a police investigation, a complaint was filed against Atkins.

"In lieu of an arrest we filed a complaint against the individual," said John Luippold, UMass chief of police. "He was arraigned on Jan. 9 and told to appear in court for a pre-trial conference."

Atkins was arraigned on charges of rape and lewdness in Northampton District Court. He was released on probationary conditions until the pre-trial conference set for Feb. 6.

— Leigh Faulkner

PVTA adds express route

New service connects Northampton & UMass

By Christina Poletto
Collegian Staff

The Pioneer Valley Transit Authority (PVTA) introduced a new express bus service yesterday for students and area commuters that will travel directly to and from Northampton to the Haigus Mall on the University of Massachusetts campus.

Known as the "Minuteman Express," the new PVTA service is designed to alleviate time consuming delays that frequently occur as a result of the high traffic area on Route 9.

The bus service will consist of 14 consecutive round trips from 7-10 a.m. and 2-6 p.m. Monday through Friday while school is in session.

According to Michele Goldberg, director of marketing and public relations for the PVTA, the Route 703 Northampton/Amherst bus which currently operates along this same route, making frequent stops, will continue to do so throughout the course of the semester, but will undergo a small reduction in the number of total trips in order to accommodate for the new express route.

"The express service was designed to take the majority of passengers off of the Route 703 bus," Goldberg said. "We realized that with the traffic and the stops at Haigus Mall and Amherst center, we were running habitually late, and PVTA riders couldn't rely on the provided schedule.

"With this new express service, we should still be able to run on time, even with traffic."

The results from a Pioneer Valley Commission survey revealed that more than 60 percent of passengers who use Route 703 just travel to Northampton Center and back. Thus, this new bus service will not stop in Hadley on its way to and from Northampton.

Additionally, the current route of the local 703 service will be slightly altered. Rather than traveling in a circular route, the new course will consist of the bus traveling more directly from Northampton to Haigus Mall to Amherst Center back to Haigus Mall, and returning again to Northampton.

KENNETH W P. SCOTT/ COLLEGIAN

Always in bloom

No matter what the weather is outside, the Lyman Plant House at Smith College always has flowers in bloom, like this Cymbidium Traceyanum from India.

For Your Information

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Tuesday, Jan. 28

Religious — A Talmud class on Jewish oral law will be held at the Chabad House at 8 p.m. The class is free and open to the public.

Wednesday, Jan. 29

Music — The Five College Learning in Retirement Program will sponsor Nigel Coxe on Masterpieces of Piano Literature at Amherst College's Buckley Recital Hall from 10 a.m.–noon. The program is free and open to the public.

Religious — To celebrate the Yarhtzeit of Rebbetzin Chaya Mushka Schneerson, a special one-time class for married couples will be held at the Chabad House at 8 p.m. It is free and open to the public.

Friday, Jan. 31

Religious — A Welcome Back Shabbat will be held at the Chabad House at 6 p.m. A meal will follow the service.

Wednesday, Feb. 5

Meeting — The UMass Poetry Society will hold its first meeting of the semester at 7 p.m. in room 917 of the Campus Center. New members are always welcome. For more information, call Tim at 546-0562.

Meeting — Have you ever done theater or always wanted to? If so, then the UMass Theater Guild wants you! Come to our first meeting of the semester at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center. Many artistic positions are available for the spring shows, Fame and Heidi Chronicles. Audition information will be available. Call the UMTG office at 545-0415 or Tara 546-2104 for more information.

Sunday, Feb. 9

Concert — Toccapsody, Rapsodie, Suite and Variations, music for solo and four-hand piano will be held at the Buckley Recital Hall at Amherst College at 3 p.m. Dana Muller (Amherst College music faculty) and Gary Steigerwalt (Mount Holyoke College music faculty), pianists; music of Franz Shubert, Maurice Ravel, Lewis Spratlan (Amherst College music faculty), Helen Hopekirk to be featured.

Notices

Astronomy — The Amherst Area Amateur Astronomers Association will hold free public planetarium shows at 4 p.m. every Saturday in February at Amherst College Bassett Planetarium. Appropriate for all ages. Dates: Feb. 1, 8, 15, 22. For information, call Tom Whitney at 256-6234.

Community — The Hampshire County Women, Infant and Children (WIC) Program has opened a new office serving the greater Amherst area, on 150 Fearing St., Amherst. Hampshire County WIC is a supplemental food and nutrition program serving eligible pregnant, breastfeeding and postpartum women and their infants and children under age 5. For more information, call (413)584–3591.

Dance — Cajun Dancing and Appalachian clogging beginner lessons will be offered on Sunday evenings from 6– 7 p.m. at 132 Elm St., Westfield. Partners are not needed and all ages are welcome. No prior dance experience is necessary. Classes are instructed by Maple Run, and non– profit dance group that performs at fairs and community functions. For more information, contact Jo Sarnelli at (413)746–9067.

Film — The interdepartmental program in film studies is offering its fourth annual Multicultural Film Festival: "Emigres, Exiles and Sojourners In Contemporary Cinema" this spring. Screenings and discussions with directors and faculty will be held on Wednesday evenings, 231 Herter Hall at UMass and Stirn Auditorium at Amherst College, at 7 p.m. The first event will be When Mother Comes Home for Christmas, a documentary by Nilita Vachani (Sri Lanka/Greece, 1995) on Feb. 25. For a full schedule, watch for brochures and posters at the beginning of February, or check out our webpage: www.umass.edu/film.

Film studies — Interested in earning a certificate in film studies? Take 18 credits in film and video courses and receive a film studies certificate (equivalent to a minor). Sign up at the beginning of the spring semester in the interdepartmental program in film studies office, 101 South College. Call 545–3659 or see webpage: www.umass.edu/film for more information.

Language — Casa Latina, the Center for Community Education and Culture, will conduct an 8–week Functional Spanish course, beginning February 18 at 7 p.m. in Northampton. Tuition is $260. Students will be divided into three small groups: beginners, intermediate and advanced. Classes will be taught by experienced language instructors who are also native Spanish speakers. For more information, contact Janet Gonzalez at 586–1569.

Outdoor program — Women Exploring the Outdoors will be conducting a series of outdoor adventure programs for women who are survivors of abuse. The focus of these day trips is to provide a comfortable environment within which women can increase their self–confidence, establish safe boundaries and experience their strength in the company of other survivors. All ages, abilities and levels of experience are welcome. Programs scheduled are: Snowshoeing on Sunday, Jan. 26, 8:30 a.m.–4:30 p.m., cost $25; A Day Hike in the Pioneer Valley on Sunday, April 13, 8:30 a.m.–4:30 p.m., cost $20; and Low and High Ropes Course on Sunday, May 4, 8:30 a.m.–4:30 p.m., cost $50. The cost for all three programs is $85. For more information, contact Adventures Unlimited at (413)774–3131 ext. 293.

Special Olympics — The North Valley Area Special Olympics is actively seeking special athletes for its spring sports teams. Athletes interested in candlepin bowling or basketball should contact the area office at (413)584–9377. There are roster positions available for special athletes ages seven and up. Newcomers are strongly encouraged to join, and parents are invited to call with any questions.

Support group — A Women in Relationships Therapy Group, an ongoing therapy and support group for women who want to improve difficult relationships with friends, parents, children and colleagues, lovers or partners, led by Rebecca Reid, will meet Mondays from 7:30–9 p.m. in Amherst. Sliding scale fee. For information call 253–5494.

Volunteer work — The Family & Youth Mediation Program of the Center for Human Development (CHD) is offering a 36 hour training for volunteer community mediators. The only cost to those accepted for training is a commitment to mediate a minimum of one case per month for one year for the program. Training will run several week nights and two consecutive weekends starting April 7. Those interested should contact Kathy Hall or Andrea Raphael at (413)733–6624 for an application as soon as possible. Deadline for application is February 15.

Campus Police Log

Accident — Leaving the Scene
Dec. 31
The operator of a motor vehicle was located and cited on Governors Drive after striking a parked vehicle in parking lot 31.
Jan. 3
Minor damage occurred to a vehicle in parking lot 67 on Mullins Way.

Accident — Property Damage
Jan. 9
An individual reported dents in his vehicle which occurred in parking lot 12 on Forestry Way.
Jan. 10
A vehicle slid into a curb on North Pleasant Street. The Amherst Police Department was notified.

Annoying Behavior
Dec. 31
The owner of a parked vehicle with its horn stuck in at Lincoln Apartments was notified.

Assault & Battery
Jan. 13
An individual reported being punched by an unknown individual during a pickup basketball game at Boyden Gymnasium.

Assist Agency
Jan. 13
Amherst police were notified of a three vehicle accident on Massachusetts Avenue.

Burglary/Breaking and Entering
Jan. 4
An entry was made into a room in Prince Residence Hall. Nothing was reported stolen.
Jan. 8
There was a report of an individual attempting to enter Butterfield Residence Hall through a front window.

Disorderly Conduct
Jan. 13
There was a report of a fight involving two individuals on a basketball court in Boyden Gymnasium, who then left the area.

Family Offenses, Domestics
Jan. 3
A verbal argument was reported from Lincoln Apartments.

Health/Safety Hazard
Jan. 18
The odor of oil discovered in the main lobby in Whitmore Administration Building was reported to Environmental Health & Services.
Jan. 20
A minor gas leak in Goessmann Laboratory was reported to Environmental Health & Services.

Larceny
Dec. 26
A bicycle was stolen from Lincoln Apartments.
Dec. 27
A report of two jackets being stolen from lockers was made from the Mullins Center.
Jan. 1
A bicycle was stolen from Holdsworth Hall.
Jan. 2
Staff from the Mullins Center reported that a sign was stolen. After a follow–up investigation, the sign was recovered at a private residence.
Jan. 7
An individual in James Residence Hall reported unauthorized use of her credit card.
Jan. 9
An individual reported that her purse was stolen from the Campus Center Coffee Shop.
Jan. 14
A laptop computer was reported missing from Goodell Building.
Jan. 16
A staff member from the second floor of the Whitmore Administration Building reported personal items had been stolen out of his desk.

Traffic Stop
Jan. 14
Patrick H. Brown, 28, of 250 Jackson St., Northampton, was stopped on Commonwealth Avenue and arrested for driving with a suspended license.
A juvenile was stopped on East Pleasant Street and arrested for driving outside of marked lanes, operation of a motor vehicle in violation of a license restriction, person under 21 possession/transport of liquor, possession of a Class D substance and operation under the influence of liquor. The passenger of the vehicle was taken into protective custody.

Vandalism
Jan. 8
A windshield was smashed on a vehicle in parking lot 13 on Authority Way.
Jan. 15
A car was reportedly vandalized on Fearing Street.

Check out the Collegian's fresh graphically enhanced website at www.umass.edu/rso/colegian

Spott Computer, Inc

We are SPOTT COMPUTERS, a local computer company making and servicing computers for the greater Amherst community.

OUR BASIC SYSTEM INCLUDES THE HARDWARE NEEDED TO EXPLORE THE INTERNET AND ACCESS THE EVER EXPANDING GALAXY OF CD-ROM

MULTIMEDIA SYSTEM
~ 586 133 MHZ ~
~ 256 PIPELINE BURST CACHE ~
~ 16 MB EDO RAM ~
~ 6x CD ROM ~
~ 850 MB HARD DRIVE ~
~ 5 SLOTS-MID TOWER ~
~16 BIT SOUND CARD ~
~ 14.4 INTER/VOICE FAXMODEM ~
~ 104 KEYBOARD ~
~ 14" SVGA MONITOR ~
~ 60 WATT SPEAKERS ~ ~ MOUSE ~
$1,250.00

CUSTOM CONFIGURATIONS
Built to order

SYSTEM UPGRADE
Hardware~Software
Parts & Accessories

REPAIR
Trouble Shooting
Fix-It

Wow! I can make music on my PC

When your mail order computer breaks, who is going to fix it?

You can order a computer from one of those fancy mail order joints somewhere in the Mid-West with the 800 number and order takers with the names like "Kyle" OK.. so your name is Kyle: come prove it to us and we'll give you 5% off any system you purchase from Spott

When your computer arrives with a part missing, or the monitor is broken, you can package it all up and ship it back..... and wait for it to be replaced.... and wait.....and wait.....
Or you can see us and customize the system best suited for your needs and pocketbook quickly.... and servicing or upgrades can get done immediately!

See Spot Run
SPOTT COMPUTER, INC.
19 Pray Street
Amherst, MA 01004

Call us at 549-6780

UNIVERSITY STORE'S Textbook Annex UMASS AMHERST

CASH FOR YOUR

Textbook Buyback will be at
The University Store
Campus Center

Monday through Friday
January 27 - January 31
9 AM to 5 PM

Monday and Tuesday
February 1 - February 2
9 AM to 5 PM

Old Chapel restoration planned

KENNETH W.P. SCOTT/ COLLEGIAN

Experts estimate the Old Chapel will require $1 million worth of repairs.

By Christina Poletto
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts is currently formulating plans to repair and restore the historic Old Chapel clock tower that has overlooked the Amherst campus for over 100 years at an estimated cost of $1 million.

What began as a preparatory investigation for the replacement of the faces of the tower clock turned into a more comprehensive examination following discovery of structural cracks. Further reports have shown that additional structural problems exist in the surrounding area of the belfry and the spire.

"The clock tower was last re–pointed in 1941, and minor repairs have been made over time," said James Cahill, director of Facilities Planning at UMass in a press release.

"This type of structural deterioration however, is not easily detected," Cahill said. "It can only be discovered by a careful, thorough investigation. What we thought was localized deterioration kept getting worse and worse as we moved further up the spire."

According to Cahill's press statement, the problem which was found in the cast iron framework that supports the tower is characteristic of old, Victorian edifices. Deterioration problems of this framework can be attributed to the years of harsh treatment the chapel has withstood, and the water penetration and "freeze/thaw" effect that's expected of New England's seasonal changes.

"This has resulted in the movement of the inner and outer masonry layers of the tower, causing cracking and displacement of the structure," Cahill said.

Preparations for the stabilization of the tower began immediately once structural complications were discovered.

According to the press release, bands will be placed at intervals around the structure, and encased in netting to keep the tower and the stonework intact. Installed already is a fence in the area around the tower.

A short term stabilization, beginning with the encasing, will give the University opportunity to prepare more detailed plans for the comprehensive restoration. These short–term stabilization measures that have been taken are expected to cost under $20,000.

According to Cahill, stabilization funding is available in the Facilities Planning budget, but sources of additional funding for the complete revamping of the tower are uncertain at this point.

Because of the physical importance and the historical value of the Old Chapel to the Amherst and Pioneer Valley populace, additional funding is hoped to be acquired from other sources.

The project would most likely require the complete dismantling of the tower from the belfry all the way upwards to the spire. It will then be rebuilt stone by stone. Estimates have predicted the cost of repairs to fall slightly below $1 million.

Although the remaining stonework of the Old Chapel could advantage from a few secondary repairs, it presently remains structurally intact, according to the press release.

The Old Chapel has a history that dates back over 100 years. This chronicle began in 1884 when the very first cornerstone of the building was officially placed. For years this granite and brownstone structure served as the library and chapel for the Massachusetts Agricultural College, now the University.

In 1892, the tower was adorned with a tower clock and bell. The 10–bell chime was affixed in 1937.

For numerous years, the building has served the UMass campus as a library as well as a location for lectures and military drills. In more recent times though, Continuing Education's Performing Arts division, the UMass Music Department and the Minuteman Marching Band have resided within Old Chapel's walls. There is no comment yet as to whether the Marching Band or Continuing Education Departments will be re–located during Chapel repairs.

UMass introduces interim ID cards

All students will receive new campus-wide cards in the fall

By Leigh Faulkner
Collegian Staff

Students who are issued picture IDs during the spring semester at the University of Massachusetts will be among the first group of students to receive the new ID cards produced by the AT&T All Campus Card System.

The "interim" card will include the student's picture, name, student identification number, a campus scene, a library barcode and the words "Valid thru Aug. 1997."

Campus departments should accept the interim ID as long as they are validated with the correct semester sticker.

Linda Overing, the Campus Card manager, explained that even students who receive new IDs this semester will receive new IDs again in September.

"It's important to note that these are interim IDs," Overing said. "Our goal is to move towards permanent IDs in the fall."

According to Overing, the purpose of delaying the distribution of the permanent IDs to the entire student body until September is that it "allows us to coordinate the implementation of a more secure numbering system for the card and to install electronic readers."

The interim IDs will operate the same as present UMass IDs.

"The new IDs are being manufactured on campus with the new equipment purchased with the AT&T system," Overing said.

The picture on the ID will be taken with the System's new DataCard Digital Camera. An advantage to having a digitized photo, according to Overing, is that the computer– stored photos can be used as an easy replacement for lost student IDs.

Photographs of individuals who have their photo taken now for new ID cards are being stored, and the same picture will be used on the permanent card they receive in the fall.

"During the spring semester, we will be announcing options for people to get pictures taken for the new IDs which we will be issuing in the fall," Overing said.

Faculty and staff re–carding will begin in February.

In the fall semester, students will not be charged for the new ID cards.

The current replacement fee, however, for a lost card will remain $15.

One of the major differences between the interim card and the cards that will be issued in the fall is the interim ID still requires a valid spring semester sticker.

"The permanent card will have more capabilities," Overing said. "It will function the same as now, but students will no longer need validation stickers each semester. Dining hall employees and administrators will be able to validate the status of students.

"These [electronic] readers will be able to validate the status of a card holder, eliminating stickers on the new ID card."

The long term goal of having the new cards is to be able to use them all over campus — from stores to the new library barcode.

"We are very happy to have the bar code embedded on the new IDs," said Betty Brace, head of circulation and access services at the W.E.B. DuBois library said.

Brace explained that by having the barcodes embedded in the ID means "stickers will not be destroyed or wear off the students ID's. The UMass library system as well as the other four colleges all depend on the bar codes."

Brace said that there will no problems when students receive their new bar codes because the bar codes are listed under the students' accounts.

"Each student could have 40 different bar codes and there would still be no confusion," Brace said.

According to Overing, the All Campus Card system, which will be up and running in September, will also allow students and staff the option of opening a debit account with the card to allow the purchasing of items from campus retail, food and vending operations.

"We have already contacted retail outlets on campus to participate," Overing said.

Hi–tech UMass professor awarded grant

By Tamar Carroll
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts chemical engineering professor Michael Tsapatsis has been named a recent recipient of a five–year $500,000 Packard Fellowship which will allow him to continue his work and explore new directions in the area of crystal growth.

"This award is really a nice gift, since it's the only grant I have in which I am relatively free to do new things," said Tsapatsis.

Now in his third year at UMass, Tsapatsis has been working on synthesizing films of molecular sieves. These molecular sieves consist of molecules such as aluminum silicates whose crystalline structure allows them to act as filters in selecting hydrocarbons and other molecules in reactions.

This ability to selectively separate molecules makes molecular sieves valuable in a variety of applications, including the petrochemical, electronic and optical industries.

Previously, molecular sieves have been available only in powder form. Tsapatsis and his research group are the first to produce molecular sieves as films, a more useful format for industrial applications.

"The problem is getting the molecules properly aligned, to eliminate grain barriers," explained Tsapatsis. "Our research has come a long way since we first began, but it will be many years before the technique is perfected. However, we are already at a level where companies are becoming interested, and we may be able to have applications in a couple of years."

These applications would allow

Turn to GRANT, page 13

TOTAL FITNESS: without waiting in line!

"Big enough to own the best equipment but small enough to know your name"

NAUTILUS FREE WEIGHTS KELSER CYBEX

CLASSES
Sunday 11:00 a.m.
Mon, Wed, Fri 5:30 p.m.
Tu, Th 9:00 a.m.
4:15 p.m.
5:30 p.m.
Saturday 9:00 a.m.
10:15 p.m.

HOURS
Sunday 11-3
Mon, Wed 7-7
Tu, Th 9-9
Friday 7-7
Saturday 9-5

RATES
1 month $49
3 months $129
6 months $229
12 months $389
student special
4 months $139

AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0080 open 7 days
Rt 116, South Amherst on bus route

Welcome Back College Students!

Aubuchon Hardware welcomes you with all your dorm and apartment needs:

✔Outlet Strips & Surge Protectors ✔Desk Lamps
✔Small Appliances & Fans
✔Padlocks
✔Key Copies
✔Picture Hangers
✔Mounting Putty
✔Tapes from Scotch to Duct
✔Shelving ✔Tools
✔Automotive Supplies
✔Bike Locks
✔Door Mirrors
✔Self Adhesive Hooks

AUBUCHON HARDWARE

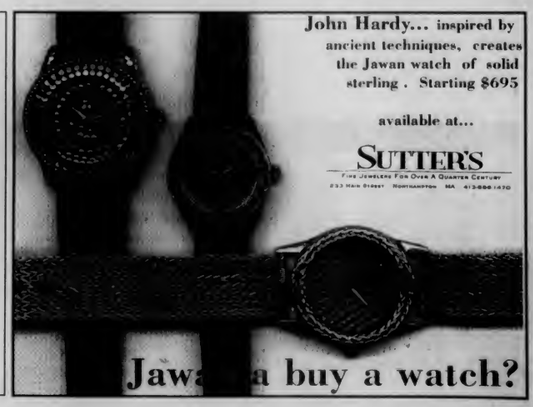
Aubuchon Hardware
452 Russell Street
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 256-3000
next to stop and shop

Call for our open early - open late hours

Don Gleason's

Outdoor garb from North Face, Columbia and Carhartt

Rest well after selecting from over 100 different sleeping bags, and over 50 foam pads and air mats.



Choose from Hundreds of Fannypacks, Daypacks, Internal, External and Travel Packs on display.

Visit our second floor display . Over 30 full size tents on display year round. Come in and help us welcome the 1997 new models as they arrive.

We have thousands of camping gadgets to make your next camping trip more fun!

A BLOCK SOUTH OF MAIN STREET, OFF PLEASANT ST., ON PEARL St., NORTHAMPTON, Phone 584-4895,
Hours: Weekdays 9-5:30, Thurs.til 8:30, Sat.9-5:30

John Hardy... inspired by ancient techniques, creates the Jawan watch of solid sterling . Starting $695 available at...

SUTTER'S
FINE JEWELERS FOR OVER A QUARTER CENTURY
253 MAIN STREET NORTHAMPTON MA 413-586-1470

Jawa a buy a watch?

DAILY COLLEGIAN

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01002 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592
http://www.umass.edu/rso/collegian

Jacob W. Michaels Editor-in-Chief Chris Taylor Conner Managing Editor
Alycia Hines Business Manager Josh Sylvester Production Manager Craig J. Brody Advertising Manager
David Voldan Advertising Production Manager Lisa Chiu Senior Diversity Editor

Jeremy Brothers Arts & Living Editor
Humphrey brown III Black Affairs Editor
Lisa Chiu Developing Nations Editor
Mike Burke Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jamie Sinsheimer Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sarah Kimmel Jewish Affairs Editor
Raghuram Vadarevu Multicultural Affairs Co-Editor
Christine Soh Multicultural Affairs Co-Editor
Laura Stock News Editor
Thang Vo Photography Editor
Casey Kane Sports Co-Editor
Chris Stamm Sports Co-Editor

Michelle Hillman Women's Issues Editor
Marc Dionne Editorial Production Manager
Sean Horgan Systems Manager
Eric R. Remillard IV Finance Manager
Position Vacant Circulation Manager
Feisal Ahmad Marketing Manager
Jaclyn E. Alberti Classifieds Manager
Lyle A. Henry Operations Manager
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Thomas F. Sweeney, Jr. Graphics Advisor/Instructor
David Quist Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Deception needed to fight deception

Mark McGrath

If you've ever heard of the Food Lion Supermarket chain, it's probably because of a report broadcast a few years ago on the weekly ABC news program "PrimeTime Live." In an investigative report, "PrimeTime Live" revealed to the American public some very unsanitary and deceptive practices employed by the company — including incidences of tampering with expiration dates and repackaging unsold and expired meat.

Because of the exposé, the company lost up to $2.5 billion in sales and decreased stock value. The fact that Food Lion decided to sue ABC and the show's producers came as no surprise, but the nature of the suit and some of the preliminary results have sent shockwaves through the journalistic world. The suit involves not the content of the story, but the methods used in breaking it, and thus far Food Lion has come out on top.

Having journalists go undercover as food handlers at the company and using hidden cameras to catch wrongdoings on tape was apparently going too far to get a story, because ABC and the producers of "PrimeTime Live" have been sued for fraud, trespassing and deceptive trade practices, among other things, none of which include libel. In a preliminary decision, a federal jury in Greensboro, N.C. has ruled in favor of the supermarket chain.

And so may end an era.

While there are now enough investigative news programs to annoy just about every television viewer in the country; enough to turn public opinion against their entire genre; and enough that only on sensationalism and deceit to pull viewers in, they do perform a necessary function in our society — they keep an eye out for the people.

They make tapes of daycare workers hitting babies. They show the public how employees in fast food chains don't wash their hands. They make the public aware when automobile and aircraft manufacturers take shortcuts in the name of cutting costs at the cost of public safety. And every once in a while, they hit a story on the head, providing a priceless service to the public who may or may not even watch them.

Everyone who is taking part in a shady activity has something to fear, and their behavior is undoubtedly modified by the presence of these watchdogs. No entity, public or private, can afford the negative press that comes with such an exposé, especially if they have something to hide. Food Lion had something to hide.

While the methods used in exposing Food Lion were indeed deceptive, and intentionally so, the ends certainly justified the means. Had "PrimeTime Live" announced the visits, they would have been refused admission or would have been greeted with a perfect operation. Acts of shadiness are rarely done in public and hardly ever in front of a camera. Thus, deception is needed to counter deception in the battle for the truth.

In cases where the welfare of the American people is concerned, the truth needs to be discovered. Just because a crime against the public may occur behind closed doors does not make it excusable. If the proper governmental authorities (FDA, Boards of Health) are unable to properly protect the people they serve, as seems to be the case here, someone must.

Much of the trouble with federal regulation of public safety issues lies in the fact that the government itself is a highly corrupt institution and has been known to employ similar practices in pulling the wool over the public's eyes. To put the good of the public in Washington's hands is, in many cases, to give a fox charge of the chicken coop.

Our founding fathers saw the problems that come with limiting the freedom of the press, so they guarded it in the Bill of Rights. A free and independent press helps to protect people from both the government and establishments like Food Lion, which claims that its right to privacy outweighs the public's right to know.

Yes, there is something to be said for privacy. Everyone deserves privacy in their own personal lives. But that right is forfeited when a person or company begins to provide a service for a public consisting of people who themselves are not allowed to know what happens behind the scenes.

Even when shaking our heads in disgust at pseudo-news sources like "Hard Copy," "A Current Affair" and trashy publications like the National Enquirer, we must remember that they are but a broken arm of the press, and that inhibiting them or any other part of the greater body affects every limb of the American press. One day, the courts may so govern aspects of the press that it may be said there is no more freedom.

Very quietly, American citizens may have begun to lose one of the forces working for their own good. Investigative journalism, while many see it as invasive and sensationalist, does have a place in our lives. If common people are being cheated or taken advantage of,– if they are being fed lies by corporate America or the government, odds are that there will be a reporter there to break the story… that is unless that reporter is prevented from doing his or her job.

Mark McGrath is a Collegian columnist.

Opinion/Editorial

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Corned beef rehash for the New Year

C. Taylor Conner

Quit smoking. Lose weight. Toss out Spin Doctors disc.

These are a few of the most common New Year's resolutions to which people commit. And mine, you ask?

Why, to keep up a string of fresh and original humor columns… by writing a complete rehash of last year's "Wish List."

Enjoy, folks. And for God's sake, dispose of the now–chunky egg nog in the back of your fridge, you slob.

• Michael Jackson's vitiligo advances to its final and most terrifying stage when the singer's skin becomes wholly translucent. Fans are mortified at 1997 photos in several tabloids in which the bare–chested entertainer's major organs are fully revealed as a result of the progressing disease.

In addition, the Jackson child becomes the youngest psychiatric patient in history as its bi–racial complex — a white mother and see–through father — defies all known boundaries of modern psychotherapy.

• The entire Middle East peace process comes to a merry close when, upon a visit to the region, Tom Cruise manages to convert everyone — be they Jewish, Muslim, Coptic Christian or other — to Scientology. Within months, the vast, newly pacifist land is dubbed El Ronhubbard, which is loosely translated as "our god, the ex–hack sci–fi writer."

However, a new conflict develops when, as in America, only the wealthy can afford to "ascend" to the higher steps of consciousness, which notoriously cost a tad more per level. Accordingly, the Jimmy Carter of Scientologist negotiators, John Travolta, is later sent in to alleviate tension.

• Upon his release from jail, Death Row Records head Suge Knight emphatically demands that all of his artists cease their present styles and delve into his new genre, dubbed by the media "prison rap."

The constant references to soap, showers and some guy named Bubba — ones Knight insists must be included — alienate many of the label's current performers, most of whom sneak out Death Row's back door. No pun intended.

• Frustrated by sagging ratings and an increasingly nasty cynical attitude, David Letterman finally loses his marbles, opting for a series of outlandish stunts to boost his stock. Bits such as "Syphilitic Boy" and "Stupid Corpse Tricks" fail to amuse most as a deeply bewildered and frightened CBS abruptly pulls the plug on their multi–million dollar man.

Toward the end of the year, Dave rebounds big time, landing the hosting job on a long–running late–night show on the network which spurned him years ago. Yes, Dave becomes the head honcho on "Friday Night Videos."

• The Bible is finally outsold worldwide — in the United States alone — as Stephen King releases his latest work, a serialized novel which extends well past the turn of the century. A new "chapter," each of which is comprised of one page of text containing one word in really large print, is released each day, thus forcing loyal fans to make at least 567 purchases before they even learn the protagonist's first name.

Meanwhile, the prolific King finds time to write, publish and sell the film rights to 35 other books, all of which are made into atrocious movies starring a cavalcade of actors who either needed the coke money or never had a shot in hell of making it anyway.

• Chelsea Clinton drops out of college within her first month of attendance following repeated annoying behavior by the Secret Service agents assigned her. Among the disturbances are the snipers hiding in her freshman writing auditorium, the random cavity searches performed on her roommate and, anytime before the First Daughter gets busy with a gentleman caller, the patting down of all rigid objects on the pool kid.

In a Patti Davis–like act of rebellion, the enraged only child poses nude for Playboy, causing many faithful readers to appreciate the Sandra Bernhard spread. Chelsea's dad cancels his subscription as well, but remains a dedicated Larry Flynt man.

• Signs of Aerosmith's renewed drug use begin to become apparent when the smack–hazed supergroup accidentally rerecords all of Toys in the Attic in their latest sessions. It is later revealed that Steve Tyler mistakenly slept with daughter Liv, but cleverly told her he was Todd Rundgren.

The final tip–off is the press conference where Tyler announces the band's plans to hook up with Kurtis Blow and the Fat Boys for remakes of "Dream On" and "Mama Kin," respectively.

C. Taylor Conner is a Collegian columnist.

Oh no! Another Jackie O!

Seema Gangatirkar

Last Monday, William Jefferson Clinton took the oath of office for the second time. By his side, of course, was his wife, Hillary Rodham Clinton, pretty in pink.

If you checked out any of the coverage of the Inaugural festivities, you may have noticed that Mrs. Clinton's ensemble for the day garnered almost as much attention as the President's oath taking.

The outfit, consisting of a pink wool suit and matching overcoat, was designed by Oscar de la Renta. It was simple, pretty and, most importantly, feminine.

Despite the strides women have made in society, we are still kept down, still berated into maintaining our feminine side. Mrs. Clinton exemplifies this philosophy clearly.

When she first entered the White House four years ago, she was harshly criticized for her severe, business–like suit. Perhaps, at the time, Mrs. Clinton hadn't quite acquired the "taste" or "elegance" necessary for the First Lady of the United States. But unlike previous First Ladies, Mrs. Clinton came with a strong sense of individuality.

Mrs. Clinton never had the intention of being merely window–dressing to her husband's success. Instead, when she appeared at the Inaugural four years ago, she projected the image of a confident and strong woman.

The press disregarded her intellectual and leadership abilities and instead focused on the checked suit and bowler hat. Mrs. Clinton had been properly chastised, and this year she did not make the same mistake.

"What a difference between four years ago and today. Her growth process is really quite remarkable," said Stanley Herman, president of the Council of Fashion Designers of America in New York.

Makes you wonder what Herman was referring to. Was it that Mrs. Clinton finally managed to put together an outfit that the country approves of? That this woman who was the first commencement speaker at Wellesley College in 1969 and earned a law degree from Yale is nothing but a clothes– horse? Or that after four years and countless controversies in the White House, the most Mrs. Clinton can claim is "growth" in her wardrobe?

The truth is, a woman's worth is not necessarily judged by her brain, efficiency or capabilities. Rather, how a woman dresses is much more important than a stellar education.

Probably what is most disturbing is that very few people give Mrs. Clinton credit for her intelligence or the fact that she succeeded in a male–dominated profession, namely law.

Instead she is reduced to a level that makes her little more than a walking fashion plate, similar to the role occupied by Princess Diana.

Mrs. Clinton's real "growth" experience was not that she learned how to dress better or how to wear her hair or even how to carry herself more elegantly.

Rather she took a gigantic step backward, and in the process took a whole generation of women with her.

And the blame doesn't belong to Mrs. Clinton. The press clobbered her into submission, crucifying her in the media. Along the way Mrs. Clinton stopped being how she was and started acting the way the American public wants a First Lady to act.

You might as well advertise for a First Lady, saying that no career women allowed, only fashion models need apply.

So you haven't heard much out of Hillary Rodham Clinton lately. She now stands a respectful distance behind her husband, the President, and beams proudly as he takes his oath. She could have had a lot to say — and some may say that she's said enough already. So she says nothing at all.

But the truth is, America isn't ready for an independent First Lady. What people want is another Jackie Kennedy, someone who is pretty and charming, but utterly without her own ambition.

We've come a long way, baby, but not far enough.

Seema Gangatirkar is a Collegian columnist.

The shining path to freedom

Mike Burke

"Brothers and sisters of Peru, we are heading towards peace with social justice and for freedom of the press, for freedom for all the political prisoners… Tupac Amaru is free-dom!"

— MRTA Communique #5 1/8/97

For the last month, the international media has fixated its closed eyes on the Peruvian city of Lima, where the revolutionary group Movemiento Revolucionario de Tupac Amaru (MRTA) took hostage of 400 international dignitaries inside the Japanese embassy.

The surprise attack should come as no shock upon examination of Alberto Fujimori's policies that have crushed opposition groups while babying foreign investment — at the cost of personal freedom and civil liberties of the massive poor class in Peru.

Fujimori has successfully lowered inflation from its 1990 high of 7650 percent to the current level of ten percent. Two years ago the Gross Domestic Product led the international community at a whopping 13 percent.

These numbers excited foreign investors who rushed into Lima; unfortunately no one looked out for the state of the Peruvian poor. Currently half of Peru's 24 million population is in poverty; 85 percent of workers do not work full time; and 93 percent of school–aged children do not have textbooks. The foreign money spreads no further than Fujimori's pocketbook. Since Fujimori took power, poverty has increased from 46 percent to 49 percent.

But Fujimori's neo–liberal policies have delighted the Japanese and Americans investors, as well as the minuscule Peruvian upper class, while angering the revolutionary MRTA who sight the end of neo–liberalism as one of their two main goals.

The MRTA also demands the government to free MRTA political prisoners. In an effort to halt terrorism of both the MRTA and the Shining Path, a Maoist revolutionary group, Fujimori has taken over 9,000 political prisoners.

To weaken the power of the press, Fujimori imprisoned or killed most anti–government journalists. Currently 70 such "radicals" are imprisoned; not all journalists have been so lucky — one 22–year–old journalist, Melissa Alfaro, died due to a letter bomb sent by a government intelligence agency.

Fujimori, in an act that would please Newt Gingrich, vastly expanded the Peruvian prison system — building new jails specifically designed to both physically and psychologically destroy prisoners.

Two prisons, Callao and Yanamayo, stand out for their severe harshness.

Callao, located on a Lima navy base, holds prisoners in tiny cells 24 feet underground. The cells offer no natural light, heat, or contact with the real world. Fujimori once described Callao as a "prison tomb… the place where [prisoners] rot and only come out when they are dead."

Yanamayo, built at an elevation of 11,000 feet in the Andes Mountains, offers an even harsher reality. Without heat or windows, prisoners suffer in sub–freezing temperatures with nothing more than a small blanket. Pairs of prisoners share cells barely large enough for one.

All prisoners at Callao, Yanamayo and other prisons spend their first year in complete isolation in their cell; after this initial period, prisoners are granted 30 minutes outside their cell per day. Only family members are allowed visitation rights. No radios, magazines or newspapers are permitted either.

With the majority of the group in prison, Fujimori's anti– terrorism policies have taken their hold on the MRTA. If nothing else, the Dec. 17 seize will open eyes to Fujimori's reign of injustice and possibly revive the revolutionary, anti– government feelings that are needed for Peru to become truly free.

Mike Burke is a Collegian columnist.

Letters to the Editor

Missing: the Declaration of Independence

To the Editor:

It is easy to gaze at the groundswell of urban problems today — unemployment, drug addiction, violence — as symptoms of moral decline among many people. And while no one is absolved from responsibility for his or her life, what about the responsibilities of government towards all its citizens? Has our government forgotten the pledge enshrined within the Declaration of Independence that everyone has a right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness?

As such, one of the most glaring, albeit underpublicized, failings of the elected officials in the Capitol is their lack of any real urban policy. Many will cite the fiscal problems in this country as barring any wholesale move to make our cities more habitable. But we are a wealthy nation; where did the money go?

Those lamenting the state of the government's finances generally fail to point out the military budget is wastefully bloated or claim the public opts for national security over cuts. But 59 percent of those questioned in 1992 called for a 50 percent reduction in military expenditures by 1997. The $70 billion savings could fuel a massive urban recovery project and make the U.S. a shining model.

Regarding those living on the margins — the homeless, the underemployed, the untrained — some will argue that they are not government's burden. Yet a 1994 New York Times" poll showed most Americans want government to "take responsibility for the poor." Those harping about the public's weariness about helping seldom mention that 84 percent want a surtax on millionaires. The public has a right to be weary when the government, the corporations and the well–off shred the social contract. But we still need to speak up and demand changes.

R. Jay Allain
Springfield

Welcome back! We are currently looking for new columnists for the Ed / Op page, especially if you are well versed in current events both nationally and internationally. We do want to hear your opinion as do the 17,000 other daily readers of the Collegian. If interested, please come down and talk with Mike Burke.

Letters to the Editor are also encouraged and can be mailed to: Letters to the Editor/ 113 Campus Center – UMass / Amherst, MA 01003.

Diversity 102

Tuesday, January 28, 1997

Funding and Ebonics: not new ideas;
Insight into larger historical educational problems

By Raghuram Vadarevu
Collegian Staff

News Analysis

In 1992, the Asian, Latino, African–American and Native– American (ALANA) community at the University of Massachusetts had a reason to celebrate; they successfully waged a protest that would force a University administration commitment to improving the climate for ALANA students.

The administration made commitments in response to student demands for, among other things, the number of faculty of color; the number of students of color; and the rate of retention for students of color.

More than four years later, the administration has fallen well short of their commitments. The administration will say they have made substantial progress, while many students disagree. One, of the many, concerns among students of color is that of retention.

According to the Office of Institutional Research and Planning (OIRP), the percentage of entering ALANA freshmen in Fall 1995 who were not retained from their first year to their second in Fall 1996, was 24 percent; 22 percent of white students were not retained. Can this figure be accurate considering the lack of funding given to many ALANA academic and support services?

Upon further scrutiny of the percentages, one will come to a startling realization. The 22 percent of white students who were not retained is not an accurate number because it includes those students who did not designate an ethnicity or chose to designate "other." These students now called, non– reporting students, were added to the retention rate of the non–ALANA students.

What advantage can this have for the administration? Now they do not have any reason to increase funding for ALANA support services because the retention rates among whites and students of color are seemingly equal. However, many ALANA advisors and students contend that they are short staffed and under–funded. Under these conditions, it is no wonder why retention rates among student of color are lower than those of their white counterparts.

In a special report on advising conducted by the Collegian last semester, ALANA students were shown to be dissatisfied with the quality of advising and representation on campus. They singled out funding as a key issue in improving retention among students of color.

Specifically programs such as the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students (CCEBMS), Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP) and United Asia Learning Resource Center (UALRC) have been neglected by the administration, according to many ALANA students.

"If this school can have money for teams like hockey, water polo, lacrosse, and horseback riding, than they can invest more money in really leveling our 'playing field'," said Student Government Association (SGA) ALANA Caucus Sen. Laura Lopez in the Collegian report. "When [we are] talking about these sports teams the money is considered an 'investment,' but when our cultural support centers ask for more funding, the money is considered a 'hand–out'."

Many of the ALANA students are echoing Lopez's sentiments and are faced with limited access to programs that could increase retention while having to deal with the usual problems of financial aid. The problem of funding for the ALANA academic support programs is not a new one and has been a staple of the American education system.

All across the country, the dominant issues in inner cities and areas where people of color and low–income wage earners reside is that of funding to deal with the dilapidated school buildings and outdated books and learning materials. Consequently, many educators around the country have been forced to come up with creative solutions to help their children deal with a system that has consistently denied them equal access to education.

Ebonics in Oakland: temporary relief, not a new idea

A recent example of this are the efforts made by the Oakland–Unified School District (OUSD) in December, 1996. Facing the same funding problems as many urban centers in the country, the OUSD unanimously approved a comprehensive plan that mandated the creation of instructional strategies that would utilize Ebonics, or "black English," as a tool to "ensure that every child has the opportunity to achieve [standard] English language proficiency," according the OUSD report.

According to proponents of the initiative, it was enacted to counter the disturbing trend in the OUSD, of low academic performance among African–American students who constitute 53 percent of the 51,706 total student population.. A study conducted by the school board found:

• 71 percent of African–American students are enrolled in special education classes.

Turn to EBONICS, page 7

UMass begins fifth year of stalling…

By Lisa Chiu & Christine Soh
Collegian Staff

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO
Students garner support at the Franklin Dining Commons Protest held during the 1995 Spring semester.

In the past five years, we've seen both the election and re– election of President Clinton, the end of apartheid in South Africa, five super bowls and two Olympic games. But at UMass, life for the administration is still business as usual…

Frau Burn still heads the International Programs Office, Grant Ingle still complains about the alienated white victims of multiculturalism, Tom Robinson continues to spout gibberish when asked about the ALANA agreements, and of course Chancellor David K. Scott still hides behind the petticoats.

This isn't the first time the Collegian has reported on the 1992 ALANA Agreements, and until the promised agreements are fulfilled, it will definitely not be the last.

Last fall, the Chancellor, in an attempt to duck the rotten vegetables and flying pies, ordered his henchpeople to dust off their copies of the ALANA Agreements and produce the semi–annual distortions of the progress on its implementation. On cue this past November, the king of doublespeak, the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, Tom Robinson, released a disingenuous report.

As you may recall, five years ago, following a series of racist events and ALANA student unrest, several ALANA students staged a massive take over of Memorial Hall, to protest the lack of administrative concern for the racial issues which erupted across campus. They also presented a list of seven demands to the UMass administration (see sidebar, page 9).

The result of these demands and ALANA takeover was a paranoid call to the Massachusetts Department of Justice by the UMass administration led by then Chancellor O'Brien and the current Vice Chancellor Robinson.

Tired and emotional, the student leaders of the protests were bamboozled into a series of meetings and discussions with the administration. A few weeks later, the ALANA agreement — a legally binding contract — was signed by the students, administration and representatives of the state.

The agreement promised to increase ALANA freshman student enrollment to 20 percent, hire more faculty of color and increase the retention of ALANA students. The administration created a new version of the under–funded Upward Bound program in an attempt to attract ALANA students from cities and towns in Massachusetts. The agreement also called for the establishment of an administration–funded Office of ALANA Affairs. Still today this office continues to be funded by student monies.

While the goals of the agreement are laudable, the original student demands were far more ambitious. Unfortunately, they have been watered down to the well known version of today. For example, the changes from the original demands to the new ones include a demand to achieve "a minimum of 30 percent minority representation" at the different levels of the University. Instead, UMass administrators successfully bargained down this number to a new goal of 20 percent ALANA enrollment in the freshman class.

According to the latest propaganda, the November 1996 update released by the administration, the percentage of ALANA students in the overall student body is 16.3 percent and for the freshman class, it is 20.7 percent. Yes, the administration actually claims that they've finally reached the goals.

But according to the Office of Institutional Research and Planning, another administrative office on campus which compiles all the statistics at the Amherst campus, the over–

Turn to STALLING, page 9

The complexity of Israel

One traveler's account of the Middle East

BRYAN SCHWARTZMAN / COLLEGIAN
The Western Wall and the Dome of the Rock

By Brian Schwartzman
Collegian Staff

JERUSALEM — There are few simple answers to the complex situations that exist in the Nation of Israel. This was the discovery I made while participating on a United Jewish Appeal (UJA) mission to Israel this winter/session along with 350 students from across the United States.

As an American Jew, the trip was a unique opportunity to rediscover the roots, history and beliefs behind my religion. As an American journalist, the trip provided access to one of the world's most tense areas, where opinions, especially within the Jewish community, are as diverse as the people who live there.

The religious, political and social overtones of the trip, in addition to speakers such as the Prime Minister of Israel and the Mayor of Jerusalem, at times proved to be quite overwhelming.

One day of the trip was focused on the relations between Israeli Jews and Israeli Arabs at the Seminar Center in Givat Haviva. The center, located several miles from the West Bank, is one of the few places in the country which serve as a place of open dialogue between Jews and Arabs.

One organizer of the center, a left wing Jewish woman in her mid–'60s, joined us on the bus heading towards the Israeli Arab village of Kfar–Ara, a few miles away. The bus drove along a main road through a flat part of the country with farmland intermittently interrupted by rocky hills.

As the bus signaled to make a right turn our guide from the center said, "most Jews would never stray from this main road," since many Jews choose not to frequent the Arab village.

As opposed to Palestinians who live in Occupied Territories, Israeli–Arabs are full citizens of Israel who maintain voting rights and the ability to hold public office. However Israeli–Arabs are not permitted to serve in the military because it could create a situation where they would be forced to fight Arabs from neighboring countries, with whom they share cultural and religious ties.

Since the Army is such an important part of Israeli life, by not serving Israel–Arabs are often at a disadvantage socially and economically.

The non–Jewish population of the state of Israel represents approximately 19 percent of the country's 5,460,000 people, according to the Central Bureau of Statistics.

The majority of the non–Jewish population is Moslem, but there are Christians, Druze, Bedouins and other groups. In addition to Hebrew, Arabic is also an official language of the state.

Despite foreign perception, there have been a mere handful of cases of terrorist acts by Israeli–Arabs since the formation of the state in 1948.

According to A Letter From Israel, a pamphlet published by the Israel Information Center in Jerusalem, "The participation of the minorities in the country's democratic processes attests to their civic affiliation. However, the development of normal relations between Jewish and Arab citizens of Israel has been hindered by differences in language and lifestyles as well as by the decades–long conflict between Israel and the Arab states, whose populations have strong ethnic, cultural and family ties with Arab citizens of Israel. The two populations live side by side, with contacts on economic, municipal and political levels, but with almost no social interaction."

The tour bus had difficulty making it through the narrow streets of Kfar–Ara. The houses in the village were distinct, being predominantly square shaped and having little vege–

Turn to ACCOUNT, page 6

Give peace a chance

Matt WURTZEL

Shortly after finals, I had the opportunity to visit Israel. While there, I met Israelis, and a subject often broached was the peace process. Most Israelis I spoke with believed that the process should continue. I heard lectures about the importance of the peace process from both conservatives and liberals. I even heard the opinions of a few Israeli Arabs as well.

Over a month ago Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and Palestinian Authority Leader Yasser Arafat reopened the peace talks that the late Yitzhak Rabin began almost five years ago. The talks between Netanyahu and Arafat culminated in the recent Israeli Defense Force pull of most of Hebron, the last West Bank city under Israeli control.

The American press greeted this inevitable pull out as something completely unexpected and out of character for Israel's new prime minister. The American press practically vilified Netanyahu when the people of Israel elected him in May. They declared it was the end of the peace process because Netanyahu is more hawkish than former Prime Minister Shimon Peres. However, despite Netanyahu's election, the process never ended. When elected, he never said it would end, but the American press basically ignored this.

Since Israelis seem to want peace, it is no wonder that the process resumed this month with their withdrawal from Hebron. The Middle East continues to move closer to peace, but hurdles remain. One such hurdle is Jerusalem. The Palestinians now are laying claim to the holiest city to Jews, Christians and Muslims.

However, the future of Jerusalem is one of a myriad of smaller problems when compared to the big picture. The sentiment that Israel has no right to exist, continues amongst many Israeli Arabs and Palestinians.

While in Israel, I and about 15 other students primarily from UMass visited the home of a young Arab Israeli woman while the rest of our group visited another home. She was about the same age as most of us, and she recently concluded studying at a university for a while. Now she teaches English at the local equivalent to a junior high school.

We spoke for over an hour while her mother who was extremely hospitable offered us drinks and snacks. We asked her about her life in Israel as an Arab, and she asked us about our lives here in the United States. We asked her why she dressed in modern Western clothes while other Arab women wore traditional cloth–

Turn to PEACE, page 6

The real life of Medger Evers

By Christine Soh
Collegian Staff

"We condemn other countries that deny freedom of the ballot, [but] we here in Mississippi, in the so called American way of life, are denied the right to vote."
— Medger Evers

Growing up in Decatur, Miss., Medgar Evers and his brother Charles were practically inseparable.

Though their personalities were different, living in the extremely segregated Mississippi Delta caused them to appreciate each other so much that even when Medgar broke their childhood vow to never marry, an action that Charles regarded as betrayal, their bond would still not be broken.

The people of Mississippi learned the ways of segregation by instinct. But for the Evers', it was the lynching of a childhood friend that would shape their understanding of the world and an experience abroad during World War II that would fortify their movement of segregation, its causes and its ramifications.

Medgar studied business administration at Alcorn Agricultural and Mechanical College, the main state college for black students in Mississippi. His activities there caused him to be listed in a national publication Who's Who Among Students in American Colleges and Universities in the 1950s. It was during this time that he met his wife–to–be Myrlie Beasley, from Vicksburg, Miss.

In the sweltering summer of 1952, Myrlie and Medgar moved to Mound Bayou, Miss. He was to take a position in an insurance company that was owned and operated by a black man. Mound Bayou was the only town in Mississippi to be founded, settled, and governed by blacks.

According to Maryanne Vollers in Ghosts of Mississippi, Mound Bayou was "a dull town, self–conscious and staid."

Medgar was completely absorbed in it. He had become acquainted with a man named Dr. Howard who had founded the Delta–based Regional Council of Negro Leadership, a sort of grassroots NAACP. There was also a Mound Bayou chapter of the NAACP which Medgar joined, in addition to the Regional Council in which he met many other veterans and activists who would be his allies for the rest of his life.

In January 1954, Evers applied to the University of Mississippi Law School with Thurgood Marshall acting

Turn to EVERS, page 9

Film haunted by ghosts of American consciousness

By Christine Soh
Collegian Staff

GHOSTS OF MISSISSIPPI
Directed by Rob Reiner
with Alec Baldwin, Whoopi Goldberg, James Woods Playing at Mountain Farms Four Theaters

Who killed Medgar Evers?

For decades the answer to this question remained unanswered due to two consecutive mistrials against Byron de Beckwith.

Beckwith was the chief suspect in the slaying of Evers, Mississippi's chief representative of the NAACP — a man noted for exceptional courage in an environment hostile towards change.

Though all of the evidence pointed to Beckwith, a known member of various white supremacy organizations, he would not be found guilty by a Mississippi jury until 30 years after the assassination of Evers and years after a successful civil rights movement would make its way through this Southern state.

The film Ghosts of Mississippi is about the third trial which convicts Beckwith and finally brings justice to what was said to be the most immutable and uncompromising of governments of the Southern states.

It is a revealing story of the international talked about trial, uncovering many of Mississippi's ghosts, who manifest themselves as racist and negative reactions to Assistant District Attorney Bobby DeLaughter's investigations which eventually would lead to the reopening of the trial against Beckwith. The ghosts of racism seem to be alive and well in Mississippi.

The film is accurate in its retelling of this long awaited incrimination but, unlike the book by Maryanne Vollers which the film is based on, Ghosts of Mississippi, it passes over the actual life of Medgar Evers and instead becomes as much a tribute to Attorney DeLaughter and the liberal white position on civil rights, as it is a tribute to the virtually unknown and abstract image of Civil Rights leader, Evers.

Perhaps there is a significance to this focus aside from Hollywood time limits (the film was already approximately two and a half hours).

By not focusing on the life of Medgar Evers the movie instead, solidifies the progress of America's white consciousness. It showed how this consciousness has evolved into one more tolerant of non–white cultures and conversely more judgmental of white supremacist beliefs. And like most of Hollywood these days, the "details" of history are left to the schools, which in turn tend to mythologize the more bitter side to our past.

Take, for example, the legacy of Dr. Martin Luther King, who has been reduced to memories of standing at a podium at the March On Washington, "celebrating" Martin Luther King day, and the words "I Have a Dream."

Turn to GHOST, page 9

If you lead, they will follow

Humphrey BROWN III

On the eve of Black History Month, African–Americans and seemingly all people of color have yet to overcome the vicious cycle of injustice and racism that seems to never end.

The beginning of 1997 brought with it little optimism as people of color, particularly black and Latino, are forced to deal with new welfare reform, a rebirth in the frequency of hate crimes and decreasing job opportunities despite an increase in minimum wage.

The controversy and media hype surrounding Ebonics has many people in the community feeling more alienated than ever. People aren't sure what to think. And now, that we've helped put President Clinton back in office for a second term (a lesser of two evils, but we like him anyway) no one is sure if he's going to do right by us or toss our concerns to the back burner, like so many presidents before him.

The feeling throughout this nation, among black people, is that of division. We are a nation divided without a sure leader to help take us to the next level. No one has yet to stand and pick up the torch left by Martin Luther King, Jr., Malcolm X or any other of the great leaders of yesterday.

Many felt that Louis Farrakhan was the one to lead us out of the darkness, particularly after the successful the Million Man March, but with all of his issues overseas in other countries, those of us here are

Turn to LEAD, page 8

Hebron protocol consolidates occupation of West Bank

Shyamala IVATURY & Hussein IBISH

Located in the center of the West Bank, the Palestinian city of Al-Khalil remains a focal point of the Israeli– Palestinian conflict. One of the largest and most important West Bank cities, Al-Khalil has been inhabited by Palestinians for thousands of years and has a population of over 160,000.

Also known as Hebron, this Palestinian city was occupied by Israel during the war of 1967, at a time when Al-Khalil was entirely inhabited by Palestinians. Many Jewish people consider Hebron an important holy site, second only to Jerusalem. The future of this Palestinian city arouses deep passions in the minds of many Zionists. Since 1967, there has been a systematic effort to take over the city, populate it with Zionist settlers, and incorporate it into Israel. Hence the presence of 400 heavily armed Zionist settlers in Al-Khalil's center, backed up by thousands of Israeli troops.

Over the years Al-Khalil has regularly caught the attention of the western media as the provocative presence of the settlers has created disturbances in the city, most notably a number of massacres committed by Zionist settler zealots.

The Israeli agreement to transfer authority in all of Al- Khalil to the Palestine National Authority (PNA) was an important aspect of the original Oslo Accords of 1992. But both the Labor and Likud governments refused to honor this agreement, which had supposedly been guaranteed by the United States, to withdraw all Israeli troops from Al-Khalil by March 1996.

When Benjamin Netanyahu came to power in June 1996, he unilaterally insisted on a complete renegotiation of all terms of the Hebron provisions of the Oslo Accords.

The previous Labor government's argument in favor of the Oslo redeployments had been that it was more efficient for Israel to govern the West Bank cities "from the outside" by controlling the countryside and the highways, while leaving city policing to a PNA police force.

Netanyahu's Likud party, on the other hand, holds that, on grounds of national morale and religious concerns, keeping complete control of West Bank cities such as Hebron is vital to Israel. Zionists have generally claimed possession of Palestine on the supposition that modern Jews are the descendants of the biblical Hebrews. Hence the Zionist ideology in many cases tends to focus on areas deemed to have had great historical and religious importance during biblical times, including Jerusalem and Hebron. Informed by this "national morale" ideology, Netanyahu insisted on the renegotiation of the Hebron provisions of the Oslo accord, with a specific view to keeping Israeli control of the holy sites, such as the "Tomb of the Patriarchs."

This resulted in the recently renegotiated and re-signed "Protocol Concerning the Redeployment in Hebron." The process of renegotiation was deliberately designed to humiliate Mr. Yasser Arafat and the PNA, and reaffirms the nature of the Israeli–Palestinian relationship as that of oppressor and oppressed. It also served to yet again demonstrate the worthlessness of United States "guarantees," especially for Palestinians. The new Protocol extends the radical failure of the Oslo Peace Process insofar as it fails to address the real causes of the conflict: expanding Israeli colonialism and the continuous denial of Palestinian human and national rights.

Zionist Logic and the Hebron Protocol

The Protocol on Hebron is emblematic of the racist logic of Zionism and the unchanged nature of the relationship between Palestinians and Israelis throughout this century.

It once again demonstrates the relative value of rights that Zionism assigns to Israelis and Palestinians. The 160,000 indigenous Palestinian inhabitants of Hebron are, under the accord, to be allow a measure of local autonomy in 80 percent of the city. On the other hand, the 400–odd heavily armed Zionist settlers, many from New York City, are granted control of 20 percent of the city, including the main market and economic center, the city center, and the important religious sites, holy to both Muslims and Jews. The armed settler's control of the city center is to be backed up by thousands of even more heavily armed Israeli troops.

This supremacist calculus, where the illegitimate and illegal activities of 400 Zionist interlopers take extreme precedence over the rights of an overwhelming majority of local Arab inhabitants, is entirely consistent with the historical pattern of Zionist logic.

Among the more notorious antecedents of the Hebron Protocol in this regard is the 1919 Balfour Declaration. In it the 93 percent Palestinian majority was dismissed as "existing non–Jewish communities in Palestine," with their national rights utterly disregarded in favor of the wishes of a tiny Zionist minority. The same logic applied in 1948 with the establishment of the State of Israel, where the small 25 percent Jewish minority declared Palestine to be a "Jewish State," expelling most of the Palestinian majority to other Arab states or the West Bank and Gaza.

This logic of conquest and displacement also informed the seizure of the West Bank and Gaza in 1967. Israel immediately annexed East Jerusalem, thereby cutting off Jerusalem from the rest of the West Bank, of which it had been the cultural and economic heart. The government then instituted an aggressive program to "Judaize" the city by seizing Palestinian land and property and bringing in thousands of European settlers. It need hardly be added that all settlement and annexation of occupied territories is strictly illegal under international law.

Settlements and Permanent Occupation

In the West Bank and Gaza, the Israeli government began a systematic program to create Zionist settlements in order to consolidate their control of the regions. Settlements such as Ma'aleh Adumim and Ariel posed as suburbs of major cities such as Tel Aviv and Jerusalem, and Israelis were enticed to move there by extremely generous government subsidies. In many cases these lush green Israeli enclaves enjoyed swimming pools and heavily irrigated lawns while the surrounding Palestinian population remained without sufficient drinking water. These settlements are connected to Israeli cities and each other by a network of Jewish–only highways, policed by the Israeli army. Together, the settlements and highways serve to carve up all contiguous Palestinian territories in the West Bank and Gaza.

Guided by the logic of Zionism, the purpose of this highway and settlement activity over the past 25 years has been to consolidate permanent Israeli occupation of the territories and ensure that any process such as the Oslo Accords could not lead to the creation of a Palestinian state. As a result, the Oslo process cannot address the issue of Palestinian control over any large contiguous areas which could ultimately serve as the basis for a Palestinian state.

On the contrary, these arrangements provide only for limited PNA autonomy in some city centers, with Israeli troops retaining control of virtually the entire region. In fact the reality is that rather than allowing their colonial policies, since the start of the Oslo process in 1992 Israel has actually increased the number of settlers in the West Bank from 120,000 to 160,000, a 30 percent increase.

Under the logic of Zionism, the Palestinians continue to suffer under brutal occupation and martial law, while Israeli settlers in the West Bank and Gaza live under Israeli civil law, a systematic policy of apartheid.

One of the greatest examples of supremacist logic at work in the West Bank and Gaza is the issue of public lands. Under Israeli apartheid laws, "publicly owned land" can be sold or leased only to those officially deemed "Jewish" by the Israeli state. Over 86 percent of the land in the West Bank is designated "publicly owned land" since it has been seized by Israel. Therefore the over one million Palestinians of the West Bank can, by law, never make use of 70 percent of their land, which is reserved for the 160,000 settlers. These, and so many other crucial, basic issues are not addressed by the Oslo process.

Thus the "Protocol concerning redeployment in Hebron" is a perfect example of the phoney "peace process" at work, a facade designed to provide a cloak of legitimacy whereby Israeli colonialism can continue to consolidate control over the West Bank and Gaza. In the long run, in Al-Khalil, the human rights of the 160,000 indigenous Palestinians continue to be sacrificed in the name of the fanatical religious ambitions of the 400 Israeli settlers.

Origins of the Hebron Settlement

On April 12, 1968, shortly after the Israeli conquest of the West Bank, Rabbi Moshe Levinger led a group of 32 Jewish families into the Park Hotel in downtown Hebron seeking to take over the city. This initial move to colonize the center of Hebron was in direct defiance of even Israeli government laws and policies. One month later, however, the Israeli government agreed to help the extremists to remain in Hebron and, in 1970, founded the Kiryat Arba settlement on hills overlooking the city.

The settlers project of seizing control of the city center remained on hold until 1979 when, at 3 a.m., Levinger's wife Miriam led a small group of women from Kiryat Arba to a sit–in a defunct hospital in the center of Hebron. The occupiers of the building were defended from outraged locals by Israeli soldiers and in the subsequent weeks a settler community was established in surrounding buildings. The occupation provided the Israeli government an excuse to insert an "Israeli presence" in Hebron through the settlers. Levinger and his wife, along with many of their followers, are from New York City in the United States.

The Settlers' Supremacist Ideology

These New Yorkers are the leaders of the Gush Emunim (Block of the Faithful), an extreme religious Zionist organization whose aim is to rid Hebron, and all of Palestine, of its Arab inhabitants. Gush Emunim is a Messianic group whose ideology has been described by Dr. Israel Shahak as assuming "the imminence of the coming of the Messiah, when the Zionist shooting spree, this time by an on– duty Israeli soldier, Noam Friedman. In an interview with Israeli television, an unrepentant and unapologetic Friedman said that all Palestinians, women and children included, are "not innocent. They hate the Jews."

In 1994, another Hebron settler and extremist from New York, Baruch Goldstein, gunned down dozens of worshippers as they prayed at the Ibrahimi mosque in the "Tomb of the Patriarchs" in Hebron. Goldstein was hailed as a brave hero by the Hebron and Kiryat Arba settlers, and his grave has become a shrine for such extremists. At his funeral it was said by a supportive rabbi that 1000 Arabs were not worth one of Goldstein's fingernails.

The Gush Emunim ideology holds these individuals blameless for their murderous crimes. Rabbi Israel Ariel states, for example, that "a Jew who kills a non–Jew is exempt from human judgement, and has not violated the prohibition of murder." Dr. Shahak notes that "the Gush Emunim rabbis have indeed reiterated that Jews who kill Arabs should be free from all punishment."

COURTESY ASSOCIATED PRESS

A convoy of trucks carrying mobile homes to a Jewish West Bank settlement rolls past a Palestinian village in the West Bank.

In fact, the Gush Emunim leadership founded a terrorist organization in the early 1980s dedicated to attacking Palestinians civilians and elected officials. Moreover, they attempted to blow–up the Dome of the Rock Mosque in Jerusalem. According to a report by Daniel Ben–Simon in the well known Israeli newspaper Davar, the Gush Emunim plotters hoped to provoke a world war by enraging hundreds of millions of Muslims throughout the world. It was hoped that war on such a scale would rid the world of Muslims and pave the way towards the coming of the Messiah.

Rabbi Eliezar Waldman, former Knesset member and director of main yeshiva at Kiryat Arba has stated that "by fighting the Arabs, Israel carries out its divine mission to serve as the heart of the world," and has referred to Arab hostility to Zionism as resulting from a desire "to fulfill their collective death–wish." It is these murderous, fanatical racists whose interests the Israeli and United States governments protect and promote at the expense of the indigenous Palestinians inhabitants of Hebron.

Gush Emunim, unlike Meir Kahane's Kach group, is not outside the mainstream of Israeli politics. Since its inception, Gush Emunim has enjoyed the support of many important Israeli politicians both in Labor and Likud. According to Dr. Shahak, "Gush Emunim's leaders enjoy Rabin's friendship and strong influence in wide circles of the Israeli and diaspora Jewish circles." Labor leaders such David Ben– Gurion, Yigal Allon and Yitzhak Rabin supported the settlement efforts of Gush Emunim and Labor governments played a crucial role in the creation and expansion of the settlements. However Gush Emunim is closer to Likud and, at present, parties closely linked to it are heavily represented in the current Netanyahu cabinet.

Gush Emunim activities depend upon material support from the United States. Their fund raising organization, The Hebron Fund, Inc., was incorporated in New York City in 1982 as a "charitable, tax–exempt foundation" dedicated to turning "the center of Hebron into a Jewish city." The Fund receives generous contributions from a number of extremely wealthy North Americans such as Dr. Irving Moskowitz, and the Reichmann brothers, real estate magnates worth more than $9 billion. It is extraordinary that this kind of hateful organization receives such widespread support, and is allowed to provide a tax shelter for wealthy people whose "generous donations" will be paid for by ordinary citizens.

It is a particular irony that the people of one of the poorest and most oppressed cities in the world, Hebron, should be assaulted in this manner by settlers and their backers from the one of the world's wealthiest and most powerful cities, New York City. As Miriam Levinger told a New York fundraising meeting of The Hebron Fund, Inc., "I grew up in the East Bronx and I was a very frightened Jewish child. And I see my children — they way they walk around Hebron, 40 or 50 families in a city of 70,000 Arabs, and not so friendly Arabs at that — and they walk around as if they own the market."

Despite the hoopla, lies, and pretenses, the Hebron Protocol in no way removes the specter of Zionist colonization from the streets of Al-Khalil. The Protocol, like the rest of the Oslo process, cannot achieve its stated aim of creating a peaceful settlement of the Israeli–Palestinian conflict because it does not address the basic issues that cause the conflict and fails entirely to provide Palestinians with the basic human and national rights for which they have been struggling for so long deprived. Furthermore, as the Hebron Protocol starkly demonstrates, there is no new relationship between Israelis and Palestinians in this "era of peace," but rather a continuation and refinement of the traditional oppressive interaction between colonizer and colonized.

Israeli society continues to be guided by a deeply racist ideology. The Gush Emunim Hebron settlers are an extreme but integral part of the Israeli body politic. And until the Israelis can come to understand that Palestinians are human beings with the same rights as anyone else, there can be no peace In Hebron, in Palestine, or the Middle East in general.

Shyamala Ivatury and Hussein Ibish are Collegian columnists.

■ Peace

continued from page 5

ing. She explained that when she marries, then she will also dress traditionally. She added that she is still young, so she should enjoy her youth. Someone noted her computer, and asked her whether she knew about the Internet. She smiled and told us she was going to finally get the opportunity to log on later in the week. We compared the experiences of being a minority in the United States with that of one in Israel.

The discussion of living as a minority ultimately led to broaching the subject about the peace process. We all had questions on the subject, but many seemed apprehensive about asking. So when the first person asked about her feelings on the prospect of peace and possibly a Palestinian homeland in the West Bank and Gaza, an avalanche of questions ensued from us.

However, every answer led to another question. The first question was "how do you feel about the negotiations?" She told us she felt good about it. Next someone asked "how do you feel about the possibility of a Palestinian nation in the West Bank?" Again she responded positively to the question, and told us she would love to see that day. Since she told us she considers herself a Palestinian even though she has Israeli citizenship, another student asked "would you move there?" She said, "no, this is my home." Finally, I asked "if you won't move there, then do you think the establishment of a Palestinian nation will solve all the problems?" She candidly and simply responded, "no."

At that point, our tour guide appeared and told us we were running late, and the other buses had already departed for Jerusalem. I left with unanswered questions, and the one that continues to burn in my head was "what would it take to bring a lasting peace?" I assume she probably did not know the answer, or the answer is the same one that has plagued Israel since its birth in 1948.

During the hour, we realized we had some things in common, but we were also dramatically different. To this day I continue to hope that Jews and Arabs can finally make peace. However, the answer to the above question remains illusive, therefore so does peace.

Matthew Wurtzel is a Collegian columnist.

■ Account

continued from page 5

tation. The village is densely populated with nearly 10,000 inhabitants spread throughout several acres. In view of the bus were five or six young teenagers.

The bus had great difficulty pulling in front of the house but managed to park. The group was led into a house with delicate furnishings. Several children can be heard laughing from somewhere in the house when a man appears and says we are in the home of his brother.

"My house is my brothers house, and his house is my house," he said.

His name is Afed Aled, and he teaches at and runs a local school for Arab children. His son, probably no more than four or five enters the room with a large ball.

Aled began to answer questions on a broad range of topics such as personal identity, the curriculum of his school, the customs in his village and his feelings towards the Israeli and American governments.

Aled identified himself first as an Arab, second as a Moslem, third as a Palestinian, and fourth as an Israeli. Though debate and opinions vary, as much as they do within the Jewish community, Aled said the general consensus among Israeli Arabs is that they support the idea of an independent Palestinian state but would not be willing to move there.

Aled said that he feels loyalty towards the state of Israel and has often felt proud to see the Israeli flag, even though its references clearly pertain directly to Jews. However he feels Israeli Arabs are under–represented in Knesset (Israel's Unicameral Parliament) and feels a bit of disillusionment toward the new Likud government.

He told of how there is a lack of resources for schools, housing, and the building of roads in Arab villages. Aled said that there are currently 20,000 houses built in Arab villages which have not yet received power.

"The situation is very complex because there is always a struggle for the government in letting [the Arab villages] maintain autonomy and making sure they have adequate resources," said Giora Kidoon, a UAI tour guide and geological researcher.

Kidoon said that the government cannot provide electricity to a home unless the building plans have been approved by the municipality. In most instances if a house is built without prior approval it will be torn down, but because of the delicate political situation in the country the municipalities will rarely tear down a house in an Arab village, but nor will they will connect it to power.

Aled stressed that needs are universal for all human beings. "People are people, they want the same things, a family, a house," he said.

Aled said that Islam is still a vital part of village life. He said that his students know the Torah and the Talmud as well as Jewish students of the same age, and he wished the Hebrew schools taught as much respect for the Koran as the Arabic schools do for the Torah.

The meeting became tense when topics switched to the Gulf War and American involvement in the war.

"When Scud missiles began landing in Israel the first thing I thought about, was the safety of my family. Then, honestly I have to say I was a little happy. I thought that Sadaam Hussein was finally doing to the Jews what they had been doing to the Arabs.

"Then I thought, this conflict is between Iraq and Kuwait, Israel was not involved, why are they being attacked? My feelings became very mixed."

He further said, "I also wondered why America had to interfere, why could not the neighboring Arab states be left to handle the situation. Power, not morality, makes America policeman and peacemaker."

Finally he urged, "we fight about nothing and for nothing, we must exist in peace."

He was very honest about the way he felt towards the Scud Missiles, and if I was Arab I might feel the same way. However, I felt he was much too diplomatic, most people believe in peace and coexistence, the question is how?

At the end of the meeting I approached Aled and expressed my gratitude for having us as guests in his home. I paraphrased something I believe was said by Thomas Merton that seemed appropriate for the occasion, "the only wars that should be fought are those within the human heart, as it tries to overcome its own doubts and fears."

Not fully knowing what I had just babbled, Aled said to me, "I wish more people felt the way we do." We shook hands and then embraced, it was not an embrace of tolerance, but of genuine warmth.

Despite differences in religion and political views, we were able to share a moment of friendship in an area of the world that places us on opposing sides. If reasonable good people disagree, there is always hope for compromise, it is the exaggerated reality of fanaticism that creates so much trouble in this area of the world.

Throughout the trip, and since I have returned, many people have told me, "we can never trust the Arabs," and "there can never be peace." I just hope that myself and my peers never take on this attitude.

During a walking tour of the old city of Jerusalem students were able to shop in the Arab market. The old walled city of Jerusalem which was under the control of Jordan from 1948– 1967, is now under the control of the Israeli government; it is still divided into quarters: Muslim, Christian, Armenian and Jewish.

Palestinians living in the old city have been given the option to claim Israeli citizenship, but many have not, preferring to identify themselves as Palestinians instead of Israelis. Jerusalem contains holy sights for three major world religions, so it is no wonder the fate of Jerusalem has been a source of conflict and the question over the final status of Jerusalem is a major obstacle towards peace.

The old city is constructed entirely in limestone and is still made up of the same narrow streets that Jesus walked down. The outer areas of the Arab market are attractive spots for tourists searching for gifts, necklaces, jewelry, T–shirts, carvings and rugs. I told several of the Arab shopkeepers that our group was going to be addressed by Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu and asked if they had one question to ask him, what would it be? Some of the responses I got were:

"Why is he ignoring the Oslo accords?"

"Why does he not give back the Golan Heights?"

"You're going to meet with Netanyahu, I'll introduce you to Arafat. He is a good person, he will have lunch with you."

"Is he treating?" I responded.

He then responded, "Get out of my store!" and I was thrown out of a place of business for the first time in Israel.

The question of whether or not to return the Golan Heights to Syria is one of the most pressing issues in Israel today, splitting the public opinion of the Jewish population.

We were privileged to take a bus and jeep tour of these strategic mountains which overlook a flat valley where many Kibutzes are. The Golan Heights were captured from Syria in the 1967 Six Day War, prior to which the Syrian army was accused of shooting at Israelis on the farmland below.

Many Israelis fear that if Syria regains the Golan Heights in a gesture of peace, the Syrian army will once again abuse the strategic piece of land by returning to their pre–1967 practices.

In 1981, in a move unrecognized by Syria, the United States, and the United Nations, Israel annexed the Golan Heights. Many residents of the Golan Heights area still pledge loyalty to the Syrian government.

The jeep tour took us to an abandoned Syrian bunker. Our driver, who was a career soldier and had lost a son to war, believed Israel should return the land in exchange for peace accords.

Turn to ACCOUNT, page 8

■ Ebonics

continued from page 5

• 74 percent of the students retained are African–American.

• 71 percent of African–American males attended school on a regular basis.

• 19 percent of 12th grade African–American students did not graduate.

• 80 percent of those suspended form school were African–American.

• And finally, the most unsettling statistic was the 1.80 average GPA of African–American students, which represented the lowest GPA in the district.

To many college students, the last statistic would spell academic dismissal, but should we dismiss the horrendous academic performance in the district or should we work to develop programs to rectify the problems? Accolades should go to the OUSD for the reinstitution of a teaching technique, developed in the '70s, to help their students adjust and speak what many in the inner cities call the "cash language," or standard English. To speak it is to be able to gain access to higher education and jobs.

The OUSD program is trying to help its black students by any means necessary, but unfortunately the media and many of the country's leaders have mischaracterized the issue.

They described the initiative as a struggle between African–Americans and Spanish–speaking students for funding. Others characterized it as a ploy by the OUSD to position themselves to be eligible for federal bilingual education funds. Still other insisted that the district would start teaching Ebonics as a language. The last one is the most outrageous and hardest to believe.

Upon hearing the OUSD initiative, U.S. Secretary of Education, Richard W. Riley quickly dismissed the hopes of increased funding. Many leaders around the country, including Jesse Jackson and Maya Angelou, denounced the initiative calling it a legitimization of poor English and insisted that a teaching of Ebonics would further lower academic standards among African–Americans.

"On all sides of the issue, public figures have made statements that are very linguistically uninformed," Walt Wolfram said in a recent Washington Post article.

Wolfram, an English professor at North Carolina State University, said that the whole point of the program in Oakland, "is to get children from the language they have been using to standard American language. It is not to keep them using the same language."

So why not? What is the problem with helping black children to succeed in today's society? When we were all growing up, wasn't it our parents who said that they would do anything to help us succeed in society? An understanding of this method would help us far more than what has been aired or printed in the media.

It is safe to say that effective communication is crucial to upward economic mobility in this society. Before the Ebonics debate surfaced and gained national attention, there were already many programs around the country being employed to improve reading skills among African–Americans.

Even in Oakland, the Ebonics program is currently being run in some of the city's most troubled public schools. Approximately 1,000 African–American students participate in the program which teaches standard formal English by recognizing and using "black English."

According to the Post article, the program runs on $200,000 a year which originate from funds designated for children of low–income families. The program entails training teachers and developing new classrooms techniques to employ Ebonics to teach English.

"There is always a lot of conflict and confusion when this idea comes up," Yvonne Ewell said in the Post article.

"Some black folks might be embarrassed by this, and some white folks might be angry," said Ewell, a school board member in Dallas who coordinated a program similar to that of the Oakland initiative, "but no matter what we call it — Ebonics, a dialect, a language — what we know for sure is that the speaking and reading skills of many black children are still atrocious, it hurts them terribly in school, and we have to do much more to help them."

William Labov, a professor of linguistics at the University of Pennsylvania who has studied Ebonics said, in the Post article, "it's such a politically loaded situation. But it's something we really ought to confront. It would be wrong to think any Ebonics program is going to have a tremendous effect on all the problems these students have, but if something has any chance of reversing even some of them, it's worth trying and studying."

Funding, funding, and more funding: Inequality and lower performance

For years there have been outcries from the inner city for help to improve the public school systems. And for years they have been heard and ignored. As an example, in December 1996 the Education Trust, a Washington–based non–profit organization, issued a report on the state of education in America. It concluded, in its study of all 50 states, that the educational achievement chasm between whites and people of color has been widening.

"The fact that progress in minority achievement has stopped at a time when minorities comprise a growing portion of the student population should sound a wake–up call to the whole country," the report said.

According to the study, Education Watch: The 1996 Education Trust State and National Data Book, African American, Latino and Native American students performed well below their white counterparts.

Wait a minute, what is this saying? Does this mean that those who bought into Charles Murray's Bell Curve theory now have evidence to support their argument of whites being genetically superior? The answer, like the Hertz commercials, is not exactly, or of course not!

The Education Trusts' report concluded that children from disadvantaged communities are fighting an uphill battle to get an equal education. The report said, "In fact, we have constructed an educational system so full of inequalities that it actually exacerbates the challenges of race and poverty, rather than ameliorates them."

The study found that 42 percent of math classes with at least 50 percent students of color had teachers who majored in math in college. That's equality for you.

Fifty–nine percent of teachers in school having 30 percent of students coming from low–income families, many in the inner city, say that they do not have sufficient books or materials. Whereas, only 16 percent of teachers from more affluent school had shortages of materials, the study said.

Also, the study found that low–income and people of color are taught a low–level curriculum with low standards for academic performance. Considering the insufficient teaching materials provided to most classrooms in cities like New York and Oakland, it is easy to notice that there is a direct relationship between the lack of materials and poor academic performance.

If only children in low–income areas had access to the computers, large libraries and qualified teachers that children in the suburbs have access to, maybe then they would be "competing on a level playing field." Judging from America's "progress" in equalizing education, it is obvious that the country has not made a real commitment to the education of all of its residents — just its white residents.

The study also found that black students were completing high school at "roughly" the same rate as whites. According to the study, 85 percent of African–American students received a high school diploma or a G.E.D. by age 24. By age 24 — more than six years after most high school students start applying to college. So most African–American students are six years behind in their education in this country. Level playing field? A statistic that is more unsettling is that of Latino students who receive their diploma at a rate of 60 percent.

The study found that 60 percent of whites attend college and of those, 25 receive their bachelor's degree — while only 40 percent of blacks attend college. Twelve percent of blacks earn bachelor degrees by age 30, the study found. For Latinos, only 10 percent earn their bachelor's degree by age 30. How can 10 percent of Latinos who earned their bachelor's degree lead and represent a group that is, as some argue, the fastest growing group in the country?

The so–called efforts by the education presidents George Bush and Bill Clinton, who is now peddling his education tax cut proposal, have not made much of an impact on educational opportunities of people of color and low–income earners because they have consistently ignored their situation in this country.

Despite the fact that the last eight years of the country were led by presidents who declared their commitment to improving education, the nation is still mired by ever– declining academic standards. What does this say about our country? Maybe an accurate description of our nation would be to say that those who have money have access to education and possess enormous political power. Sorry, but this is the American Way and has been since the inception of the United States. The only way that the standards of education can be improved both in Oakland, UMass and across the country, is if institutions and people commit the funds to make it so.

Is this an education system attempting to assimilate the huddled masses of immigrants pouring into this country who envision a piece of the American pie? When larger and larger numbers of immigrants entered the gates at Ellis Island, the residents of the United States did not want to accept them. Openly they called for assimilation through the nation's education system, but privately were unwilling to open the hallowed gates of higher education to immigrants.

Cleverly, the education system was used to funnel the unwanted immigrants and residents of the country into low wage jobs in the service sector like the maids, cooks and railroad workers. Today, this trend is alive and well. Many in the inner city are denied equal access to education. Consequently, they ended up unemployed and uneducated, unable to move out of the ghettoes and unable to help their children from drowning in the pain and struggle of inner city life.

What can be done? The answer is in the hearts of every single human being. Especially, the hearts of those who have been historically denied this reality. What would you (you know who you are) do if the situation were reversed? Would you develop "ivornics?"

Come Write for Diversity

contact Lisa Chiu at the Collegian

Standard English vs. African–American language system: A comparison

The African–American language system, or Ebonics, share many features, but have many small differences. According to many linguists, the subtle differences can be traced back to slave times. During the slave times, the slaves were forbidden to speak their native languages from the Niger– Congo region of Africa. In order to communicate, the slaves adopted words from the English vocabulary. They used these words according to the grammar of their native languages, not according to standard English grammar. According to many linguists, the speech patterns of African–Americans are similar to the languages of West Africa.

Standard English

• The "th" sound is regularly used at the beginning of words, as in "they" and "then."

• The past tense of the verb "to be":

Singular	Plural
I was	we were
you were	you were
he was	they were

• Two negatives in a sentence make a positive statement: "It isn't likely that there won't be any rain" means that It probably will rain.

African–American Language System

•At the beginning of words, the "th" sound is pronounced as "d". The th sound does not exist in many West African languages, so "they" becomes "dey," and "then" becomes "den."

• The past tense of the verb "to be"

Singular	Plural
I was	we was
you was	you was
he was	they was

• The more negatives In a sentence, the more negative the sentence becomes: "Nobody don't have no excuse" means everyone is without an excuse.

Source: The Language Development Program for African– American Students, Los Angeles Unified School District.

THE WORLD AWAITS YOU

If you're thinking of volunteering overseas, then consider Peace Corps. Since 1961, more than 140,000 Americans of all ages and backgrounds have served as Peace Corps Volunteers in developing countries around the world, where they've put their skills to use by helping people help themselves.

Peace Corps Volunteers with backgrounds in education, agriculture, health, business, and the environment are currently serving in 91 countries in Asia/the Pacific, Africa, Central and South America, and Eastern Europe. Whatever your degree or field of experience, there's a chance you can put it to work in today's Peace Corps.

The Peace Corps has 3,750 jobs available each year. All majors/disciplines are welcome, especially liberal arts majors. For more information, stop by the UMASS Peace Corps Office at 112 Stockbridge Hall or call Mike Simsik at:

413-545-2105

PEACE CORPS
The toughest job you'll ever love.

Campus Center Hotel

Attention 1998 Graduates!

The Campus Center Hotel has a limited number of rooms available for Graduation Weekend of May 1998

Reservations will be chosen through a random drawing of written requests. Interested persons should pick up a request form from the Campus Center Hotel Reservation Office before May 16th. Letters will be drawn at random on May 19, '97. No requests will be accepted over the phone. All respondents will be notified by mail or you may contact the Reservation Office after June 1st at 549-6000.

Please send your request forms to:

The Campus Center Hotel
Reservations Office
Graduation '98
Amherst, MA 01003

UNIVERSITY STORE'S Textbook Annex UMASS AMHERST

CASH FOR YOUR BOOKS

Textbook Buyback will be at The University Store Campus Center

Monday thru Friday
Jan. 27 - Jan. 31
9 AM to 5 PM

Monday and Tuesday
Feb. 1 - Feb. 2
9 AM to 5 PM

BECOME AN AIR FORCE OFFICER.

Take the first step to becoming a leader in today's Air Force. Put your college degree to work in the Air Force Officer Training School. After completing Officer Training School you can become a commissioned Air Force officer with:

• great starting pay
• medical and dental care
• 30 days vacation with pay per year
• management opportunities

Discover how far a career in the Air Force can take you and what it takes to qualify. Call

AIR FORCE OPPORTUNITIES
TOLL FREE
1-800-423-USAF

AIR FORCE

■ Lead

continued from page 5

wondering if the Minister is a little too concerned with matters elsewhere to take the reigns and really make a difference in the U.S.

The Reverend Jesse Jackson probably had the most potential out of all of our current leaders to stand as our new champion. During the '80s, Jesse Jackson's popularity reached a fever pitch, but soon declined after his failed run at the Presidency of the United States. Jackson has spurts of true insight to the problems facing our people today, but many feel that Dr. King left too soon for Jackson (who was a student of Dr. King) to truly get all that he needed from, arguably, the most influential black leader we've ever known.

The question of leadership is probably the most important issue facing us now. Despite all the things that are done to us by forces who oppose our existence, without a leader to unify and organize, we will never get to where we need to be. We can not win over the oppressor if we all are not acting on one accord.

Throughout African-American history, we have had great leaders to express the concerns of the people to be free of those who would dare to keep us down.

Marcus Garvey wanted to get back to Africa. W.E.B. DuBois asked his black sisters and brothers to embrace intellectualism. Kwame Ture (formerly Stokely Carmichael) lives by the very definition of Black Power; the same words he screamed from his Alabama jail cell that gave new definition to the Civil Rights Movement.

How can we forget the unmoving determination of Bobby Seale and Huey P. Newton — two men who couldn't stand to see the police brutalize their people any longer? In 1967, they formed the Black Panther Party for Self Defense and within three years had members from California to New York. The leadership of Newton and Seale helped to mobilize Panther sites all over the country and give power back to the people.

No doubt that our most unsung hero, even today, is the late Malcolm X. Not since his passing have we ever seen a more determined and driven leader. Malcolm X embodied everything that we needed in a black leader, today. He stood tall and his presence was always felt. He was not afraid to speak his mind and wasn't too big to admit his faults. He was truly a people's champion and loved his people with all his heart, which is why he fought so hard.

Those who oppose such determination on behalf of our people would have us believe that Malcolm advocated violence and hatred to solve the problems plaguing this nation, but we know that not to be true. Malcolm was never given the chance to really put his best foot forward in the fight for equality. He was killed before he was even able to start the collaborative effort with other Civil Rights leaders, such as Dr. King; Malcolm was not able to do this under the wings of Elijah Muhammad and his Nation of Islam. It is probably due to this nation's fixation with the negative, that we will never fully realize the kind of leader we had in Malcolm X.

A leader is not a dictator. A leader is not a politician. A leader is someone who hears the cries of his people and does everything in his power to answer them. A leader believes in personal sacrifice and doesn't quit or get quiet when things get difficult. Leadership calls for intelligence, logic and understanding.

These are the traits of people that we need today. When will those leaders make themselves known? Do they even know that they're leaders? The next Martin Luther King, Jr. may still be in grade school. The next Malcolm X may still be getting his degree. Or maybe, our next great leaders aren't in school at all. They may be in your neighborhood, waiting to be given a chance to speak their minds. You can never tell, but time will.

It would be great if we didn't need someone to lead us; to think that we could lead ourselves and still understand the truth and see ourselves in our rightful place as kings and queens of this earth — this would be ideal. Maybe one day we'll be strong enough to follow the one thing that leads us all — our own minds.

Humphrey brown III is a Collegian columnist.

■ Account

continued from page 6

It was in the Renaissance Hotel in Jerusalem where we heard Prime Minister Netanyahu speak. After his lecture we were only allowed three questions. He was a fiery and witty speaker. He described the first half of the 20th century as a pivotal time for the Jewish people in which there was a race between worldwide Anti-Semitism and Worldwide Zionism, and Anti-Semitism nearly won. He boasted that Israel, once predicted by American analysts to collapse within six months, has achieved the per-capita income of Western Europe. He also invited the audience, American college students, to resettle and live their lives in the state. When he spoke about the impending Hebron deal he greatly exaggerated the number of Jewish settlers in Hebron at 20 percent, when there are 500 Jewish settlers compared to 135,000 Palestinians.

When listening to such a compelling speaker it is difficult to discern where the inspirational, universal message ends and the political rhetoric begins.

Following the Prime Minister's speech, we visited Touro College in Jerusalem to meet with Ethiopian students who are attempting to be the first Ethiopians in Israel to graduate with management degrees. We had the opportunity to meet with three students with the help of a Hebrew interpreter who was an instructor at the school.

Nearly the entire Jewish population of Ethiopia, about 50,000 people were airlifted to Israel in 1981 and 1984. Jews have been believed to have been in Ethiopia since the time of King Solomon, so the form of Judaism they practiced was slightly different from modern day Judaism practiced in Israel. Besides the religious differences, Ethiopian Jews have had to adjust to language and racial barriers, as well as from adapting from an agricultural society to and industrialized nation.

The students said they had experienced some racial tensions but had not experienced overt racial discrimination. Though they missed little from Ethiopia, the students were having difficulty adjusting to living in the country. All of the students fled Ethiopia to Sudan and then to Israel in 1984, where they said living conditions were horrible. The students are trying to integrate into society while still maintaining their culture and particular form of Judaism.

What I have written is just a taste of what was experienced, and was just a rushed sample of the country we were visiting. The trip served as a window to different possibilities and opportunities. I marveled at all that was out there waiting to be experienced.

It was about the possibility to maintain an individual identity while being part of a group as a member of the Jewish community. It was about the possibility of living one's life with the hope of peace, what ever corner of the globe one may reside in, and hope to reach an understanding with those who we may have differences with. The trip revealed that the world can be both a wonderful and a horrible place, the only constant being the complexity of it all.

One time for the mind

Allana E. TODMAN

With hair in shiny locks, hanging down past her shoulders, and cowry shells accentuating her hair, the high cheek bones and broad nose were natural features she possessed that gave her a strong and assertive presence. Bronze bracelets with intricate curves and detailed lines were coupled with hand made jewelry that she wore as a necklace and hair piece. This sister was very in tune with herself, and nature.

Being here at UMass, for almost four semesters, I have been able to interact with many women of color who have had experiences in their lives that they have been able to share with me about.

Reading what Sister Souljah, Bell hooks and Angela Davis had to say about how we, as black women have internalized Eurocentric ideas when it comes to black love (i.e. our appearance and ideas about our race) my eyes were open to many things.

I began to ask questions. Do I need to have long straightened hair to feel beautiful? Do I need to have natural hair to prove that I have broken all ties from Eurocentric values? Does it mean that as a womanist I am too analytical about men? Is there a real difference between feminists and womanists?

As you can see, I began to question my identity and theories.

Over the summer, I cut all of my hair off and went naturai. The more people disliked it, the more I liked it. To think that my own brothers and sisters would not like me because my hair was real short and kinky gave me a reason to keep it.

Cutting my hair was definitely a right of passage that allowed me to begin to come to grips with the way I viewed myself as a black woman.

When I spoke to one of my friends over the Internet about how I cut my hair and how natural he replied to me by saying, "Men like to ruin their fingers through women's hair, not have their fingers get caught in it, trying to get their fingers out."

At first I said to myself that this guy could be right. Who would want me if I had this look that was too ethnic? I also said to myself that I wouldn't be a complete womanist, if I had straightened hair. I toiled with myself for some time until I gained the conviction that my standard of beauty would be just that; a standard that I would create for myself.

Whether I choose to have straight, kinky, natural, texturized, permed, dyed, twisted, braided, weaved, or locked hair, I decided I would not let how beautiful I see myself be based on how other people may react.

Since that time in my life, I have been able to read other books by people like Aliona L. Gibson and Maya Angelou, who have helped in providing the nourishment and encouragement for Women of Color to feel proud of their bodies and their self image.

The decision to break away from calling myself a feminist was decided after I realized that, within the general arena of all women, there were issues that, as a black women, I felt were not being addressed.

While many feminists spend time talking about getting equality in wages, many black womanists are discussing the problems that they have, not even being able to get jobs, let alone equal wages.

Black women are forced to live with the fact that many of our black men are in prison or uneducated. Often times, in a black household, the woman is the only bread winner in the family. Due to years of self hatred, lack of education and limited resources, brothers often feel that they need to succumb to drugs and alcohol. This has had an effect and put an extra burden on our black women.

This is not to say there are no prominent black men making a difference in the educational and political arena's in our society.

It's just that it is important to understand that whether it's our cousins, brothers, uncles or nephews, we as their sisters, nieces and aunts, deal with what happens to our black men economically, politically and socially.

Coming to this realization, I understand that the fight for all women of color is an ongoing one. The more interaction and positive influences that are present will only help to enable growth and better forms of communication for all women.

As a womanist, I have realized that it is my responsibility to help uplift and inspire other women of color to come together. Whether through art forms of vocal expression, writing or singing, these are ways to channel inspiration and motivation to all women.

As I continue my undergrad years here at UMass, I'm sure that there's a lot more learning to do, but for now I will continue this journey of seeking out the individual that God wanted me to be as a beautiful black woman.

Allana E. Todman is a Collegian columnist.

"Don't go blaming the movies... movies don't make psycho killers crazy, movies just make pstcho killers more creative."
-Scream

■ Ghost

continued from page 5

What is ignored almost completely is his war on poverty — lying blacks together with poor whites, his criticisms against the U.S. government, and the radical thoughts that he eloquently professed during the last three years of his life.

Just as King has been muted by time and misinterpretation so will be the legacy of the Civil Rights Movement. The spotlight of history has already dimmed its light on the presence of Medgar Evers.

Despite this criticism, the film deserves praise for how It starkly portrayed the terror created by the segregationists in the past. But more importantly, it showed the continued racism which still exists now, only more subtly.

Rob Reiner's Ghosts of Mississippi, proved to be not only historically satisfying, but also an optimistic film about one more triumph in the Civil Rights Movement, even though it was a victory delayed by 30 years. B all percentage of ALANA students is 15 percent and that of the freshmen class is 18.89 percent.

■ Stalling

continued from page 5

The discrepancy in these figures, a body count of approximately 50 students, indicates that the Chancellor, Robinson and the administration prefer to cook the books rather than 'fess-up to their failures. Their willingness to fudge numbers to make students believe that UMass has reached its goal is particularly reprehensible coming from teachers and educators. How can they hope to serve as role models and set a good example when they can't even tell the truth? Or is truth a quality that has been forsaken by our community of eminent scholars and educators?

The agreement calls for a 20 percent minority freshmen rate to have been established by the fall of 1995. The administration, while pretending to have fulfilled the agreements, seems not in the least bit ashamed or embarrassed that the goal was reached a whole year late. So much for the Chancellor and his crew completing their assignments on time. Perhaps a year here or there does not mean very much to administrators who make upwards of $108,000 a year as Vice Chancellor Robinson does.

Also stated in the legally binding 1992 agreements is that, "The achievement of the 20 percent goal for freshmen will lead to the 20 percent goal of the total undergraduate students body only if the serious attrition problem can be solved."

So now, because we haven't fulfilled the percentage of ALANA freshmen, we cannot then fulfill the percentage of total undergraduates? And even if that were the case, the total percentage of undergraduate ALANA students could not be guaranteed to stay the same until the retention of ALANA students is adequately addressed.

The efforts made for retention include a motion passed in the faculty senate, a Learning Center for all students, and the highly administrative and bureaucracy riddled "enrollment management initiative designed to address recruitment planning and retention on campus in a comprehensive way."

And so, the endless circle continues.

Robinson's update on the ALANA agreements last fall goes on to say that, "Our goal should be tied to the demographics of the Commonwealth and nation and the proportion of minority students attending the Amherst campus should continue to increase as the number of college bound minority students continues to grow."

As far as the Collegian is aware, this statement is nowhere in the 1992 agreements.

Why is the administration adding cop out statements, making it appear as though it were official, to an update of a document which never contained these words? More lies.

And why should we as an institution of higher learning accept that we should be "tied to the demographics of the Commonwealth and nation?" Shouldn't we strive to be better than our racist state and national standards?

A second issue which the administration fails to address is that of the establishment of an ALANA affairs office. The 1992 agreements say, "In the short run, we will treat the Office of Third World Affairs as the OAA and will add a teaching Assistant to help its work. The Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs will assemble a Task Force of well-respected students and non-students to propose in a few weeks a long -run organization for the OAA..."

The November 1996 update reports a fulfilled promise of funding for a graduate assistant. However, the establishment of an administration-funded "different/additional agency/office for ALANA matters" has not happened.

Though it is important to note that the one reason mentioned explaining why these were never held was, of course "student preference." Blaming the students is always another alternative to admitting administration wrongs.

The blaming of ALANA students for the unfulfillments of the 1992 ALANA Agreements is not limited to OAA matters.

The seventh demand requested that the Columbus Day holiday be replaced on the academic calendar for the University to conduct a teach-in on this day.

Why would we as a humane and decent of people want to honor Christopher Columbus, a man who enslaved and help annihilate the native people of the Americas? Given the heroism of many more deserving Americans, who have actually contributed to this society, dedicating Oct. 12 to a 15th Century conquistador is a mockery of ALANA struggles against racism and inequality.

A year after the signing of the agreements, the University administration did conduct a teach-in related to Columbus Day. In recent years no such teach-ins have been held. Nonetheless, the 1996 update blames the lack of enthusiasm on part of the campus community for not continuing with the teach-ins. Furthermore, they blame student government bodies such as Graduate Student Senate, Student Government Association and the Native American community for the administration's failure to live up to this agreement. The truth is that the actual fault lies with well-known and vocal critics of multiculturalism such as Grant Ingle, who ironically was the administrator assigned to implement this aspect of the agreement. Meanwhile the number of Native American students remains below one percent here at UMass and their cultural center is woefully under-funded.

The administration has failed miserably in addressing the critical issues facing students of color at UMass, preferring instead to lie, cheat and misinform the campus community.

Lisa Chiu and Christine Soh are Collegian columnists.

■ Evers

continued from page 5

as his attorney.

Though eight southern states had accepted blacks at the university level, and legal trends were running in the direction of the desegregation of schools, Mississippi was "different" and showed signs that it would not yield an inch. Even the landmark Brown v. Board of Education decision would not alter the stance of Mississippi's segregationists.

By the end of 1954, Medgar accepted the paid position of the first field secretary of the NAACP for Mississippi. The battle for school desegregation was becoming even more heated in the Magnolia state as blacks who spoke out in favor of desegregation, or the vote, or even economic independence were quickly quated by the White Citizen's Council or Ku Klux Klan.

"The killings and beatings and financial intimations of 1955 had the desired chilling effect on the black people of Mississippi. Membership in the NAACP in Mississippi had dropped from 4,639 to 1,716. Soon it was practically and underground organization... There was little for Medgar Evers to do but try to stay alive and hold on to as much of the NAACP membership as he could," Volkers said.

It was in January 1956, that Evers finally met Martin Luther King and later was invited to the Southern Christian Leadership Conference's first convention in New Orleans. He was duly elected secretary of the SCLC but was ordered to resign by Roy Wilkins of the NAACP.

In early 1958 the Mississippi legislature passed a bill to authorize an investigation of the NAACP. Evers said that he welcomed the probe.

"In fact, we'd gloat at the opportunity ...," Evers said. "We condemn other countries that deny freedom of the ballot, [but] we here in Mississippi, in the so called American way of life, are denied the right to vote."

By the time the Freedom Riders of CORE (the Congress Of Racial Equality) had started their interstate travel in 1961, Evers was becoming a civil rights celebrity. In January of that year, Evers started to work with James Meredith, the first black man to attend the flagship of the Mississippi universities. It took more than 18 months of court battles to finally admit Meredith to the University of Mississippi at Oxford. But attendance by Meredith would only come after heavy opposition by segregationists, the assistance of President Kennedy and a riot that left several dead and many injured.

Throughout his career with the NAACP, Evers was tireless in recruiting for its cause and literally risked his life daily for possible new recruits and to gather field information. In February 1962, Evers set up an alliance called The Council of Federated Organizations (COFO) to coordinate all local, state, and national civil rights organizations operating in Mississippi.

In the last months of his life, Evers and his family were increasingly threatened as each day progressed. Medgar was involved in more demonstrations and was an organizer of the Capital Street boycott in Jackson. But without the funds of the NAACP, the movement could not continue.

The morning after the death of Medgar Evers, however, the Capital Street boycott or the Jackson Movement, was revived temporarily as 3,000 people marched down Capitol in Jackson and were immediately arrested. Two-hundred students marched from the Masonic Temple and were met head-on with 100 police.

Evers's assassination was covered on every wire service, on television, in weekly magazines and in every major newspaper. Per order of the NAACP, Evers was buried in Arlington Cemetery with approximately 25,000 people coming to view the burial. Thousands came from far and wide to Jackson to pay respects to the slain Civil Rights leader.

A first step in the Journey of knowledge

Humphrey BROWN III

There's an old proverb that says you can't know where your going until you know where you've been. I, for the most part, tend to believe that proverb. I know where I've been. I know that some of the things I've done in the past aren't the things I would do now. As time went on, I learned not to make the same mistakes and what direction I needed to go to make things better for myself. I've learned from both my mistakes and my triumphs and have walked away with a greater understanding of myself.

We, as individuals and as a unified people, have to be aware of our past in order to get a better grip on the present and the future. No one wants to make the same mistakes over and over. That isn't logical or intelligent. Intelligence is making sure that you have a good understanding of not only your own past, but that of your people, which brings me to the crux of this column.

Feb. 1, 1997 will mark the beginning of Black History Month. And once again, we will be bombarded with McDonald's salute commercials and Coca-Cola ads that feature even more young African-Americans than usual. For one brief month (the shortest and coldest month of the year) we'll remember Dr. King and feel good about being black.

In a way, Black History Month is a lot like Christmas or Thanksgiving. During those holidays, everyone has a reason to be a little nicer and kinder. In February, it seems as if everyone has a reason to read up on Malcolm X or watch "Roots" on TNT. And just like Christmas, once it's over, we all go back to the just living our lives, never realizing how many great things African-Americans have done for this country. You can't get it all in one month.

Think about the words: Black History. Does anyone realize the significance of those words? When someone is talking of Black History, they're talking about American History. African-Americans have just as much if not more to do with the actual building of this country than white Americans, but we tend not to see it that way. When you look at American history, true American history, you will find that African-Americans played a greater role in the shaping of this country than picking cotton and tendin' to the fields. Yet, its seems as if it's those fields and those fields alone, that everyone seems to remember. If we only remember the fields, there is no model to follow for going beyond those fields. This leaves many of us with the same kind of cotton picking, slave mentality that creeps it's way into our very existence and dictates our thoughts and actions.

Taking a good, hard look at Black History shows that we did a lot more than sing hymnals until we got to sit at the front of a bus going nowhere. Learning about the amazing accomplishments of Huey P. Newton, W.E.B. DuBois, Malcolm X and Kwame Ture should not be used for idle trivia. Educating ourselves on the achievements made by these and other great, black leaders should be used to inspire and motivate us to continue on with the struggle for excellence and equality.

Black History Month is the perfect window to begin the journey of knowledge. There will be a wealth of opportunities available to obtain all kind of information on hundreds of prominent African-Americans, but the journey can't end in March. We have to continue to learn and not use Black History Month as an excuse to reach a comfort level of understanding. It's time to go deeper than the BET one-hour special. If we ever want to really make strides four ourselves as a nation, we have to learn to see past what some history books have conditioned us to believe. Black History didn't end with the assassination of Martin Luther King, Jr. There is so much more to it than that. You can use Black History Month to begin your discovery of all our many achievements, but don't stop when February ends. Realize that you've barely scratched the surface to a deep heritage that spans over 400 years.

Humphrey brown III is a Collegian columnist

MEMORANDUM OF DEMANDS

Editor's note: The following is the original set of demands given to President Hacker in 1992 which resulted in the ALANA Agreement.

Presented by ALANA Students to President Hacker on Oct. 13, 1992

1. The University of Massachusetts will set the goal to achieve a minimum of 50 percent minority representation on each of the following levels: student, staff, police, faculty and administrative staff by the fall of 1996. with a 5 percent incremental increase on each level per year beginning with spring of 1993, semester.

2. The University of Massachusetts will pick-up the costs of the original 25 year-old Upward Bound program, with its most recent staff for the next three years. In May of 1995, a new grant proposal will be submitted and the University will be held accountable, if the 100 slots for the program are not met as stated.

3. The University will restore the full Brigadon power of the Legal Services Center, formally the Legal Services Office.

4. The University will fund the ALANA affairs program to be staffed and run by minority students (Graduate/Undergraduate). The office of ALANA affairs will be line-funded by the University. The duties of the ALANA affairs program will include, but are not limited to:

- Representatives will be allowed to sit on any University search committee and will have 50 percent voting power.
- Representatives will be allowed to sit on any racial harassment review committee and will have 50 percent voting power.
- Representatives will be allowed to sit on curriculum review boards with 50 percents voting power.
- The University will be responsible to inform the ALANA affairs program of all the above committees on campus well in advance.

The ALANA seats represent 50 percent of total voting power of any of the above committees.

5. The University will hire at least two recruiters per ALANA group. These recruiters will be responsible for awarding, full, four-year, entrance incentive scholarships. Every ALANA incoming student (not excluding CCEMAS, UARC, and BCP) must be sent an application for the above- mentioned scholarships now available. Out of this, 40 percent must go to women of color (including housing- child care, and health care) for low-income women of color, then designated for each community, (African-American, Asian American, Native American, and Latino American). If all awards are not issued in any given year, the University will allocate the funds to other members of the ALANA community who meet the said requirements.

A new program will be established to support the recipients of the scholarship, and will become a separate branch in of academic programming from the University. The program will consist of professors, students, and community women and staff and will be determined by them.

6. The University will replace on the academic calendar, the Columbus Day holiday with the Columbus Day Commemorative Teach-In. The University will sponsor this annual teach-in on this "holiday."

7. The University will replace on the academic calendar, the Columbus Day holiday with the Columbus Day Commemorative Teach-In. The University will sponsor this annual teach-in on this "holiday."

This is to prevent lockstep and to help in the University's attainment and maintenance of ALANA affairs. The dean of ALANA affairs will oversee this program, and report directly to the President of the University. The University will conduct a search (student representatives to be named) will sit on the search committee and will have 50 percent voting power.

5. The University will hire at least two recruiters per ALANA group. These recruiters will be responsible for awarding, full, four-year, entrance incentive scholarships. Every ALANA incoming student (not excluding CCEMAS, UARC, and BCP) must be sent an application for the above- mentioned scholarships now available. Out of this, 40 percent must go to women of color (including housing- child care, and health care) for low-income women of color, then designated for each community, (African-American, Asian American, Native American, and Latino American). If all awards are not issued in any given year, the University will allocate the funds to other members of the ALANA community who meet the said requirements.

A new program will be established to support the recipients of the scholarship, and will become a separate branch in of academic programming from the University. The program will consist of professors, students, and community women and staff and will be determined by them.

6. The University will replace on the academic calendar, the Columbus Day holiday with the Columbus Day Commemorative Teach-In. The University will sponsor this annual teach-in on this "holiday."

Mental Health Groups Spring 1997

MONDAY	TUESDAY	WEDNESDAY	THURSDAY
Mindfulness-based Stress Management Group — Learn to live fully in the present moment. Mindfulness meditation will be used as the foundation for all stress management exercises. This group is appropriate for both general stress management as well as for assistance in managing stress related medical disorders. Group runs for 8 weeks, Mondays, 3:30 - 5:30 p.m.	Self-Discovery Groups — Learn to develop better social skills; improve relationships; become more assertive; improve connections with others; feel more in control of your life; and cope with sadness, lonliness, or isolation by talking with others who share your concerns. These groups run for 10 weeks. Group I -Tuesdays, 3:30 - 5:00 p.m.	Self-Discovery Groups — Learn to develop better social skills; improve relationships; become more assertive; improve connections with others; feel more in control of your life; and cope with sadness, lonliness, or isolation by talking with others who share your concerns. These groups run for 10 weeks. Group II - Wednesdays, 3 - 4:30 p.m.	Ninos Adultos de Familias Disfuncionales — This is a therapy group for individuals who would like to understand how their upbringing continues to influence relationships in the present. Issues such as exploring/expressing feelings, developing self-esteem and breaking dysfunctional patterns are central. Group is held in Spanish. Group runs for 8 weeks, Wednesdays, 3:30 - 5:00 p.m.	Men's Group – If you are a man who has difficulty with self-confidence, friendships, romantic relationships, or expressing anger, you're not alone. This weekly discussion group can help you understand and overcome these problems as group members talk with and learn from each other. The group is co-led by a man and woman and runs for 8 - 10 weeks, Thursdays, 4:00 - 5:00 p.m

All groups require a pre-group interview. For more information, or to sign up for an interview, please call the Mental Health Division of University Health Services at 545-2337 or stop by 127 Hills North, M - F, 8:00 a.m. - 5 p.m.

R.A.D.
A Self Defense Course for Women
The RAD instructors, wish to extend to you an invitation in joining us for this intensive 12 hour program. The class focuses on options, awareness, prevention, risk reduction, and physical defense moves.
If you would like to join us remember the following:
•12 hour commitment (must attend full course)
•$25.00 fee
•16 students per class maximum (first come, first serve basis)
•class dates: 2/10, 2/12, 2/17, 2/19; 6:30 – 9:30
If you would like to join us, there will be an open registration at Dickinson Hall Lobby: February 5 & 6; 11:30--1:30 each day. For registration you will need your $25.00 fee and your current UMass student and/or staff I.D. Sorry, no phone-ins and no waiting.
HOPE TO SEE YOU THERE!

安城中國飯店 AMHERST CHINESE FOOD
WE DO NOT USE "MSG"
• MANDARIN & SZECHUAN CUISINE.
• HOME-STYLE COOKING, WE USE OUR FARM ORGANICALLY GROWN PRODUCE DURING LOCAL GROWING SEASON.
• EAT IN OR TAKE OUT
• FULL LIQUOR LICENSE
• OPEN 7 DAYS.
253-7835 • 253-2813 • 62 Main Street, Amherst

take Kaplan and get into the right school.
MCAT
• Highly trained, expert teachers who know the tests inside and out.
• Personalized, computerized study plans, tailored to your individual needs.
• Proven methods, guaranteed to raise your score.
Classes are starting now!
the leader in test prep
KAPLAN
1-800-KAP-TEST
www.kaplan.com

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139
STUDENT SPECIAL
4 MONTHS
KEISER • NAUTILUS • CYBEX
STAIRMASTERS • LIFECYCLES
TREADMILLS • V.R. BIKE
LIFEROWER • GAUNTLET
GRAVITON
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
Rte. 116 So. Amherst
256-0060

BUY ONE GET ONE FREE FAMOUS FOR
2 BURGS 2 BUCKS
I always get Fish n' Chips at Pete's
PETE'S
ROUTE 9
HADLEY, MA
YEAR 'ROUND
http://www.javanet/~mrburger/

WMUA 91.1 FM
The Student Radio Voice of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst
News • Jazz • Morning, Midnight, and Late Night Electic • Urban Contemporary • Public Affairs • World • Blues • Rock • R&B • Polka • Techno • Country • Bluegrass • Punk

BEADS
• Great Selection
• Classes
• Hemp Twine
Also Featuring Gift Items
•Silver •Jewelry
•Pottery •Unique Imports •Candles
•Picture Frames
•Stationery
•Cards
August the First
197 N. Pleasant St.
Amherst Ma.
01002
413-256-0276

used CDs and imports bought & sold
TURN IT UP!
5 Pleasant St. • Northampton • 582-1885
ON THE WEB: http://javanet.com/~turnitup

STATIONMASTERS BUFFET at THE DEPOT
HEALTHY COICES! SUPER VALUES!
$6.99 LUNCH BUFFET
MONDAY - FRIDAY
$8.99 DINNER BUFFET
MONDAY - WEDNESDAY
$12.99 BRUNCH BUFFET
EVERY SUNDAY 10:30 - 1:30 P.M.
THE DEPOT 1896-1996
HOME of spaghetti freddy's
At The Old Union Station
125A Pleasant Street, Downtown Northampton
413-586-5366

EMERGENCY MEDICAL TRAINING
• By Human Services Training Consultants Inc.
• Part Time Evenings
• Classes Start Feb 10 1997
• Call UMass Continuing Education at 545-0444

Local businesses suffer without student population

By Christina Poletto
Collegian Staff

According to a general consensus among area businesses, students at the University of Massachusetts were sorely missed during the wintersession.

With the decrease in business, substantial for some companies, many area residents and store owners found that without the student population here, the "college-town" type of atmosphere is lacking.

Food For Thought Books, located in Amherst Center, found that business substantially dropped off once the students left for semester break.

"Most of our business is trade-collective, worker-owned," said Jenny Robertson, manager of Food For Thought. "We have such a specific focus of selling books, once the students are gone, things turn bad in terms of business."

In conjunction with the UMass Stonewall Center, Food For Thought Books will be hosting poetry readings in the upcoming months. As for now, the store is re-stocking their shelves in preparation for the textbook rush.

The Mercantile, one of the area's oldest businesses, has come to expect the less chaotic atmosphere of these holiday months.

"We've been here 25 years now, so it's anticipated and planned that less business will occur over the break," said Adrian Wilkins, manager of the novelty shop.

A graduate of UMass himself, Wilkins said that the only drawback for his business was the reduction of last-minute holiday shoppers. Because the students left town earlier last semester, the Mercantile experienced business that was slower than usual.

"We're always delighted to see the students come back because our products are highly student-oriented," Wilkins said. "We've taken this break to re-order clothes and tapestries as well as jewelry and other items."

Local bars have also witnessed a considerable decrease in the amount of business coming through their doors. In addition to the long lines that did not pervade the Amherst streets every Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights, area bars and restaurants have seen a change in the clientele that patronize their establishments.

"There's definitely been a drop-off in the amount of college customers, but lately there's been a fair mix of older, more professional customers," said Jason Rife, a Rafters sports bar employee. "Although there have been busier and better times, some of the employees find it nice to have a break from the big crowds."

One employee from Delano's in downtown Amherst commented along the same lines, saying "It's a nice break."

Like the other Amherst establishments, Rafters and Delano's are gearing up for the awaited return of UMass and other Five College students.

According to the constant denizens of Rao's coffee shop, the change in the type of customer is also evident. "Once the majority of college kids left, Rao's got quite a bit more business from an older crowd," said Leah Tyler, a weekly customer at the cafe.

It was a nice change from seeing the same faces, to meeting people from an older, more mature group," Tyler said. "Still, it will be nice to see the students come back."

Antonio's Pizza shop, too, has seen a change in the quantity of business during the wintersession. "There's never a line anymore," commented Ed Fong, a UMass student and Amherst resident. "I still see a lot of the same people when I go in there, just less of a crowd. It's great when you're hungry — there's no wait."

KENNETH W.P. SCOTT/ COLLEGIAN

With the students home on break, local businesses faced decreased revenue.

■ Credit Union

continued from page 1

KENNETH W.P. SCOTT/ COLLEGIAN

Volunteer UMass Credit Union tellers like Larry Chan, a senior accounting major, will lose their jobs due to the merger.

mixed feelings because of the loss of the convenient campus branch.

"It's one of those mixed things," said Kimberly Brown, a senior history and political science major. "It's inconvenient to carry cash and now I won't ever have to go to the new bank because of ATM transactions... I'm sorry to see it leaving such a convenient location, but they are actually making it more convenient."

Joshua Cane, a senior BDIC major, disagrees.

"I think it's horrible because it is such a convenient location," Cane said of the UMass branch. "I don't think there is even a convenient bus to the new one. Plus, business majors who work here lose experience. I think it is quite a loss."

Tong, who started as a teller three years ago, said she will no longer be president of the UMass Credit Union.

"All of us will lose our jobs. We will no longer be able to work with daily operations, though there may be internships at the new location," Tong said.

Tong feels that the merger will be most detrimental to first or second-year student volunteers who just started as tellers because they will not be able to work their way up to positions on the board of directors.

"We are trying to set up a Student Credit Union Club for students interested in the business," Tong said.

The Five College Credit Union currently employs only one student intern, but Hutchinson said they are working on creating more opportunities for students to get credit union work experience in banking and marketing.

Eric Bruinooge, a graduate student and an employee at Commuter Services, has had a credit union account for four years and is upset with the merger.

"The students lose," Bruinooge said. "We lose the convenient location, we lose the RSO [Registered Student Organization]."

Hutchinson said they are looking for an on-campus location, but cannot be in the Student Union because they are not a student-run organization.

Winners of student employees of the year announced

By Victoria Groves
Collegian Staff

Five University of Massachusetts students have been named 1996-97 Gerald F. Scanlon Student Employees of the Year — an award based on nominations from their employers for outstanding performance in their campus jobs.

The winning students, Frantz Bien-Aime, Jr. from the Dean of Students Office; John Bitetti from Campus Distribution; Keitra Fergus from Housing Services; Lori Gordon from the Physical Plant; and Todd Zaniewski from Human Resources, were chosen from the 35 nominations received.

Lucille Leli, assistant director of Financial Aid and Student Employment Office coordinator, said that the criteria for award recipients includes "regular attendance, high dependency, ability to work without constant supervision and original contributions to their job."

The winners will be honored at a celebration on Feb. 13. Last year's winners and the selection committee will be in attendance when the 1996-97 honorees receive their awards.

Julie Nelson, a member of the selection committee from Housing Services, has been involved with this award program for the past three years.

"Oftentimes the ones who win are students who have worked in the same area for four years," Nelson said. "There's an attachment between the employer and the employee that is really heartwarming.

"The wonderful thing about being on this committee is to see the number of wonderful things students are doing on this campus that are really over and above what is required of their job."

Other criteria which make nominees stand out include character traits, creative ideas, ethics, beliefs and dedication, according to committee member Lawrence Holmes, deputy chief of Security for the UMass Public Safety Department, which employs between 400 and 500 students.

"I've been here for 26 years and this is one of the nicer experiences that I've had," Holmes said. "I welcomed the opportunity when they asked me to participate [in the selection process]."

The award was established during the 1987-88 academic year in memory of Gerald F. Scanlon, who was employed at the Financial Aid Office.

"It was named in his honor because of his work and dedication to all students while working in the Financial Aid Office," Leli said.

"[Scanlon] was an outstanding individual who liked his job. He was fair, did an outstanding job and was always willing to help," Holmes said.

WELCOME BACK TO
UMASS
Visit the UNIVERSITY STORE for:
•School and Dorm Supplies
•Books and Magazines
•Imprinted Clothing and Gifts
•Art Supplies, Computers and Accessories
•Candy, Cards and Gifts
Watch for Weekly in Store Specials- Special Pricing of Selected Items
Open Extra Hours for your Convenience:
Tuesday January 28 9am - 5pm
Wednesday January 29 9am - 7pm
Thursday January 30 9am - 7pm
Friday January 31 9am - 5pm
Saturday February 1 10am - 5pm
UNIVERSITY STORE
Campus Center
545-2619

ON CAMPUS
THE OFF CAMPUS MEAL PLAN
Don't be stuck in the kitchen while the world passes you by.
classé cafe
EL ACUÑA TEX MEX CANTINA
PRUDDY'S
Amber Waves
安城中國飯店
AMHERST CHINESE FOOD
SUBWAY
PASTA E BASTA
THE BLACK SHEEP Deli & Bakery
Amherst DELIVERS Deli
CUTTY'S
ANTONIO'S
FOR MORE INFO:
1-888-211-6267
Rafters SPORTS BAR & RESTAURANT
Newman Center Cafeteria
DELANO'S
Bueno Y Sano
d'angelo sandwich shops

1-800-COLLECT®

44% SAVINGS

Dial 1-800-COLLECT and save up to 44%.*

*For long-distance calls. Savings based on a 3-minute AT&T operator-dialed interstate call.

NEBHE praises UM environmental science program

By Tamar Carroll
Collegian Staff

The environmental science program at the University of Massachusetts has recently been recognized as one of eight outstanding environmental education programs in New England.

Faculty and students alike were excited by the New England Board of Higher Education's "1996 Review of Environmental Education at Colleges and Universities in New England," which rated UMass, along with the University of Connecticut, University of Vermont, Brown University, Tufts University, Williams College, Dartmouth College and Middlebury College, as excellent.

These were the only eight institutions to receive this rating out of the 103 institutions in New England that offer programs in environmental education.

"I'm delighted that they got it right," said resource economics Professor Cleve Willis. "All the good publicity we can get is welcome."

Guy Lanza, director of the environmental science program at UMass, said that the report, which was based on questionnaires filled out by the director of the environmental education program at each institution, "acknowledges the hard work and dedication of the faculty that are contributing to the program."

"It's definitely confidence-building to know that you're in a program that's doing really good work and that is preparing its students," said environmental science major Briana Brown.

The environmental science program is an undergraduate, interdisciplinary program drawing faculty from eight departments and two colleges.

"This is a truly interdisciplinary program. A lot of our classes are team taught with faculty from three departments," Willis said.

Students in the program take a series of core classes which cover environmental policy, biology, toxicology and chemistry, as well as calculus and statistics. They then choose a concentration in biology, health, toxicology and chemistry, environmental policy or integrated pest management.

Lanza said that this curriculum prepares the students to solve complex environmental problems. After graduation, students may work for government agencies drafting environmental legislation and programs; for private industry in the area of health and safety compliance; or for toxic waste prevention, or in biological or ecological research.

The program, which has 350-400 majors, has experienced tremendous growth in the past three years. Lanza attributes the success of the program to "the demand and need for quality interdisciplinary education, the strong financial and moral support from the UMass administration, including Chancellor Scott, Provost Crosson and Dean Helgesen, and a dedicated steering committee."

The environmental science program is currently in the process of developing plans for new graduate programs in the environment and a center for the environment.

"The center would compliment and enrich our teaching and ability to solve environmental problems with outreach and research," Willis said. "It would house the graduate programs, tie the other colleges and faculty together in a more cohesive program, and serve as a place for the public to come and get help on educational and environmental problems."

The New England Board of Higher Education also reported that New England is an "ideal" location for environmental education programs, due to the financial commitment of the region to the environment.

"There's a real financial commitment in New England to preserve and use their resources wisely," Lanza said. "It's clear to the general public now that we need sustainable environments to have sustainable economies. We prepare people to contribute in that area."

Grants strengthen LDSS

By Mark McGrath
Collegian Staff

The Learning Disabilities Support Services (LDSS) at the University of Massachusetts recently received two grants geared toward improving the quality of education for students with learning disabilities.

The first, a $1200 grant from the Center for Teaching at UMass, is being used to develop what LDSS Projects Coordinator Kregg Strehorn calls a "universal structure/design for education."

According to Strehorn, the concept is to make classrooms friendlier for learning-disabled students. The project is currently being worked out in focus groups with the help of faculty members from across the University who have been nominated as Faculty Friends by learning disabled students.

In these focus groups, the faculty has learned that their ideas are not completely original. Many people have been working on similar ideas within their own departments, but have never organized with others who have similar goals. This grant-funded project gives them an opportunity to make progress together.

According to Strehorn, "The project has been really good so far."

The second grant, $1425 from the Chancellor's Council on Civility, will be used toward efforts of LDSS' Peer Mentoring Network, a student-run group working for disabilities support, advocacy and education.

The network was started by graduate student Susan Pliner of the Social Justice Education Program as a way of reaching out to the UMass and surrounding communities. Their work consists of outreach and discussion panels on the UMass campus and in area high schools.

LDSS itself was founded in 1986 to help students with physical, psychiatric and learning disabilities. Funded by the University, the group works with the Center for Counseling and Academic Development.

"The center is run on the case management model," Strehorn explained.

In that model, eight trained graduate students work out of the office as case managers. Their duties include dealing with individual students on a case-by-case basis, helping students to understand their disabilities and acting as liaison's between the students and the University.

Also offered are academic accommodations such as test proctoring sessions for students who need extra time to finish exams, and note-taking services for those who need it.

Over 600 students on campus have documented learning disabilities and are eligible for LDSS services, but Strehorn feels that this number is not accurate.

"There are more on campus, but they don't know their learning disabilities are real things," Strehorn said. "The center offers testing at a greatly reduced rate."

The center is located within the center for Councilling and Academic Development at the Berkshire House in the Southwest Residential Area, and is open on weekdays from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

UMass' nationally recognized recycling program expands

By Leigh Faulkner
Collegian Staff

Over the past few months, the Office of Waste Management (OWM) has expanded their recycling program by finding ways to recycle some new materials.

The program, which now serves as a model to the rest of the nation, is the largest program at any American university.

Two new materials that the OWM started recycling this past summer are Laser tone cartridges and computer disks.

Over 16 million used toner cartridges are dumped into U.S. landfills every year. However, the OWM has developed two ideas to recycle these cartridges.

In coordination with the Procurement office and many departments on campus, a new pilot program has been developed to allow Quality Image, a Boston based vendor, to pick up empty toner cartridges and refill them as well as replace any worn parts. If the pilot program is successful, it will be implemented as a campus-wide program over the summer of 1997.

Otherwise, cartridges that can not be refilled or fixed can be mailed to the OWM to be recycled.

Another new six-month pilot program from OWM involved recycling used magnetic data materials, such as 3.5" and 5.25" disks of all memory densities, CD-ROMs, VHS and audio cassettes and others. Disks are sent to vendors where they are erased, reformatted, relabeled and repacked for sale. CD-ROMs are shredded and recycled.

Last March, a food and yard compost pilot program was designed to reduce the amount of solid waste in the landfills. The pilot ran until June 30, 1996 and three dining facilities participated in the program: Worcester Dining Commons, The Faculty Club and Butterfield Snackbar; People's Market, Earthfoods and the Campus Center later joined the pilot. The food service staff for each facility separated prep food waste and it was composted in Amherst by Scott Leonard of Leonard Farm.

During the four-month program, over five tons of food waste along with 98 tons of animal bedding were composted, saving the University $300 in avoided landfill disposal fees.

Due to this program's success, the compost project was expanded in September 1996 to include all dining facilities. The OWM will use an in-vessel composting unit which was purchased through a grant provided by the Department of Environmental Protection. The unit is a self-contained, continuous feeding composting system.

UMass will be the first pilot site in New England to test this in-vessel technology. The OWM estimates that the unit will save compost more than 20 tons per week of consumer foods waste from the landfill.

Without this composting unit, about 6100 tons of waste is generated on this campus each year — 900 tons of that is food waste. In addition to increasing the University's recycling rate by 10 percent to 15 percent, composting also has many other advantages, such as reducing landfill disposal requirements and reducing the solid waste loading and stress on UMass' sewer system.

Jessica Ragotte, an environmental science major said that besides the obvious advantage of saving trees, recycling also helps by "helping UMass save money by lowering landfill fees."

Besides these new materials that are now being recycled, there is also the ongoing recycling program throughout the University's dormitories and academic buildings.

Every residence hall has three well-labeled containers — blue for mixed papers, red for bottles and cans and brown for cardboard boxes. In addition to these three containers, the academic buildings also have a green container for white and colored office paper.

However these are not the only materials that can be recycled. Other materials such as scrap metal, batteries, tires, waste oil, leaf and yard wast, wood and electronic equipment can be recycled as well by contacting the OWM for a pick-up time.

Despite these containers and notices being posted through the buildings, Ragotte, a senior, said "so many students on this program don't even know about the recycling programs on campus... The program exists everywhere on campus in the dorms and in academic buildings."

The OWM was created by the Physical Plant in 1989. After a few years into the program, the OWM decided that the University needed a centralized processing and transfer facility for recyclables. The Intermediate Processing Facility was constructed and now adds to the programs success.

The IPF features seven indoor and three outdoor roll-off container bays, a 70-foot long, 135-ton capacity digital load cell truck, 13,000 square foot indoor processing and storage areas, plastic granulating equipment, sorting and materials handling conveyors and an electronic demanufacturing system.

In addition, the IPF also serves as a regional recyclable processing facility, accepting materials from numerous towns, small businesses and schools. This part of the program helps to promote economic development as well as a sense of community.

Ragotte said that there is more than one way for students to become involved with recycling. "Besides making sure to recycle things that should be, another way to help recycle is by not throwing trash into the recyclable containers," she said.

For more information on the recycling programs at UMass call OWM at 545-0618.

KENNETH W.P. SCOTT/ COLLEGIAN

The UMass Office of Waste Management, one of the leading programs in the country, is developing new methods for recycling campus waste.

■ Grant

continued from page 3

industry, especially petrochemical companies, to use new processes which are cleaner and more energy efficient. By eliminating the production of many waste products, the molecular sieves will cut down on pollutants produced.

The molecular sieves will also reduce the number of steps in processes, resulting in great savings in capital and equipment. Tspatsis estimates that the molecular sieves could make a difference of several million dollars in one plant alone.

Six graduate students and two post doctoral candidates work with Tspatsis, who also collaborates with scientists and researchers from all over the country.

"Our undergraduates are lucky, because our faculty can give them a knowledge of where the future is in our field," Tspatsis said. "Several undergraduates are also working with me on honors thesis and independent projects. They can only gain this kind of experience at a school where people are doing research."

Tspatsis is one of an elite group of scientists to be selected to receive the grant from the David and Lucile Packard Foundation, which recognizes 20 outstanding young faculty members each year.

His work is also supported by the National Science Foundation, the Petroleum Research Fund, the National Environmental Technology Institute, the U.S. Air Force and several private companies.

■ Offender

continued from page 1

register should do so with the municipality in their hometown, or with the municipality in the town where the University is located.

According to Luippold, the Attorney General's recent decision also named the Massachusetts State Police Agency responsible for enforcement of this law.

After the state's interpretation was announced, the legal council which Channel 40 originally contacted revised their interpretation to include the same content as the one issued by the Attorney General.

Writing workshop at UMass teaches area children

By Christina Paletto
Collegian Staff

The Western Massachusetts Writing Project (WMWP) and the University of Massachusetts hosted a writing workshop for local grammar school children which featured English professor Paul Mariani as keynote speaker on January 18.

Over 150 children attended the 90-minute workshop, which was funded by a grant from the Massachusetts Department of Education. The workshops were designed to teach children the basics of writing in four separate areas: prose, science fiction/fantasy, poetry and non-fiction prose.

"The mission of this organization," said UMass English professor Charles Moran, "is to support writing and the teaching of writing in western Massachusetts."

Moran is co-director of the UMass-based project alongside Patricia Hunter of the Springfield Public Schools, Diana F. Callahan of the Easthampton Public Schools and Bruce M. Perriman of the Amherst Regional Schools.

Before the workshops began, professor Mariani addressed the young students. Mariani, who has written numerous biographies and books of poetry, then proceeded to read various selections and excerpts of his work to the audience.

Mariani's latest book, The Great Wheel, is a compilation of his "memories transformed into a work of art." His first poem entitled "Horses" magnified an image that occurred over 40 years ago. Working from memory alone, he re-created an incident involving the robbery of a farmer by two adolescent boys.

"The author of this poem can still feel the deep, penetrating glare of the horse's brown eyes," Mariani said.

Other works were also very well received by the audience, including a prose piece written by Mariani's son, Mark. This story was more adolescent oriented, as the selection summarized an odd encounter between a man and the turtle he was trying to rescue.

The last poem Mariani read, entitled "Voyager," was recently re-created into a musical piece. It described the desperation felt by a son upon the death of his mother.

"It's a piece about unfinished business" said Mariani, as he recalled memories about the intangible relationship.

Mariani stressed the need for keeping writing alive and encouraged the students to be persistent with their writing.

"Start out by writing for one hour a day, even half an hour a day," Mariani suggested.

Following the opening assembly, the students were assigned to their various workshops, located in Bartlett Hall.

Under the guidance of WMWP teacher-consultants, the children were taught the essentials of the various writing genres. After lunch, the students were given a chance to edit and critique each other's work.

Some of the writing pieces the children completed in these workshops may possibly appear in one of four upcoming compilations of student writing. These anthologies not only provide students with the chance to publish their work, but also allows them to view the work of other students. All of the anthologies are edited by a panel of student editors.

The WMWP was established in 1992 as the local site of the National Writing Project, a nationwide program which strives to improve student writing abilities by focusing on the advancement of the teaching and learning of writing in the nation's schools.

In a similiar manner to the National Writing Project, the WMWP aspires to achieve these goals primarily by providing professional development programs for classroom teachers.

Functioning on a "teachers-teaching-teachers" model, this program begins with writing teachers attending an Invitational Summer Institute at the University. From there, WMWP provides workshops for others teachers in area schools.

DO YOU OR A FRIEND OR COLLEAGUE HAVE A PROBLEM WITH ALCOHOL OR OTHER DRUGS?
THERE ARE RESOURCES AVAILABLE TO HELP

Advice Triage Nurse & Urgent Care Clinic, University Health Services 577-5229
For medical situations and questions requiring same-day attention. 24-Hours

Employee Assistance Program (EAP), 35 University Health Services 545-0350
Assessment, referrals for treatment, self-help groups and follow-up for employees concerning their own or a family member's or colleague's substance abuse problem. Weekdays 8:30-12:00, 1:00-5:00

Medical Clinic Appointments, University Health Services 577-5101
For students and UHS Kaiser Permanente members concerning medical situations and substance abuse questions. Weekdays 8:00-5:00

Mental Health Services, 127 Hills North 545-2337
Counseling, groups, 24-hour emergency coverage for students and UHS Kaiser Permanente members. Appointments strongly encouraged. Weekdays 8:00-5:00

Urgent Care Clinic at Hills North, Weekdays (545-2337):
1:00-2:30 when semester classes are in session.
1:00-2:00 during Winter Session and Summer.
24-Hour Emergency services through the UHS Urgent Care clinic (577-5000).

In a life threatening situation, call 911 or your local emergency number for the police or an ambulance to transport you directly to the nearest hospital. (Cooley-Dickinson Hospital is closest to Amherst.)

UMass Student Legal Services Office
FREE confidential professional legal services for UMass students!
545-1995 CALL TODAY!
922 CAMPUS CENTER

We don't pretend to be Futon Experts. We Are.
Since 1988 handmade futons & hardwood frames.
FLY BY NIGHT
Fantastic futons. Fantastic prices.
http://empiremall.com/flybynight • 1-800-927-1464
21 State street Northampton 413-586-1464

"BIG" SALE.
Indoor Sidewalk Sale
Wed Jan 29-Sun Feb 2
Racks of clothes. Tables of shoes. Baskets of jewelry. Lots more sale merchandise coming from other Zanna stores. All the awesome outdoor sidewalk sale savings, only indoors.
ZANNA downtown Amherst

Tanning & Nails Special
◆Buy 32 sessions get 1 week free
or
◆Buy 14 sessions get 1/2 off a Full Set of Acrylic Nails
Hi-Tech Tanning
Call for an appointment
584-4700
Newest tanning bulbs in the Area
Expires 2-29-97
We TAN at Hi-Tech Tanning Not Burn!!!

Things Not Fitting The Way They Should? Take Them In... To Arif's
34 Pleasant Street, Northampton
584-9362

Herrell's Ice Cream
Herrell's Ice Cream
Thornes Marketplace
Old South St. Entrance
Northampton 586-9700
Made fresh on the Premises!

Campus Activities at the University of Massachusetts presents
"Something Every Friday"

A Touch of Reality
This three-person group uses poetry to express important issues like AIDs; gang violence; and day-to-day reality. This powerful trio has opened for the Fugees, the Lost Boys, and the Last Poets.
Bluewall Cafe
February 7, 1997
8:00pm
Free
For more information check our website: http://www.umass.edu/campact/events/sef.htm
This series is made possible by a grant from UMASS Auxiliary Services, the Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs, and the Daily

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS CLUB
Hurry Special Ends February 15th
The Area's Most Complete Club • 256-6446
90 Gatehouse Road
"Off Rt. 9 2 miles East of Town Center"
•PVTA bus route to Rolling Green • pool • • aerobics • aqua-aerobics • steps • nautilus • • racquetball • free weights • jacuzzi • • sauna • massage • bikes • • indoor tennis & basketball • •rowers • treadmills •
Join now for our 15 week Semester Special ($159) & get a free HFC T-Shirt!

Throughout your college years, make A.J. Hastings your headquarters for SCHOOL SUPPLIES
Count on us for everything from your first freshman notebook to your final thesis paper...plus all those years of pens, pencils, paper clips, typewriter ribbons, etc. in-between!
 SPECIAL **
Bring us your used Hewlett-Packard Ink Jet cartridge #51626A, 51629A, or 51633A and we will give you $1.50 off the price of a new one.
A·J·Hastings, Inc. Since 1914
Newsdealer and Stationer
"Conveniently located in the center of Amherst"
45 South Pleasant Street • (413) 253-2840
Open: Mon. - Sat. 5 am - 9 pm, Sundays 5 am - 5 pm

RECYCLE YOUR COLLEGIAN

TOTAL FITNESS Without Waiting In Line
$139 4 months
STUDENT SPECIAL
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
Rte. 116 So. Amherst • 256-0060

TOUR LEADERS WANTED!!
If You Are: • 20 yrs. old • Experienced Working With Teens • Love the Outdoors, Hiking, Summer Skiing, and much more.
For more information please call 914-835-0699 or send your resume to:
Westcoast Connection,
154 East Boston Post Rd.
Mamaroneck, NY 10543
Fax: 914-835-0798

Academics and More!!!
UMass Division of Continuing Education
For a free course catalog, call 413-545-0107 or e-mail contined@admin.umass.edu
Explore our web site and see how we can help you - http://www.umass.edu/contined/
Division of Continuing Education
University of Massachusetts Amherst
providing access to adult, nontraditional education for over 25 years
Tons of credit undergrad courses — in the evening!
Nearly 100 noncredit workshops — affordable, fun, practical, including
• Bartending,
• GMAT, GRE, LSAT, & MCAT Preparation,
• Magical Arts,
• Photography,
• ESL,
• EMT Training,
• Marketing,
and CHOCOLATE !

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
A Student/Comminity Service Learning Program*
(*an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored program)
You Can Earn 1-2 Credits
Recruitment Nights
(Attend one session - Required for all Applicants!!!)
SPRING SEMESTER '97
6:30 PM
(Note: Prompt starting time)
• Feb 3 Mon Campus Center Aud. or
• Feb 4 Tues. CC Room 163 or
• Feb 5 Wed. Campus Center Aud.
Assignment notification, Feb. 6th (Thurs.) at Boltwood table on Campus Center Concourse.
Volunteer while earning credit Come and Learn How!!! Your life will NEVER be the same!

Early Bird Dinners
$7.95 per person Includes soup & salad Sun.-Thurs. 5-7 p.m.
Sunday Brunch
$12.95 All you can eat 11 a.m.-2:30 p.m.
Reservations Accepted • Walk-ins Welcome
Martinis Restaurant
5 Bridge St., Northampton
584-1197 • Free Parking

Alfredo's Photographic Gallery
39 South Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
413-253-1707 • Fax 413-253-1716
Sports Photos
Landscapes and many others
Great Back to School Photographs & Small Sculptures

Scott's LIQUORS
OPEN: Mon.-Sat. 9a.m.-11p.m. Tel: 549-2692.

Shop Scott's & Save Lotts!

Beer Specials

Miller Genuine Draft 24 bottles	$9.99 +dep.
Bud Ice (REG & LIGHT) 30-packs	$ 15.99 +dep.
Devil Mountain (ALL FLAVORS) 6-packs	$ 4.99 +dep.
Red Dog & Ice House 12-pack bottles	$ 6.99 +dep.
Magic Hat (ALL FLAVORS) 6-packs	$ 5.99 +dep.
Bud, Bud Light, Bud Ice 1/2 Kegs	$ 39.99 +dep.

Check Out Our Other Great In Store Specials

Liquor & Wine Specials

Boones Wines (ALL FLAVORS) 750ml	5 for $10.00
Sutter Home Chardonnay 750ml	$ 4.99
Ruinite Varietals 750ml	$ 4.49
Cider Jack 6 packs	$ 4.99
Jagermeister 750ml	$ 14.49
Jose Cuervo Tequilla 750ml	$ 10.99
Zhenka Vodka 1.75 L	$ 8.99
Kahlua Liqeur 750ml	$ 13.49
Chi Chi Mudslides 1.75 L	$ 9.99
Midori Melon Liqeur 750ml	$ 13.99
Aftershock & Avalanche 750ml	$ 14.49
Malibu CoConut Rum 750ml	$ 8.99

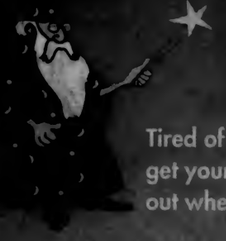
Scotts LIQUORS
6 University Drive
at Newmarket Center, Amherst

MasterCard VISA

Tele-Check for your personal check

Rafters Alumni Stadium University Drive SCOTTS Victory Market Amity St. Closest Package Store To Campus

Thats Right!



Screen Printed T-Shirts On 100% Cotton!
Many Colors to Choose From!
PRINTSHACK & APPAREL UNLIMITED
322 Russell Street • Hadley, Mass
Call Today 586-6933

BE A STAR WITH STARS

• Career Networking
• Travel Opportunities
• Shadow Programs
• Potential Scolarships
• Great Times

For more information, contact Ann Thompson at 545-2317

WISE UP!

Tired of waiting in line just to get your grades? Or to find out where your next class is?

Now students can gain access to their own information via the World Wide Web!
• Your Grades
• Your Schedule
• Your Current Semester Bill
• Your Financial Aid Information

WISE uses secure communications to protect your privacy and is available at:

http://wise.umassp.edu

Web Information Systems for Everyone

FILM • MUSIC • THEATER • LIFESTYLES • BOOKS • ART

Arts & Living

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Volume CV Issue 70 Tuesday January 28, 1997

BACK TO SCHOOL EDITION

STAR WARS TRILOGY SPECIAL EDITION

A PERSONAL HISTORY OF THE TRI

Adam Levine

Every decade our world is faced with new cultural phenomenons that usually fade away in time. Rarely, a new event occurs that transcends normal nostalgia and safely remains eternal — the legend of Star Wars is one such event. Although it has been twenty years since its original release, the film is still one of the crowning achievements in motion picture history. What is it about creator George Lucas' spectacular science-fiction trilogy that has continuously entertained audiences on a global scale for two decades? Star Wars is more popular than ever now, and its upcoming re-release is the most anticipated film of 1997.

I was only three years old when the first Star Wars film hit theaters in 1977. Still, I could never begin to deny the impact Star Wars had on my life. I remember seeing the first film with my family during a special re-release before Empire Strikes Back came out. To explain the way I felt with such trivial words as "awestruck" would be an insulting understatement. At the risk of sounding too patheticly overdramatic, I can honestly say that words could not do justice in retelling my excitement. I experienced an emotional surge of bewilderment that overtook me as I sat wide-eyed watching images that I knew would stay with me for years to come.

There was more to Star Wars, however, than just timeless special effects. One reason why the trilogy is so popular is that it has so much to offer and every viewing can be an entirely unique experience. When I was younger, all I could really identify with was the intensity of the characters and their amazing situations. What young boy wouldn't want to be like Luke Skywalker, flying through space to battle evil and save the beautiful princess from the wretched claws of Darth Vader? My daydreams in elementary school would consist of soaring through space on the Millennium Falcon as Han Solo with co-pilot Chewbacca, finding adventure every direction I turned. After all, Solo had always been my hero with his dashing appearance and "I don't care about anything but me and money" attitude.

The one comforting aspect of admitting this former part of my personal history is that I know I was not alone. Every young boy in my age bracket felt the same as I did, and now we can compare stories of who had the most action figures and who can best quote the lines of the movies. Every true fan even has their own favorite quote, mine being Luke in his most whiny of voices saying, "with the blast shield down, I can't see anything!"

As I have grown older, I have begun to see Star Wars through different eyes. It is no longer the amazing space odyssey it once was, especially with lesser films with better effects now being produced in rapid numbers. Star Wars however, is quite different from its cheap imposters for reasons that only with age I could come to realize. Star Wars is a romantic fantasy that contains complicated and flawed characters, making them easier to identify with than your average big name action heroes. We the viewers can have serious compassion for the characters and their cause, positioning ourselves on a more intimate level than we ever could with any other adventure oriented film.

Young filmmaker George Lucas was inspired by the great

Turn to HISTORY, page 2-A

STAR WARS SPECIAL EDITION

The history of the trilogy — so far...

John Hendrickson

"A long time ago in a galaxy far, far away..."

Well, it may have not been in a galaxy far, far away, but it was a long time ago. 1997 marks the twentieth anniversary of Star Wars. That's right — Star Wars, the movie that became a cultural force which dominated the childhood of an entire generation of boys, is 20 years old. To commemorate two decades of Darth Vader and droids, series creator George Lucas is set to re-release Star Wars and its two sequels, The Empire Strikes Back and Return Of The Jedi.

However, Lucas is giving movie audiences in 1997 far more bang for their buck than 20 years ago. The Star Wars trilogy has been given a complete overhaul. From a restored film negative and soundtrack to the addition of new creatures and scenes which didn't make the original cut, the revamped series now achieves what schedules and technological and financial constraints wouldn't allow in the original films.

Shortly after Star Wars was released, Lucas felt that he'd only achieved about 60 percent of his vision on the screen. The advent of computer graphics, though, has enabled him to complete the movie as originally intended. Industrial Light & Magic, the video graphics company owned by Lucas, has redone over 90 percent of the trilogy's special effects. So now the formerly stiff and slow-paced battle scenes between X-Wings and TIE Fighters will be more fluid and chaotic; the streets of Mos Eisely spaceport will be filled with even more scum and villainy; Han Solo will now bump into an entire squad of computer-generated Stormtroopers; Luke Skywalker's Landspeeder will actually seem like it is floating; and the Death Star's explosion will look like more than a glorified firecracker.

However, the most eagerly anticipated aspect of the updated Star Wars trilogy are the new scenes, both those left on the cutting-room floor and entirely new ones created with the help of computers. Star Wars contains the most added footage, with Empire coming in a close second and Jedi featuring new opening and final shots. Footage which has become almost mythical to die-hard Star Wars geeks (you know, the ones who refer to Star Wars as "A New Hope") will finally be seen, including Stormtroopers riding around on reptilian Dewbacks and, yes, the legendary confrontation between Han Solo and Jabba the Hutt in Docking Bay 94.

The Han/Jabba scene is the best example of the technological innovation pioneered by Industrial Light & Magic. In his original form, Jabba was an English-speaking fat guy. Lucas, knowing that the character would pop up again in Jedi, decided not to obligate himself to such an ordinary-looking villain and scrapped the footage. However, the use of computers has enabled the original Jabba to be seamlessly replaced by his more familiar later incarnation. Incidentally, it is rumored that another character seen in the two sequels has a cameo appearance here.

Some of the added footage in the soon to be re-released The Empire Strikes Back and Return Of The Jedi include a sub-plot about Wampas (remember the big white thing that attacked Luke out in the snow?) invading the Rebel base on Hoth, a scene showing Luke building his new light saber in Ben Kenobi's old pad, and the somewhat disturbing prospect of a

Turn to TRILOGY, page 2-A

THE EMPIRE STRIKES BACK SPECIAL EDITION

Merchandising a must for Star Wars Junkies

Michael J. Nam

For a number of months now, fans of the classic Star Wars trilogy have been waiting with breathless anticipation for the re-release of George Lucas new treatment of the movies. However, the Star Wars Special Edition (SWSE) arrives for the twentieth anniversary of the film under the glare of power-driven media hype and merchandising beyond compare as well.

Many can remember the days of the original blitz of Star Wars merchandise that Lucas shrewdly kept control of, even though his movie was then considered a high risk venture. The toys and other items became a part of American life and thus a money-making bonanza.

The good Luke Skywalker and his comrades battling the evil Darth Vader on a package of Micro Machines is the stuff dreams are made of — and it sells.

The home shopping channel QVC holds entire collectible shows that are only equaled by sports and Star Trek items. The books, such as Timothy Zahn's trilogy and the recent Shadows of the Empire, continue to hit the best-sellers lists. Older collectibles, such as the action figures in their original packaging, can be auctioned for hundreds to thousands of dollars.

The question still remains, however — why?

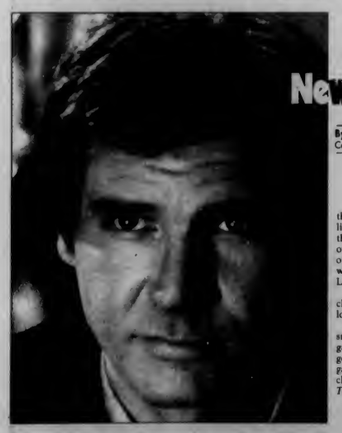
The movie represents something impossibly innocent in a world that has become dangerously cynical. The toys, the lunchboxes, the comic books and even the food products with the movie's name attached become a physical symbol of that innocence.

My ex-boss, now in his thirties and recently married, went out immediately to purchase the new Boba Fett action figure during work hours. On a whim, a good friend of mine who is 20 decided to buy the trilogy CD pack on QVC with his mother's credit card.

I myself fell into the marketing blitz by buying the immenesely popular THX remastered video set when it first arrived for the low price of $31.99 plus tax. There was also the Tales of the Jedi graphic novel I bought at a comic book store, and the Dark Forces CD-ROM game for the PC.

All significant purchases for a person on a budget.

But the reason we buy into the Star Wars world is simple. It makes us feel good. The world around us littered with the decay of culture and promise. People inundated by scandal, violence, controversy and hatred. The fantasy world of Han Solo makes sense in its stark contrasts of good and evil.



Vader is evil, Skywalker is good and Lando is...? Well, he seems evil then becomes good, but it all works out in the end. Simplicity at its finest.

So, that is what makes it easy to understand why the Star Wars phenomenon can still outcompete the bloated movie merchandising market.

It is simplicity, not the uncontrolled budget of Waterworld, where the only thing that matched the expenditure of the film was Kevin Costner's ego. It is not the computer animated, glossed-over Jurassic Park, which

Turn to JUNKIES, page 2-A

RETURN OF THE JEDI SPECIAL EDITION

New Video game a travesty for purists

By Jeremy Brothers
Collegian Staff

SHADOWS OF THE EMPIRE
LucasArts Entertainment
Nintendo 64

After three films, we have come to appreciate the Star Wars trilogy as legendary — memorized lines of dialogue and cultural references from the films coming out of the mouth of the leader of the free world. But what happens when someone tampers with a legend? The question arises when we look at the 64-bit video game from LucasArts entitled "Shadows of the Empire."

It's an adventure game that introduces a new character to the already established Star Wars lore.

Dash Rendar is the new character, an old smuggling friend of Han Solo's whom the video game follows. "Character" might actually be too generous a term for a video game, but since the game has Dash mingling with already established characters in the Rebel camp at the beginning of The Empire Strikes Back, what the heck...

Dash is placed in several situations that seem strangely familiar to fans of the Star Wars trilogy. He turns various force fields off so the rebels can escape, fights the AT-ATs alongside Luke and the rebels on Hoth and meets up and battles with two of the trilogy's infamous bounty hunters — IG-88 and Boba Fett. The different levels see Dash guiding Lucas' established characters (mostly Luke — goodness knows what good being a Jedi is when you can't do anything) to what we know are their fates from the films.

"Shadows of the Empire" tries to tell how the events that we know from the film came to be by making this Dash character (who is, with his Millennium Falcon-like ship and his cocky dialogue, a blatant Han Solo rip off) save the day by performing his sideline bits. A sort of Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are Dead video game for the Star Wars set.

As good as the game is technologically (the 3-D technology that's by no means groundbreaking is still pretty neat, after all), the very premise of the game seems to smack of frustrating revisionism. B

Layout and Design by Josh Sylvester • Photos and Logos courtesy Lucasfilm Ltd & 20th Century Fox

■ History

continued from page 1-A

Japanese director Akira Kurosawa's film The Hidden Fortress, which told the story of two samurai and a young princess on an epic adventure. From this blueprint, Lucas created his own epic, substituting ancient Japan for a "time long ago in a galaxy far far away." Realizing that his story was far too complicated for only one film, Lucas decided to write the treatments for nine chapters of his Star Wars saga, but then made only parts four through six into films.

Currently in pre-production are the first three parts which will explain the history of Ben Kenobi, Darth Vader and Yoda.

There is no doubt that the upcoming prequels will contribute to a stunning conclusion of this century, and the entire saga will be respected for its contributions to film history. Yet, the question is still apparent on why Star Wars is so important. The first film in the trilogy, A New Hope, introduces us to the primary characters of Luke Skywalker, Han Solo, Princess Leia Organa, and Darth Vader. By the finale of the last film, Return of the Jedi, we have witnessed each of the principle leads overcome tremendous spiritual circumstances, resulting in a state of redemption. Who will forget one of the last scenes in Jedi when Vader pleads with his son Luke to take of his helmet so that he may look at him with his own eyes? At this point we see the careful transition from monster to father with enough realism to perhaps allow us to understand our own parents with more dignity and maturity.

Star Wars also serves as criticism of political tyranny and the ideal of spirituality. The concept of the rebels struggles for freedom against the Imperial Empire can be a metaphor for any revolution. The passionate battle for freedom that Star Wars illustrates elevates it to the genre of serious drama opposed to merely a sci-fi soap opera. Yoda's insights on the Force also add an intriguing flair of optimism to the story's structure. Quotes such as, "No... try not. Do or do not: there is no try," are an inspiration to even the most dignified slacker.

All in all, Star Wars could not be complete without its secondary details, which may be the true reason that this phenomenon is so legendary. What really makes this trilogy so wonderfully unique is the supporting roles of R2-D2 and C3PO, the lovable Ewoks, the bar scene at Mos Eisely, and countless epic battles on every planet from Tatooine to Hoth and even deep space. Star Wars is an international tradition that goes beyond the confines of being just great movies but rather a reminder of how far the human imagination can reach.

Adam Levine is a Collegian columnist.

COURTESY LUCASFILM LTD.

Imperial AT-AT's attack the rebels on Hoth in The Empire Strikes Back

■ Junkies

continued from page 1-A

offered little more than ideas for a new theme park ride. And it is not the overwhelming special effects and star power of the mega- successful Independence Day that stormed through the cinema not with a message of actual innocence, but rather a naive, Reaganistic form of patriotism.

Lucas' films escape any form of politics, of problems, of the now. They are timeless, from the ancient battle between good and evil, to the encompassing spiritualism of the Force.

There is no Whitewater on Dagoba, Admiral Ackbar would not be found guilty of any ethics breach and Jedi masters would not ask you for money to help perpetuate their congregation.

However, the outside world will try to inject controversy into anything. Some are upset by George Lucas' gumption in actually altering the most compelling pop-culture phenomenon of all times. Some can not understand why he would digitally add to his movies by way of Forrest Gump technology.

Yet, with the aplomb of true lover of his art form, Lucas states his need to improve upon a rushed product that he had never considered finished.

For most, it does not matter what the reason Lucas "fixed" his work is. A friend of mine wept when the trailer for the Special Edition came on before a movie. The television commercials show young children who never had the opportunity to see it on the big screen, a whole new generation of consumers for the toy companies excited over the prospect of seeing the special edition.

And this only the beginning. The prequels to the trilogy are still to come, and they tantalizingly tell the public that George Lucas will be directing for the first time since Star Wars 20 years ago.

It will not be long before the pre-evil Anakin Skywalker figures will be in the stores, along with the members of the old Republic and a younger Emperor.

Star Wars: Special Edition will be on laser disc (something I predict everyone will have by the time the prequels are done early into the next millennium), and Lucas will be getting down to rolling the merchandising machine along so that an intergenerational group of fans born toward the tail end of the 20th century can continue to enjoy the most enduring modern fairy tale.

So, the lines should be long come Jan. 31, 1997, when we get to see the story once more, and afterwards, the audience can go home, play with their Shadows of the Empire Boba Fett figures, and place the change from the theater into their talking Darth Vader bank.

Whether they are eight or forty-eight years old.

Michael J. Nam is a Collegian columnist.

■ Trilogy

continued from page 1-A

fully-animated, walking Yoda.

It is the last shot of Jedi, though, which is the most intriguing of the new additions. An Imperial city named Coruscant is seen; supposedly, Coruscant will be one of the primary locales featured in the next three installments of the proposed nine-part Star Wars saga.

Yes, it has been confirmed, George Lucas has written and will be making the three "prequels" to the Star Wars trilogy. Dealing with the fall of the Jedi Knights and the rise of Darth Vader and the Empire, Episode One (Star Wars, Empire, and Jedi were episodes four through six) is set to begin filming this fall, with a projected release date of 1999. Lucas has even admitted that part of his motivation for redoing the existing films was to simply test out the available special-effects technology and get a feel for what his parameters will be for the first three episodes.

Fascination with the Star Wars universe has not really waned in the fourteen years since Jedi's release. A slew of novels inspired the three films have consistently been best-sellers, action figures and toy things are still being manufactured, and 1995's digitally remastered video edition of the Star Wars trilogy has sold 30 million copies worldwide.

It is a safe assumption that the accompanying marketing blitz to the Star Wars re-releases will ensure that a whole new generation of kids with overactive imaginations will become obsessed with the war between the Rebellion and the Empire. However, don't let the kids have all the fun. Go to the theater, relive the cinematic experience of a lifetime, and May The Force Be With You.

Star Wars opens Jan. 31. The Empire Strikes Back opens Feb. 21, and Return Of The Jedi opens on March 7.

John Hendrickson is a Collegian columnist.

COURTESY LUCASFILM LTD.

Now you didn't see him, now you do!

As seen here, there are many minor differences between the original version and the newer; many added beasts, and many of the scenes that were originally cut were left on the reel for our viewing pleasure this time around.

Campus Activities at the University of Massachusetts presents

"Something Every Friday"

A Touch of Reality

This three-person group uses poetry to express important issues like AIDs; gang violence; and day-to-day reality. This powerful trio has opened for the Fugees, the Lost Boys, and the Last Poets.

Bluewall Cafe
February 7, 1997
8:00pm
Free

For more information check our website: http://www.umass.edu/campact/events/sef.htm This series is made possible by a grant from UMASS Auxiliary Services, the Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs, and the Daily Collegian.

Ladysmith Black Mambazo

February 14, 1997
8pm

Amherst College
Alumni Gymnasium

$12 public / $8 with
Amherst College ID

Call 542-5773 for info. Tix available in Room 103 of Campus center or by phone at 860-422-0000.

SCHOLARSHIP APPLICATION NOW AVAILABLE

Attention all Undergraduate Students affiliated with:

CCEBMS UALRC BCP MEP DIMES

Are you providing some service to your UMASS of hometown community that demonstrates leadership, caring or initiative?
or
Do you have a special talent, gift or skill?
and
Do your grades reflect positive academic achievement?
if so,
You may qualify for a scholarship for the academic year 1997-1998. Inquire or pick up application at:

BCP, WIlder Hall, 545-1987
CCEBMS, New Africa House, 545-0031
UALRC, Knowlton Building, 545-1844
Enrollment Services, 208 Whitmore, 545-0428
MEP, Marston Hall, 545-2030
DIMES, School of Management Building, 545-5618

All completed applications must be submitted by March 3, 1997!

Crichton's latest soars with suspense

In wake of TWA 800 crash, Airframe explores disaster issues

By Mark McGrath
Collegian Staff

AIRFRAME
By Michael Crichton
Alfred A. Knopf

Ask a Michael Crichton reader what to expect from one of his novels and they'd probably tell you to brace yourself for a fictional feast of technical knowledge and a hearty helping of old-fashioned suspense. In his latest novel, Airframe, Crichton successfully sticks to his established formula, which has provided a number of best-sellers such as The Andromeda Strain and Jurassic Park.

Once again, the author/"ER" creator has brought a seemingly incomprehensible and inaccessible world to the common person. Tapping on society's general apprehension regarding airline safety, Crichton follows the week-long adventures of Casey Singleton, a mid-level executive at Norton Aircraft, who has been given the unenviable task of making sense of a fatal and disturbingly unexplained mid-air incident.

In the process, Crichton paints a vivid picture of the forces at work in the airline industry. Through the investigation, Singleton races against the clock trying, in an attempt to preserve a multi-billion dollar company-saving deal with the Chinese, to prove that the incident was not due to a design flaw. Her job becomes more difficult with the arrival of a team of television journalists hoping to play on the fears of the public to boost ratings, even if that means distorting the story and destroying the stellar reputation of her company.

Set against subplots involving international commerce and union concerns, Airframe confronts many of the issues currently on the minds of Americans. We are part of a scared society, and even if that fear is not on account of the airline industry, it is reflected in our attitude toward trade agreements and American jobs moving overseas.

While some will undoubtedly criticize Crichton's reliance on his aforementioned formula, Airframe proves that given a topic that is on the public's mind, an intriguing plot can take many subtle turns, creating a context for continued discussion on the finer aspects of the issue at the hand.

Crichton began writing Airframe before TWA's ill-fated Flight 800, but he has undoubtedly received added attention for the novel in the wake of the accident which shocked the entire country just a few months ago. The tragic crash has also inevitably lent an unexpected hand in making the novel that much more suspenseful.

Crichton is to be commended for his use of a particularly strong female protagonist in the novel. A divorced mother of one, Singleton represents much of what is missing in contemporary fiction. She is smart, ambitious and willing to put her life and career on the line to reach the bottom of a sticky situation.

While Airframe will not go down as one of the classics of contemporary literature, it achieves its goal as an eye- opening thriller, hitting home with a particularly receptive and curious American public.

Given the fact that Crichton's five latest works of fiction have either been adapted for the big screen (Congo, Jurassic Park, Rising Sun, Disclosure) or are in the process (Sphere, The Lost World), one can safely assume that Airframe will follow.

While the novel will produce a good screenplay, no director will be able to deal with all of the issues generated — there are just too many. Instead of dealing in depth with the issues facing the airplane industry, moviegoers will most likely see a clipping of the most exciting scenes. If you're interested in the suspense, you may want to wait for the movie. But if you want to explore the issues and to give yourself some background on a crisis of our time, Airframe will allow you to do that, and will make the process at the very least enjoyable. B-

Come Write For Arts & Living!

Contact Jeremy Brothers downstairs at the Collegian

COURTESY DAVID M. MOIR

Rose McGowan looks on as Neve Campbell is threatened.

Craven skewers horror genre in a delicious satire

By Adam Levine
Collegian Staff

SCREAM
Directed by Wes Craven
with Neve Cambell, David Arquette, Courtney Cox
Playing at Mt. Farms Theater

Scream appears on the surface as a traditionally cliched suspense thriller. Both the characters and narrative structure seem to fall into the genre of a formula Hollywood horror film. Yet, Scream is really none of these things, but rather a brilliant mockery of teenage slasher flicks. It is written to serve not only as a satire of the genre, but to delight the fans that love it.

Director Wes Craven has made a career of original horror- oriented films such as The Serpent and the Rainbow and Nightmare on Elm Street. Now, Craven has decided to make the transition to serious drama, but he is not leaving his roots without a great send-off. Scream is an appropriate finale for Craven because of its cynical approach to the style that made him famous.

The first 15 minutes of Scream explode on the screen, offering the most frightening scene to be filmed in years. Why this is so has nothing to do with the circumstance. A young beautiful teenager named Casey (Drew Barrymore) is all alone in a large house, where she receives a phone call which threatens her life. Of course, she believes at first that her boyfriend playing a trick on her, until she realizes this is no joke. This scene seems to stray far from originality with a stereotypical character and situation. What Craven is really transcending is exactly how silly the circumstance is by forcing Casey to take a test on how well she really knows her horror films.

The rest of the film follows the same format, always reminding viewers that they are watching a movie. At one point a character says to another "you're acting like you're in a Wes Carpenter movie." It's the result of these blunt statements that allow Scream to serve foremost as a critique of the genre. Scream is more of an analytical study of the context of horror, allowing it to be prime material for anyone interested in film theory and history. Yet, the story is a collection of every traditional slasher film from Psycho to Halloween, but you could never compare it to either.

The film follows the quintessential horror film character named Sidney (played by Neve Campbell). She is the quiet one in class, forever daydreaming about a more romantic world. Deeply in love with her boyfriend Billy (Skeet Ulrich), Sidney is reluctant to sleep with him as a result of her fear of sex which began after her mother was raped and murdered. After other people in her school, including the principal played by Henry Winkler, are slaughtered by the masked assassin, Casey's friends think it's a great time for partying and practical jokes. Casey constantly finds herself in danger from the killer who she at first believes to be her boyfriend. Later, she seeks the help of her former nemesis Gale Weathers (Courtney Cox), a television reporter who covered the story of her mother's murder, and police deputy Dewey (David Arquette), who is the older brother of her best friend.

The plot contains brilliant twists that successfully represent the paranoia the town faces. No character is safe from accusation, and until the very end of the film, every member of the audience will be entertained and undeniably surprised. Right up to the shocking conclusion we are confronted with characters explaining the structure of the horror film and performing it almost exactly. One example is a character who details the proper rules one must abide by in order to successfully survive a horror film. Even Craven's cast pokes fun at the silliness of the slasher movie and its fascination with the junior high mall crowd.

Scream is a fine satire because it can be enjoyed on several levels. Craven's work can be appreciated for its suspense and intrigue, as well as its primary focus on having a good laugh about how stale horror has become. B+

DANCE CLUB

Pearl Street Nightclub

10 PEARL STREET
NORTHAMPTON, MA
413-584-7771

EVERY TUESDAY 9:00-2:00 ' 19+
GAY NIGHT THE GAY NINETIES ARE BACK, BIGGER & BETTER

EVERY THURSDAY 9:00-2:00 ' 18+
THE AREA'S BIGGEST HIGH ENERGY Dance Party
A FULL HOUSE EVERY WEEK
Today's 93

EVERY FRIDAY 10:00-2:00 ' 21+
RETRO NIGHT MUSIC FROM THE 70's 80's & 90's
THE 70'S & 80'S MEET THE 90'S EVERY FRIDAY

EVERY SATURDAY 6:00-10:00
TEEN NIGHT AGES 15-19

EVERY SATURDAY 10:00-2:00 ' 21+
Dance PARTY HOSTED BY Today's 93

Your NIGHT Life

It's Kickin'!

LIVE MUSIC

- EARTH CRISIS, 1/29, ALL AGES
- FAT BAG, 1/30, 18+
- THE MACHINE, 1/31, 18+
- H20, 2/1, ALL AGES
- DOWNSET/TREE, 2/2, ALL AGES
- THEE FIGGS/CHICK FROM SCARCE, 2/6, 18+
- MAX CREEK, 2/7, 18+
- REVEREND HORTON HEAT, 2/12, 18+
- THROWING MUSES, 2/14, 18+
- DAVID BOWIE/GLAM ROCK TRIBUTE, 2/15, 21+
- DEADGUY, 2/16, ALL AGES
- MATHEW SWEET, 2/17, 18+
- BARENAKED LADIES, 2/19, 18+
- CANNIBAL CORPSE, 2/21, ALL AGES
- SKATALITES, 2/22, 18+

ALSO SPECIAL DANCE CLUB EVENTS, SUCH AS:

EQUINOX PRODUCTIONS & WTCC PRESENT
SAT. FEB 22 U.S. CLUB TOUR
With D.J. Styles

FRI. JAN 28
GRAND REOPENING OF GAY NIGHT
ONE OF THE AREA'S HOTTEST DANCE NIGHTS EVER

LOOK FOR LISTINGS ABOUT THE REALLY LOUD MUSIC FESTIVAL in April

CHECK OUR STRIP AD EVERY THURSDAY OR VISIT US ON THE WEB! · HTTP://VIRTUAL-VALLEY.COM/PEARL-STREET/

Beat the winter blues with bushels of local activities

Monday, Jan. 27
Instruction Registration
The "Unlock Your Talent" series kicks off with the spring registration for the Performing Arts Division at UMass in Bartlett 73. Registration for the private and group instruction in theater, music and dance and continues until Feb. 7. For tuition costs and more information call 545-0519.

Thursday, Jan. 30
Concert
A piano party will be held to celebrate the new Steinway Grand Piano along with Schubert's birthday at 8 p.m. in the Bezanson Recital Hall. Non-alcoholic champagne will be served. Admission is $4 for students with a valid I.D.

Friday, Jan. 31
Art Gallery
The University Gallery will have an opening reception from 5-7 p.m. for the spring exhibition featuring "Something Else To See: Improvisational Bordering Styles in African-American Quilts." "What's Trump?: Trump Indicators from the Collection of Joan Schepps" and "Marcy Hermansader: Photographs Dreaming." These exhibits will run until March 14. The University Gallery is located on the lower level of the Fine Arts Center. Admission is free.
Dramatic Reading
Smith College MFA candidate Aaron Petrovich will read from his thesis "Some Variations on a Family Theme" at 7:30 p.m. This reading is part of the Smith College Theatre Department's "New Play Reading Series." Admission is free. For more information call 585-3220.
Concert
The Real Group, a Swedish a capella quintet, will kick off the "Northampton Arts Council's Wide World of A Capella" festival in The Fine Arts Center Concert Hall at 8 p.m. Tickets are $5 for students with a valid I.D. Visit the Fine Arts Center Box Office for tickets or call 545-2511.

Saturday, Feb. 1
Workshop Series
Jeff Lord, fencing coach for Smith and Hampshire Colleges, will hold a stage combat workshop in the Green Room of the Mendenhall Center at Smith College in Northampton. Lord has choreographed fight scenes for high school, college and professional theaters, and his workshop will include the topics of unarmed combat and the use of the small sword, quarter staff, rapier and dagger. Subsequent workshops will be held on Feb. 8 and 15 and March 1. The workshop is free, but advanced registration is required. Call Jeff Lord at 549-1159 for more information and to sign-up.
Concert
The Holmes Brothers will perform their "deeply spiritual blend of soul-shouting rhythm and blues and prayer-meeting gospel music" at the Iron Horse in Northampton at 7 p.m. Tickets are $10. Call 586-8686 or visit the Northampton Box Office for tickets.

Monday, Feb. 3
Concert
Branford Marsalis performs from his new release "The Dark Keys" at the Iron Horse in Northampton at 7 and 10 p.m. Tickets are $25. A limited number of student tickets are available in advance and a valid student I.D. must be presented at the door.
Art Gallery
A new exhibit, "The Hands of One Man," featuring the wood carvings of Elton Braitwaite, will open at the Augusta Savage Gallery in the New Africa House. Admission is free.

Tuesday, Feb. 4
Concert
The U.S. Continental Army Woodwind Quintet will have a free performance at Bezanson Recital Hall at 11:15 a.m. Works will include Grangier, Arnold, Klughart and Farkas. Admission is free.

Thursday, Feb. 6
Theater
"Having Our Say: The Delaney Sisters' First 100 Years" will be presented as part of the Fine Arts Center Series at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. Admission is $5 for students with a valid student I.D.
Reading
Nina Revoyr will read from her new novel, "Necessary Hunger," at 7 p.m. at Food For Thought Books in Amherst. Following the reading there will be a question-and-answer period, as well as an opportunity for Revoyr to sign copies of her books. Food For Thought Books is located on North Pleasant St. in Amherst. Admission is free.

Friday, Feb. 7
Recital
Austin Reller and Janice Button Shafer will perform the violin and piano sonatas by Brahms, nos. 1-3 at the Bezanson Recital Hall at 8 p.m. Admission is $2.50 for students with a valid I.D.

Saturday, Feb. 8
Bookreading
UMass professor Jay Neugeboren will read and sign copies of his new book, "Imagining Robert," at 2 p.m. at the Jeffrey Amherst Bookshop, located at 55 South Pleasant St. in Amherst. Admission is free.

Sunday, Feb. 9
Concert
A faculty showcase featuring Kevin Collins, Abdul Baki, Sudie Marcuse-Blatz, Laura Jenkins, Maureen Burford, Beth Parker, Dan Peterson and Grace Wright with the Baki Reggae Ensemble will perform classical and jazz performances at 3 p.m. in the Bezanson Recital Hall at UMass. Admission is free, but donations are appreciated.

Monday, Feb. 10
Art Gallery
A group exhibition of photography by Greenfield Community College students will open at Wheeler Gallery on the first floor of the Wheeler Dormitory. An opening reception will be held from 5-7 p.m. Admission is free.

Friday, Feb. 14
Gallery Talk
Diana Wolfe Larkin, curator of "The Lure of the Nile: Images of Ancient Egypt" exhibit at the Mt. Holyoke College Art Museum, will present an introduction to the exhibition at 12:30 p.m. Admission is free.

Tuesday, Feb. 18
Concert
The student chamber music showcase will feature brass, string, vocal, wind and jazz ensembles with E. Wayne Abercrombie as coordinator at 8 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. Admission is $2.50 for students with a valid I.D.

Thursday, Feb. 20
Lecture
Lanny Bell will present a lecture "Nineteenth-Century Artists and Photographers in Egypt; Their Role in the Documentation and Slavage of the Ancient Monuments" in the Mt. Holyoke College Art Museum. An opening reception will follow. Admission is free.

Friday, Feb. 21
Gallery Talk
Paul Scotto, associate professor of Russian Studies at Mt. Holyoke, will present a lecture entitled "Egyptomania in Pushkin's Petersburg" at 12:30 p.m. in the Mt. Holyoke College Art Museum. Admission is free.
Concert
Legend Bo Diddley brings his trademark square-box guitar to the Iron Horse for two performances at 7 and 10 p.m. Tickets are $20.

Tuesday, Feb. 25
Recital
A faculty recital consisting featuring Salvatore Macchia on contrabass will exhibit new music for said instrument including "A Fable" and "Three Improvisational Pieces" at 8 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. Admission is $2.50 for students with a valid I.D.

Thursday, Feb. 27
Improv
Julie Waggoner joins The Sleeveless Theatre for an evening of comedy and improv at the Iron Horse in Northampton at 7 p.m. Tickets are $7.

—Cultural Calendar compiled by Jeremy Brothers

COURTESY FAC

They always have their say: The Delany Sisters at the FAC.

Excited for the new semester? Well, get excited for the Collegian's new and improved web page. Version 2 released NOW! At the same address:

www.umass.edu/rso/colegian

"Snowflakes are one of nature's most fragile things, but just look what they can do when they stick together."
-Vesta M. Kelly

ΣΣΣ ΠΓΥ

Sorority Rush '97

February 1st - 6th

ΔΖ ΣΔΤ

Information session - Wednesday, January 29th
6:30 -8:30 in Campus Center.

Registration: This week in Campus Center Concourse

ΣΚ ΑΕΦ

All University Women Welcome

ΚΚΓ ΧΩ ΑΧΩ

COURTESY RICHARD FORMAN

Tom Sizemore and Penelope Ann Miller must not realize they look ridiculous.

Be very afraid of The Relic

By Jeremy Brothers
Collegian Staff

THE RELIC
Directed by Peter Hyoms
with Penelope Ann Miller, Tom Sizemore, Linda Hunt Playing at Hampshire Six Theaters

The Relic is an example of Hollywood's contempt for its audience, allowing us to think that there must have been something we did wrong for the filmmakers to inflict this kind of punishment upon us.

The story, however much it may seem a string of cliches, focuses around a "monster of evolution" which terrorizes a group of people in a Chicago museum in which they become trapped (kind of like Aliens, actually.) The people trapped in the museum include the police, a few academics and some important local politicians. On the whole, some of them are the most unlikable caricatures of characters to grace the screen in recent memory — unlikable enough for us to start rooting for the monster to kill these idiots off.

The performers in The Relic are a likely start when we look for people to blame, two of whom are actors who have always been hyped by someone as being on the verge of being the "next big thing:" Tom Sizemore and Penelope Ann Miller. Sizemore may have always strived to be the working man's Michael Madsen, but painful performances such as those in "Wyatt Earp" and "Passenger 57" outweigh whatever good he might have added to "Devil in a Blue Dress" and "True Romance" — after all, aren't they all the same role?

Contrasted to Sizemore, Miller seems to have never been an asset to any film she's been featured in, and might also be further proof that the executives in Hollywood are not the health nuts they are rumored to be — they are in fact

Turn to RELIC, page 6

Cronkite & his autobiography are both national treasures

By Mark McGrath
Collegian Staff

WALTER CRONKITE
A Reporter's Life
Alfred A. Knopf

Over the past century, few public figures have touched the lives of more people than Walter Cronkite. For the news- watching public, Cronkite has been a fixture for six decades. His career dates back to the time before television through the present day. Now retired at the age of 80, he has produced the work of his life... literally.

His autobiography, A Reporter's Life, hit the bookshelves around Christmas, and has been at the top of the New York Times Bestseller List ever since. In it, he reviews the course his life has taken, from his Missouri birth to his press duty during the Second World War, from his tenure as a correspondent in Stalinist Moscow to almost every living room in America. If it happened in the latter part of the 20th Century, odds are that Cronkite was there to report on it.

While many see Cronkite's career beginning with the explosion of television, it began before that. He dates it back to his childhood, when he rode his bicycle around Kansas City spreading the news of President Harding's death. Later performing the role a newspaperman and as a radio personality. Cronkite has been a journalist at just about every level.

From his early days in radio come some of his most interesting anecdotes, such as the one-man news operation in which he even had to refine his acting so that he could perform the duty of a pitch-man in the advertisements.

As a sports broadcaster, he used to do play-by-play from a radio studio, generating an imaginary picture based on a crude Morse code message system. One day when the wire went down, he was forced to broadcast an entire quarter without a clue as to what was going on. Such exercises in improvisation helped to build his character and prepare him for a career in which nothing could be taken for granted.

Through the war, Cronkite hopped around Europe covering the war for the United Press, rubbing elbows with the great Edward Murrow, Ernest Hemingway and King George of England.

From there he moved to the U.S.S.R., where he covered the country that Winston Churchill referred to as "a riddle wrapped inside a mystery inside an enigma." After two years there, he headed back to the United States for a more domestic, but no less interesting, life as a father and as a newsman with CBS.

Upon his return, he spent time in Washington covering the Korean War nightly on television for the new CBS affiliate there. So began the most significant stretch of Cronkite's career. For once he found his way onto the television screen, there was no stopping him.

What Cronkite brought to the table was more than just his on-air charisma. He was thoughtful and ethical in his pursuit of journalism and sensitive to the dilemmas brought about by the evolution of the new medium.

"A news reporter's duty can sometimes be difficult. It is not easy to approach someone in distress to seek answers to the questions that need asking. It was never a problem that bothered the public until television came along," he writes.

Perhaps his most difficult and defining moment came with the assassination of John F. Kennedy. Cronkite will forever be linked with that fateful day, and it will never escape him. In his recollection, Cronkite comments on how newspeople are like doctors and nurses in the midst of a tragedy, and that their professional drive takes precedence over emotion.

Even so, that newsperson could not battle the tears at the corners of his eyes and could barely overcome the lump growing in his throat as he pronounced the words, "President Kennedy died at 1 p.m. Central Standard Time — a half hour ago." For many, that moment has become frozen in time, as has the image of the teary anchorman delivering the news.

From then on, Cronkite shared a bond with the American people. If something important was going on, he was there to describe it for them. Whether it was the triumph of landing on the moon or the aberration called Watergate, he covered it.

Even the first formal Israeli-Egyptian peace agreement was brought about to a certain degree by Cronkite. The meeting of Anwar Sadat and Menachem Begin came about as a result of separate interviews with them on the "Evening News."

Sadly, this book marks not only the end of a career, but the end of an era. With rise of the Internet and new information technology, the nightly news has already begun to take a back seat to more accessible sources. Cronkite is more than willing to acknowledge that his career is and will continue to go through amazing changes.

But with the changing times come new challenges, and Cronkite is willing to offer his insights. "There is going to be social and political and economic evolution, which will explode with such suddenness as to have the character of revolution," he writes.

"The revolutionary forces are already at work today, and they have humankind's dreams on their side. We don't want to be on the other side. It is up to us to assume leadership of that revolution, to channel it in a direction that will ensure freedom's future."

And so he signs off, the voice and the face of the 20th century — the man for whom the term "anchorman" was coined. Although today's students may have missed out on Cronkite's heyday, that doesn't mean that they should remain ignorant of his work. Cronkite's life is American history. Loaded with insightful anecdotes, his book reads like an insider's guide to the last six decades.

The story of the world may be told through the lives of its most colorful people, and Walter Cronkite is no exception. He was awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom by Jimmy Carter in 1981, and may truly be considered a national treasure. The same can be said of his book. A

COURTESY ALFRED A. KNOPF

Walter Cronkite's autobiography covers his six decades as a reporter.

EQUINOX PRODUCTIONS & WTCC (90.7FM) INVITE YOU TO

U.S. CLUB TOUR '97

Saturday, February 8, 1997
Pearl Street Night Club, Northampton, MA

- 18 to party 21 to drink
- Doors Open 9:30 p.m.
- Music by JUSTIN TIME from NYC's The Tunnel, Polladeum & Club Expo
- Tickets $10 at the door
- For more information call 413-584-7771

Guest Host TIM STYLES, one of the most popular entertainers in the United States and abroad. STYLES has appeared on MTV, INSIDE EDITION (NBC), RICKI LAKE and ROLONDA among others.

Sponsored by
THE UMASS DAILY COLLEGIAN
New England's Largest College Newspaper.

MDC 96.5 Pearl Street

"U.S. CLUB TOUR is New, Exciting & Explosive. The music is electrifying. STYLES is phenomenal!"
-Peter Roth
Washington Square News

U.S. CLUB TOUR is a copyright of Equinox Productions.

New music offers an alternative

THE CRUMBS
The Crumbs
Lookout! Records

Many of Lookout's new acts, although not exactly punk rock, are still quite impressive — and there is certainly nothing wrong with broadening one's horizons with musical diversity.

The Crumbs came along just in time to give punk fans something new to really sink their teeth into. They are fast, loud, crude and directly to the point, which is exactly the way they should be. Although their sound is completely reminiscent of such bands as The Clash on through Social Distortion and Rancid, it has become too cliche to judge punk bands on originality, as opposed to how well they can pull off the image.

Track On Track Off

The album contains a nice blend of early '60s rock, rockibilly, and old school-influenced British punk. The Crumbs' lyrics, like most new school bands, are geared to broken hearts and teen angst, and imitate the cries of our "tortured with lonliness" generation. The first song, entitled "All Style," sums up their attitude straight at the beginning of the album — "You don't wanna be like the other kids/ Hangin round downtown/ No matter what they do, your parents can't keep you tied down." Through some bittersweet ballads like "Long Distance Love" (which anyone who has been in the situation can surely find peace of mind in) and the eerie but familiar "Come Home," the band even explore their more sensitive side.

All in all, The Crumbs offer nothing all that new except well-defined punk rock and an attitude to coincide along with it. If you are searching for new surprises and conventions, then don't look here! If you just want to listen to some quality punk in the true essence of the word, than please check out The Crumbs. B+ (Adam Levine)

KULA SHAKER
K
Columbia

Kula Shaker is Britain's latest export across the Atlantic. Hyped as the "Next Big Thing" after the American success of bands such as Oasis and Radiohead, their debut album K lives up to the high standards and expectations set by their fellow countrymen, while simultaneously carving out a niche of their own in the landscape of '90s British rock.

Named after an ancient Hindu figurehead, Kula Shaker draws its sound from influences as diverse as the Stone Roses, Deep Purple and, most obviously, the Beatles' Sgt. Pepper-era Indian phase. From K's opening cut, "Hey Dude," to the epic closer, "Hollow Man (Parts 1 & 2)," the '60s feel is obvious; wah-wah guitar and swirling organ dominate the album. However, it is the strength of the songs themselves which prevent the band from sounding like a bunch of retro hacks.

Singer/guitarist/songwriter Crispin Mills blends dippy Indian mysticism, biting sarcasm and hook-filled choruses to achieve usually successful though occasionally silly results. Although the concise, intelligent rock of "Hey Dude," "Smart Dogs" and "Into The Deep" is tempered with the meandering "Govinda" and pretentious "Temple Of Everlasting Light," K's highs far outweigh its lows.

With "Grateful When You're Dead/Jerry Was There," Mills slams the weekend-hippie culture of America's suburban youth with hilarious results. A "picnic in the rain" becomes an out-of-body experience with the late Mr. Garcia — "I seen him man/Looked me right in the face/ Oh I'm telling you man/ Jerry was there."

"Tattva," K's centerpiece and standout track, pulls off the seemingly impossible task of making the chorus of "Tattva, acintya bheda bheda Tattva" sound completely appropriate and, well, cool as hell. With layers of distorted guitars and a mellotron thrown in for good measure, "Tattva" has managed to become one of the most unique modern rock radio hits of the last year.

K is by no means a great album but, compared to the current batch of lousy artists like Bush and Marilyn Manson dominating the airwaves, it often seems like it is. Hopefully, Kula Shaker will rein in their more pretentious tendencies for their sophomore release. If they do, look out — this band is gonna be huge. B- (John Hendrickson)

■ Relic

continued from page 5

shooting smack on a regular basis.

As Dr. Margo Green, she plays an academic who struggles trying to find funding for her "evolutionary biology" research. Only Miller could make the already petty world of academia even more annoying, as she pouts when a neighboring colleague (Chi Muoi Lo) competes for the grant she's set her sights on.

Linda Hunt at one time actually seemed to be respected as an actress as her Academy Award shows (granted, it was for playing a man in "The Year of Living Dangerously," but who's looking).

But now she just looks and sounds creepy, like a munchkin gone sinisterly awry as she takes her turn shouting and pouting because the monster that has been decapitating people throughout her museum will ruin the gallery opening — she's as suspiciously motivated as the mayor in Jaws.

The Relic must not go unnoticed in the realm of miserable movies. I suggest that it mark the beginning of an era where we as an audience start demanding those precious hours of our lives back from Hollywood studios that have been wasted on such garbage. F

We're the STARS around here...!
COLLEGIAN GRAPHICS

Is there any hope for us in 1997?

Chris Conner

It's barely a month into 1997 and boredom has already set in.

Oscar season is officially over, giving way to the studio equivalent of mid-season replacements (i.e. The Relic, Beverly Hills Ninja, etc.). Major musical acts tend to release albums in the summer or fall, a trend which currently has forced both DJs and VJs alike to play either Bush's "Swallowed" or Blackstreet's "No Diggity" no less that 7,945 times a day. And there still exists a gaping dichotomy between quality television programming ("Seinfeld," "NYPD Blue) and quality toilet paper sloppily disguised as palatable content ("Family Matters," "Walker: Texas Ranger").

Yet in these glum times, there are already several noteworthy films, albums and TV shows yet to come this year which have piqued the interest of entertainment hounds. Industry hype, not Fido, can be a person's best friend in the hopelessly languid opening month of a new year.

Sad but true, huh? Listed below are seven major events almost certain to be the talk of Everytown, U.S.A. in '97:

• Jeff Goldblum looks to continue his lucky streak of starring in mega-blockbusters when The Lost World arrives on screens this summer, but the Jurassic Park sequel isn't even the most expensive film the studios are launching durng the lucrative season. Rather, that honor belongs to a James Cameron project — Titanic.

While the director's name may be synonymous with grand slams (Terminator 2, True Lies) in the minds of most folks, there are two things we should all remember before the film with the alleged record-high $180 million price tag opens: a) even the best action film directors stumble occasionally (Richard Donner's botched Assassins, John McTiernan's miserable Last Action Hero) and b) Cameron's box office track record with the aquatically-oriented (Pirahna 2, The Abyss) is not something about which you'd brag to mom.

If Cameron fails in his quest, maybe he, Tim Burton and Renny Harlin can form one of those Hollywood support groups — The Michael Cimino Center.

• For the past two years, Chris Rock has been the funniest puppet in the national spotlight since Dan Quayle, and now one of the country's sharpest comics finally gets his big shot — a slot on HBO, the cable network already home to two of the wittiest programs on television (Dennis Miller Live and The Larry Sanders Show). If his show-stealing election coverage on Politically Correct is any indication, Rock's edgy, screeching style should fit in just fine to create what will hopefully be one damn funny triumvirate.

The voice of "Li'll Penny" also stands to become the first "Saturday Night Live"-spawned African-American funnyman to forge a successful endeavor outside of NBC walls since the newly humble Eddie Murphy.

• "Get in the Ring (Part One):" As if last's year's dueling disaster (Twister and Independence Day) and alien (ID and Mars Attacks!) flicks weren't enough, trailers for both volcano-themed adventures are now duking it out at the local cineplex.

In this corner is Dante's Peak, featuring Mars Attacks survivor Pierce Brosnan and Linda Hamilton, who may have had to resort to Beauty and the Beast reunion TV movies had this project not come along. And in this corner is the none-too-creatively titled Volcano, starring Tommy Lee Jones, who has apparently opted not to become the American Michael Caine by commiting to every single script offered him.

• Tom and Nicole do Kubrick in Eyes Wide Shut, the auteur's first film in nine years. At first glance, this concept registers as roughly akin to the reaction most people had either when Keanu Reeves was selected to play an action hero in Speed (good idea) or when the erstwhile Dogstar bassist was selected to play a nuclear physicist in Chain Reaction (bad idea).

You're tempted — nay, almost obliged — to ask what the legendary director's major malfunction is. But then you remember the guy was able to give Matthew Modine a pulse in his last opus, Full Metal Jacket. This is, of course, a feat only Alan Parker and Robert Altman have accomplished in the past.

• "Get in the Ring (Part Two):" The sun set early for From Dusk 'Til Dawn, as well as The Island of Dr. Moreau, which sank with a whisper. One Fine Day proved to be anything but with audiences, while The Ghost and the Darkness failed to scare up enough ticket sales to put it into the black.

In Clooney vs. Kilmer, Batman present vs. Batman past, Batman and Robin vs. The Saint, we have a bout between two guys whose combined last four box office totals couldn't cover the cost of Titantic. Smart money says the smirking, pepper-maned doctor wins this one — but only because the American public would shell out $7 a pop to see George C. Scott as the Caped

Turn to HOPE, page 10

COURTESY ASSOCIATED PRESS
Paul Simon

COURTESY ASSOCIATED PRESS
Tom Cruise

Check out the Collegian's fresh graphically enhanced website at: www.umass.edu/rso/colegian

OCMP
THE OFF CAMPUS MEAL PLAN
Not everyone's an artist in the kitchen. Call OCMP.
classé cafe'
EL ACUÑA W TEX MEX CANTINA
PRUDDY'S
Amber Waves
安城中国饭店 AMHERST CHINESE FOOD
SUBWAY
PASTA E BASTA
THE BLACK SHEEP Deli & Bakery
Amherst DELIVERS Deli
CUTTY'S
ANTONIO'S 1ST SEM JONA
FOR MORE INFO: 1-888-211-6267
Rafters SPORTS BAR & RESTAURANT
Newman Center Cafeteria
DELANO'S
Bueno Y Sano
d'angelo sandwich shops

Did Ya Miss Us?
TODAY'S 99.3 MODERN ROCK
WHMP-FM
Welcome back to your New Rock Alternative

COURTESY COLUMBIA PICTURES

Woody Harrelson and Courtney Love shine through the sleaze in The People vs. Larry Flynt.

Forman sends us a little love with the sleaze

By Adam Levine
Collegian Staff

THE PEOPLE VS. LARRY FLYNT
Directed by Milos Forman
with Woody Harrelson, Courtney Love, Edward Norton
Playing at Hampshire Six Theater

The People vs. Larry Flynt is the story of one man's struggle for freedom of expression. He must battle powerful, bureaucratic leaders who are willing to do anything to silence him and control the personal values and morals he believes in.

This story is far less inspiring than it may sound because Larry Flynt is no hero. The values and morals he clings so strongly to are that men and women have the right to be entertained by pornography if they so wish. Larry Flynt's struggle is to be the one to best provide it for them.

Two-time Academy Award winner Milos Forman's latest film is a disturbing portrayal of Larry Flynt's emotional rise and fall as founder of Hustler magazine. The story begins deep in the poverty-stricken woods of the Appalachian Mountains, where a young Larry Flynt (Woody Harrelson) and his brother, Jimmy (Brett Harrelson), sell moonshine to the local drunks. The narrative jumps ahead nearly 15 years when the brothers are co-owners of a dingy Cincinatti strip club. Larry finds the idea to boost attendance by publicizing through a news letter featuring nude photos of the club's strippers. After investing all his money in the pamphlet, the first issue of Hustler magazine was created. What would eventually happen is the growth of an American entrepreneur who would face more controversy than any other publisher in history.

Through his shaky love affair and untraditional marriage to one of the club's strippers named Althea (Courtney Love), Flynt's personal life is best explored. At times abusive and at others deeply supportive, Flynt can best be described as a sincere pervert. The film examines the couples' sexual escapades and their battle against drug abuse in descriptive detail. The fact that these two characters, despite their bizarre personas, are so deeply in love with one another adds a refreshing quality to an otherwise strange narrative.

The film begins to take form when Flynt decides to publish ridiculous slander against Rev. Jerry Falwell. Accusing him of incest, Falwell takes legal action against the Hustler empire in a suit that escalates all the way to the Supreme Court. Here is where Forman recreates a famous law case and challenges the viewer to contemplate their own view on what the First Amendment truly means. The obnoxious Flynt, who served numerous nights in jail for contempt of court, now had a chance to defend the content of his magazine at the nation's highest law. His argument was that if you don't like Hustler magazine, then don't read it.

Larry Flynt is essentially a character study of an entirely unique man. The point where it all works best is during his brief spiritual awakening as a born-again Christian. What makes this aspect of the narrative so intriguing is that we witness Flynt's struggle for redemption, which nearly destroys his relationship with Althea. After his religious rebirth is not what it seems to be, Flynt returns to Hustler yelling "The pervert is back!" During this specific scene we can finally relate to Flynt as a real human being, confused and dissatisfied with the life he has chosen.

Relative newcomer Edward Norton (Primal Fear) plays Flynt's attorney, Alan Isaacman, who serves as the film's only stability. Isaacman is so normal that he indeed saves the film from going too far over the edge. He admits to not agreeing with Flynt's occupation, but will defend freedom of speech regardless of the circumstance. The chemistry between Isaacman and Flynt is brilliant and together their characters' extremes balance each other allowing the film to be more recognizable as a serious drama.

The film's major flaw is its pace which at times appears inconsistent. The entire first 45 minutes of the film moves so quickly, it seems awkward. Where the editing fails, Forman's camera makes up for it. The film captures the spirit of the '70s with the use of bright colors, but yet the picture quality has a seedy appearance which successfully matches Flynt's persona.

Written by Ed Wood authors Scott Alexander and Larry Karaszewski, and produced by Oliver Stone, Larry Flynt does not quite match some of Forman's previous achievements. Yet, the director of Amadeus and One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest has created an entertaining, it nothing else, social drama. The main problem is that the film never really reaches its fullest potential and never really decides if it's a biography or a courtroom drama. Unlike his other films, no one will be deeply moved by Forman's latest. Yet The People vs. Larry Flynt does have a certain charm due to the strong performances of its cast and its brilliant cinematography. B

Corporate creeps beware! Michael Moore is back

By Mark McGrath
Collegian Staff

MICHAEL MOORE
Downsize This!
Crown Publishers

Michael Moore is back, and this time he's taking no prisoners.

Yes, the creator of "TV Nation" and the highest grossing documentary of all time, Roger & Me, has taken his war on the establishment to bookstores across America.

Like he always has, Moore appeals to the commoner in all of us as he rips his way through business, politics and the media, making straightforward points through somewhat bizarre means, leaving readers in stitches and his targets in crumbled remains. Call him begrudged. Call him hilarious. But don't you dare call him powerless.

Downsize This! is a series of essays in which Moore works to expose the forces of evil in our eroding society through unorthodox means, those forces of evil being represented by the rich and famous — or whoever else has taken freedom away from the overworked and underpaid workers in our society. In the process, he takes on the aura of a comedian who actually knows what he's talking about.

He quickly and quietly sets a tone for the book on the very first page. On it are two almost identical photos of gutted buildings, one of the bombed Federal Building in Oklahoma City, the other of an eroding building in Flint, Mich.

As described in Roger & Me, Flint has fallen from one of the best places to live to the absolute worst since General Motors started shutting down its factories there and shipping them off to Mexico. Under the heading, "What is terrorism?," the photos serve as a reminder that just because there is no large explosion or spilled blood doesn't mean that other types of terrorism (corporate?) can't exist.

Throughout the book, we are faced with dozens of other present-day dilemmas, many of which serve to entertain and enlighten a largely ignorant public.

If there is a group in this country which has been unfairly maligned by the press or the powers that be — immigrants, welfare mothers, O.J. Simpson or otherwise — you can find an argument in their favor within this book.

Whether producing Corporate Crook trading cards or suggesting the Unites States be renamed "The Big One" or "Hard Rock America," Moore repeatedly knocks his points home. And he's entertaining too.

The greatest flaw of this book is that it is too funny. Perhaps funny enough to be dismissed after a few laughs. While he uses his flair for the ridiculous extremely well, readers may easily lose Moore's purpose for writing this book. He wants change, and he wants it now.

If there is a revolution looming, Moore may just be at the helm. A man of principle and unending enthusiasm, his audiences know that he is a straight shooter.

Moore might want to harness his creative energy and focus more on specific issues instead of spreading himself too thin, as may be the case with this book. If he can produce more work like Roger & Me, Moore could become one of the country's foremost advocates of people's rights.

All of this from a man whose claim to fame is that he's been an answer on both "Jeopardy" and "Wheel of Fortune." Michael Moore is truly one of the common people — and he's proud of it. B

ONE TRACK MINDS DOWN HERE AT COLLEGIAN GRAPHICS

Hampden & Wheeler Galleries: Spring 1997

Hampden: Located in Hampden Commons, Southwest. Hours: Mon - Fri, 3 - 7pm & Sun 2 - 5*

FEBRUARY 6-28
TEXTILES & TECHNIQUES:
AFRICAN AND INDONESIAN CLOTH
Curated by Dr. SUSAN MICHELMAN
Department of Consumer Studies, UMass Amherst
Opening Reception Feb 6, 5 - 7pm, Live musical performance of original compositions on the West African balaphon and African & Caribbean drumming.
Reception features designs by students of Femi Richards, Professor, Department of Afro-American studies.*
Pre-reception talk, 4 - 5pm, Southside Room near the gallery:
"Equatorial Elegance: Bead Trade Between Venice and West Africa" by Dr. Joanne Eicher, Regents Professor, University of Minnesota

MARCH 26-APRIL 17
Series Begins: WOMEN ARTISTS / MASSACHUSETTS EDUCATORS
ROSEANNE RETZ, University of Massachusetts Amherst — LIZA FOLMAN, Art Institute of Boston
Exhibition of Prints
Opening Reception March 26, 5 - 7pm

MAY 4-8
STEPHEN NICCOLLS: MFA THESIS EXHIBITION

Wheeler: Located in Wheeler Dorm Lobby, Central. Hours: Mon - Thurs, 4 - 8pm & Sun 2 - 5*

FEBRUARY 10-27
RECENT IMAGES
PHOTOGRAPHY EXHIBITION BY GREENFIELD COMMUNITY COLLEGE STUDENTS
Opening Reception Feb 10, 5 - 7pm

MARCH 3-8
GRAF ART
A group show of graffiti art.
Opening March 3, 4-8pm

APRIL 1-18
UMASS EXCHANGE EXHIBITION: AMHERST / DARTMOUTH
Amherst students will exhibit at "GALLERY 244" in New Bedford. Dartmouth students will exhibit here.

APRIL and MAY
BFA THESIS EXHIBITIONS

*Gallery hours are during scheduled exhibitions only, closed for University holidays and snow days.
- ALL EVENTS ARE FREE & OPEN TO THE PUBLIC. 545 - 0680.
Programs of the FINE ARTS CENTER, sponsored in part by the UMASS ARTS COUNCIL and the UMASS CULTURAL ENRICHMENT FUND.

SPRING BREAK
JAMAICA
7 Nights - Includes: Airfare•Hotel • Tranfers•Party Pack
$449* Per Person from Boston
$429* Per Person from Newark
CANCUN
7 Nights - Includes: Airfare•Hotel •Tranfers•Party Pack
$479* from Boston:$459* from Newark
$449* from Bradley Field
*per person, quad;taxes additional;subject to availability
CARROLL TRAVEL 15 Cowles Lane, Amherst 256-8931

World vocals are a treat

New music from Tibet and Madagascar

The sound of the human voice is universal. An ambitious three-CD set, "Voices of the World — An Anthology of Vocal Expression," sets out to document this, along the way touching on a wide range of the world's vocal styles.

French label CDM culled the material for this lengthy project from the extensive ethnomusicological collections of the Musée de l'Homme. The CDs come packaged inside the covers of a nearly 200-page long hardbound book (about the size of a standard double CD jewel case) which presents technical informations about the recordings in both French and English translation.

The material on these discs is organized by style. The first two CDs focus on "techniques," from calls, cries and clamors, to imitation of instruments, colors and timbres. The third CD deals with polyphony — drones, echoes and overlapping, and counterpoint, among other types.

The ethnological perspective of the compilers turns out to be more of an annoyance than a blessing. The amount of information in the book is almost overwhelming. While that in itself is a good thing, it's too bad that the writers limited themselves to an audience already "in the know." If you haven't studied the details of musical theory — a subject many music majors have been known to flunk — a lot of the material may fly right over your head. The sad result is that the book is pretty useless. It's a shame that the writing doesn't focus on the people who sing the music.

Although occasionally hampered by poor-quality recordings, there are stunning pieces on these CDs. Excerpts from a ritual of the origins of the world sung by Paraguayan members of the Zamuco language family lean on a fascinating structure of opposed silences and bursts of loud voice, drawn-out moans and choppy barks, solo and group cries. A mourning song from Georgia (the Eastern European country, not the state) could perhaps even draw tears from a vacuum cleaner with its heady drones and well-controlled sheets of dissonance. The list could go on — there are close to a hundred pieces on these CDs, most worthy of note. This vocal music sensorium works strongly toward overcoming the documentation's failings. C

Tibet: The Heart of Dharma finds the ellipsis arts... label in its usual fine form. Like the Voices of the World collection, this release also comes in a small hardcover book. The packages ellipsis puts out are always lovely and informative. This one is filled with a variety of Buddhist poems, historical writing, a piece by the Dalai Lama and lush color photos that work well to express an obvious love for the music and culture of Tibetan Buddhism.

For a long time now, this religion has been under attack by the Chinese government, who have closed down many monasteries. In looking for a base of support abroad, the Tibetan Buddhist community's psalms and chants have been getting a lot of exposure in the West for the past few years. By now, a number of us are familiar with their incredibly deep, drawn-out sound punctuated by bursts of cymbal and trumpet.

This CD presents the devotional singing of the Drepung and Khampagar Monasteries' monks in clear, lively recordings. While this isn't music for a social occasion, these pieces are relaxing and energizing if one gives them the attention they deserve. Since they are sacred religious songs, several with the explicit purpose of awakening inner consciousness and blessing both the singers and the listeners, expect great things from this profound music. You won't be disappointed. B

Tarika puts out a sultry dose of groovy, uplifting Madagascar pop with their new Xenophile Records release, Son Egal. The title is a play on words, referring to both the Malagasy term for the Senegalese, and the French for "equal sound." Lyrically probing the sensitive topics of Madagascar's colonial past and the anti-Senegalese sentiment produced by past French use of Senegalese troops on the island, Tarika's leader Hanitra seeks to heal old wounds and direct anger at appropriate targets.

COURTESY XENO PHILE RECORDS

Tarika's new album Son Egal brings the hopt sounds of Madagascar to drive off your winter chill

Along the way, the band can't help but wrap these political messages in wildly enjoyable music. Upbeat, joyous and haunting, the music is pure exuberant pop. Using updated traditional instrumenis such as valiha and kabosy, as well as bass and guitar, Tarika makes dance music with a head as well as a heart. A-

Smithsonian Folkways Records just can't seem to stay away from epic projects. Most recently, they released 1996's three new additions to their extensive Music of Indonesia series, bringing the number of albums up to 12!

Fortunately, indonesia has the vast variety of music to easily support such a massive undertaking. The world's fourth largest country, stretching roughly as wide as the United States, Indonesia is home to around 300 different ethnic groups and a plethora of musical expressions.

The present CDs explore celebratory and church music from Biak island in the east, Melayu music from Sumatra and surrounding islands, and gong and vocal music from Sumatra. Accompanied by liner notes which are both extensive and readable, there is enough material here alone to sink your teeth into. Although you may not shake your dancing legs to these discs, you could find yourself intoxicated by their rich sounds. Whether it be the Middle Eastern tinged Muslim music of the Melayu, or the singing of famous Sumatran eccentric To'et, there is a world of delicious Indonesian music here to taste. B

Daniel Bodah is a Collegian Staff member.

IRON HORSE

ALL AGES
ALL THE TIME

january 30 & 31 7&10 pm. $27.50 adv.
TALES FROM THE HUDSON featuring
MICHAEL BRECKER, PAT METHENY
JACK DeJOHNETTE, DAVE HOLLAND, JOEY CALDERAZZO

saturday, february 1 • 7 pm
HOLMES brothers
$10 • rocking blues!!

saturday, february 1 • 10 pm
moonboot LOVER
great grooves • $5

monday, february 3 • 8 pm
BRANFORD MARSALIS trio

wednesday, february 5 • 7 pm
BUCKWHEAT ZYDECO
zydeco dance floor!!! • $15

thursday, february 6 • 10 pm
lettuce
& VIPER HOUSE
heavy grooves from hampshire • $5

friday, february 7 • 10 pm
CHUCKLEHEAD

saturday, february 8 • 10 pm
JAZZ MANDOLIN project
acoustic improvs outta this world • $6

friday, february 21 • 7&10 pm
BO DIDDLEY
bo knows. $20

MUSIC SEVEN NIGHTS A WEEK
Coming: Savoy Brown Chris Smither
Madeleine Peyroux Poncho Sanchez
TICKETS At the door For the Record in Amherst at the Northampton Box Offi. or call 586-8686 to charge by phone
24-hour Concert info: 413 584 0610

DAVEY JOANS LOCKER
• Biggest Selection of 70's and Vintage Clothing
• Buy 2 'D' Items Get 2nd HALF PRICE!
• Buy 3 'D' Items Get 3rd FREE!
273 Pleasant St. Northampton
587-0176

SPRING BREAK SPECIALS!
SKI CRESTED BUTTE, CO.
VACATIONS STARTING AT $549
Depart from Bradley International Airport Sunday or Monday.
Vacations include:
round trip airfare on AmericanAirlines ground transfers in Colorado and 4 nights lodging in Crested Butte.
1-800-998-2SKI
Call today for all inclusive ski packages. Discounted multi-day lift tickets also available

TRAVEL SMART!
FROM NEW YORK
One Way Roundtrip
LONDON
$130 $245
PARIS
$202 $379
ROME
$235 $438
SAN JOSE, COSTA RICA
$277 $517
Subsidized flights. Fares to worldwide destinations. Eurailpasses available.
Weekend surcharges may apply. Customs-immigration taxes apply. Fares subject to change without notice. Int'l. student I.D. cards may be required.
PRISM TRAVEL
212 986 9470
800 222 9674

The Smashing Pumpkins
with Special Guest Fountains of Wayne
Infinite Sadness Tour '96
Tonight
MULLINS CENTER
JANUARY 28
7:30 PM
PRODUCED BY METROPOLITAN ENTERTAINMENT GROUP

Maher takes late night to a new level

Who's better? Jay or Dave? Or Conan? Or Bill? It's getting pretty crowded over there after the 11 o'clock news. As a night owl, I have become acquainted with some of the best of late night television, and due to a number of factors, I've had a difficult time deciding where to leave the dial.

Staying up way too late:
Mark McGrath

With the introduction of Bill Maher and his "Politically Incorrect," the quality of late night programming received an instant shot in the arm. Now, each of the three major networks has a viable contender in that time period.

What is it about "Politically Incorrect" that has made it an instant success on ABC? For starters, it did its fine tuning over on Comedy Central, where it achieved a large enough following to warrant ABC's interest.

Despite a reasonably funny monologue by Maher, the true value of "Politically Incorrect" can be attributed to two factors — the guests and the discussions generated amongst them.

The guest panel typically consists of a cross-section of the political and entertainment worlds, most often guests with clashing philosophies.

The topics discussed are taken directly from current newspapers, and are usually controversial enough to generate some interesting, funny and sometimes heated discussions amongst the participants.

The end result is pure informative entertainment. Politically ignorant viewers may watch for the laughs and end up with their own opinions on current issues such as Ebonics and the Paula Jones controversy. Stuffy political types may watch for the issues and end up laughing (a change in their routine).

In the process, all may be surprised by what comes out of the mouths of their favorite public figures. On the first show of the season, Coolio was one of the participants, and many were pleasantly surprised with his eloquence. Other times, guests are shown for the true donkeys that they really are.

Picture if you will, the aforementioned Coolio and ultra-conservative G. Gordon Liddy discussing Ebonics, the use of "black" English to teach in public schools in California. Picture Coolio soundly defeating a man whose job it is to yap all day long about such issues.

Late night television audiences may rejoice, now that "Politically Incorrect" has taken over the post-"Nightline" slot on ABC. Because this wildly-entertaining half-hour airs a little after midnight, viewers may now enjoy a feast of uninterrupted comedy each night before hitting the sack.

When I say "feast," I'm talking about an appetizer of Jay or Dave's monologue (your choice), Top Ten, Headlines and funny skits or whatever else they happen to come up with before the guests arrive.

The entree consists of a wild half hour of "Politically Incorrect," followed by a dessert of Conan O'Brien, who has quickly risen through the ranks to become one of the funniest men on TV.

If you haven't seen Conan's show lately, you don't know what you're missing. After a horrendous beginning, O'Brien has picked up the pieces and constructed a program charming and funny enough to be compared with the other late night giants.

With such an arrangement, there can be no losers. Late night television has never been better.

Mark McGrath is a Collegian columnist.

COURTESY R.M

COURTESY ANDREW COOPER

Renee Zellweger and Tom Cruise shine in Jerry Maguire.

Crowe, Cruise score big in film

By Jeremy Brothers
Collegian Staff

JERRY MAGUIRE
Directed by Cameron Crowe
with Tom Cruise, Cuba Gooding Jr., Renee Zellweger
Playing at Hampshire Six Theatres

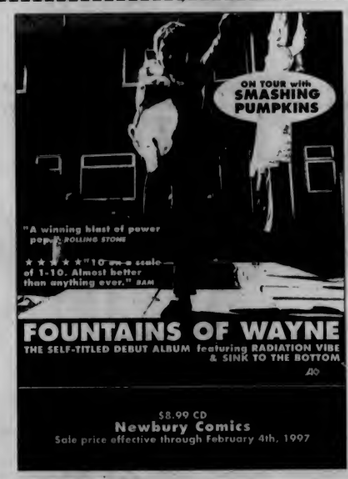
Writer/director Cameron Crowe has once again delivered a film that warms the entire audience without making anyone feel too manipulated. Honing his talented ear for dialogue through films like Say Anything and Singles, Crowe has finally produced a movie for adults that thankfully doesn't take itself too seriously.

Cruise plays the eponymous sports agent who seems to be living the perfect life at the top of his profession, surrounded by friends and engaged to the aggressive over-achiever Avery Bishop (played with admirable humor by Kelly Preston). The two look so serene and plastic at the beginning of the film, like a short ad for Scientology, that it's a real shame when we see Jerry's life fall apart before our eyes after he writes a populist manifesto entitled "The Things We Think And Do Not Say: The Future of Our Business."

Comfort comes to our hero when he is fired and one of the accountants at his firm decides to join his flight, inspired by the sentiment that stirred him to write what Cruise's character keeps referring to as a "mission statement." As Maguire's new partner Dorothy Boyd, Renee Zellweger shines in a career-making role. Dorothy tries balancing raising a son (played by quite possibly the biggest scene-stealer of the decade, six-year-old Jonathan Lipnicki) and running Jerry's office while working through the crush she's developed on him.

What is truly remarkable about the film is that for perhaps the first time ever, Cruise doesn't smother the other actors in the film, perhaps because these Zellweger and Lipnicki are relative newcomers who we just can't take our eyes off.

Crowe avoids letting Jerry Maguire sink into a puddle of sweet drivel between Zellweger and Cruise by developing the relationship between Maguire and his only client, Rod Tidwell (in a spirit-filled, joyous performance by Cuba Gooding, Jr.) The two men bicker back and forth like an old married couple and the true tear-jerking scenes don't come with any turmoil between Dorothy and Maguire, but seeing Rod's career take off and Jerry's life vindicated.



Gooding's performance is just one of the delightful minor roles in the film. In addition to Preston's vampish come-ons and Lipnicki's non-sequiturs — "The human head weighs eight pounds..." — Bonnie Hunt rounds out the riotous cast, one funny enough to make you forget it's a Tom Cruise movie. A-

ARTS
...music...art...theater... council
...film...festivals...dance...
GRANTS
questions? call 545-0202
DEADLINE: FEBRUARY 7, 1996
UMass Arts Council, 101 Hasbrouck Hall

Flying Compass Graphics
Faster than a Speeding Bullet, and Higher than a Kite!
Call 555-compass or go to 13666 Main St. Good Luck Finding Us
Check out our website at- www.wicked.high.com
Collegian Graphics. We just can't stop. We just can't stop. We just can't

SAVE
Four Movies Four Days
Just $5
No New Releases
Not to be used to pay late fees. Not to be combined with other offers.
SAVE $2
10 Video Rental Coupon Books
Just $21
Reg. $23
2 for 1
VIDEO RENTAL
Rent one movie, get one free!
1 rental per coupon.
1 new release per coupon. Not to be used to pay late fees. Not to be used with other offers.
VIDEO To GO
401 Main St., Amherst 256-1509
We now rent N-64

Broad strokes paint new FAC season

By Seema Gangatirkar
Collegian Staff

The Fine Arts Center '96–97 season returns starting Jan. 31 with an a capella group. Other highlights of the upcoming season include the Tony–award nominated Having Our Say: The Delany Sisters' First 100 Years.

The season opens on Jan. 31 with the Swedish a capella quintet, The Real Group. The group takes the Concert Hall stage to present a repertoire containing a broad selection of jazz, rock and even Latin American tunes.

Having Our Say is based on the book of the same name by Bessie and Sadie Delany. The Delany sisters, ages 101 and 103, tell of a rich family history from post–slavery days in the South to Harlem in the '20s, stretching all the way to present day Westchester. The show will be presented in the Concert Hall on Feb. 6.

One of the country's most exciting dance companies, Doug Varone and Company, will perform on Feb. 13 in Bowker Auditorium. Known for their powerful performances and individual styles, Doug Varone and Company has emerged as an innovative force in American dance.

The FAC welcomes the Minnesota Orchestra on Feb. 14, with conductor Eiji Oue and pianist Peter Serkin. The program will include Dominick Argento's "Valentino" Dances, followed by Mozart's Piano Concert No. 21 in C Major, K 467 and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

The Onyx Theater Company, the first American deaf theater company devoted to actors of color, will present their award–winning play, A Laying Of Hands, on Feb. 22.

Experience Nashville on Feb. 23, when the Tennessee Dance Theatre, with special musical guests Riders in the Sky and fiddler Mark O'Conner, will perform in the Concert Hall. The Tennessee Dance Theatre celebrates the life, music, folk arts and literature of the South through music and dance.

The Billy Taylor Trio, along with guest artists The Sheila Jordan and Steve Kuhn Duo, closes out the FAC's February schedule for a special concert, to benefit the University's Fletcher Henderson Scholarship Fund, on Feb. 26.

Also, be sure to check out the art galleries around the Five College area for student/faculty art work, as well as gallery talks and performances.

Recent books to prolong your break

By Seema Gangatirkar
Collegian Staff

DANIELLE STEEL
Jewels
Delacorte Press

Meet Sarah, the angst–ridden and hopelessly depressing heroine of Danielle Steel's Jewels. Perpetually pouty, Sarah comes from the upper crust of New York families and is devastated beyond comprehension when her first marriage to a worthless lout ends in divorce.

Only in one of Steel's novels will the heroine lock herself up in isolation for a year mourning the demise of a marriage to a drunken cheater. In desperation, Sarah's parents whisk her over to Europe, hoping to raise her flagging spirits and also with the hidden motive that Sarah might meet another gentleman, worthy enough to be her husband.

Well, it so happens that at an English tea party, Sarah meets an older man, William, Duke of Whitfield. After a whirlwind two week romance, they declare their undying love for each other. They marry and buy an old chateau in France, because apparently William has a ton of money to throw around and whatever Sarah wants, she gets. This isn't a bad deal, but in the world of Danielle Steel, the author has managed to equate marital bliss with material items. After a while, no matter how sparkling the gems or how luxurious the furs, the whole concept of deluging your beloved with gifts becomes redundant and loses its meaning.

World War II breaks out and William leaves to fight. Alone in her chateau with her infant son and another baby on the way, Sarah finds herself displaced when Nazi soldiers move in. Sarah develops a cozy relationship with Joachim, the commander of the soldiers, and even allows herself to fall in love with the fellow, over the objections of her friend and helper, Emmanuelle.

When William is declared missing in action, Sarah persists in believing that he's alive and her loyalty is rewarded when William returns to her, beaten and battered, but still alive. After the war, the Whitfields begin buying jewels from impoverished Jews who want the money to look for their families. The Whitfields' jewel collection grows and soon they open a store, which of course, enjoys tremendous success.

If there was ever a stereotypical Danielle Steel novel, this is it. There is little plot and constant repetition begins to wear on the nerves. It's almost as if Steel rewrites the same novel over and over, using exact expressions and style.

In addition, whatever the characters have to say to each other is hopelessly boring and it's easy to get the feeling that Steel hasn't a clue about the real world, when she discusses Chanel and marvelous jewelry that sell for upwards of a million dollars. But then again, maybe an escape from the real world is exactly what Steel is aiming for. And in that respect, where her writing fails, Steel's escapade succeeds. C–

ROBERT K. MASSIE
The Romanovs: The Final Chapter
Random House

On the night of July 16, 1918, Nicholas II, last Tsar and Autocrat of Russia, and his family, disappeared into history. For over 70 years, the fate of Nicholas, his wife Alexandra and their five children remained unknown. The popular opinion of the time was that the entire family had been murdered in the basement of the Ipatiev House in Ekaterinburg, a Siberian town. But there was never enough evidence, physical or otherwise, to prove what had actually happened to the Romanovs.

When it comes to laying one of the great mysteries of the 20th Century to rest, there is no one more qualified for the job than Robert K. Massie. Massie wrote the definitive English work on the last Tsar and his family in Nicholas and Alexandra. At that time, Massie agreed with investigators' conclusions that the bodies of the Romanovs, along with four of their servants, had been completely destroyed, leaving nothing but a handful of corset stays, some jewelry and the skeleton of a dog behind. In his new book, Massie admits his mistake and clears up the mystery.

The bodies of nine individuals were excavated in early 1991 outside of Ekaterinburg. The actual discovery of the bones had occurred 15 years before by two Russian men, intent on proving that the Romanovs have been brutally massacred by the Bolsheviks. But the political climate of the time did not allow for the discovery to be made public, and the two men, Alexander Avdonin and Geli Ryabov, removed three skulls from the mass grave and agreed to keep quiet until the time was right. After the fall of the communist government, Avdonin and Ryabov made public the discovery. Excavation of the grave began in 1991.

Nine skeletons were removed from the grave and according to evidence, 11 people had been murdered in the basement of the Ipatiev House. Massie details the lengthy procedures taken by scientists — Russian, English and American — to determine the identity of the skeletons. Missing from the grave was the tsarvich, Alexis, and one of his sisters, either Maria or Anastasia.

Massie also takes the investigation one step further. When knowledge that one of the missing bodies may be that of Grand Duchess Anastasia, the surviving Romanov family members found themselves wondering if the cryptic Anna Anderson was indeed the Tsar's daughter. Using DNA testing, the identity of Anna Anderson is firmly established.

While Massie cites many of the sources for his present book that were used for his previous tome on the same subject, he also relieves heavily on new interviews. The book contains hundreds of interviews with scientists, surviving Romanovs and others close to the murders. Massie's thoroughness in his research makes this an exceptionally well–documented book. The details are many, but Massie leaves no stone unturned, and while there will always be questions, Massie has done an excellent job of laying to rest the rumors and mysteries. B

Hey you, turn your mac & cheese into a feast!

Jorma Kansanen

So, what do you want for nothing?

No, not a rubber biscuit, but... macaroni and cheese, please.

Yes, I shall confront the dish of dishes for the money– strapped college student: the not–so–cheesy, neo–pasteurized, powderific sensation that costs next to nothing to make, yet has that certain dash of panache to get you through the night without keeling over from hunger pains.

Directions to your favorite, and cheapest, edition of the powdered form of macaroni and cheese are on the box. Like, duh? But I am here to spruce up that concoction of concoctions for you, because that was my job, and thanks to any higher power, I do not do it for a professional living anymore. But for all of my goombas out there... anything for you, my friends, anything.

• From the "it doesn't make Luke puke" file, try adding some cut up hot dogs to the boiling water with the noodles. In one shot, you get your meat and pasta in the same dish. But if the nutrition information label is your favorite read while you cook, I do not recommend it. If your bank account statement is your favorite read before you eat, then this is your stomach filler.

• If you are in the "I am a vegetarian until the cows come home" category, cut up some broccoli florets and add that to the boiling water with your noodles. Aah, good. Just cut your broccoli about an inch from the crown and boil away. If you want to keep those wonderful minerals and vitamins in your veggies, use a steamer in another pan instead.

Other choices: fresh baby carrots/cauliflower, or those wonderful bags of frozen vegetable mixes you can find in your local green grocer.

• In the "I'm only three years old" arena is the simplest to make out of all these choices. For all you seafood lovers out there, drain a can of tuna, and add it with the butter, milk and cheese sauce when you mix it up. Simple. Yes, it is a different twist, and it is also another healthy filler item.

• All these options are fine and dandy, but the key to this whole process of putting a new look to an old–time favorite is in the saucier realm. No pasta dish is a pasta dish without the sauce. The sauce makes the dish, flat out.

So, what you can do to put some flavor in your not–so– savory powder–like cheese mix is easy: add more cheese. What you do is when you put the drained noodles back into the saucepan, do not put the powdered cheese sauce in with the butter and milk. Mix in the butter and milk first, over very low heat, but the key is to add a little more milk than the recipe prescribes (maybe a 1/4 to 1/2 cup).

Then, add the cheese sauce mix with a generous helping of grated Parmesan/Romano cheese, and the sauce takes a whole new flavor. Mix well, and what the extra milk does is help soak up the extra cheese, and makes the sauce more creamy. Yum, yum, yum. Hey, I go with the popular consensus, and my nieces can not be wrong.

Suggested Drink — Since we are talking budget stretching here: water. No, no, no. But going with that frame of mind, go with Natty Light or Piels and really mess up your inner bowels for good.

• The Finnish kitchen has a veritable potpourri of influences, but none of them are ever named because of legal ramifications. It's almost like Cheers, where everybody knows your name until the credit for something comes around, and then you run to the patent office.

But, in the cheesy vein of this column, I invite a guest star beyond compare to this space of culinary spaces: Mama Annie Mac. A long–time fan of the epicurean eccentricities of the Finnish Phenom, she now gives up one of her long– time favorites for the delight of all your watering gobs. Believe me, from the experience of devouring, you're going to want to clip this one out:

Mama Annie Mac's Homemade Macaroni and Cheese (2 1/2 quart casserole dish; preheat oven to 375 degrees) — 2 tablespoons butter, 1/4 cup flour, 2 1/2 cups milk, 2 1/2 cups grated cheddar cheese, 1/2 teaspoon salt, 2 cups of cooked and drained elbow macaroni, fresh/canned breadcrumbs to your own desired amount.

1) Melt butter over medium low heat in a medium sized saucepan, then gradually add all of the flour, mixing with a wire whisk.

2) In a large saucepan, start to boil the water for the macaroni, and cook elbows for 6–8 minutes or until done. Drain and leave in colander.

3) Raise heat to medium, and add milk to flour and butter mixture.

Warning Will Robinson! — Make sure you do not burn this! Heat the mixture slowly, not to the boiling point, while stirring the mixture constantly. If you want to, and you have the time, leave the temperature on the stove at medium low heat, and go on from there.

4) Gradually add only two cups of the grated cheddar cheese, stirring constantly with the whisk until the cheese sauce is relatively smooth and creamy, and take off the heat.

5) Add the macaroni to the casserole dish, and then pour the cheese sauce over and mix well. Sprinkle the remaining 1/2 cup of cheese over the top, then cover the entire casserole with a layer of breadcrumbs.

Options: Add some cubed ham or crumbled bacon with the cheese sauce.

■ hope

continued from page 6

Crusader.

One seriously doubts they'd pay the same cash to have Val Bertinelli replace Kilmer in his project.

• Rumor has it that Paul Simon's five–year recording lay– off may come to a close by mid–year. Having colored his last two efforts with the sounds of South Africa and South America, respectively, you can't help but to ponder where Simon will culturally venture this time. And with perfectly horrid new singles from Live, U2 and Silverchair atonally ringing in the new year, summer can't come quickly enough.

For the sake of sanity, however, let's just hope Paul's lyrics haven't been influenced too much by wife Edie Brickell's irritatingly spacey dippiness.

• No Ewoks are decapitated. Han Solo doesn't refer to Chewbacca as "that f—ing Wookie." Princess Leia doesn't get nasty and show off the royal goods. And Will Smith does not star as cocksure Lando. Can the Star Wars trilogy appeal to '90s audiences in the wake of Independence Day?

George Lucas is betting on it — and it's a safe gamble at that. Millions of fans are already salivating over the hype surrounding the nearly four–and–a–half minutes of new footage added to the 1977 masterpiece. In fact, Spielberg's contemporary intends to use the profits from the January, February and March releases to finance new Star Wars films, a long–awaited endeavor. Especially since Lucas has directed as many films as Alfred Hitchcock in the last 20 years — zero.

Chris Conner is a Collegian columnist.

TOTAL FITNESS
Without Waiting In Line
$139 4 months
STUDENT SPECIAL
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
Rte. 116
So. Amherst • 256-0080

SPRING BREAK
CANCUN • NASSAU • MAZATLAN
10% DISCOUNT
FANTASY FLIGHT $299
INCLUDES US Food Taxes AND TRANSFERS
OUR ONLY OFFER
http://www.takeabreak.com
1-800-95-BREAK
TAKE A break STUDENT TRAVEL

COLLEGE BREAK SPECIALS
Ski Europe This Winter $549
DATE: MARCH 14-21, 1997
INTERLAKEN IN SWITZERLAND
Ski the fantastic Jungfrau ski region.
Trip Includes:
• Round Trip on Swiss Air from Boston or JFK to Zurich • Breakfast & Dinner Daily • Airport Transfers, Taxes and Service
$549 pp Trips & Adventures Travel
P.O. Box 338, Auburn, NH 03032
Call Toll Free 1-800-645-7468 or 603-483-9933
Visit our site: http://www.349trips.com
E-Mail: 349trips@conknet.com

COURTESY BRUCE TALAMON

"It's not unusual..." Or is it? Tom Jones saves both Anette Bening and the day in Mars Attacks!

Winter movie releases still linger around the are and our hearts

MARS ATTACKS!

Ever since the release of Star Wars, science fiction movies have become increasingly obsessed with big–budget special effects and plots loaded with political imagery and humanistic commentary. The days of the cheesy, blow–'em– all–to–hell destruction of the B–movies popular in the Cold War era of the '50s and '60s seemed long gone, especially when compared to such "love the alien" message pictures as Close Encounters Of The Third Kind and E.T. Thankfully, notoriously warped filmmaker Tim Burton has decided to pay tribute to the genre with the morally bankrupt and incredibly enjoyable Mars Attacks!

To those who haven't seen the movie, one of the most common misunderstandings about Mars Attacks! is that it is another patriotic call–to–arms like this summer's blockbuster Independence Day. Fortunately, that's not the case. Flag–wavers (as well as pacifists) are ridiculed and usually die in a most undignified way. The hero here isn't the Fresh Prince; it's Tom Jones. Tom "What's New, Pussycat" Jones. 'Nuff said.

Producer/director Burton has assembled top–notch, star–studded ensemble cast, ranging from Jack Nicholson and Glenn Close to Martin Short and Michael J. Fox. The sense of fun the actors are having wallowing in the absurdities of the film is contagious. Nicholson, in a double role, is typically shifty as the president and completely over the top as a sleazy Vegas real estate developer. Annette Benning's New Age guru and Pierce Brosnan's pompous, pipe–smoking scientist also stand out, as do Lukas Haas' stoner Richie and Rod Steiger's hawkish General Decker. .

However, the real stars of Mars Attacks! are the Martians themselves. Billed as the "Little Green Men from the Angry Red Planet," the Martians are nasty little bastards. Gleefully killing everyone in their path with their ray–guns (as well as setting cows on fire and performing previously unimaginable experiments on a Chihuahua), the big–brained, bug–eyed fiends resemble in both looks and behavior none other than that other large–skulled, demonic terrorist of the holiday movie season, Beavis.

Mars Attacks! is based on a short–lived series of Topps collectors cards from the early 1960s. Tim Burton also pays homage to the era with nods to the cocky aliens as well as the production values and continuity errors of Ed Wood's Plan 9 From Outer Space (widely regarded as the worst movie ever made). However, the freedom Burton has with an $80 million budget enables him to make a high–budget film about a low–brow concept. The Martian spaceships still resemble flying saucers, but now they are done with computer graphics, not hub–caps and string; the climactic battle takes place on the Las Vegas strip, further accentuating the celebration of American trash–culture; and the ultimate tool of victory is so preposterously absurd it must be seen to be believed.

Simply dismissing Mars Attacks! as a spoof of the sci–fi genre is unfair, though. From Burton's flair behind the camera to the cast's spirited performance and Danny Elfman's eerie score, this is more than a Martian Naked Gun. This is a faithful and remarkably well–crafted tribute to a chapter of cinematic history and should be appreciated as such. Put in that context, Mars Attacks! is both a very funny black comedy and a celebration of American popular culture. A– (John Hendrickson)

MY FELLOW AMERICANS

The story behind My Fellow Americans is quite clever. Two ex–presidents from opposing parties must unite in order to solve the mystery behind the corrupt incumbent. This premise contains the ability to create some brilliant and intelligent political humor. The humor however, really isn't that funny for the most part. The best lines from the movie were shown in the commercials and what is left over is slightly above boring.

The representations of real political figure heads are the best thing the film has to offer. Jack Lemmon and James Garner nicely recreate the stereotypes associated with their party. Together they engage on a road trip to prove their innocence after being framed with the current president played by Dan Akroyd. Lemmon and Garner try to fuel the story by playing off each other's wit with little success. The small role by John Heard playing an absent minded Dan Quayle style vice president is the best thing the film has to offer. D (Adam Levine)

TREES LOUNGE

Independent film veteran Steve Buscemi has written, directed, and stars in an incredibly entertaining character study about a 31 year old loser.

Buscemi plays Tommy, a nice guy who has never had an ounce of luck in his life. He spends his nights as a barfly in Trees Lounge and feebly attempts to find work during the day. He lost his pregnant girlfriend to his former best friend who he once also worked for. After his uncle dies, Tommy takes over the ice cream truck his uncle once drove. He finds companionship with a 17 year old and slowly loses all faith in his existence and dignity.

Buscemi has created a sincere and personal story which illustrates the choices we make and the situations we just fall into. With several subplots, each as well constructed as the primary one, we witness an honest look at the working class of a small California city. Filled with clever wit and sharp dialogue, Trees Lounge proves Buscemi to be one of the best character–actors of our generation. B+ (Adam Levine)

ART SUPPLIES
DESIGN SUPPLY STUDIO
ON TOWN COMMON • 65 SOUTH PLEASANT STREET • AMHERST • 413/253-5592
FREE DISCOUNT CARD WITH THIS COUPON • GOOD FOR 10% OFF ALL PURCHASES FOR ONE FULL YEAR
EXPIRES 3/1/97

AMHERST SUNSHINE Car Wash
381 College Street (Rte. 9 East)
Automatic Wash/Wax
Open Daily
Self-Service Bays
Vacuum Cleaners
Bill Changers
Open 24 Hours

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, Now With Previews!

Spring Break '97 Spring Break '97
Bahamas FROM $379
Round Trip Air Fare
Seven (7) nights lodging at choice hotel
Welcome party with complimentary island beverage
Beach parties, FREE food, FREE drinks and more
Entitles FREE or discounted admission to Nassau's hottest clubs
Plus much, much, more!
Earn a FREE Trip
FREE Exclusive Trip! Party program ($150 value) Call for Details
Call now for complete details: 1-800-9-Beach-1

Wanted: Graphic Artist Assistant
Contact: Lynne Thompson For A Portfolio Review
With Graphic Design Skills And MAC Experience (QUARK, PHOTOSHOP & IT)
University Health Services
Graphics Dept. 577-5181

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139 STUDENT SPECIAL 4 MONTHS
KEISER • NAUTILUS • CYBEX
STAIRMASTERS • LIFECYCLES
TREADMILLS • V.R. BIKE
LIFEROWER • GAUNTLET
GRAVITON
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
Rte. 116 So. Amherst
256-0080

Silver Jewelry
A BRANCH BEYOND
Great Selection
Great Prices
236 N. Pleasant St
Amherst
253-4997
Mon-Sat 11-6

NORTHAMPTON WOOLS
Knitting Classes & Workshops For All Levels.
Knitting has been shown to reduce stress!
Mon. - Sat. 10-5 pm
Thurs. till 9
Patterns • Yarns
11 Pleasant St., Northampton, MA 01060 • 413-586-4331

The Right Place to Be!
3 Barbers Everyday
Unisex Hair Styling
Amherst Barbers $8 and up
Guys & Gals
Layer Cuts
Flat Tops
Fades
Clipper Cuts
Razor Cuts
Kids Cuts
Appointment Not Neccessary
Tel. 253-1722
40 Main Street, Amherst, MA
(Next to Newbury Comics)
Hours: Mon - Fri 8 - 5:15 pm
Sat 8 - 2:45 pm
Proprietors: Jim Read and Terri Loncrini

Phone: 1-413-584-9948
Carol's
HEAD QUARTERS ALSO TANNING
115 Russell Street, Rt. 9
Hadley, MA 01035
Specializing In Just You

Taipei & Tokyo
Chinese & Japanese Restaurant
ADVOCATE ★ BEST ★ OF THE VALLEY READERS POLL 1996
Dine in or Take Out • We Deliver
Gift Certificates Available
(413) 582-1888 • OPEN 7 DAYS
18 Main Street, Northampton, MA 01060

The Nation's #1 MCAT course
JUST GOT EVEN Better
KAPLAN
1-800-KAP-TEST
www.kaplan.com
New for 1997!
Pinpoint Your Needs
Solidify Your Science
Master Proven Strategies
Demystify The Test
Simulate Test Day
Never Be Alone
Get Into Medical School

New Course
Produce a Multi-Media CD Rom on Sabbath
Contact UMass-Hillel • 549-1710
Course # JUDAIC 192C

Dance Stuff
220 N. Pleasant St. (Rear), Amherst, MA
For the Dancer, Gymnast, Fitness Minded
We have all supplies for dance majors
Fun Bodywear! Great Shoes!
253-5201

Amherst Laundromat

326 College St. Rt. 9
Amherst, MA
253-5072
• Open 7 days a week 8 a.m.-9 p.m.
• Drop off Service & Self Service

R&P Liquors
• Weekly Specials on Regular Beers
• Fine Wines
• Largest Selection of Micro Brews in S. Amherst
• Fridge Rentals

The UMass Department of Theater presents
WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE'S THE MERCHANT OF VENICE
FEBRUARY 28 - MARCH 8
Call 545-2511 for times and tickets
RAND THEATER
Call 545-6520 for group discounts
Also coming this spring:
Tom Jones and Harvey Schmidt's THE FANTASTICKS
& Arthur Kopit's
OH DAD, POOR DAD, MAMA'S HUNG YOU IN THE CLOSET AND I'M FEELIN' SO SAD

You Can
UNLOCK YOUR TALENT
at the Performing Arts Division
UMass Arts Council discounts for UMass students
MUSIC • THEATER • DANCE • INSTRUCTION
REGISTRATION JANUARY 27 - FEBRUARY 7
PAD OFFICE • 73 BARTLETT HALL • 545-0519

PHOTO BY JENNIFER POTRAS

•Calvin Klein Lingerie
•Free People
•Dollhouse
•Betsey Johnson
•Pfi Company
•Bulldog
•NC Love
•URU
•Soda Bla
•Ecote
•Girl Star
•Tripp NYC
•Esprit
•Airwalk
•And Lots More
Downstairs at Thornes
CONTEMPORARY CLOTHING & FOOTWEAR
25 CENTRAL
150 Main Street • Northampton, MA
413-586-8017

No one clear winner at Golden Globes

By Bob Thomas
Associated Press

BEVERLY HILLS — Bring on the Oscars. Hollywood found out what the foreign press thinks is the best of 1996 cinema with the Golden Globe awards two weeks ago, as the Hollywood Foreign Press Association feted dramas with a definite foreign tone.

The English Patient was honored as best picture, England's Brenda Blethyn as top actress for Secrets & Lies and Australia's Geoffrey Rush for Shine.

Evita, the musical chronicling the life of legendary Argentine political figure Eva Peron, was a triple winner — taking honors for best musical or comedy movie, best musical-comedy actress for Madonna and best original song, You Must Love Me.

"I have been so incredibly blessed in this past year," Madonna, who had her first baby last year, said in accepting her Golden Globe. "Making this picture has been a great experience artistically and spiritually. I will never forget it."

No movie swept the awards, which launch Hollywood's movie awards season and often presage the Academy Awards. The dark comedy Fargo, which has won a trophy case full of critics' awards in recent weeks, went home empty-handed.

After years of struggling for respect because of claims of voting corruption, the Hollywood Foreign Press Association finally achieved a degree of respectability last year with a prime-time TV broadcast.

Golden Globes were also bestowed on The People vs. Larry Flynt, with awards to director Milos Forman and writers Scott Alexander and Larry Karaszewski.

In the television categories, "The X-Files" was voted top TV drama and its stars, David Duchovny and Gillian Anderson, won top TV dramatic actor honors.

NBC-TV's "3rd Rock From the Sun" won for top TV musical or comedy series and its star, John Lithgow, won for best actor in that category. Helen Hunt of "Mad About You" was the top TV comedy actress. Tom Cruise, the sports agent of Jerry Maguire, was the musical-comedy actor winner.

Ms. Blethyn, who plays the mother of a black daughter she never knew in Secrets & Lies, was virtually unknown to American audiences before the movie's release.

"I'm so happy to be in the building much less standing up here," she said in accepting her award.

Rush, who played the mentally troubled piano virtuoso of Shine, was a hugely popular winner with the stellar Beverly Hilton Hotel audience, which gave him an unusual standing ovation.

"I'm very proud to be part of a film that has taken such a vulnerable, peculiar and very human character and placed him at the heart of a film," Rush said.

Forman was picked best motion picture director for The People vs. Larry Flynt. Mel Gibson, last year's director winner for Braveheart, handed Forman the trophy.

Veteran actress Lauren Bacall, who played the possessive mother of Barbra Streisand in The Mirror Has Two Faces, and Edward Norton, the suspected killer in Primal Fear, won movie supporting actor trophies.

"I'm in a state of shock. This is the first time I've been nominated for an award in any role," Bacall said. The 72-year-old actress concluded her acceptance by saying, "It's taken a long time to get here and I'm not giving it [the Golden Globe] back."

The Golden Globe for best foreign language film went to the Czech Republic's Kolya.

HBO's Rasputin won the top TV miniseries or movie award as well as top actor for Alan Rickman and supporting actor for Ian McKellen.

Helen Mirren won the top actress Golden Globe in a miniseries or movie for Showtime's Losing Chase and Kathy Bates won the supporting actress trophy in that category for The Late Shift.

One Golden Globe was announced before Sunday's ceremony: Dustin Hoffman, the Cecil B. DeMille award for service to the cinema. Cruise offered a tribute to him during the show.

BEVERLY HILLS — The complete list of winners for the Hollywood Foreign Press Association's 54th annual Golden Globe Awards presented on Jan. 19.

MOTION PICTURES

DRAMA: The English Patient.
MUSICAL or COMEDY: Evita.
ACTRESS DRAMA: Brenda Blethyn for Secrets & Lies.
ACTOR DRAMA: Geoffrey Rush for Shine.
ACTRESS MUSICAL OR COMEDY: Madonna for Evita.
ACTOR MUSICAL OR COMEDY: Tom Cruise for Jerry Maguire.
FOREIGN LANGUAGE FILM: Kolya, Czech Republic.
SUPPORTING ACTRESS DRAMA, MUSICAL OR COMEDY: Lauren Bacall for The Mirror Has Two Faces.
SUPPORTING ACTOR DRAMA, MUSICAL OR COMEDY: Edward Norton for Primal Fear.
DIRECTOR: Milos Forman for The People vs. Larry Flynt.
SCREENPLAY: The People vs. Larry Flynt, Scott Alexander and Larry Karaszewski.
ORIGINAL SCORE: The English Patient, Gabriel Yared.
ORIGINAL SONG: "You Must Love Me" from Evita.

TELEVISION

DRAMA SERIES: "The X-Files."
MUSICAL OR COMEDY SERIES: "3rd Rock From the Sun."
ACTRESS DRAMA: Gillian Anderson for "The X-Files."
ACTOR DRAMA: David Duchovny for "The X-Files."
ACTRESS MUSICAL OR COMEDY: Helen Hunt for "Mad About You."
ACTOR MUSICAL OR COMEDY: John Lithgow for "3rd Rock From the Sun."
MINI-SERIES OR MOVIE MADE FOR TELEVISION: Rasputin.
ACTRESS MINI-SERIES OR MOVIE MADE FOR TELEVISION: Helen Mirren for Losing Chase.
ACTOR MINI-SERIES OR MOVIE MADE FOR TELEVISION: Alan Rickman for Rasputin.
SUPPORTING ACTRESS SERIES, MINI-SERIES OR MOTION PICTURE MADE FOR TELEVISION: Kathy Bates for The Late Shift.
SUPPORTING ACTOR SERIES, MINI-SERIES OR MOTION PICTURE MADE FOR TELEVISION: Ian McKellen for Rasputin.

COURTESY A.P.

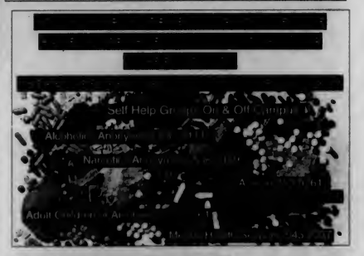

PHOTO COURTESY MIRAMAX FILMS

The English Patient starring Ralph Fiennes, won a golden globe for best drama motion picture of 1996.

Just in case you decide to buy the books this semester.

It's everywhere you want to be.

THE FINE ARTS CENTER SERIES

Hot A Cappella

THE REAL GROUP

Direct from Sweden on their first US tour, this glorious a cappella vocal quintet performs its Basie-to-Beatles-to-Beach Boys repertoire with a Scandinavian passion for American jazz. Winner of two A Cappella Society of America Awards and the acclaim of fans around the world.

"Absolutely irresistible."
– Jon Hendricks

FRIDAY, JANUARY 31, 8PM, FAC CONCERT HALL
PRESENTED WITH THE GENEROUS SUPPORT OF EASTHAMPTON SAVINGS BANK AND WRNX 100.9FM.
For more info on this event visit our website at HTTP://WWW.ALGONET.SE/~RG

Heartwarming Theater

HAVING OUR SAY

The Tony-nominated play celebrates the lives of Sadie and Bessie Delany, two centenarian sisters who have witnessed two world wars, the rise of Jim Crowe laws, the Harlem Renaissance, the Clarence Thomas hearings and more. Join them in their home as they bake bass, stuff a chicken and mix the ingredients for a delightful evening of stories and sage advice.

"The most provocative and entertaining family play in a long time."
– Vincent Canby, The New York Times

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 8PM, FAC CONCERT HALL
PRESENTED WITH THE GENEROUS SUPPORT OF PEOPLES BANK AND WGGB-TV 40
For more info on this event visit our website at HTTP://HAVINGOURSAY-THEPLAY.COM

Fire and Flash

THE MINNESOTA ORCHESTRA
EIJI OUE, MUSIC DIRECTOR
PETER SERKIN, PIANO

One of America's finest orchestras and most renowned soloists present Argento's "Valentino Dances," followed by Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 21 in C major and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4. A heavenly way to celebrate Valentine's Day!

"...an adroit balance of passion and polish." – Detroit News

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 8PM, FAC CONCERT HALL
PRESENTED WITH THE GENEROUS SUPPORT OF FIRST MASSACHUSETTS BANK AND WFCR 88.5 FM.
For more info on this event visit our website at HTTP://MNORCH.ORG

The Center Series Winter Warmers
FOR TICKETS OR INFORMATION CALL 545-2511 OR 1-800-999-UMASS
CELEBRATE THE RHYTHMS OF LIFE
THE FINE ARTS CENTER AT UMASS

▼ INSIDE THIS ISSUE

UMass Mens Basketball box scores ..... page 2-B
UMass Mens Basketball game capsules ..... page 4-B
UMass Hockey box scores ..... page 7-B
UMass Womens Basketball box scores ..... page 8-B
UMass/UConn game recap & analysis ..... page 10-B
NBA, NFL, NHL columns ..... page 12-B

▼ SPORTS THIS WEEK — Tuesday, January 28, 1997

MEN'S HOOP	WOMEN'S HOOP	MEN'S & WOMEN'S TRACK	MEN'S & WOMEN'S HOCKEY	MEN'S & WOMEN'S SWIM & DIVE
JAN 30th @ GW 7:30 P.M	JAN 29th @ VA TECH 7:30 P.M.	JAN 31st @ URI 1:00 P.M.	JAN 31st @ MERRIMACK 7:30 P.M.	FEB 1st RUTGERS T.B.A.
FEB 1st XAVIER 7:30 P.M.

Minutemen crush Eagles in Commonwealth Classic

HUI GAO / COLLEGIAN

Senior guard Edgar Padilla led a resurrected UMass squad with 24 points in a 90–78 win over Boston College.

Massachusetts captures biggest win of season

By Chris Stamm
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — As the battle between public and private rages on in the second of the four-game Commonwealth Classic series, the record stands as follows: Good Guys 2, upper-class, elitist trash 0.

Massachusetts 90
Boston College 78

While the game was just as exciting as last year's 65–57 UMass win, the roles of Massachusetts and Boston College were reversed this time around. Last year, the Minutemen were the No. 3 unbeaten national powerhouse, while the Eagles played the part of unranked underdog.

This year UMass entered the FleetCenter with a 7–9

Turn to GAME, page 10-B

Padilla driving force in upset over Eagles

BOSTON — I'm going to name my first-born son Edgar.

Okay. I may be getting caught up in the moment, but I think that is a reasonable trade-off after watching the Massachusetts men's basketball team humiliate the Boston College Eagles 90–78 in the Commonwealth Classic.

CASEY KANE

Edgar, as in Padilla, was a driving force behind that upheaval of the holier-than-thou, ranked-higher-than-thou rivals to our east.

Don't get me wrong, I'm not discounting the contributions of the other UMass players. The guard play of Charlton Clarke and Carmelo Travieso was solid. The inside work of the UMass big men took care of BC's post-play. But there was something almost magical about watching Padilla play.

So much of what Padilla

Turn to FORCE, page 10-B

UM's Clarke denies scandal involvement

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

Current University of Massachusetts guard Charlton Clarke was mentioned in published reports in December that stated Hartford agent Wesley Spears arranged for prostitutes for former UMass star Marcus Camby and his friends.

The Boston Globe reported that Spears arranged for an exotic dancer from Springfield to come to Camby's dorm room and have sex with Camby, Clarke and another of Camby's friends.

The reports were released prior to UMass'

Turn to CAMBY, page 11-B

Hockey sweeps Northeastern, goes 4–5 over break

By Jorma Kansanen
& Leigh Torbin
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts 5, Northeastern 4 (OT)
Jan. 18 at Matthews Arena

The Minutemen completed a home-and-home sweep of the Huntington Hounds in rousing fashion Saturday night at Matthews Arena after a Friday night win in Amherst night. Steve MacKinnon got UMass on the board first with a power play goal 9:18 into the game, but Northeastern struck back just 10 seconds later with the first of three unanswered. Just when things looked like they could get ugly, MacKinnon wrestled the momentum from coach Bruce Crowder's team with a goal that brought UMass to within 3– 2 after two. Maine transfer Brad Mahoney's goal 32 seconds into the third was erased by Warren Norris netting a pair of goals in the third period, the second coming with 1:27 to play, sending the game to overtime. Rob Bonneau put the exclamation point on a rousing comeback by scoring with 17 seconds

Turn to HOCKEY, page 6-B

JORMA KANSANEN / COLLEGIAN

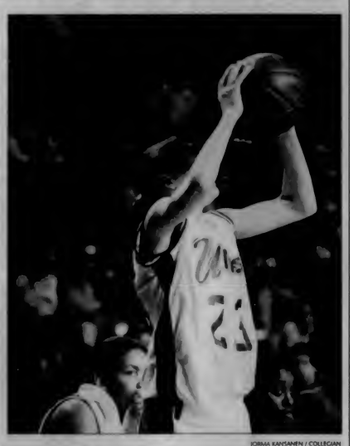
The Massachusetts hockey team's intersession action was highlighted with a two-game sweep over Northeastern.

Women win seven over break

By Luke Meredith
Collegian Sports

It's been quite an intersession for the Minutewomen.

The UMass women's basketball team limped into the winter break with a 3–4 record, reeling from a home loss to Kent on Dec. 11 and still without the services of injured senior co-captain Beth Kuzmeski.



But with a healthy Kuzmeski and a little bit of luck, the Minutewomen broke off a seven game win streak, and now find themselves atop the Atlantic–10 standings with a 4–0 conference mark and a 10–4 overall record. Here's a look back at the Minutewomen's winter break, their most successful in UMass head coach Jounie O'Brien's seven year tenure.

UMass 65, LaSalle 37
Jan. 16 at the William D. Mullins Center

The Minutewomen turned a game that was supposed to be a clash of conference leaders into a blowout. Crystal Carroll went 9–for–11 from the field for 19 points, and Alison Macfarland added 11 points for UMass, who made a loud statement to the rest of the conference with the win.

The Minutewomen held the Explorers to 11 points in the first half, building a nine point lead by halftime. UMass extended its lead to 18, 40–22, with 10 minutes left in ther ballgame and waltzed to the lopsided win. Lucia Madajova had five points and three

Turn to WOMEN'S HOOP, page 6-B

JORMA KANSANEN / COLLEGIAN

Freshman Kelly Van Hulsen helped the Minutewomen cinch seven games over winter break.

Men's hoop starts slow against an ACC pair,

Massachusetts 90, Boston College 78
Jan. 18 at the FleetCenter

Boston College (12-3)
Granger 5-10 3-6 15, Abrams 4-10 8-10 16, Curley 2-3 0- 0 4, Penn 6-12 2-4 18, Woodward 2-9 0-0 5, Thomas 2-4 0- 3 4, Bedard 1-4 0-0 2, Jourdon 4-8 3-5 12, Maglos 0-0 0-0 0, Bosworth 0-1 0-0 0, Fox 1-2 0-0 2, Foster 0-0 0-0 0, Christianson 0-0 0-0 0. Totals — 27-65 16-28 78.

Massachusetts (8-9)
Clarke 7-12 7-8 23, Weeks 6-9 3-4 15, Ketner 4-8 2-2 10, Padilla 7-12 4-4 24, Travieso 2-9 2-4 8, Burns 0-0 0-0 0, Maclay 0-0 0-0 0, Smith 0-0 1-2 1, Babul 0-0 0-0 0, Basit 3-7 3-4 9, Norville 0-0 0-0 0. Totals 29-57 22-28 90.

Halftime — Massachusetts 40-31. 3-point Field Goals — Boston College 8 (Penn 4), Massachusetts 10 (Padilla 6). Rebounds — Boston College 40 (Abrams 9, Jourdon 9), Massachusetts 36 (Weeks 8). Assists — Boston College 14 (Woodward 7), Massachusetts 19 (Padilla 7). Blocks — Boston College 0, Massachusetts 9 (Ketner 4). Totals Fouls — Boston College 21, Massachusetts 22. Foul Outs — Weeks, Ketner, Norville. Attendance — 15,215.

HUB GAO / COLLEGIAN
Tyrone Weeks covers his man.

Massachusetts 63, St. Bonaventure 59
Jan. 14 at the Reily Center

Massachusetts (7-9, 2-2)
Travieso 7-12 3-4 18, Weeks 6-11 7-7 19, Ketner 2-4 8-11 12, Charlton Carke 2-5 0-0 4, Padilla 1-3 2-2 4, Smith 0-2 2-2 2, Babul 0-0 0-1 0, Basit 1-2 2-3 4. Totals 19-39 23-30 63.

St. Bonaventure (7-?, ?-?)
Palmer 9-15 11-14 29, Durham 0-0 2-2 2, Blackwell 1-7 0-2 2, Winn 2-10 0-2 -4, McNeil 5-13 1-2 13, Capers 0-1 0- 0 0, Cyrus 0-1 0-0 0, McFarland 2-8 4-5 9, Singleton 0-1 0- 0 0, Lumsdon 0-3 0-0 0. Totals 19-59 18-25 59.

Halftime — Massachusetts 29-22. 3-point Field Goals — Massachusetts 2 (Travieso, Padilla), St. Bonaventure 3 (McNeill 2). Rebounds — Massachusetts 39 (Weeks 14), St. Bonaventure 29 (Palmer 7). Assists — Massachusetts 11 (Padilla 9), St. Bonaventure 4 (McNeill 2). Blocks — Massachusetts 5 (Ketner 2, Weeks 2), St. Bonaventure 3 (Durham 2). Total Fouls — Massachusetts 22, St. Bonaventure 22. Foul Outs — McFarland. Attendance — 6,000.

Virginia Tech 63, Massachusetts 47
Jan. 12 at the William D. Mullins Center

Virginia Tech (7-6, 2-2)
Custis 6-15 0-1 16, Browne 4-5 0-0 8, Matthews 5-10 3-6 13, J. Jackson 1-5 0-0 6, Manns 3-6 0-0 6, D. Jackson 4-7 2-3 12, Guillory 0-1 0-0 0, Ray 0-2 0-0 0, Wheeler 2-2 1-2 5, Tor 0-0 0-0 0. Totals 25-35 6-12 63.

Massachusetts (6-9, 1-2)
Smith 1-4 0-0 2, Weeks 4-5 0-1 8, Ketner 9-12 0-0 18, Clarke 2-6 0-0 4, Travieso 4-16 0-0 10, Padilla 1-7 0-0 3, Kirkland 1-2 0-0 2, Babul 0-0 0-0 0, Basit 0-3 0-0 0, Norville 0-1 0-0 0. Totals 22-56 0-1 47.

Halftime — Virginia Tech 29-21. 3-point Field Goals — Virginia Tech 7 (Custis 4), Massachusetts 3 (Travieso 2). Rebounds — Virginia Tech 30 (Custis 10), Massachusetts 34 (Ketner 7). Assists — Virginia Tech 17 (Custis 5, Manns 5), Massachusetts 14 (Smith 3, Clarke 3, Travieso 3). Blocks — Virginia Tech 1 (J. Jackson), Massachusetts 4 (Weeks 2). Total Fouls — Virginia Tech 9, Massachusetts 12. Attendance — 9,493 (2,675 no shows).

Massachusetts 56, La Salle 50
Jan. 8 at the CoreStates Spectrum

Massachusetts (6-8, 1-1)
Babul 0-0 0-0 0, Weeks 6-12 0-1 12, Ketner 3-6 3-6 9, Clarke 2-12 1-2 5, Travieso 4-14 0-0 11, Padilla 0-3 2-3 2, Smith 1-2 0-0 2, Kirkland 2-3 1-3 5, Basit 1-1 2-2 4, Norville 1-2 4-6 6. Totals 20-55 13-23 56.

La Salle (5-5, 0-1)
Gizzi 2-13 6-7 10, Catlin 0-2 2-2 2, Johnson 1-3 4-6- 6, Carr 6-23 11-16 26, Smith 0-5 0-0 0, Landgren 0-4 2-2 2, Melchionni 1-1 0-0 2, van Teeseling 1-1 0-0 2. Totals 11-57 25-33 50.

Halftime — Massachusetts 27-23. 3-point Field Goals — Massachusetts 3 (Travieso 3), La Salle 3 (Carr 3). Rebounds — Massachusetts 55 (Travieso 12), La Salle 35 (Gizzi 6, Carr 6). Assists — Massachusetts 13 (Travieso 7), La Salle 5 (Gizzi 2). Blocks — Massachusetts 6 (Travieso 2), La Salle 3 (Johnson 2). Total Fouls — Massachusetts 23 (Technical Foul-Basit, Intentional Foul-Padilla), La Salle 22. Attendance — 2,551.

HUB GAO / COLLEGIAN
In a point guard battle between Edgar Padilla and Rhode Island's Tyson Wheeler, UMass came out on top, 64-60.

We're running our transition game to perfection!

NEW BENEFITS for UMass Student Credit Union members:
- FREE ATM card
- computer loans
- 24 hour Audio Teller access

WELCOME STUDENT CREDIT UNION MEMBERS TO YOUR TEAM!

UMass isn't the only team with a great transition game. We would like to welcome you, the members of the UMass Student Credit Union, as you make this important move.

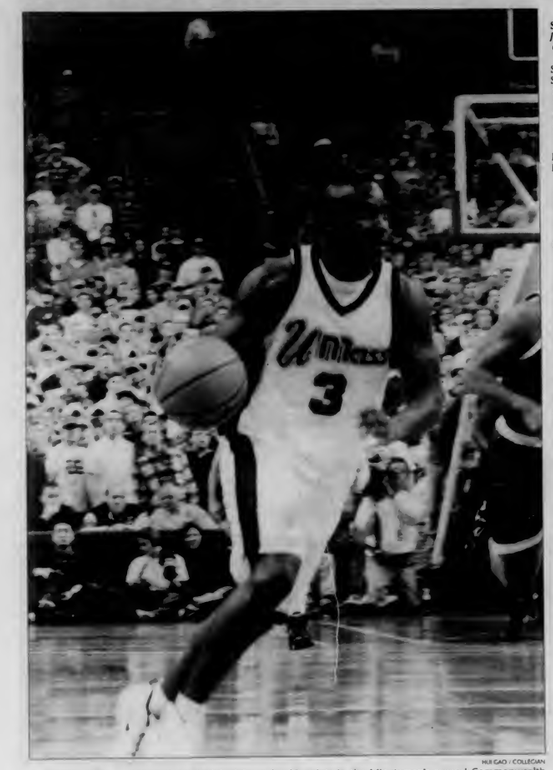
You'll get many NEW BENEFITS — like a free ATM card and great rates on computer loans, just to name a few.

UMass Five College Federal Credit Union

6 University Drive • Amherst
549-7400
Across the street from Rafter's

Welcome Back to Mike's
A Unique Bar With Great Prices Food & Fun

Mike's Westview



Mike's Westview Welcomes Back Our Students with our great spring Beer Bargains 16 oz.
Natural Lite $1.00
Bud Lite $1.50
Bud $1.50
Bud Ice $1.00
Also, our Cocktail of the Week $1.50

Thursday Raffle Night

❖ Mike's Mad Money

❖ T-Shirts & other Prizes

but Minutemen back on track after BC win

HUB GAO / COLLEGIAN
Charlton Clarke penetrated the Eagle's defense for 23 points in the Minutemen's second Commonwealth Classic win.

St. Joseph's 72, Massachusetts 68
Jan. 5 at the William D. Mullins Center

St. Joseph's (6-3)
Simmonds 3-4 2-4 10, Domani 2-4 2-2 6, Petrovic 4-6 5-8 13, Bey 2-9 4-4 8, Davis 5-12 0-0 14, Myers 4-11 0-0 10, Brown 0-0 0-0 0, Rasul 1-2 4-4 6, Haskins 2-2 1-3 5. Totals 23-50 18-25 72.

Massachusetts (5-8, 0-1)
Babul 1-2 0-0 2, Weeks 8-16 3-4 19, Ketner 3-5 0-0 6, Clarke 1-4 2-4 5, Travieso 9-19 0-2 23, Padilla 3-6 0-0 7, Smith 1-2 0-0 2, Kirkland 0-1 0-0 0, Norville 1-4 2-3 4. Totals 27-59 7-13 68.

Halftime — Massachusetts 39-34. 3-point Field Goals — St. Joseph's 8 (Davis 4), Massachusetts 7 (Travieso 5). Rebounds — St. Joseph's 37 (Davis 8, Haskins 8), Massachusetts 32 (Weeks 12). Assists — St. Joseph's 14 (Bey 5), Massachusetts 20 (Clarke 6). Blocks — St. Joseph's 0, Massachusetts 2 (Weeks, Ketner). Total Fouls — St. Joseph's 17, Massachusetts 20. Foul Outs — Ketner. Attendance — 9,493 (2,686 no shows).

Massachusetts 77, Davidson 64
Jan. 2 at the William D. Mullins Center

Davidson (5-5)
Ewodo 4-9 4-6 12, Kosmalski 5-11 4-11 15, Holmes 2-9 1-2 5, Donnelly 5-11 2-2 14, Ton 2-3 0-0 5, Armstrong 0-1 0-0 0, Burns 0-0 0-0 0, Halbauer 3-3 1-1 9, Marshall 0-4 4- 4 4. Totals 21-51 16-26 64.

Massachusetts (5-7)
Babul 0-2 0-0 0, Basit 2-5 0-0 4, Ketner 5-7 3-5 13, Clarke 3-9 2-2 10, Travieso 11-18 2-2 28, Smith 1-2 2-4 4, Kirkland 0-1 0-0 0, Weeks 6-9 0-0 12, Norville 3-4 0-0 6. Totals 31-57 9-13 77.

Halftime — Massachusetts 39-28. 3-point Field Goals — Davidson 6 (Donnelly 2, Halbauer 2), Massachusetts 6 (Travieso 4). Rebounds — Davidson 29 (Kosmalski 8), Massachusetts 33 (Weeks 7). Assists — Davidson 11 (Ton 4), Massachusetts 19 (Clarke 7). Blocks — Davidson 0, Massachusetts 8 (Ketner 4). Total Fouls — Davidson 16, Massachusetts 19. Attendance — 9,493.

Connecticut 64, Massachusetts 61
Dec. 27 at the Hartford Civic Center

Massachusetts (4-7)
Babul 1-2 1-2 3, Basit 3-7 0-0 6, Ketner 3-11 0-1 6, Clarke 5-9 4-4 15, Travieso 3-19 3-4 11, Padilla 0-0 0-0 0, Smith 1-1 0-2 2, Weeks 4-6 2-5 10, Norville 4-7 0-0 8. Totals 24-62 10-18 61.

Connecticut (7-2)
King 5-11 5-8 15, Hamilton 3-6 5-6 11, Voskuhl 1-2 0-0 2, Jones 6-11, 1-2 17, Moore 0-2 1-2 1, Klaiber 0-0 0-0 0, Freeman 3-5, 6-8 12, Carson 2-5 0-1 4, Hardnett 1-1 0-0 2. Totals 21-43 18-27 64.

Halftime — Connecticut 40-31. 3-point Field Goals — Massachusetts 5 (Travieso 2, Clarke), Connecticut 4 (Jones 4). Rebounds — Massachusetts 34 (Norville 10), Connecticut 34 (King 10). Assists — Massachusetts 11, Connecticut 14. Blocks — Massachusetts 5 (Ketner 3, Weeks, Smith), Connecticut 2 (King, Jones). Total Fouls — Massachusetts 22, Connecticut 16. Attendance — 14, 389.

Massachusetts 47, North Carolina–Wilmington 46
Dec. 22 at Trask Coliseum

Massachusetts (4-6)
Babul 0-0 2-4 2, Basit 0-3 1-2 1, Ketner 3-4 0-0 6, Clarke 3-11 0-0 6, Travieso 6-15 6-8 21, Smith 1-2 0-0 2, Kirkland 0-0 0-0 0, Weeks 3-6 0-0 6, Norville 1-2 1-4 3. Totals 17- 43 10-18 47.

UNC-Wilmington (3-6)
Byington 2-9 0-0 6, Mayew 4-7 0-0 8, Kojenets 0-4 2-2 2, Donlon 3-7 3-4 10, Franklin 3-4 0-0 6, Simmons 3-7 2-2 8, Spencer 3-12 0-1 6, Avent 0-0 0-0 0, Gibbs 0-0 0-0 0, Ebong 0-0 0-0 0. Totals 18-50 7-9 46.

Halftime — Massachusetts 23-20. 3-point Field Goals — Massachusetts 3 (Travieso 3), UNC-Wilmington 3 (Byington 2). Rebounds — Massachusetts 30 (Norville 7), UNC- Wilmington 34 (Simmons 7). Assists — Massachusetts 7 (Clarke 7), UNC-Wilmington 7 (Byington 2, Donlon 2, Franklin 2). Blocks — Massachusetts 4 (Ketner 2, Norville 2), UNC-Wilmington 2 (Simmons, Spencer). Total Fouls — Massachusetts 16, UNC-Wilmington 20. Attendance — 2,543.

North Carolina 83, Massachusetts 69
Dec. 20 at the Meadowlands
Massachusetts (3-6)
Babul 1-3 4-6 6, Basit 1-3 3-6 5, Ketner 2-4 0-0 4, Clarke 8-17 3-4 20, Smith 0-1 0-0 0, Padilla 0-0 0-0 0, Kirkland 0- 2 1-2 1, Travieso 4-21 0-0 11, Weeks 5-15 1-1 11, Norville 5-6 1-3 11. Totals 26-72 13-22 69.

North Carolina (8-1)
Okulaja 3-7 3-5 9, Jamison 8-14 5-5 21, Zwikker 8-14 1-2 17, Williams 4-8 2-2 12, Carter 2-5 6-7 10, Ndiaye 1-1 0-0 2, Cota 0-4 10-14 10, Sullivan 0-1 0-0 0, Newby 0-1 0-0 0, Tyndall 0-0 0-0 0, McNaity 0-0 0-2 0, Frederick 0-1 0-0 0. Etimov 1-1 0-1 2. Totals 27-57 27-38 83.

Halftime — North Carolina 44-29. 3-point Field Goals — Massachusetts 4 (Travieso 3, Clarke) North Carolina 2 (Williams). Rebounds — Massachusetts 47 (Weeks 10), North Carolina 40 (Okulaja 9). Assists — Massachusetts 9 (Clarke 3, Weeks 3), North Carolina 17 (Cota 7). Blocks — Massachusetts 4 (Basit, Ketner, Travieso, Norville), North Carolina 11 (Zwikker 5). Total Fouls — Massachusetts 26, North Carolina 19. Foul Outs — Massachusetts 1 (Basit), North Carolina 0. Attendance — 13,812.

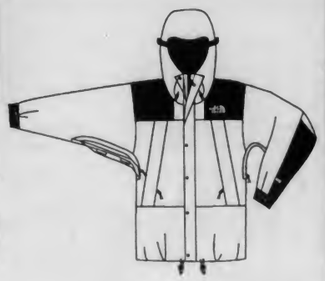
Wake Forest 71, Massachusetts 47
Dec. 14 at Joel Coliseum



Massachusetts (3-5)
Babul 3-7 0-1 6, Ketner 1-7 0-0 2, Basit 4-9 1-2 9, Smith 5-8 0-0 10, Clarke 2-10 2-2 7, Kirkland 1-3 0-0 2, Norville 3-6 0-0 6, Burns 0-2 1-2 1, Travieso 2-7 0-0 4, Maclay 0-1 0-0 0. Totals 21-60 4-7 47.

Wake Forest (7-0)
Peral 2-2 5-7 11, Allen 2-5 2-2 6, Duncan 4-9 9-11 17, Rutland 5-8 0-0 14, Braswell 2-5 4-4 9, Woods 2-2 6-8 10, Amonett 0-2 2-2 2, Goolsby 0-6 0-0 0, West 1-1 0-2 2, Scott 0-2 0-0 0, Fuller 0-1 0-0 0, Herbst 0-0 0-0 0. Totals 18-43 28-36 71.

Halftime — Wake Forest 35-20. 3-point Field Goals — Massachusetts 1 (Clarke), Wake Forest 7 (Rutland 4). Rebounds — Massachusetts 38 (Babul 9), Wake Forest 34 (Duncan 12). Assists — Massachusetts 8 (Clarke 3), Wake Forest 9 (Braswell 3). Blocks — Massachusetts 3 (Basit, Norville, Travieso), Wake Forest 10 (Woods 5). Total Fouls — Massachusetts 26, Wake Forest 15. Foul Outs — Ketner, Basit, Norville. Attendance — 14,111.

THE NORTH FACE

The North Face Mountain Jacket, the most technical GORETEX jacket in the world. Full technical hood, pit zips, powder skirt, zip-in liners, and much more. Plus a full lifetime warranty!

Reg $375

SALE! $309.95

North Face Mountain Jacket

WILDWATER OUTFITTERS

451 RUSSELL ST
(ROUTE 9)
HADLEY, MA 01035
(413) 253-5500

20 Elliot ST
BRATTLEBORO,
VT 05301
(802) 254-4133

The Welcome Back to School and Get-Ready-To-Fit-Into-Your-Bathing-Suit-For-Spring-Break

BODY SHOP MEMBERSHIP SPECIAL

BRING THIS DISCOUNT TICKET to any of the FIVE BODY SHOP locations
(Totman Gym 8, Boyden Gym 17, Washington Tower 19, Webster/Hilltop or Gorman/Crossan) with this coupon and pay only...

$55 FOR A FULL SPRING SEMESTER MEMBERSHIP
That's $5 off our regular $60 price to work every muscle
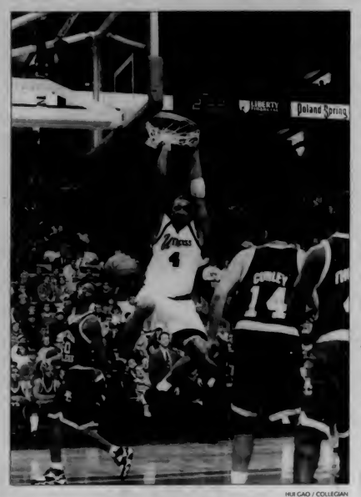
in your body with:



POWERLINE® Weight Training Machines
LifeFITNESS® Stairclimbers & Stationary Bikes
CONCEPT II® Rowing Machines
NORDICTRACK® Ski Machines
LANDICE® Treadmills
and Free Weights

Body Shop Fitness Center DISCOUNT

$5.00 OFF 1997 Spring Semester Membership
This Limited Offer Expires 2/2/97

Minutemen fall to St. Joe's, VT in Mullins Center

While classes were out, Lari Ketner was a powerful and consistent presence in the paint for the Minutemen.

HUI GAO / COLLEGIAN

By Chris Stamm
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's basketball team slowly gained momentum over the winter break, stringing together its first back-to-back wins in the middle of January. The past month saw UMass continue its intrastate rivalry with Boston College as coach James "Bruiser" Flint and company captured the school's second Commonwealth Classic title. The Minutemen were busy rekindling a rivalry with Connecticut in the first annual "U Game," and made a return trip to the Jimmy V Classic, where they mixed it up with Antawn Jamison and North Carolina. In addition, UMass went 1-2 in the William D. Mullins Center as of games played before press time.

The following is a recap of all the winter break men's hoop action. (See related stories on the Commonwealth Classic and The U-Game).

Massachusetts 63, St. Bonaventure 59

Despite a 29-point output from Rashaan Palmer, the Minutemen held of a surging Bonnie team to capture a win at the Reilly Center.

UMass was paced by three players in double figures, as Tyrone Weeks posted 19, Carmelo Travieso had 18 and Lari Ketner came away with 12. Weeks was also in double figures in rebounding with a career high 14 boards.

St. Bonaventure, which had already beaten the preseason favorite in the Atlantic 10 West, George Washington, was able to chip away at UMass' lead, which was as large as 14 in the first half. The Minutemen secured a 29-22 lead at the half.

In the second half the Bonnies surged, cutting the lead down to within two with less than two minutes to play. UMass hung tight with a pair of big buckets by Travieso and iced the win with big jam. Ketner added 12 points in the win, while Travieso added 18 points and 8 boards. For St. Bonaventure, Palmer anchored the squad with 29 points and seven boards. The UMass defense held the Bonnies to just 19-of-59 shooting for 32.2 percent.

Virginia Tech 63, Massachusetts 47

When the Hokies came to town, the Minutemen looked to capture their first back to back win of the season. Instead, they fell to Virginia Tech in what was the club's lowest scoring loss at home since a 49-43 routing by St. Bonaventure in 1986.

UMass owned a one point lead with 9:50 to go in the first half on a Ketner jumper, yet that was the last time the Minutemen would have the lead the rest of the way. In the second half UMass came within six points of the Hokies, but they couldn't bring it any closer.

The sharp shooting Ace Custis led the game in scoring with 16 points on 4-4 3-point shooting. For UMass, Ketner led the way with 18 points of his own.

Massachusetts 56, La Salle 50

The Explorers jumped out to an early 20-14 lead with 7:39 to play in the first frame. While the Minuteman offense was able to muster an 8-0 run, putting them up 27-23 at the half, it was the UMass defense that cinched the win

Defensively, the Minutemen held La Salle to just 11 field goals, shooting just 19.3 percent from the field — the all- time lowest shooting percentage in Atlantic 10 history. Down 43-40, the UMass offense regained its feet on a Travieso three-pointer followed by a Chris Kirkland hoop and freethrow that put the Minutemen up by three.

As UMass rolled on to win, Travieso tallied his first career double-double with 10 points and a game-high 12 boards in addition to tying a career high with 7 assists. Weeks earned his fifth double-double of the season with 12 points and 10 boards, playing in just 10 games.

Despite shooting 6-28 from the field, La Salle's Donnie Carr tallied 26 points in the losing effort.

St. Joseph's 72, Massachusetts 68

Flint and assistant coach Geoff Arnold could not pull off a win against their alma mater when the Hawks came to the Mullins Center. The Minutemen were without the services of freshman Ajmal Basit, who served a one game suspension for breaking an unspecified team rule.

UMass grabbed the opening tip and Charlton Clarke sent a ball inside to Ketner who slammed in the first points of the game. After tying the game at four just over two minutes into the game, St. Joe's took control, taking a seven point lead with 11:19 remaining in the half on a Robert Haskins jumper. The Hawks attack came on the wings of Arthur "Yah" Davis's tremendous outside shooting. Davis was 3-3 outside the arc in the first half and went on to score 13 points in the contest.

Travieso knocked down a 3-pointer with 7:28 to go in the half to reclaim the lead 26-25. UMass held the lead for the remainder of the first frame to go into the locker room with a 39-34 advantage.

It came down to the wire the second half as both squads exchanged lead. With :45 to go, the score was tied at 68 when St. Joe's Nemanja Petrovic sunk a free throw. Clarke fouled Robert Haskins who went 1-2 from the line to give the Hawks a one point advantage 69-68. With :27 left on the clock, Travieso had a chance to take the lead when he was fouled by Dmitri Domani, but he missed both shots on the line. St. Joe's Rashid Bey hit both his shots from the line with :21 seconds left.

UMass still had a chance at the win as they set up a 3- point play during a St. Joe's timeout. However, Travieso couldn't get open on the triple screen and Padilla was forced to take a rushed outside shot that missed the rim and sealed the Hawks' win.

Massachusetts 77, Davidson 64

Travieso led the way in this one with a season-high 28 points as UMass shot a season best 54.4 percent from the floor. The Minutemen took an early 13-6 lead on a Clarke (10 pts, 7 assists) 3-pointer at 14:21. Davidson attacked with a 12-3 run of its own, taking a 18-16 lead on a Mark Donnelly 3-pointer with 9:02 to go in the half. The Minutemen and Wildcats swapped leads four more time throughout the game until Weeks (12 pts, 7 assists, 6 rebs) sunk a jumper with 4:26 remaining in the half. UMass held

Turn to CAPSULES page 5-B

COOP
THE OFF CAMPUS MEAL PLAN

The Super Bowl is over, put away the chips and get some real food!

classé café
EL ACUÑA TEX MEX CANTINA
PRUDRY'S
Amber Waves
安城中國飯店 AMHERST CHINESE FOOD
SUBWAY
PASTA E BASTA
THE BLACK SHEEP Deli & Bakery
Amherst DELIVERS Deli
CUTTY'S
ANTONIO'S
Rafters SPORTS BAR & RESTAURANT
Newman Center Cafeteria
DELANO'S
Bueno Y Sano
d'angelo sandwich shops

FOR MORE INFO:
1-888-211-6267

The Massachusetts basketball and hockey teams weren't the only athletes in action over winter break.

Check out tomorrow's Collegian for a complete wrap-up of UMass' non-revenue sports.

- Men's and women's indoor track and field
- Men's and women's swimming and diving
- Men's and women's gymnastics

7pm, Dec. 13th at the MULLINS CENTER University of Massachusetts Amherst
Division 1 Hockey East
UMass Hockey
VS
MERRIMAC Hockey

Pick up your tickets at:
- Curry Hicks Cage
- 'TIX' in the Student Union
- Hockey Table in the Campus Center
- At the Game

Be a Part of the Action

Munchie Madness 3-6PM MONDAY-FRIDAY
Sweet Potato Fries 4.95 2.50
Gorgonzola Buffalo Potatoes 6.45 3.45
Shrimp Tempura 6.25 3.13
1/2 PRICE!
Judie's DOWNTOWN AMHERST
51 N. Pleasant Street 253-3491
http://virtual-valley.com/judies

AWARD WINNING LOCAL SERVICE
- Full Service Autobody Insurance Approved
- Full Selection of genuine GM Goodwrench parts.
- Mass. State Inspection Station #3243
- Fine selection of new and used cars & trucks.
- Ask about our FREE 18 point maintenance check.

PAIGE'S Amherst CHEVROLET Geo
DICKINSON ST. • BETWEEN RT. 9 & MAIN ST. • 253-3444 • PARTS LINE 253-5928

January WHITE SALE
Has been EXTENDED!
20% OFF all TANNING
Packages Thru Feb. 8th
Regency Hairstylists
253-9526

KENNETH W.P. SCOTT / COLLEGIAN

With Rhode Island and Temple behind them, and George Washington and Xavier on the slate, UMass is in the thick of its A-10 schedule.

capsules

continued from page 4-B

the lead the rest of the way.

Travieso lit up Davidson for 20 of his 28 points as the Minutemen stretched their lead to as many as 18. The Wildcats cut the lead to seven with a run late in the game, but UMass sparked an 11-6 run to close the game. Lari Ketner tallied 13 points and 4 blocks in the win.

Massachusetts 47, UNC-Wilmington 46

The Minutemen came from behind at the Trask Coliseum to beat the Seahawks, 47-46. Travieso knocked down a game-high 21 points, punctuated by five points in the final 25 seconds. UMass held the lead through most of the game until the Seahawks took the lead on consecutive baskets with 33 seconds remaining in the game. Down by four, Travieso sunk a 3-pointer cutting the UNC-W lead to a point, 46-45. After regaining possession, Travieso was fouled driving the basket and sunk both free throws to give UMass a 47-46 lead with nine seconds remaining. As the Seahawks attempted a final shot, Inus Norville (3 pts, 7 boards, 2 blocks, 2 steals) stole the ball, sealing the win. Clarke played the entire 40 minutes for the third consecutive game to finish with 6 points and a career high 7 assists. For UNC- W, Billy Donlon led the way with 10 points.

No. 12 North Carolina 83, Massachusetts 69

Clarke was the high-man for the Minutemen with 20 points as the Tar Heels bumped off UMass with ease in the Jimmy V. Classic. UNC opened up the game with a 10-1 run, which they extended to as much as 20 points in the final minute play as they led from buzzer to buzzer. Antawn Jamison led the Tar Heels with 21 points and five boards, while big man Serge Zwikker chipped in 17 points and five blocks in the win.

On the UMass side of the ball, an ailing Travieso took to the court, still feeling the strain of back spasms. Despite playing in pain, Travieso knocked down 11 points, as did Norville, while Weeks added a double-double with 11 points and 10 rebounds.

KENNETH W.P. SCOTT / COLLEGIAN

Junior Inus Norville played well against home-state Tobacco Road foes with a career-high 11 points against UNC.

La Cucina di PINOCCHIO
FREE DELIVERY • 256-4110
PIZZA • CALZONES • SUBS • SALADS
• WINGS • PASTA • ENTREES
BEST DELIVERY IN TOWN
ADVOCATE BEST OF THE VALLEY READERS POLL 1996 1995 1994 1993 1992
30 Boltwood Walk, Amherst, MA

Study Physical Therapy Abroad!

Are you interested in becoming a Physical Therapist? Does studying abroad appeal to you? If the answer is yes, the International Network of Specialized Therapy Education Programs (IN-STEP) will interest you. IN-STEP is a unique opportunity for you to earn a Bachelor degree in physical therapy at one of four physical therapy schools in the Netherlands. The application deadline for programs beginning in August 1997 is March 31, 1997.

An Information session and interviews will be held in Boston on February 15-16.

If you plan to attend an information session or would like more information, including application materials, contact IN-STEP staff at 1-800-242-8877.

Int-rim. THERAPY SERVICES
4300 Duhme Road, Madeira Beach, FL 33708.

WELCOME BACK FROM THE BIG GUY
Check out our 2nd location on Rt. 116 next to Frontier Pizza, across from Cliffside Apts. 665-5030.
Great Microbrew selection.
Beers from all around the world.
We're still BIG on friendly service. We have a full stock of Liquor, Beer & Wine.
Also still located in North Amherst next to Superior Pizza 549-3555.
BEER BALLS
KEGS

LOOKING FOR A CHALLENGE THIS SUMMER...?
THE SHARPEST MIND ADVANCES.
Marines
IF YOU ARE, STOP BY AND SEE CAPT PETERS AND GYSGT THOMPSON ON FEBRUARY 6TH, STUDENT UNION CONCOURSE 10:00 - 2:00
SPACES AVAILABLE FOR SUMMER TRAINING!
1-800-255-8762

WALKER'S GRILL
41 BOLTWOOD WALK • AMHERST
Munchie Specials - Every Week!
Mondays after 10 — 20¢ Mozz. Sticks
Tuesdays after 10 — 15¢ Wings
Wednesdays after 10 — Personal Nachos
Thursdays after 10 — Hamburger Tacos
Friday after 10 — $1 Spicy Fries
Drink Specials Through Feb. 28
Blue Kamikaze Shots - $2.25
70oz Bud Light Pitchers - $5.75
We Accept All Major Credit Cards!
Member O.C.M.P. - Call Delivery Express for Takeout
Open 7 days/week 11:30 am - 1am
Full menu all day/all night
253-4040

■ Hockey

continued from page 1-8

left in the extra session, lifting the Minutemen to a sweep, and handing the team two crucial points in the standings.

Massachusetts 4, Northeastern 3
Jan. 17 at the William D. Mullins Center

After an unusual midweek game against Yale, questions centered on whether the Minutemen could bounce back in a game they needed to win. The rest of the schedule is all HE for UMass, and a home-and-home sweep of the lowly, but extremely well coached Huskies, was a must in the race for a home playoff spot. Even Crowder's ex-NHL team, the Bruins, have played better than his team in the first year of his tenure. UMass led after the first period, but came out with a lackluster effort in the second, when junior goalie Brian Regan only made two saves on five shots. But with one of the most remarkable third period displays this year, when Chris Fawcett and Norris scored only seven seconds apart, the Minutemen came out with another come-from-behind victory in this key contest.

Massachusetts 7, Yale 4
Jan. 14 at the William D. Mullins Center

Contrary to the overall HE record against ECAC teams this season (13-28-2), the Minutemen were able to jump that statistical hurdle and get the come-from-behind win. UMass was down 3-1 to the Ivy Leaguers five minutes into the second period, but then scored six out of the next seven goals to pull away for the victory. Co-captains Bonneau (1 goal, 1 assist) and Tom Perry (2g) led by example, with junior forward Fawcett continuing his career year with two assists. Another stat hurdle the team has had to overcome is shots allowed. With thirty on goal, it is the barrier between wins and losses. Is this leading somewhere? Yes, because Moriarty got the win by only having to make 16 saves on the night.

Providence 5, Massachusetts 1
Jan. 11 at Schneider Arena

After a home-and-home December sweep of the defending HE champs, a pride-filled Friar team was determined to send a message to the league's youthful up-and-comers. PC, thanks to coach Paul Pooley, is as disciplined a team as one can find in all of college hockey, and played its classic trapping style to run all over the Minutemen at Schneider Arena. Providence held UMass to just 20 shots in the game, which it dominated from wire-to-wire. The lone UMass goal came with just seven minutes to play and defeat a foregone conclusion, but was a hard-nosed tally nonetheless. Judd Smith scored his first goal of the year when he fought off a Friar defenseman to chop a Perry feed top corner past All- Hockey East goalie Dan Dennis, folling a shutout bid.

Boston College 5, Massachusetts 4
Jan. 6 at Kelley Rink

Even though UMass had its first HE postseason win (5-4 on Mar. 7, 1995) at the Conte Forum two years ago, Kelley Rink has not been a kind place. The newest installment of the hockey program only has a 1-3 record there, as of press time, and it was the same for this game. The return to HE action did not bring the success of their previous home-and-home sweep of Providence, with the Minutemen taking a tough 5-4 loss on the chin. Spotted another early lead from a BC own goal, UMass traded penalties and goals with the Eagles for a 3-3 tie after two periods.

Rensselaer Holiday Hockey Tournament (Troy, N.Y.)

Massachusetts 5, Bowling Green 4
Dec. 28 at Houston Field House

It has been said many times before, but truthfully, there is no real consolation in a consolation game. Simply said, it is either third/fourth place in the tourney for the winner, and the only real thing at stake is team pride. The Minutemen put their faith in the team colors, and were powered by five different goal scorers, and a three-goal second period, for a close 5-4 win over their CCHA opponent. Granted, they faced BGSU's sophomore goalie Jason Piwko, who had not faced a shot this season, but a win is a win, especially after a three-game losing streak.

Rensselaer Holiday Hockey Tournament (Troy, N.Y.)

RPI 9, Massachusetts 5
Dec. 27 at Houston Field House

Playing in its first major in-season tournament, UMass faced an RPI team that has only lost once in the '90s in its own tournament. Houston Field House in Troy, N.Y. is built out of a converted airplane hangar and the Engineers' Eric Healey took flight in this game, netting his second career Texas-hat trick in a 9-5 barn-burning RPI win. Six power play goals were tallied in a wild affair, which saw MacKinnon and Fawcett score a pair of goals, while freshman Jeff Blanchard netted the first of his career.

Dartmouth 6, Massachusetts 5
Dec. 14 at Thompson Arena

The Minutemen could not take advantage of sophomore forward MacKinnon's score 16 seconds into the contest, losing their second consecutive game to a ECAC opponent this season. Thompson Arena has been a tough place to play this year, as No. 8 Vermont found out in a loss earlier this season, and the same case was apparent for UMass. A 2-1 lead after the first period was lost in a four goal second period by the Big Green, and the Minutemen could not recover. Leading scorers for UMass in the game were senior linemates Bonneau (1g-3a) and Norris (2g-2a), both tallying four points, with senior goalie Moriarty stopping 36 shots.

Princeton 7, Massachusetts 2
Dec. 13 at the William D. Mullins Center

The UMass faithful who skipped this pre-exam Friday nighter to study or do otherwise missed little besides the triumphant return of Mark Dennehy to Amherst and a surprising Tiger team. Princeton wore some hideous orange uniforms for the game which had an equally nasty aftertaste. Tiger Holland got UMass on the board with just seven seconds left in the first, but Princeton scored four in the second to go up 4-1 and take charge. Norris would score the other UMass goal of the night, during a penalty filled third period, when 22 infractions made the benches short.

MAI GAO / COLLEGIAN

Senior co-captain Rob Bonneau tallied a goal and two assists in a 5-4 OT win over Northeastern.

STUDENT TICKET PICK-UP SCHEDULE
(SPRING 1997 SEMESTER)

DATE OF PICK-UP	SPORT	DATE OF GAME/OPPONENT
Thu, Jan 30, 1997	Hockey	1/31 v. Merrimack
	Hockey	2/7 v. Boston University
	Men's B-Ball	2/1 v. Xavier
	Men's B-Ball	2/6 v. Duquesne
Thu, Feb 6, 1997	Hockey	2/14 v. Maine
	Hockey	2/15 v. Maine
	Men's B-Ball	2/11 v. St. Bonaventure
Thu, Feb 13, 1997	Hockey	2/22 v. Boston College
	Men's B-Ball	2/20 v. Fordham
Thu, Feb 27, 1997	Men's B-Ball	3/1 v. Temple

*Students must present activity card and valid undergrad I.D. (Spring 1997 validation sticker) to pick up tickets.
*Activity cards will not be distributed on ticket pick-up days.
*Pick-up is in the Curry Hicks Cage lobby beginning at 7am on dates listed above.

Over 25 Aerobic Classes with Certified Instructors
Trotter Circuit Weight Training ◆ Free-Weights
Nordic Track ◆ Stairclimbers ◆ Treadmills ◆ Lifecycles
The Newest Facilities...
The Best Value...
Totally Convenient
2 months $75!
Kinetics ADULT FITNESS
Located At
4 months $129!
KIDSPORTS FAMILY FUN & FITNESS
317 Russell St. (Rt.9) Hadley, MA
586-0633
Basketball & Volleyball Court ◆ Open Court Time

Names and numbers for intersession hockey action

UMass 5, Northeastern 4 (OT)
Jan. 21 at Matthews Arena

UMass 1 1 2 1 – 5
Northeastern 2 1 1 0 – 4

First Period: UM, MacKinnon (Gaffney, Norris) PPG 9:18; NU, Newson (Kaminski, Campbell) 9:28; NU, Kearns (unassisted) PPG 15:32.
Second Period: NU, Mahoney (Klyn) 11:00; UM, MacKinnon (Cahill, Bonneau) 11:46.
Third Period: NU, Mahoney (Schuhwerk) 0:32; UM, Norris (Bonneau, Fawcett) 9:12; UM, Norris (Norton, Bonneau) PPG 18:33.
Overtime: UM, Bonneau (Perry, Norris) 4:43.

Shots on goal: UM, 49 (22-16-7-4); NU, 40 (12-17-10-1).
Saves: UM, Regan 36 (10-16-9-1); NU, Robitaille 44 (21- 15-5-3).
Penalties: UM, 5 for 10 min.; NU, 5 for 10 min.
Power plays: UM, 2/3; NU, 1/3.
Attn: 1,175.

UMass 4, Northeastern 3
Jan. 17 at the William D. Mullins Center

Northeastern 0 3 0 – 3
UMass 1 1 2 – 4

First Period: UM, Gaffney (Bonneau) SHG 8:58.
Second Period: NU, Kaminski (Campbell) 10:28; NU, Mahoney (unassisted) 13:24; UM, Norris (Norton, Bonneau) 15:12; NU, Campbell (Newson) SHG 18:35.
Third Period: UM, Fawcett (Gaffney) 4x4 2:16; UM, Norris (Bonneau) 4x4 2:23.

Shots on goal: NU, 24 (8-5-11); UM, 26 (8-9-9).
Saves: NU, Robitaille 22 (7-8-7); UM, Regan 21 (8-2-11).
Penalties: NU, 3 for 6 min.; UM, 5 for 10 min.
Power plays: NU, 0/4; UM, 0/2.
Attn: 3,264.

UMass 7, Yale 4
Jan. 14 at the William D. Mullins Center

Yale 1 2 1 – 4
UMass 1 2 4 – 7

First Period: Y, Magnant (McCullough, Chyz) PPG 10:30; UM, Perry (O'Connor, Fawcett) PPG 13:51.
Second Period: Y, Silvennoinen (Shea, Rabjohns) 4x4 3:41; Y, Cumming (Shea) SHG 5:35; UM, Perry (Blanchard, O'Connor) 8:37; UM, Smith (Gaffney, Fitzgerald) 14:26.
Third Period: UM, Bonneau (unassisted) 0:26; Y, Rabjohns (Shea, Cumming) 6:54; UM, Norris (Fawcett, Bonneau) 7:17; UM, Cahill (Fawcett) 17:15; UM, MacKinnon (unassisted) 18:49.

Shots on goal: Y, 20 (8-7-5); UM, 37 (12-11-14).
Saves: Y, Choquette 30 (11-9-10); UM, Moriarty 16 (7-5- 4).
Penalties: Y, 8 for 16 min.; UM, 10 for 20 min.
Power plays: Y, 1/7; UM, 1/5.
Attn: 2,007.

Providence 5, UMass 1
Jan. 11 at Schneider Arena

UMass 0 0 1 – 1
Providence 2 2 1 – 5

First Period: PC, Dillabough (Guzior, Stadey) 7:50; PC, Mader (Sheehan, Sinerate) 14:48.
Second Period: PC, Dean (Sheppard) 2:08; PC, MacNevin (Dean, Keefe) 5x3 PPG 18:23.
Third Period: PC, Keefe (Guzior, Brannare) 4:35; UM, Smith (Perry) 13:17.

Shots on goal: UM, 20 (6-8-6); PC, 30 (12-11-7).
Saves: UM, Regan 25 (10-9-6); PC, Dennis 19 (6-8-5).
Penalties: UM, 7 for 14 min.; PC, 9 for 18 min.
Power plays: UM, 0/5; PC, 1/3.
Attn: 963.

Boston College 5, UMass 4
1/6/97, Kelley Rink; Chestnut Hill, Mass.

UMass 1 2 1 – 4
BC 1 2 2 – 5

First Period: UM, O'Connor (Norris) 0:22; BC, Hutchins (Farkas, Hemmenway) PPG 16:12.
Second Period: BC, Bellefeuille (Buckley, Farkas) 4x4 9:42; UM, Blanchard (Regan) 4x4 11:56; BC, Carlson (Farkas, O'Leary) 15:27; UM, Gaffney (Norton, Norris) PPG 17:55.
Third Period: BC, Callahan (Caufield) 5:53; BC, Reasoner (Mottau, Callahan) PPG 9:21; UM, Fawcett (Gaffney, Wright) PPG 15:50.

Shots on goal: UM, 24 (4-11-9); BC, 37 (16-11-10).
Saves: UM, Regan 32 (15-9-8); BC, Taylor 20 (3-9-8).
Penalties: UM, 14 for 28 min.; BC, 13 for 26 min.
Power plays: UM, 2/7; BC 2/6.
Attn: 2,374.

UMass 5, Bowling Green 4
Dec. 28 at Houston Field House

Bowling Green 1 1 2 – 4
UMass 0 3 2 – 5

First Period: BG, Johnson (Kelmen, Edinger) 5:49.
Second Period: UM, Blanchard (unassisted) 2:36; UM, MacKinnon (Bonneau, Norris) 6:34; BG, Eldred (Holzinger, Armbruster) 15:02; UM, Juden (Fawcett) PPG 18:56.
Third Period: BG, Johnson (Adams) 2:05; UM, Cahill (unassisted) 6:23; UM, O'Connor (Norton, MacKinnon) PPG 17:05; BG, Ratchuk (Faulkner) PPG 19:52.

Shots on goal: BG, 36 (14-9-13); UM, 23 (4-8-11).
Saves: BG, Piwko 18 (4-5-9); UM, Regan (29-5-1) 16 (13- 3-0), Moriarty (30-09) 16 (0-5-11).
Penalties: BG, 11 for 30 min.; UM, 12 for 32 min.
Power plays: BG, 1/7; UM, 2/6.
Attn: 1,953.

RPI 9, UMass 5
Dec. 27 at Houston Field House

UMass 0 2 3 – 5
RPI 1 5 3 – 9

First period: RPI, Healey (St. Hillaire, Garver) 19:38.
Second period: RPI, Healey (Garver) 3:03; RPI, Riva (Battaglia, Gardiner) PPG 4:35; UM, Fawcett (Juden, Campanale) PPG 6:56; RPI, Battaglia (Gardiner, Tapper) PPG 9:24; RPI, Tapper (Gardiner, Battaglia) PPG 11:46; RPI, Healey (St. Hillaire, Garver) 15:00; UM, Blanchard (unassisted) 16:27.
Third period: RPI, Healey (Pothier, Garver) 5x3 PPG 8:18; UM, MacKinnon (Hurley, Juden) 10:20; UM, MacKinnon (Blanchard, Juden) 10:40; RPI, Riva (Healey, garver) 14:37; RPI, Brownlee (Riva) 17:14; UM, Fawcett (Sell, Wright) PPG 19:05.

Shots on goal: UM, 37 (10-13-14); RPI, 36 (9-13-14).
Saves: UM, Regan 27 (8-8-11); RPI, Prekaski 32 (10-11- 11).
Penalties: UM, 10 for 36 min.; RPI, 7 for 14 min.
Power plays: UM, 2/6; RPI, 4/7.
Attn: 3,356.

Dartmouth 6, UMass 5
Dec. 14 at Thompson Arena

First period: UM, MacKinnon (Norris, Bonneau) :16; UM, Bonneau (Norris, Gaffney) PPG 13:17; Dartmouth, Kelleher (Sturgis, Dumas) 16:56.
Second Period: Dartmouth, Wercinski (Chaytors, Buckley) 1:17; Dartmouth, Chaytors (Buckley, Cretter) 4:12; UM, Kennedy (Bonneau, Juden) 5:33; Dartmouth, Sturgis (Kelleher, Dumas) 12:47; Dartmouth, Fleming (Giedt, Wilgosh) 18:28.
Third period: UM, Norris (Bonneau) 3:31; Dartmouth, Peach (Poulton, Chaytors) 8:04; UM, Norris (Juden)

Turn to HOCKEY ACTION, page 9

Two wins a world apart

JORMA KANSANEN

If you ever get the chance to go to Troy, N.Y., take it from me, pass it by...

Being a beat reporter for a major revenue sport, travelling on the road to follow the team you cover is a necessity. Granted, it was intersession, and I was not really required by the Collegian to go to Troy to cover the Minuteman hockey team's first major holiday tournament in school history, but I was writing for another local paper so I could have the opportunity to see it. RPI has a more than respectable hockey history, with players like Boston Bruin Adam Oates, ex-Bruin and current Washington Capital Joe Juneau and Tampa Bay Lightning goalie Daren Puppa now playing in the NHL ranks. Needless to say, if you're a fan of old hockey barns, the Houston Field House is one of the best in the East, if not the country.

So, on Dec. 28, 1996, I gassed up my sister's Hyundai, because my '83 Olds Toronado is a piece of junk, and took to the highway. I had missed UMass' first round loss to the home-ice Engineers, so the only consolation for me was the consolation game against their CCHA opponent, Bowling Green. Going north on I-787, my spirits were up for the contest, even for a consolation game — but, oh my Lord, not for long.

As I drove over the Hudson River on the Collar City Bridge, my own collar tightened around my neck as I caught my first sight of downtown Troy. Whatever resurgence the capital of New York (Albany, for all you non-geography majors) has had over the last decade has not touched Troy, which is only six miles away. Boarded up buildings and an ambience that would make a 19th Century Londoner like Charles Dickens cringe was what welcomed me.

And after a 5-4 win, under a roof that sheltered me from any sight of the city, we as a collective unit got the hell out of Dodge. Take it from me, pass Troy by, even the Trojan Horse would not want to sneak into this city.

Turn to WORLD, page 9

BLUE MOON gallery CAFE
• European style cafe
• Live Music Nightly
• Hot Authentic mini menu includes: Falafel, Babaganouch, Hummus
• Gourmet coffee
• This ad worth 1/2 price for any hot drinks.
41 N. PLEASANT ST. AMHERST, MA 01002
(413) 256-0160

Minutemaniacs
YOU MAY STILL APPLY FOR MEMBERSHIP: $08 MEETING CENTER ONLY $25.00
TOTAL MEMBERSHIP MAY NOT EXCEED 500
Minutemaniac BENEFITS:
• ADVANCE TICKET PICKUP
• Minutemaniac T-SHIRT
• GAME RECEPTIONS
• "THE MANIAC" NEWSLETTER
• MEMBERSHIP CARD

Auto Glass Center American & Foreign
•Same Day Service •Billed Directly To Insurance Company •Windshields Replaced
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
78 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA
549-2880
One Mile From UMass on Bus Route

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139
STUDENT SPECIAL
4 MONTHS
KEISER • NAUTILUS • CYBEX
STAIRMASTERS • LIFECYCLES
TREADMILLS • V.R. BIKE
LIFEROWER • GAUNTLET
GRAVITON
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
Rts. 116 So. Amherst
256-0080

THEFT OF MEDICAL EXAM FOILED IN S.F.
17-year-old With Nonfunctioning Gun Beaten by Students
By H. K. Lee and C. Bowman, Chronicle Staff Writers
A young masked gunman burst into a room full of students taking a medical exam Saturday in San Francisco and demanded a copy of a test section but was thwarted when several outraged proctors and would-be doctors punched him out, police said yesterday.
Police said the youth grabbed a green folder at the front of the room, disappeared into a bathroom and then re-emerged, cursing. He then confronted a proctor, demanding the Physical Sciences portion of the test. As the proctor fumbled for the test section, the youth may have been careless with his gun—the proctor grabbed it, and suddenly the intruder found himself at gunpoint.
The youth then apparently smacked the proctor in the face. Enraged, at least five proctors and test-takers surrounded the suspect and threw punches at him, drawing blood, witnesses said...
The San Francisco Chronicle, Monday, August 19, 1996
You don't need a gun.
You just need our course
(We've got all the released MCATs, plus 14 more.)
KAPLAN
1-800-KAP-TEST
www.kaplan.com

Spirit Haus
LIQUOR STORE
You have to see it to believe it
Over 500 Beers
Over 50 Single Malt Scotches
Many Small Batch Bourbons
80 Belgian Ales
Glassware, Homebrew Supplies
State of the Art Humidor from Vilgilant with Large Selection of Cigars
More than 500 Fine Wines from Around the World
Micro-Brewed Beer Kegs in Stock
Weekly Specials
Discover, Visa, Mastercard Accepted
Open 9am - 11pm
Rt. 9/ 338 College Street (413) 253-5384
Take I-91 to exit 19/Rt. 9 East
Spirit Haus is 1 mile East of Amherst, Mass.

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA
You can be a Bartender if you are 18 years old.
• National placement assistance
• Only licensed school in Western Mass.
• Evening and Saturday classes
Call in Springfield
747-9888

SUPERIOR PIZZERIA
17 Montague Rd., Amherst • Free Delivery 7 days
549-0626 11:30am - 2am
Wednesday Special
Calzones $3.25
Superior Offers Hot/Cold Grinders, Steak Grinders, Salads, Dinners, and much more.
Call: 549-0626
$2.25 OFF Large 2 Item Pizza
FREE SODA w/ any large grinder or dinner
4 Free Cans of Coke w/ Any Large Pizza
$1.65 OFF Any Large Pizza
$1.65 OFF Any Large Pizza
$2.00 OFF Large 1 Item Pizza
$2.00 OFF Large 1 Item Pizza
$1.65 OFF Any Large Pizza
$1.65 OFF Any Large Pizza
one coupon per order • coupon cannot be combined with other offers

GREAT SKIING IS NOT FAR AWAY...
Student Specials (w/Valid ID)
M - F - 8:30 AM - 5 PM - (Reg. $ 24)-$20.00
M - F 1 pm - 5pm (Reg. $20) $13.00
Sun, Mon, Tues 7pm-11pm only 10.00
Highest Vertical in Southern New England
Brodie!
ROUTE 7 • NEW ASHFORD, MASSACHUSETTS
DIRECTIONS: Follow Rt. 9 West to Pittsfield, Then 10 Miles North on Rt. 7
TEL. 413-443-4752
HTTP://WWW.SKIBRODIE.COM

PANDA EAST
CHINESE RESTAURANT & SUSHI BAR
"We bring Chinatown to you"
BEST CHINESE RESTAURANT IN THE VALLEY SINCE 1927
LUNCH SPECIALS STARTING AT $3.95
FULL MENU FOR SUSHI, SASHIMI AND TERIYAKI IS AVAILABLE
AMHERST: 103 N. PLEASANT ST. AMHERST, MA 01002
TELEPHONE: (413) 256-8923 / 256-8924 FAX: 253-1173
WE DELIVER THRU DELIVERY EXPRESS: 549-0077

CLASS travel #1 IN FUN
SPRING BREAK 1997
CANCUN & NASSAU
COMPLETE PACKAGES FROM ONLY $299!!!
LET NORTH AMERICA'S PREMIER STUDENT TRAVEL COMPANY BRING YOU TO THE WORLD'S HOTTEST SPRING BREAK SPOTS TO ENJOY THE HOT SUN, WHITE SANDS AND INSANE PARTIES!!!
TRAVEL WITH THE BEST, TRAVEL WITH CLASS!
FIND OUT HOW TO GO FOR FREE & EARN EXTRA CASH!
CALL 1-800-919-9920

It's got to be the shoes. THANG VO / COLLEGIAN

■ Women's Hoop

continued from page 1-B

rebounds for the Minutewomen, who went to 4-0 in A-10 play.

UMass 68, St. Bonaventure 65
Jan. 11 at the Reilly Center

The Minutewomen juggernaut rolled into Olean, N.Y. with a five-game win streak, and thanks to another stellar performance by Carroll, rolled out with their sixth straight win. Carroll scored 22 points and snagged eight rebounds for UMass, and Kelly Van Huisen added 15 points as the Minutewomen improved to 3-0 in A-10 play.

The Bonnies led 31-26 at the break, but the Minutewomen took a 39-38 lead with 14:55 left on a Van Huisen jumper. St. Bonaventure cut a 66-63 deficit to one on a layup with :11 remaining, but Van Huisen quickly put the game out of reach with a layup of her own three seconds later. The win tied O'Brien's longest ever win streak at UMass.

UMass 51, Fordham 46
Jan. 9 at Rose Hill Gymnasium

Sophomore center Yolanda Ruyside exploded in her homecoming, as the New York City native dropped a career high 12 points and 10 rebounds to lead the Minutewomen past the Rams in a crucial conference tilt. UMass upped its mark to 8-4 with the win, and 2-0 in the A-10.

The Minutewomen raced out to a 31-16 lead behind 11 points from senior guard Sabriya Mitchell, who ended with a career high 14 for the game. Fordham cut the lead to 31-23 by halftime, and tied the game at 42 with a 14-2 run early in the second half. UMass outscored the Rams 9-4 late in the second half to secure the win.

UMass 66, Rhode Island 56
Jan. 4 at the William D. Mullins Center

The Minutewomen opened A-10 play with their fourth straight victory, jumping ahead of the Rams with a 19-5 run late in the first half and cruising from there. Carroll continued on her blistering scoring pace, leading the Minutewomen with 24 points, and garnering A-10 Player of the Week honors for her efforts. Sophomore Jaywana Bradley put up 10 points and five assists for UMass, who improved to 10-4 with the win.

"People around Crystal [Carroll] have stepped it up and started scoring more so they can't double and triple team her," O'Brien said. "I don't care how good you are, if you have three people on you it's pretty tough to get it up there, so I think everyone else around her stepping it up has really helped her."

Rhode Island All-American candidate Tasha King, in her first game back from injury, scored 16 points and pulled down nine rebounds for the Rams.

UMass 60, New Hampshire 52
Dec. 29 at Frederic Sutter Gymnasium

The Minutewomen had a little easier time of it in the championship game of the Wagner Christmas Tournament against the Wildcats. Led by tournament MVP Carroll's 27 points, UMass breezed by UNH to take their first ever regular season tournament title, and improve to 6-4 on the year.

The Minutewomen, paced by 17 first-half points by Carroll, took a 33-23 lead into the locker room, and extended the lead to 16, 42-26, with 15:37 left in the second half. Van Huisen scored 10 points and dished out six assists in the second half, and joined Carroll on the All-Tournament team.

UMass 70, Wagner 67
Dec. 28 at Frederic Sutter Gymnasium

In the opening game of the Wagner Christmas Tourney the Minutewomen stunned the host Seahawks on a 30-foot desperation three pointer by Van Huisen with :00.2 seconds left in overtime. The win brought the Minutewomen over the .500 mark for the first time in the 1996-97 season, and sent them to the championship game against New Hampshire the next night. For her efforts in the Hartford and Wagner games, Van Huisen was named both A-10 Player and Rookie of the Week.

Wagner jumped out to a 39-32 halftime lead, but the Minutewomen grabbed a 61-59 lead with 19.7 left in regualtion on two free throws by Van Huisen. Wagner tied up the game on a Nia Ryan layup with 8.5 left, sending the game into overtime. Van Huisen scored all nine UMass points in the final stanza, including the game winner. Kuzmeski made her return from injury a memorable one, bagging five three pointers on five tries, ringing up 15 points. Carroll led the Minutewomen with 19 points.

UMass 74, Hartford 59
Dec. 22 at the William D. Mullins Center

The Minutewomen reached the .500 mark with their first home win of the year over non-conference foe Hartford. Freshman sensation Van Huisen led the way for UMass with 20 points and a career-high nine assists, and fellow frosh MacFarland chipped in with 19 points. With 11 days off after the home loss to Kent on Dec. 11, the Minutewomen exploded out of the gates against the Hawks. UMass led by as many as 21 in the first half, and took a comfortable 43-25 lead into the lockeroom. The Minutewomen pushed their edge to 22 early in the second half and cruised to the 15 point win. Carroll added 14 points, and senior guard Mitchell tied a career best with five steals.

Minutewomen reel off seven straight over intersession

Massachusetts 65, La Salle 37
Jan. 16 at the William D. Mullins Center

La Salle (11-3, 3-1)
McBreen 2-11 1-2 5, Donahue 1-9 7-10 9, Rinke 1-4 0-0 2, Wolfe 2-5 0-0 4, Gallagher 1-1 0-0 3, Newhard 2-3 2-2 6, Haynes 2-6 0-0 6, Weiss 0-4 0-0 0, Jewett 1-2 0-0 0, Coddens 0-0 0-0 0. Totals 12-45 10-14 37.

Massachusetts (10-4, 4-0)
Kuzmeski 3-4 2-2 9, Carroll 9-11 1-1 19, Rayside 1-5 0-0 2, Mitchell 1-5 3-3 4, Van Huisen 4-8 0-0 9, Madajova 2-4 1-1 5, Tudman 2-5 1-2 5, Bradley 0-1 1-2 1, MacFarland 5- 10 1-1 11. Totals 27-53 9-11 65.

Halftime — Massachusetts 20-11. 3-Point Field Goals — La Salle 3 (Haynes 2), Massachusetts 2 (Kuzmeski, Van Huisen). Rebounding — La Salle 23 (Donahue 6), Massachusetts 38 (Tudman 6). Assists — La Salle 10 (Donahue 3), Massachusetts 17 (Mitchell 4). Blocks — La Salle 1 (Jewett), Massachusetts 2 (Carroll, Tudman). Attendance — 1,079.

Massachusetts 68, St. Bonaventure 65
Jan 11. 1997 at the Reilly Center–

Massachusetts (9-4)
Carroll 8-15 6-6 22, Van Huisen 6-18 2-3 15, Rayside 1-4 0-0 2, Kuzmeski 3-9 0-0 9, Mitchell 2-4 0-2 5, Tudman 3-4 0-0 6, Bradley 0-1 1-2 1, MacFarland 3-5 0-0 8.

St. Bonaventure
Waltman 8-13 0-1 23, Matthews 2-7 3-4 7, Petrak 4-5 0-3 8, Lukenda 2-6 2-2 8, Sober 2-4 1-2 5, Brown 1-1 0-0 2, Pawling 3-10 1-3 8, Vanco 1-3 2-2 4.

Halftime — St. Bonaventure 31-26. 3-point Field Goals — Massachusetts 7 (Kuzmeski 3), St. Bonaventure 3 (Lukenda 2). Rebounds — Massachusetts 34 (Rayside 11), St. Bonaventure 34 (Matthews 9). Assists — Massachusetts 16 (Mitchell 6), St. Bonaventure 15 (Matthews 5). Blocks — Massachusetts 4 (Carroll 3), St. Bonaventure 3 (Vanco 2). Attendance — 223.

Massachusetts 51, Fordham 46
Jan 9 at Rose Hill Gymnasium

Massachusetts (8-4)
Carroll 3-10 0-0 6, Van Huisen 2-10 4-5 8, Rayside 6-9 0- 1 12, Kuzmeski 2-8 0-0 6, Mitchell 6-10 0-1 14, Tudman 2- 3 0-3 4, Bradley 0-1 1-2 1, MacFarland 0-1 0-0 0. Totals 21-32 5-12 51.

Fordham
Lambert 1-3 2-2 4, MacGuire 3-8 0-0 8, Cook 9-12 0-1 18, McCabe 2-3 1-3 5, Hauber 3-8 0-0 7, Garvey 1-6 0-0 2, Byrnes 0-2 2-2 2. Totals 19-42 5-8 46.

Halftime — Massachusetts 31-23. 3-point Field Goals — Massachusetts 4 (Kuzmeski, Mitchell 2), Fordham 3 (MacGuire 2). Rebounds — Massachusetts 32 (Rayside 10), Fordham 29 (MacGuire 11). Assists — Massachusetts 13 (Van Huisen 4), Fordham 14 (McCabe 6). Blocks — Massachusetts 4 (Carroll 2), Fordham 3 (MacGuire 2). Attendance — NA.

Massachusetts 66, Rhode Island 56
Jan. 4 at the William D. Mullins Center

Turn to MINUTEWOMEN, page 9

F-O-O-P

Turn Down the T.V.
Turn Us Up!
TODAY'S 93
MODERN ROCK
WHMP-FM
The Sound Choice for UMass basketball
NEXT GAME: Jan.30 at George Washington
Pregame Show 7:05 pm, Game Time 7:30

ALPINE MODEL 7820
$299.95
BACK TO SCHOOL SUPER SALE
Detachable Front Panel
FM/AM CD Player, Built in 25w x 4 Amp,
New Regulated 1 Bit DAC, MaxTune Tuner,
DP-H Mechanism
LONG RADIO
MOBILE ELECTRONIC SPECIALIST
TDM-7543 RADIO/CASSETTE PLAYER
CASETTE PLAYER: SCC II Head, Metal Selector, Repeat, Music Scan
GENERAL: Control Center, Electronic Volume Control, Detachable Trim Plate
TUNER: Multipath Hunter, Direct Access Preset, Preset Address Auto Memory, 24 Preset Stations (12 FM, 6 AM, 6 DAP)
$259.95
30 Russell St, Rt 9 Hadley MA 01035

Classes Start February 5,6,7 & 8!
SKI FOR CREDIT?!
Free Bus to Ski Area!
Sign-ups 1/28 & 1/29 at Furcolo Hall, Room 16
Register: Alpine Skiing I or II
Skiing for all abilities
4 weekly lessons & lifts: $85
Skis, boots, poles rental add $40
Call GPE Office, 545-2338 for more information
MT TOM

■ World

continued from page 7-B

On the other side of the spectrum, I had a chance to see a game in another wonderful hockey barn this intersession, Matthews Arena, when UMass faced off with Northeastern after the more-than-euphoric basketball win over Boston College. Granted, I was in more than a good mood before this game, and not solely because I found Boddington's on tap at McGann's in the North End, but my spirits lifted even more when I got to the confines of Matthews. And it was not just the fact that the Christian Science Church is across the street, or even historic Symphony Hall, but rather it was the overall atmosphere.

You see, Boston isn't a city, it's a town, and it felt like it.

In this sphere of apolitical unconsciousness, the newspaper business (especially sports), we talk an awful lot about the numbers of the game. But the differences between two 5-4 wins could not have been more apparent than these two games this intersession. The first was a 5-4 win in a pothole of a city, for third place in a tournament; while the second was a 5-4 win in overtime on a goal with :17 left by co- captain Rob Bonneau, for home playoff game positioning in the HE standings.

Aahh... what a difference a month makes.

Jorma Kansanen is a Collegian columnist.

UMass hockey growing into its home ice

LEIGH TORBIN

For the University of Massachusetts hockey team the past two years, home hasn't always been the happiest of places. The near-Olympic sized ice surface at the William D. Mullins Center engulfed the young Minutemen, giving their often-more skilled opposition room to maneuver which UMass just couldn't cover. Often the league's top facility proved to be home ice dis-advantage during games.

Now the tide has turned as the Minutemen have proven to be the masters of Mullins this season, posting an 8-4 mark at home after posting a 7-21-6 mark over the past two seasons. The program's turnaround this year reflects the added breadth of poise and experience the Minutemen have gained while taking some lumps the past two seasons.

Now UMass can legitimately talk about doing well in Hockey East playoffs, perhaps even finding its way to the FleetCenter in March for the semifinals. The possibility of hosting playoff games is not out of the question.

UMass has five home games to play. Friday against Merrimack will likely prove to be the easiest of the bunch, as the cream of the Hockey East crop will venture to Amherst in February. The Minutemen will be given their opportunity to prove themselves worthy of a semifinal bid by facing the best this league has to offer on its home ice.

League-leading Boston University awaits the UMass faithful on Feb. 7, followed by Maine on Feb. 14-15 and Boston College on Feb. 22. All are respected national powers on the ice, and victories over them can give the young Minutemen legitimacy throughout the league and on the national scene.

A further encouraging sight for the Minutemen came after they were abysmal in a 5-1 loss at Providence Jan. 11. Back at Mullins, they took a pair of rousing decisions over Yale and Northeastern, getting the team back on track after a sub- par performance. UMass carried the momentum to the hallowed hockey barn on the corner of Mass. Ave. and St. Botolph Street in Boston's Back Bay and expended upon it with a come-from-behind 5-4 overtime win that pulled the team still closer to its goal of hosting playoff games.

The changes are apparent in several aspects of the Minutemen's game.

The Minutemen skate far better now as a team than two years ago, the added mobility a critical factor in covering the extra ice.

UMass has drastically reduced its penalty minutes, those for extra-curricular activity in particular. The Minutemen up to press time have not received a misconduct penalty this calendar year, despite a pair of rough contests with the Huskies. UMass has shown the poise of experience in staying out of the box recently.

At last, UMass has a legitimate top line, the dominating effects of which were stunning against Northeastern. Rob Bonneau and Warren Norris team up with Steve MacKinnon (the team's most improved player from last year when he platooned on the fourth line) to form a formidable trio.

Either Bonneau or Norris should have been named the league's Player of the Week on Jan. 20 after leading the team to three wins. Norris had five goals, including a game- winner and a game-tier with 1:27 to play along with two assists. Bonneau had two goals and seven assists during the three games, while MacKinnon chipped in three goals of his own. The difference between the Huskies top line and their UMass counterparts was apparent and proved to be the difference in a pair of close games.

For the first time ever, each of UMass' intersession games drew over 2,000 fans and significant numbers of UMass fans showed up at recent games in Boston to root on the surging side.

But, despite showing flashes of brilliance, the team has proved nothing as of yet. The Minutemen have shown flashes of skill, but it will be the month of February and the games at the Mullins Center in particular that will conclusively prove whether or not this team has already made the proverbial step to the next level.

If this team wants to be playing its Hockey East quarterfinal series on home ice, it must shine now on that expanded surface. BU always proves pesky for the Minutemen, but a less-bonded UMass team skated stride-for-stride with the Terriers in their last meeting at Mullins on Nov. 2. The Black Bears are always feisty, particularly now that there will be no NCAAs for the team. As for Boston College, while Friday's result is too late for this edition, the Minutemen played evenly on Kelley Rink ice earlier in January.

If the team can master these challenges, it might get to sleep in its own beds March 6-8.

Leigh Torbin is a Collegian columnist.

■ NHL

continued from page 12-B

its last seven at Marine Midland Arena at press time. The numbers might not be there, but wins are, and Hasek is currently (as of Jan. 21) the NHL's top goalie.

• Thinking of gutsy All-Star game performances, was Hockey East referee Steve McBride (aka "Steve McBlind") handing out the MVP trophy? Two players shined and a terrible arbitrator performed a miscarriage of justice. Mark Recchi netted a hat trick, as did Owen Nolan playing on his home ice. The perfect PR for the NHL with a hometown hero in a non-hockey state be damned; Recchi got it.

Give Recchi some credit though, spreading some of his ex- city's supposed brotherly love, in a suddenly rabid shark tank. Recchi knows his place now in hockey lore, saying afterwards something to the effect of "Yup, they're going to be booing me forever in this place now."

• So rookie Patrick Lalime's something like 5,000-0 between the Steel City's pipes. Remember Blaine Lacher? Tommi Soderstrom? November's first-place Hartford Whalers? Jennifer Capriati? Milli Vanilli? The Nelson Twins? Hootie? Ross Perot's 1992 Presidential campaign?

Just because something starts well, doesn't mean it ends well, although he does score points for telling SI that his favorite movie's Slap Shot. Playing behind a team full of Ned Bradens (and Darius "Mike Milbury"s an idiot for letting him go" Kasparitis), he's got no pressure in the world. He can give up seven in the first period and Mario and Jaromir can still find a way to win the thing.

• To paraphrase Cracker's "Teen Angst," with rumored expansion on my mind, "What the NHL needs now is a team in Nashville like I need a hole in my head."

• Jorma's now looking over my shoulder, insisting that I talk about how my preseason picks (Dallas in particular) are kicking some major hiney. I have no ego, but in cases like this I suppose I should say "yeah, I told you so." But, I won't.

This space is better served taking one last shot at my beloved team, who's sweater I wear and colors I bleed. The B's are at least community minded and will host their annual wives carnival on Feb. 9 at the FleetCenter. It's a great chance to raise some money, for kids to meet their heros, and this year, for Harry Sinden to scout some potential players for the rest of the season.

Jorma Kansanen and Leigh Torbin are Collegian columnists.

FirstService™ FRANCHISE CORPORATION
1997 Summer Job Fair
Five Companies, Five Thousand Jobs Nationwide.
ACTION · College Pro · Certa ProPainters · Sidea · NUTRI-LAWN Ecology Friendly Lawn Care
WHY? To get the best Summer Job! • WHEN? This Thursday, January 29
WHERE? Room 802 in the Campus Center. • WHAT TIME? Hourly Presentations from 11am to 7pm.
For more information call 1-800-346-4649.

Attention sports staff members:
It's time to get back to the grind, but before everything gets hectic there will be a mandatory sport staff meeting. The meeting will be at the end of the second week of classes in the Collegian offices. Watch the sports page for the exact date and time. If there are any questions, call Casey or Chris at 545-0719.

BELIEVE IT OR NOT, THIS GUY IS IN CLASS.
Excitement and adventure is the course description, and Army ROTC is the name. It's the one college elective that builds your self-confidence, develops your leadership potential and helps you take on the challenge of command.
There's no obligation until your junior year, and that means there's no reason not to try it out right now.
LEADERSHIP EXCELLENCE
ARMY ROTC
THE SMARTEST COLLEGE COURSE YOU CAN TAKE
For details, visit the Army ROTC Building or call 545-2321/2322

■ Hockey Action

continued from page 7-B

SHG 19:27.

Saves: UM, Moriarty 36 (8-6-12); Dartmouth, Wong 14 (5-2-7).
Penalties: UM, 12 for 27 min., Dartmouth 6 for 12 min.
Power plays: UM, 3/10; Dartmouth 1/3.
Attn: 1,684.

Princeton 7, UMass 2
Dec. 13 at the William D. Mullins Center

First period: UM, Holland (Norris, Bonneau) 19:53.
Second period: P, Ranaldi (Apps, Brush) :31; P, Ranaldi (Brush) 3:39; P, O'Conor, (Masters) 8:37; P, Pelle (Halpern, Given) PPG 11:38.
Third period: UM, Norris (Gaffney) PPG 1:32; P, Horst (Sheehan) 6:26; P, Halpern (Randall) 16:37; P, Horst (Pelle, Barber) 18:14.

Saves: UM, Regan 35 (10-9-16); P, Salterelli 4 (4-0-0), Rankin 7 (0-7-0), Bradley 9 (0-0-9).
Penalties: UM, 16/40; P, 11/22.
Power plays: UM, 1/3; P, 3/8.
Attn: 3,027.

■ Minutewomen

continued from page 8-B

Rhode Island (2-8)
Gray 4-13 2-2 11, King 5-13 4-4 16, Blakemore 1-3 0-0 2, Hvizdak 2-7 1-2 6, Cocchiola 5-10 8-8 19, Steele 0-0 2-2 2, Strike 0-0 0-0 0. Totals 17-46 17-18 56.

Massachusetts (7-4)
Carroll 12-17 0-0 24, MacFarland 0-2 0-00, Rayside 2-5 2-4 6, Mitchell 3-5 2-2 8, Van Huisen 1-8 3-4 5, Kuzmeski 4-11 0-1 9, Tudman 2-3 0-0 4, Bradley 5-8 0-0 10. Totals 29-59 7-11 66.

Halftime — Massachusetts 34-25. 3-Point Field Goals — Rhode Island 3 (King 2), Massachusetts 1 (Kuzmeski). Rebounds — Rhode Island 28 (King 9), Massachusetts 33 (Rayside 9). Assists — Rhode Island 10 (Hvizdak 3), Massachusetts 20 (Van Huisen 7). Blocks — Rhode Island 1 (Hvizdak), Massachusetts 1 (Tudman). Total Fouls — Rhode Island 16, Massachusetts 15. Attendance — 1,159.

Massachusetts 60, New Hampshire 52
Dec. 29 at Staten Island, N.Y.

Massachusetts (6-4)
Rayside 1-4 0-0 2, MacFarland 1-6 0-0 3, Carroll 11-18 5- 6 27, Van Huisen 4-5 1-2 10, Mitchell 2-5 0-1 6, Madajova 1-3 0-0 2, Tudman 0-0 0-0 0, Kuzmeski 3-7 0-0 8, Bradley 1-6 0-0 2.

New Hampshire (4-5)
Caldwell 3-9 2-7 8, Danker 4-16 8-10 17, Brandell 3-4 2-4 8, Schubert 2-9 2-2 7, Karl 3-12 1-2 8, Carnuda 0-0 4-6 4.

Halftime — UMass 33-23. 3-point Field Goals — Massachusetts 6 (Kuzmeski 2), New Hampshire 3 (Danker 2). Rebounds — Massachusetts 41 (Rayside 9), New Hampshire 35 (Caldwell 17). Assists — Massachusetts 14 (Van Huisen 6), New Hampshire 7 (Danker 2). Blocks — Massachusetts 4 (Carroll, Madajova 2), New Hampshire 3 (Caldwell 3). Attendance — 144.

Massachusetts 74, Hartford 59
Dec. 22 at the William D. Mullins Center

Hartford (3-4)
Stolle 2-16 1-2 6, Weindorfer 1-8 10-13 12, Murphy 6-8 6-6 18, Gronbeck 1-2 0-0 3, Dijulia 1-1 1-2 3, Randa 0-1 0- 0 0, Houston 4-5 2-3 10, Ivnik 2-5 2-2 7. Totals 17-46 22- 28 59.

Massachusetts (4-4)
Carroll 7-12 0-0 14, MacFarland 6-14 3-4 19, Rayside 1-4 0-3 2, Mitchell 2-5 3-4 8, Van Huisen 6-12 7-8 20, Madajova 0-3 0-0 0, Tudman 2-4 2-2 6, Bradley 2-9 1-2 5. Totals 26-63 17-23 74.

Halftime — Massachusetts 43-25. 3-point Field Goals — Hartford 3 (Stolle, Gronbeck, Ivnik), Massachusetts 5 (MacFarland 3). Rebounds — Hartford 37 (Weindorfer 11), Massachusetts 35 (Rayside 6). Assists — Hartford 12 (Dijulia 3), Massachusetts 16 (Van Huisen 9). Blocks — Hartford 5 (Stolle 2), Massachusetts 4 (Carroll 2, Tudman 2). Attendance — 730.

UConn escapes battle for border at buzzer

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

HATFORD, Conn. — While the renewed rivalry between the Massachusetts and Connecticut men's basketball teams lacked the marquee billing that the game's promoters had originally anticipated, the actual game was better than anyone could have expected.

Connecticut	64
Massachusetts	61

The U-Game they called it. The Battle for the Border. UMass versus UConn — a classic college rivalry that went down to the wire, with UConn escaping with the first installment 64–61 only after Carmelo Travieso's last ditch effort to tie the game rattled in and out of the hoop.

With 10 seconds remaining in the game, the Minutemen were down by only two, but when Inus Norville fouled out, UConn put another point on the board and forced UMass, and ultimately Travieso, to try the trey.

The Huskies (then 7–2) entered the game riding a four– game win streak, while the Minutemen (then 4–7) were struggling to put together a consistent offense. UMass was plagued with injuries, causing senior playmaker Edgar Padilla to sit out and senior big man Tyrone Weeks to see only 10 minutes.

But the Minutemen came out gunning, ripping off eight unanswered to grab a 8–1 lead. Yet UConn steadily chipped away, finally closing the gap at 14–14 on a Kevin Freeman basket with 12:26 remaining in the first half.

The Huskies then played the role of aggressor, keeping the Minutemen at bay as they pulled ahead by as many as 13, leading 32–19 with 4:02 left in the half. The Minutemen barely closed the gap after a pair of Charlton Clarke free throws made it 38–31 UConn, but an arguably bad call against UMass' Winston Smith with :00.5 remaining allowed Husky Richard Hamilton to give UConn a 40–31 halftime advantage.

Any edge those free throws gave UConn carried over into the first part of the second half. The teams traded baskets, but the Huskies never allowed UMass to cut the margin to single digits until a Travieso 3–pointer sliced UConn's lead to nine, 51–43 with 14:44 remaining. Norville followed with a basket of his own and the Huskies held only a six–point advantage.

It was more of the same for the next several minutes, and both teams took multiple trips to the charity stripe down the stretch. Over the course of the last seven minutes of the game the Huskies scored only five points — all at the free throw line.

For UMass the charity stripe was not as charitable. In the game's waning minutes only Tyrone Weeks was able to connect at the line (once).

Weeks was also big for the Minutemen from the field in those final minutes, scoring three field goals to cut the UMass deficit.

But it was Raashmel Jones' free throw after Norville's fifth foul that set the stage for Travieso attempted heroics. With only two ticks on the clock, Travieso let go with a try from downtown, but the shot rimmed out allowing UConn to escape.

■ Force

continued from page 1-B

did in that game made watching him so special: The way he drained 3–point shot after 3– point shot, the deftly calculated timing on his three steals, his unselfish contribution to his teammates' games in the form of seven assists.

But what makes the senior point guard's line score so distinct is the completeness of it. His game–high and career– high 24 points came on 7–for–12 shooting, including 6–for–8 from behind the arc. He was a perfect 4–for–4 from the free throw line. He pulled down three rebounds, all defensive, dished out seven assists, and came away with three thefts in just under 50 minutes. All this with only three fouls and two turnovers.

Padilla's start against the Eagles came after a start at St. Bonaventure that saw him chip in only four points in 30 minutes of work. He helped out with a season–high nine assists, but coupled it with eight turnovers and four fouls.

While the numbers against the Bonnies were nothing to write home about, it was Padilla's first start after a lower leg contusion had relegated him to the UMass bench, often for a game's entirety. Padilla had played sparingly coming back from the injury, increasing his minutes as he increased his leg strength.

So when No. 12 was introduced to the crowd, the fans were cautiously optimistic, hoping for a return to form for the guard.

Padilla did not disappoint.

Only 3:30 into the game Padilla made his first basket, giving UMass a 6–2 lead. With 12:59 remaining in the first half, the point guard opened the Minuteman perimeter game, nailing the team's first 3–pointer. Just under four minutes later he added another long distance shot to push UMass to 25–16. With a pair from the line added to his total, Padilla went to the locker room in double digits.

A second half surge by Boston College, which brought the UMass lead as low as four points in the first two minutes after intermission, did nothing to cool Padilla's hot hand. The senior was perfect from 3–point range in the second half.

In one three–and–a–half–minute run, UMass bombed the Eagles with a 9–2 run that started with a Padilla 3–pointer and was bolstered by another trey minutes later.

With 3:33 left in the game Padilla connected on his final behind–the–arc shot of the night, giving the Minutemen an 11–point advantage. From there UMass cruised

"The maturity and experience of their guards really paid dividends for them this afternoon," BC coach Jim O'Brien said. "When it counted they stepped up and made some big shots."

The fact that this win was against such a bitter foe made Padilla's play all that much more enjoyable to watch. His pull–up treys came amid the crossed fingers and delirious cheers of UMass fans and the anxious "Defense" mantra of the maroon and gold faithful.

"That was just the way the game was today," Padilla said. "I was open and I was hitting shots, so I just kept shooting."

His relentless and ferocious defense produced looks of approval and, from those there to see BC, disbelief. Each Padilla point or play produced an even more euphoric outburst than the one before for those sitting on the Massachusetts side of the court.

"Padilla makes a tremendous difference," O'Brien said.

In this far–from–perfect season, Padilla did all he could to give the Minuteman fans so much to cheer about.

Casey Kane is a Collegian columnist.

UMass and UConn give fans a rivalry–filled game

By Chris Stamm
Collegian Staff

HARTFORD, Conn. — For years, New England college hoop fans pleaded for a Massachusetts–Connecticut match– up. What would happen if NCAA stars with names like Calipari, Cumby, Bright and Dingle mixed it up with the likes of Calhoun, Allen, Sheffer and Marshall? It had all the makings of a marketing masterpiece — two top–ranked teams in a "battle for the border."

This year, the dreams of college hoopsters came true, as the first of four neutral site "U–Games" was held in the Hartford Civic Center. However, in the days leading up to the game, the media and fans alike seemed to think that the contest was anti–climactic. Both teams had lost their share of big names, and neither were nationally ranked on game day. Those who were at the Civic Center on Dec. 27 know how wrong the pessimists were.

The roof came down the last time the Minutemen met the Huskies in the Civic Center on January 27, 1978, collapsing due to heavy snow fall six hours after UConn beat UMass 56–49. Almost 20 years later, the match–up nearly blew the lid off the place again.

In a game that was fought to the bitter end, waves of blue and maroon surged with each twist of the game. With 8:14 remaining in the game, Lari Ketner and Winston Smith swatted a pair of UConn shots that were collected by Charlton Clarke and finished off on a Ketner jumper cutting the Husky lead to five, 57–52. As if the energy on the court radiated out to the crowd, the UMass fans that filled half the arena rose to their feet with enthusiasm that rivaled the most heated tournament atmosphere.

It went both ways.

For the last 10 minutes of the game, the arena was on its feet. With both schools' bands playing simultaneously, it didn't matter that neither team was in the top 10. It didn't matter that none of last year's players were off to the NBA. What mattered was the 40 minutes of intense basketball that took place on the floor.

"I heard from all of you [the media] that it's a good idea to play this game," UConn coach Jim Calhoun said. "Somebody forgot to tell these kids about the rivalry. The fans got more of their share of excitement. This was more of a tournament atmosphere."

UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint agreed.

"You couldn't have asked for a better game than the game we had tonight," Flint said. "I don't care if there wasn't Camby or Allen or Sheffer out there. It was a heck of a game."

With all the hype and hoopla that comes along with college hoops these days, it's often hard to tell the forest from the trees. Sometimes the commercials and the T–shirts get in the way of what really takes place on the court. This time around, the game lived up to its billing, as everyone whose heart stopped when Carmelo Travieso heaved up that last second 3–pointer can attest.

■ Game

continued from page 1-B

record, unable to pull together two consecutive wins all season. No. 19 Boston College, on the other hand, was off to its best start since 1980–81.

The Minutemen came out red hot with a 10–4 run. Their stingy defense allowed BC senior forward Danya Abrams to tally two buckets, the only Eagle to score in the first five minutes of play. With 13 minutes to go in the first frame, senior guard Edgar Padilla knocked down his first of six 3– pointers to give UMass a 17–9 lead.

Padilla, who has struggled with injuries throughout this season, was the driving force in UMass' game plan with 24 points on 7–for–12 shooting (6–for–8 outside the arc) and seven assists.

"Padilla makes a tremendous difference [in the way UMass plays]," said BC coach Jim O'Brien. "They were hungry and very, very aggressive."

Padilla's hunger impacted his team mates as well. Charlton Clarke's 23 points marked the first time this season the Minutemen had two players score 20–plus points.

The Eagles were not picked out of the sky easily. On the weight of the consistent Abrams (3–for–5 from the field, 4– for–4 from the line in the first half), BC took off on a 9–2 run of its own, whittling down a 10–point 28–18 UMass lead to a three–point margin (30–27) with 4:35 to go in the half. Boston College center Mickey Curley drained a jumper with 1:39 to go, cutting UMass' lead to three points (34–31), but that was the closest BC would come the rest of the way. A pair of jumpers by Ajmal Basit and Clarke in the final minute gave the Minutemen a 40–31 lead at the half.

In the second half, the Minutemen extended their lead by as much as 16, but the Eagles never managed to close the gap.

Again, Padilla was the great equalizer, shooting 4–for–4 outside the arc in the second half. With 13:55 to go in the game, BC brought it to within four, 50–46. The Minutemen opened up a shooting frenzy with back to back 3–pointers by Padilla, with one more for good measure by Carmelo Travieso (8 pts, 3 assists), extending the lead to 59–48.

"We just couldn't get over the hump," O'Brien said. "It seemed like each time we had a chance to get back in it, they would hit three three's in a row when it counted."

One of the reasons UMass held the lead from wire to wire was due to the coach James "Bruiser" Flint's management of the big men. Flint rotated center Lari Ketner, and forwards Tyrone Weeks (15 pts, 8 rebounds), Inus Norville and Basit, in order to bang the boards, harass Abrams (16 pts, 9 boards) and spread out fouls.

"They did a good job rotating their four big kids and using up their fouls," O'Brien said. "A lot of their big bodies were experienced and they could rotate them on Danya."

This was consistent with UMass' overall three–guard system with Padilla, Travieso, and Clarke all getting the start, in addition to Ketner and Weeks.

"We wanted to penetrate and get each other shots," Flint said. "We wanted to get into the gaps of their zone [defense]."

The result was a complete inside–outside game, something UMass had not seen in a while.

The Minutemen were on top of their game defensively as well, swatting nine BC shots, while the Eagles failed to register a single blocked shot. Adding insult to injury, the Eagle's two marquee players, Abrams and Salem High product Scoonie Penn, combined for 12 of BC's 13 turnovers.

■ NFL

continued from page 12-B

year after it was announced the team was moving. He was also hated in Cleveland. He should have a lot less problems here than he did there because there will be no Bernie Kosar for him to cut, and he won't be in charge of drafting. (Remember his panicked trade to the 49ers after the Jets took Kyle Brady two years ago?)

Carroll may be slightly better at coaching, but Belichick has the advantage of knowing the players, knowing the system and possibly being able to keep some of the other coaches from leaving. At the same time, his ties to Parcells could work against him.

While neither of them is as good a coach as Parcells, either of them with Bobby Grier in charge of drafting is better than Parcells with total control again.

Parcells did a horrible job as General Manager. Who can forget such names as Myron Guyton, Jeff Dellenbach, Tim Roberts, "The Other" Reggie White and Will Moore? This is the same guy who wanted to pick Cedric Jones, who isn't starting for the Giants, over Terry Glenn, who caught more passes than any other rookie ever. Sure, the Patriots defensive line could use some help, but these guys are obviously good enough to get them to a Super Bowl, something that couldn't be said for Moore.

Jacob W. Michaels is a Collegian columnist.

Don't Let The Marshall Catch You Going Anywhere Else!

Marshall
STEINBECK
COLLISION REPAIR & AUTO BODY
53 S. Prospect St. Amherst Center

- Imports and other unibody vehicles are our speciality.
- Users of Sikkens paint products
- Accepted by all insurance companies for collision repair or glass repair.

256-8157 256-1385
Shop Reg # RS1212

!! AEROBICS !!
FLEX FITNESS CENTER
175 UNIVERSITY DRIVE, AMHERST, MA • 253-3539
!! TREADMILLS !!

They're Back!!!

UMass Students Show Your Colors

It's the long-awaited return of Umass stars Coach John Calipari and Center Marcus Camby. Help welcome them back to Massachusetts as they take on the young exciting Boston Celtics at the FleetCenter.

- Check out Coach Cal's Nets take on the C's: Sunday, March 23 vs. New Jersey 3p.m.
- Don't miss Raptor Marcus Camby's pro debut at the FleetCenter: Sunday, April 20 vs. Toronto 1 p.m.

CELEBRATING BOSTON CELTICS 50 YEARS

Special Benefits for groups of 20 or more include:

- A welcome on the Jumbotron scoreboard.
- A visit to your section by the Parquet Patrol.

Tickets start at just $10.
For more information, call Paul at the BOSTON CELTICS Office at (617) 854-8079.
Please be sure to mention this ad.

UConn under fire, Earl on the move, Buffs on the rise

The flotsam and jetsam of this summer's controversy surrounding the Massachusetts men's basketball team has resurfaced down river at Connecticut.

The illustrious program at UConn has given the NCAA a preliminary report after rumors surfaced last week about two players receiving improper gifts.

Published reports have stated that senior starting center Kirk King and sophomore starting point guard Ricky Moore accepted plane tickets from outside sources in 1995.

Moore's mother, Dorothy, told The Augusta Chronicle that her son accepted a plane ticket from Hartford to Augusta before his first fall practice in 1995. She also stated that Moore learned after he took the trip that the ticket came from an agent, reportedly an unidentified friend of former Connecticut star Ray Allen.

Allen has denied any involvement in the scandal, as well as having any improper contacts outside the university while at UConn. The university has not substantiated any claims of agent involvement.

Connecticut coach Jim Calhoun has suspended King and Moore indefinitely.

• There's no place like... Kansas?

After only half a season playing for outgoing (tenure–wise, not personality–wise) coach Dale Brown at Louisiana State, Lester Earl clicked his heels together three times, wished as hard as he could, and chanted, "There's no place like Lawrence, there's no place like Lawrence."

Lo and behold, the 6–foot–9 Earl, who was a Parade All– American forward at Glen Oaks High in Baton Rouge, is now in classes and waiting to play at Kansas, after abruptly leaving LSU over break.

The Associated Press quoted Earl earlier in the month saying that he never wanted to attend LSU, doing so only because of family pressures.

"Kansas is where I wanted to go in the first place," Earl said. "It was not my own decision to go to LSU in the first place. My family and everyone around me encouraged me to go there."

Earl was the Tiger's No. 2 scorer and No. 3 rebounder before being dismissed from the team Jan. 4 for violating unspecified team rules.

• An end was put to a rather illustrious streak over winter break, as Rutgers–Camden finally won a game.

Rutgers–Camden beat Bloomfield College 77–72 to earn the school's first win since Jan. 18, 1992. The losing streak had run a record span of 117 games, giving the Division III school a streak 70 games longer than the second longest streak on any level of college basketball.

Rutgers–Camden was not the only school involved in a streak–snapping this break.

Wisconsin beat Indiana 71–58, snapping a 31–game losing streak the Badgers had against the Hoosiers that dated back to Jan. 5, 1980.

Chicago State beat Central Connecticut State 101–86, ending Chicago's 23–game losing streak, then the longest in Div. I. Chicago State's win gives the nation's longest Div. I losing streak to Lehigh, whose streak is 16 games, 13 this season.

Akron beat Toledo 80–75 to snap a 19–game Mid– American Conference losing streak that included an 0–18 record last season.

Colorado beat Missouri 87–78 to end a 25–game losing streak at Missou. The last Buffalo victory in Columbia was on Jan. 15, 1973.

• Colorado's wintersession distinction does not end with just a win over Missouri. The Buffs added to their record a win at Texas Tech, snapping the Red Raiders' home win streak. Led by Chauncey Billups, one of the most underrated guards this year, and his last second shot, Colorado beat one of the most overrated teams this year. They then beat Iowa State, possibly the most overrated team in the polls.

Colorado also entered the AP Top 25 poll last week for the first time in 28 years, and it may be an omen. The last time the Buffs were in the poll, 1968–69, was the last time they won the then–Big Eight and were in the NCAA Tournament.

This year Colorado must face a strong Kansas team on the path to a Big 12 ring, but the team has already proven itself capable of upsets.

• Embattled Virginia guard Harold Deane was acquitted of resisting arrest after the judge he faced said he was impressed with Deane's character witnesses.

Deane was originally arrested April 13 of last year outside of Frye's Spring Beach Club, where a fundraiser for the Advancement of African–American Studies was being held. Deane, an invited guest to the event, was forced to wait outside due to overcrowding and eventually arrested and charged with trespassing and resisting arrest.

He was convicted of the misdemeanors and sentenced to two 30–day suspended sentences. The trespassing charge was dismissed upon appeal to circuit court in December, and circuit court Judge John R. Cullen dropped the resisting arrest charges after a basketball coach, a minister and two teachers spoke on Deane's behalf.

• In perhaps the most outrageous display of "I'm–full–of– myself" disease, Geno Carlisle announced that he was an idiot this month (he's been an idiot all along, but just announced it this month).

The 6–foot–4 guard has decided to transfer from Northwestern to California.

Carlisle was last year's leading scorer in the Big 10, averaging 19.7 points per game, but the praise heaped upon him has made him silly.

The Associated Press released this blurb about Carlisle:

"It may sound cocky, but the only player in Chicago who is better than me is Michael Jordan.'

"Scottie Pippen was unavailable for comment."

Casey Kane is a Collegian columnist.

■ NBA

continued from page 12

power forward and he's not quick enough to play small forward. So he languishes in a league that doesn't need 6–foot–7 forwards who can't stick a 15–foot jump shot off the dribble, but that doesn't mean he's forgotten. We still love you, Lou, and keep hope alive, baby.

Maybe you're the knucklehead, buddy...

Karl Malone recently made remarks about the young players in the league being knuckleheads. Little does Karl know that not only are the younger players not knuckleheads, they're better than he is.

Ray Allen is slowly becoming one of the most underrated players in the league. Stephon Marbury is making quite a name for himself in Minnesota, and Allen Iverson is far and away the best player in Philadelphia. The beauty of the NBA is its ability to infuse young, fresh talent every few years, and this crop is young, and it's fresh.

So Karl, my advice to you is this. If you don't understand the young players, it's because they possess an energy you've never had, and a flair that the league will always need. Back off Mailman, because the NBA needs more Iversons and less Malones. You dig?

Waiting one year to Wit...

You may not be hearing about them, but the Washington Bullets will make noise come playoff time. Why? A superstar in Juwan Howard and almost superstar in Chris Webber, and a solid, solid point guard in Rod Strickland. They're finding their way now, and come next season, when they move into a new arena in downtown Washington and become the Wizards, they should be ready to reach the next plateau. If the Bullets/Wizards do make a run at the top of the NBA hierarchy, it may well coincide with the downfall of the Western Conference. Houston will be a lottery team in five years, the Lakers are severely overrated, and nobody else out west has young talent to nurture.

P.S. kids. Just got my Bryant "Big Country" Reeves Grizzlies jersey in the mail, and I love the fit. Makes me want to scream, 20 wins! 20 wins! Go Griz, go.

Luke Meredith is a Collegian columnist.

■ notebook

continued from page 1-B

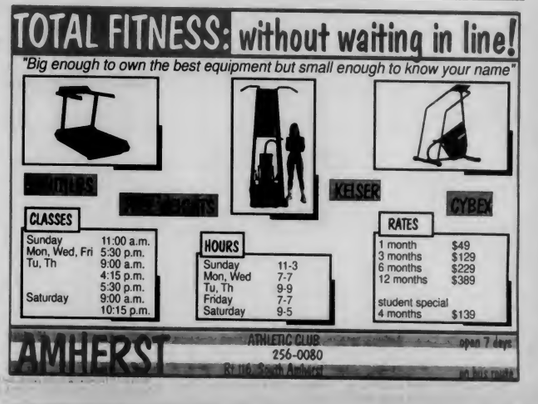
game against North Carolina in the Jimmy V. Classic at the Meadowlands. At the game Clarke issued a statement regarding the situation.

"Marcus Camby and his friends never introduced Wesley Spears to me as an agent. He was always just 'Wes,' one of Marcus' boys from Hartford. I did not know his full name or his intent to be an agent until I saw his picture on ESPN yesterday. I did not have a lot of contact with Wes and only knew him to say, 'Hi. How's it going?'

"As far as the reports of me and the girl in Marcus' room, I never had sexual intercourse with her and no one said about her being a prostitute or anything like that. Marcus told me she was just a friend he went to school with in Hartford."

• • •

Two Minuteman players faced suspensions over the course of the winter break.



Freshman forward Ajmal Basit did not play in UMass' Jan. 5 game against St. Joseph's at the William D. Mullins Center because he violated unspecified team rules.

Freshman forward Chris Kirkland sat out the Minutemen's game against Boston College on Jan. 18 at the FleetCenter for the same reason.

• • •

Carmelo Travieso became the 35th player in UMass history to reach the 900 point mark in his career, after scoring 11 at La Salle on Jan. 15. On Jan. 8, Travieso recorded a season–high 28 points against Davidson.

TOTAL FITNESS: without waiting in line!
"Big enough to own the best equipment but small enough to know your name"

CLASSES
Sunday 11:00 a.m.
Mon, Wed, Fri 5:30 p.m.
Tu, Th 9:00 a.m.
4:15 p.m.
5:30 p.m.
Saturday 9:00 a.m.
10:15 p.m.

HOURS
Sunday 11-3
Mon, Wed 7-7
Tu, Th 9-9
Friday 7-7
Saturday 9-5

RATES
1 month $49
3 months $129
6 months $229
12 months $389
student special
4 months $139

AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB 256-0080 Rt 116 South Amherst open 7 days an hour more!

"Best Barbecue Joint in New England" from USA Today to Yankee Magazine

Enjoy BUB's famous
Ribs • Chicken • Pork
Catfish • Salmon
Red Snapper
T-Bone Steak & More!

Open Daily
LUNCH AND DINNER
Eat in or Under the Tent
RTE. 116 • OLD AMHERST RD • SUNDERLAND
413/548-9630

Now Open at the Hampshire Mall
The Pet Shed
Hampshire Mall, Hadley
587-0944

It looks like the real world.
It feels like the real world.
It pays like the real world.
It's an internship.
Unreal.

The Northwestern Mutual Life internship was recently named one of the Top Ten Internships in America. For information, call or send resume to:

Kate Kane/ The Steffen Agency
1351 Main Street
Springfield, MA 01103
413/748-6000

Northwestern Mutual Life
The Quiet Company
http://www.NorthwesternMutual.com

Back To School Sale

CAMPUS GEAR
Welcome Back
UMass Students
Today Thru Sunday
February 2nd Receive
20% OFF!
ALL UMASS MERCHANDISE
CAMPUS GEAR, 255 TRIANGLE ST., AMHERST 549-0944
Between Dairy Mart & Northampton Co-Op Bank

It'll be Bulls–Rockets this spring

CASEY KANE ON COLLEGE BASKETBALL

There are only two teams that count in the NBA in 1996–97. You can cry all you want about the Heat, the Sonics, the Knicks and so on, but anyone with even a casual interest and a semi-intelligent sports mind would have to agree that the only two teams that will matter come June are the Bulls and the Rockets.

This made last week's game between the two something to watch in an otherwise mundane early season NBA. But I know you're like, "Luke, sweetie, why are Houston and Chicago the two best teams?" Well, if you relax and play nice, I'll tell you.

The Rockets have a very, very solid team. By acquiring Charles Barkley, the Rockets brought themselves from Western contender to Western favorite. Despite the fact that their youngest player was born during the Kennedy administration, Houston is the type of team that would win the NBA title in most years, but the late '90s are not like most years.

Why?

Because of the Bulls, the greatest team we've ever seen. From Jordan to Pippen to Rodman (when he's not kicking cameramen), the Bulls are special. But so are the Rockets. They know the next two years are probably the last two years of greatness for their major players, and you have to believe that they'll play like that.

The Bulls? Well, they're old too, and they know that last year was their defining moment. They know that no matter what they do, they'll never match 1995–1996, with the 72 wins and all, so look for a slippage. Will the Rockets dethrone them? I doubt it, but you'll have to wait and see.

We want Tim, we want Tim...

If you're like me, you used to like the Celtics. But with the latest C's administration, players like David Wesley and Rick Fox are allowed to actually start for our team. But do not be depressed by that fact, because if they keep playing like they are playing, they will have a really good chance to get Tim Duncan, and thus be decent again.

I truly believe that Duncan will bring 25 wins a year to the Hub, which is enough to bring the love back to the FleetCenter. Also keep in mind that the C's have Dallas' first round pick, which may afford them the opportunity to draft two future stars in June. Given the current state of Boston hoop, this is all we have to hope for, which is pretty sad. But hey, don't let it get you down, kids. Larry Bird is not coming back, and we just have to deal with it.

You're still the man...

It's disheartening to see the original pimp daddy, and the best player that this campus has ever seen, Lou Roe, on the taxi squad with the Golden State Warriors. Lou doesn't play much, and when he does, he's not the same player he was here in Amherst. From the start of his career, he's been out of shape, and he's never been able to find a position in the NBA, because he's too small to play

Turn to NBA, page 11-B

Around the NHL, who's hot and who's not

JORMA KANSANEN & LEIGH TORBIN ON THE NHL

The All-Star break has come and gone, Ray Bourque has once again won the accuracy shooting contest in the skills competition and the last half of the season is now before us. Preseason prognostications now face the harsh reality of midseason playoff positioning in each conference. Break out your lunch pails, boys, it's time to see who did the work in the preseason — and there are pink slips for those columnists who failed miserably.

Jorma Kansanen — Thumbs up to Philly (I said Paul Coffey would go to the Flyers!), thumbs down to Montreal and Boston, but they still do have a chance. Both of us can take credit for Dallas, but the Maple Leafs? Not good. I can, and can not, believe that Toronto's Doug Gilmour is on the trading block. He will be a wonderful addition to any team, hands down. But more specifically, here are a couple of little dandies I came up with for all of you pucksters:

• I am still reeling from the loss of mun Suomalaisten poika (translation: my Finnish boy), Saku Koivu, from the Canadiens last year, but not with what it has done to the team. Losing Koivu to a knee injury has affected Les Habitants more than they would like, and their record has shown it.

They are on the bubble. Even an MVP performance from linemate Mark Recchi at the All-Star game can not solve their problems, and they will need Koivu in the lineup to keep my prediction for their spot in the playoffs alive.

Gee, I thought goalie Jocelyn Thibault was supposed to be good. What's up with that?

•The loss of All-World Paul Kariya hurt the Mighty Ducks in the early season, and those oh-so-enlightened hockey fans in sunny southern California were looking for coach Ron Wilson's head on a platter.

I have two words for those fans — shut up.

All of us real hockey fans in the Boston area got to deal with having Steve Kasper as a coach with a Hall of Famer like Pat Burns waiting in the wings to really rebuild the Bruins. Wilson is a great coach, and led the USA squad to the next best thing to the Stanley Cup last summer: the World Cup.

I talked to a certain local Div. I hockey coach two months ago about this situation, and in his more than straightforward fashion, he said the criticism of a quality coach like Wilson was a crock of you-know-what. He liked the Ducks as a team — especially Teemu Selanne. With the reemergence of Kariya in the lineup, coming off of his first NHL career hat-trick against Buffalo's Dominik "The Dominator" Hasek, they will make my Oct. 9, 1996 wish come true.

Leigh Torbin — I had plenty of free time over intersession, between occasional Time-Outs, to reflect on the sad state of affairs that is the Boston Bruins. An organization that has lost the desire to do anything but sell 14,000 tickets a night and stink out the joint like Al Bundy breaking wind. My question though: whatever happened to Memorial Cup hero Cameron Mann? Is 19 too young for a "where are they now" segment?

• Now that Jorma has made me look back at preseason picks, I guess I have to rescind the Eddie the Eagle for Vezina pick and admit that Martin Brodeur is at least closer to fine. But let's now talk about the Dominator, and I don't mean today's special with two toppings at Domino's of Hadley. Nothing's topping Dominik Hasek these days.

No, the numbers don't match up with many of his counterparts, but they are posted behind a defense which could be paid the ultimate compliment by being called either porous or abysmal. A team utterly devoid of talent, and crippled by the loss of its captain and best skater, Pat LaFontaine, can almost start printing playoff tickets with their snazzy new unis, all because of their goalie.

Without a bona fide offensive threat, although Brian Holzinger plays more like one every day, teams can relax defensively against the Sabres and rev up their offense to Rusty Wallace levels.

Stupid-looking Cooper 2000 helmet and all, Hasek was a rare defensive story at the All-Star game, stopping 20 of 21 shots against him, and immediately continued that roll with a gutsy effort in a 2–1 win over Chicago last Monday. Buffalo was unbeaten in

Turn to NHL, page 10

Who's in, who's out among NFL coaches

JACOB W. MICHAELS ON THE NFL

Here a coach, there a coach, everywhere a coach, coach.

These days it's harder to figure out which coach goes with which team than it is to figure out the criminal records of the Dallas Cowboys. The headmen have been switching teams faster than you can say "Pio Sagapolutele" over the previous year.

So far, 10 teams will start 1997 under someone other than who they started 1996 with and there could be more coming. A brief reminder of who's on first and what's on second (as of press time)...

• Cincinnati: Dave Shula out, Bruce Coslet in.

• New Orleans: Jim Mora out, Rick Venturi out. No one in until Tom Benson makes sure they'll work weekends.

• San Francisco: George Seifert out, Steve Mariucci in.

• New York Giants: Dan Reeves out, Jim Fassel in.

• Atlanta: June Jones run (and gun) out of town, Reeves in.

• San Diego: Bobby Ross out, Kevin "Punching Bag" Gilbride in.

Detroit: Wayne Fontes finally out, Ross in.

St Louis: Rich Brooks out, Ross and Gilbride in other places, Dick Vermeil from way out coming in.

Kansas City: Marty Schottenheimer in deeper. (Just seeing if you were still paying attention.)

Oakland: Mike White out, no info on anyone coming in.

New York Jets: Rich Kotite just plain out. And could it be Bill Parcells coming in?

There are so many rumors about Parcells' imminent departure (which could have been made by the time this column hits the presses) that the Jets are going to be lucky not to be accused of tampering. And who knows what it will cost them? Some rumors say absolutely nothing besides Parcells' salary, some say money and some say draft picks. (Wouldn't it be great for the Patriots to get the number one pick after going to the Super Bowl? As long as they pay attention to local sports lore and test their pick for cocaine first, it would be a dream come true.)

Due to his rift with owner Bob Kraft, who won't give him complete control back, Parcells is probably leaving. The Jets are a perfect fit for him as they're located near his hometown, will give him complete control and have more talent on their team than their record indicates.

Replacing him would probably be San Francisco defensive coordinator Pete Carroll or current Patriots assistant head coach Bill Belichick. Both have had one head coaching stint before. Carroll went 8–8 with the Jets three years ago and was only fired because the Jets are completely incompetent and apparently thought Kotite was a better choice.

Belichick led the Cleveland Browns to the second round of the playoffs in 1994, but had a miserable season last

Turn to NFL, page 10-B

Setting the Standard for Apartment Living

THE BOULDERS

ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED

Heat, Hot Water & Electricity

✘ Large 2 Bedroom Apartments
- *New Appliances
- *New Counters / Cabinets
- *New Carpets / Tile

* Selected Units

✘ State of the Art Exercise Facility
- Stairmaster • Lifecycle • Nautilus

■ Free Heat & Hot Water
■ Professional Maintenance Staff on Site
■ Central Mailbox Facility
■ Limited Access Entry System
■ 5 College Bus Stop on Property
■ Rent Starting At $695
Call About Our Specials*
(subject to availability)

256-8534

From Amherst center take Rt. 116 south to East Hadley Rd. The Boulders is located 1/4 of mile down on the left.

■ 1,2 & 3 Bedroom Garden Style Units
(Also Townhouse Style for 2 Bedroom)
■ Convenient to Amherst, UMass & Interstate 91
■ Scenic Hiking Trails on 28 Wooded Acres
■ Olympic Size Pool
■ Tennis, Volleyball and Basketball
■ Free Public Transportation
■ 24 Hour Maintenance

CLIFF SIDE APARTMENTS

MON - FRI 8:30 - 5:30
SAT 10 - 2

Get Twisted!

Head-spinning dizziness. Accccccccccccccelerated heart rate.
Uncontrollable staggering. Cold sweats.
Just another Friday night off campus?

No!

It's an eye-poppin', jaw-droppin', teeth-chompin', foot-stompin', ear-twitchin', get-outta-the-kitchen day at Busch Gardens, Tampa Bay riding the baddest collection of coasters anywhere.

KUMBA—The longest, fastest roller coaster in the Southeast. You'll scream through the world's largest vertical loop ("Whaaaa-hhhoooo!"), a 360° spiraling camelback ("Ah-ah-ah-ah"), a cobra roll ("Fua-haua-huaha"), and a vertical spiral ("Kx-kx-kx-kx-ouahh") at 60 m.p.h. before finally bringing you back in ("Whew!").

MONTU—The world's largest inverted roller coaster. It's fast, forceful, and has a crappy attitude. One minute you're pulling 3.85 Gs, the next you're looking at three seconds of total weightlessness. Do us a favor, eat lunch after riding Montu.

SCORPION—Tight, compact, quick. You go up slowly. Then you go down fast. Then you slam face first into a 360° loop. Then, uh..., well you tend to forget everything else after the 360.

PYTHON—Go to the laundromat. Get inside one of the big washers during the spin cycle. Now have someone push the entire thing off the rim of the Grand Canyon. You get the picture.

BUSCH GARDENS
TAMPA BAY, FLORIDA ®
An Anheuser-Busch Theme Park

Call 1-800-42-KUMBA
to book Spring Break vacations for as low as $79*

CUT, CLIP, SLICE, TEAR, HACK, RIP OR BITE THIS COUPON OUT AND BRING IT TO BUSCH GARDENS

Daily General ADMISSION $10 off or show valid student ID.

Good through April 30, 1997. PLU 3487C/3488A

*Package includes 2 nights accommodations & 2 adult tickets to Busch Gardens, Tampa Bay. Packages based on per-person/double occupancy. Rates and availability subject to change.

DAYTONA BEACH

Hotter Than Ever!

Daytona Beach's Spring Break '97 will be the best on the planet. With everything from free concerts to a gigantic job fair, you can count on Daytona Beach delivering.

What can you expect to find at Spring Break in Daytona Beach? The first thing you will see is a wall of people. So, you will have a few thousand students to keep you from getting lonely. While there is a neverending list of things to do, the beach rules while the sun is up. The beach is nearly thirty miles long and over 500 feet wide. It is perfect for volleyball, Frisbee, bicycling, motor scooters or cruising. Students who drive to Daytona Beach are surprised to find you can drive on most stretches of the beach.

The beach is also dotted with companies who offer entertainment, product samples and other freebies. On March 20 and 21, the third annual Daytona Beach Spring Break Career Fair will be held at the Holiday Inn SunSpree. It's free and you can literally come right off the beach, fill out a mini-resume form and interview with dozens of employers for jobs and internships.

Other Spring Break events scheduled are the Sports Illustrated Spring Break Beach Club '97 and Gatorade's Spring Break Village.

When the sun goes down, Daytona Beach's night clubs draw huge crowds. There are about a dozen clubs and sports bars that have special Spring Break promotions.

For more information on Spring Break events or accommodations at Daytona Beach, check out http://www.daytonabreak.com on the World Wide Web.

The Biggest Spring Break Anywhere

Last year, MTV searched for the best place to spend Spring Break and found it at Panama City Beach, Florida. So did more than half a million college students.

With 27 miles of America's most beautiful beaches and more Breakers than any other destination, Panama City Beach is the world's biggest party waiting to happen. What's more, it's the perfect road trip. PCB is the shortest drive distance in Florida from most areas of the United States.

Courtesy of Paradise Found Resorts

PCB's emerald green waters and spectacular sand beaches are unmatched anywhere...and they're free to all Breakers with a towel and the need for a perfect tan! In fact, no matter where you go in PCB, you'll find great value on a tight budget. There's a wide variety of cool (and inexpensive) activities, such as beach volleyball, wind surfing and para-sailing. Check out the numerous free activities sponsored by hotels such as the Holiday Inn SunSpree, Ramada, Days Inn and the Boardwalk Beach Resort. Whether you're working on your tan or checking out the mobile scenery, you'll never get bored on this beach.

Courtesy of Paradise Found Resorts
Photography by Curtis Graham

When the sun goes down, PCB gets even hotter. Two of the largest nightclubs in the world--Spinnaker and Club La Vela--are located here and scores of smaller clubs line the beach. Music ranges from classic rock to acid grunge and techno-jungle to country. Name the kind of music you like and you'll find it in PCB.

You'll also discover food for all tastes and budgets in PCB. Whether you crave a huge seafood buffet or a submarine sandwich, you can stay within your budget and eat in your bathing suit. All restaurants honor the beach's mandatory dress code...casual.

One of the best things about Spring Break in Panama City Beach is--believe it or not--the police. You can party on the beach and the local cops are really cool. In fact, they are so cool here, some cops actually have been seen welcoming students. (Hard to imagine...but it has happened. It means that the city really wants Breakers to come and have fun.)

So why sit in front of the tube and watch it happen, when you can be part of the fun? There are 18,000 hotel rooms, but they are filling fast. Call 1-800-PCBEACH or cruise the Panama City Beach Web site at http://www.travelfile.com/get?pcbeach to find out more.

Panama City Beach

Here G.P.A. Stands For Great Party Atmosphere.

We know what subjects really interest students: 27 miles of white sand beaches, crystal-clear waters, hot night life, cool parties, great fishing, tennis, golf, volleyball, tasty food, and affordable accommodations. You'll find them all here on Panama City Beach, Florida. Which puts us at the head of the class for Spring Break destinations.

For a free Spring Break Guide, call 1-800-PCBEACH or write to Panama City Beach Convention and Visitors Bureau, P.O. Box 9473, Panama City Beach, FL 32417.

Panama City Beach
1-800-PCBEACH

Take The BrEAK '97

Published by American Passage Media, Inc.

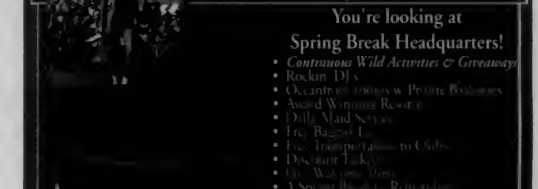
Editorial: Susan Urban
Art: Robert Gutierrez
Advertising/Sales: Gary Marcus

For more information call 1-800-473-6474

LET'S HAVE FUN!

panama city beach, florida
Spring Break '97

$29* per night



Your Party Package includes all this stuff:
• Gulf front accommodations •
• Next door to the Super Clubs •
• Wild activities, FREE entertainment •
• Poolside giveaways, FREE Passes •

Call Now! 1.800.224.GULF

9450 S. Thomas Dr. • Panama City Beach, FL 32408
http://interoz.com/boardwalk

The Boardwalk beach resort

*Pkg. price based on per pers. quint occup. 7 night min. stay. $50 sec. dep./person at check-in. cash/credit card only

Party in Paradise
in Panama City Beach, Florida!

You're looking at Spring Break Headquarters!
• Continuous Wild Activities & Giveaways
• Rockin' DJ's
• Oceanfront Rooms w/ Private Balconies
• Award Winning Resorts
• Daily Maid Service
• Free Beach Tags
• Free Transportation to Clubs
• Discount Tickets
• Free Welcome Party
• 4 Spring Parties to Remember
Special 7 Night Packages

$32.95

Holiday Inn SunSpree Resort
Panama City Beach, Florida

1-800-633-0266
904-234-1111 • 904-235-0888 FAX)
Paradise Found Resorts & Hotels
11127 Front Beach Road

Best Western Coral Reef
DAYS INN BEACH
RAMADA INN BEACH & CONVENTION CENTER
Best Western Beachcomber

Get A Great Beach Attitude At

PIER99 BEACHFRONT MOTEL

Beachfront from $25* per person per night quad occupancy

9900 S. Thomas Drive
Panama City Beach,
Florida 32408
Reservations:
1-800-874-6657
or fax 904-233-8471

Great Rates starting at $18* per night!

- Center of All the Fun
- Furnished Kitchenettes
- Patio Overlooking the Gulf
- Two Swimming Pools
- Cable TV

Beachside Motel

* All rates are for a double room, per person. Suggested per room.

10710 West Highway 98
Panama City Beach, Florida 32407
(904) 234-3997

SPRING BREAK '97

CHATEAU

HEATED POOL
800-874-8826

RULES!

This Spring Break, The Chateau Motel on Panama City Beach rules! Right next door to Harpoon Harry's and Hooter's, and dangerously close to Spinnaker and Club La Vela, and all the best restaurants and shops, Chateau is really the #1 choice for your break! From just $149 a week There are other deals too for 4, 5, & 6 night packages. Just call us for details, or visit our web site: chateau-motel.com.

FROM $149 WEEKLY!*

* (Seven night package. Room with 2 beds. Based on quad occupancy. Some restrictions apply. One parking pass per room. Damage deposits may apply.)

1-800-874-8826 www.chateau-motel.com
CHATEAU MOTEL • 12525 FRONT BEACH ROAD • PANAMA CITY BEACH, FL 32407

SANDPIPER BEACON
$129 PER WEEK PER PERSON!

2 OUTDOOR POOLS
1 INDOOR POOL
HUGE BEACH FRONT HOT TUB!
VOLLEYBALL · SAILBOATS · JET SKIS
HOME OF THE WORLD'S LONGEST KEG PARTY
PARASAILS · RESTAURANT
TIKI BAR BEACH PARTIES
ENTERTAINMENT
SUITES UP TO 10 PEOPLE
KITCHENETTES W/MICROWAVES
DISCOUNTS TO AREA CLUBS AND ATTRACTIONS!
RATES BASED ON DOUBLE OCCUPANCY
CALL FOR DETAILS
CALL 1-800-874-8828
FOR FREE INFO!
WWW.SANDPIPERBEACON.COM
17603 FRONT BEACH RD
PANAMA CITY BEACH, FL 32413

MARK II

from $25 a night

1200 Feet of Party Beach!
Free admission and Free Keg Parties at Sherky's for Mark II and Quality Inn guests (with this coupon).

from $22 a night

1-800-874-7101

Park Inn INTERNATIONAL

From $22 Per Night

1-800-535-2764

Based on multiple occupancy. Call For Details

CANCUN CANCUN CANCUN

Go International!

Cancun is the most popular international Spring Break destination. This year, a record number of Spring Breakers are expected to hit the beaches. There is never a dull moment in Cancun, whether under the water or inside one of its sizzling mega-nightclubs. You can always find something fun to do in Cancun.

Be a Beach Bum

Cancun's beaches are famous for their powdery white sand and the calm waters of Bahia de Mujeres. On the eastern shore, the playful Caribbean Sea also offers extraordinary beaches. It's a long trek for a beach bum to see all of Cancun's beaches. Try it!

Shop! Shop! Shop! Drop!

You can literally shop till you drop in Cancun. There are numerous plazas, shopping centers and open markets in Cancun--Flamingo Plaza, Kukulkan Plaza, Plaza Lagunas, Plaza Caracol's, and Ki-Huic Market. You can always find great deals on Mexican crafts, silver, sportswear and even designer clothing.

STUDENT EXPRESS, INC.

Mexico - you don't have to be 21 to have fun!

I·800·SURFS·UP

I·800·SURFS·UP

ON THE BORDER

CANCUN $399 WITH AIR
MAZATLAN $299 WITH AIR
S. PADRE $99 AIR AVAILABLE

HURRY, LIMITED OFFER!
SPACE SELLING FAST
1.800.787.3787
FREE Breakfasts, Lunches and Dinners
FREE Cover Charges and Express entry
FREE Mega Beach Parties
FREE Mexico Pub Crawls
FREE T-Shirt

www.studentexpress.com

Ruin Your Day

Chichen Itza, Tulú and Cobá are just a few archeological ruins that make great day trips while in Cancun. Visit the Temple of the Jaguars and the Cenote or Sacred Well, which was the main location of Mayan sacrifices of virgins and children. There are numerous tour operators in Cancun that can take care of all the arrangements.

Do Something Different

Experience a bull fight. They occur every Wednesday afternoon at 3:30 p.m. in Cancun. You can enter the bull ring and view many other Mexican traditions.

Whatever you like to do, you can find it in Cancun.

For more information on Cancun and accommodations, call the Caribbean Tourism Organization at 212-682-0435.

SOUTH PADRE ISLAND

As Hot As It Gets!

Sizzling sun, sparkling turquoise water, and sugary white sand... It's fun. It's safe. It's Padre! A tropical island that's just right for the rites of Spring.

South Padre is the center of the party universe during Spring Break '97. And, if that's not enough, you can salsa on down to Mexico for a spicy taste of night life south of the border. South Padre Spring Break is as hot as it gets!

Mega-fun, mini-bucks

This year, the annual Spring Break party will be better than ever. More than 125,000 book weary, but cost conscious, college students will make the southern migration to the sunny beaches of the always popular and value-packed South Padre Island.

Hotels, condos, motels and restaurants in South Padre Island pride themselves on their reasonable rates. (See the following page for hot spots to crash.)

There will also be will be lots of activities—volleyball championships, Hoops for Hope basketball tournament, sand castle competitions and loads of free promos, such as T-shirts, sunglasses, hats and cold drinks. South Padre even has a free trolley system--"the Wave"--to get you around the island. You won't need to take out another student loan to have a good time here.

The South Padre Island Convention and Visitors Bureau

Two-nation vacation

Don't forget South Padre's only 25 miles from Mexico. Spring Break visitors will enjoy the colorful ambiance of nearby Matamoros. Along with bright serapes, silver jewelry, leather goods and hand-woven blankets, Matamoros features some of the hottest fajitas and coldest drinks along the border. Customs is pretty laid back and proof of citizenship in the form of a driver's license normally suffices. Driving across the border into Mexico is legal, but be sure to carry proof of insurance in your car. If you get into a fender bender in Mexico, you are "guilty until proven innocent" under Mexican law. Due to recent changes in Mexican law, "mordida" (a bribe) is not recommended, so just go with the flow and be careful.

Gateway to South Padre Island

Harlingen's Valley International Airport offers the most convenient way to get to South Padre Island. American, Continental, Southwest and Conquest Airlines all service Harlingen. So, fly and spend your time on the beach, not in the car.

Photo courtesy of The South Padre Island Convention and Visitors Bureau. Photography by Brian Tumlinson

Check us out on the Net

Surf South Padre Island's World Wide Web site (http://www.sopadre.com) and check out this year's Spring Break action. With hot shots and cool contests, it's your link to the never ending fun. You could also win a trip for two to South Padre Island. In fact, lots of great stuff is given away every week. Or, call toll-free 1-800-SO-PADRE for more information.

Photo courtesy of the South Padre Island Convention and Visitors Bureau

SPRING BREAK 97

LET'S PADRE 1-800-SOPADRE

SURF THE NET ENTER THE ISLAND SWEEPSTAKES

FIND AZTEC-TEX ON THE WEB

Breakers that Know How to Break... Break at the Best...Let's Party!!!

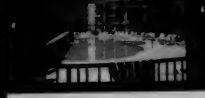
"Free Charlie's T-Shirt for the first 2,000 to book"

together... we're going places

Sheraton Fiesta South Padre Island Beach Resort

Beachside Condominiums & Rooms Available

For Reservations & Information Call 1-800-222-4010 1-210-761-6551



Padre South

The hottest place to Padre!

Rooms are going fast. Call 210-761-4951 today! Padre South, 1500 Gulf Boulevard, South Padre Island, TX 78597 210-761-4951 fax 210-761-4951 xt. 116

Take A Break...It's Spring Break! Blast Off for the Holidays at the "Best" Beachside Inn.

Holiday Inn SunSpree Resort South Padre Island

Radisson

Spring Break & Coca-Cola Party Headquarters

Located on ten acres beachfront

Radisson RESORT SOUTH PADRE ISLAND

Spring Break '97

A Complete Tropical Resort Directly on the Beach. Featuring the Beachside Cabana Bar, the Largest Indoor Dance Club on the Island, Great Pool Area Surrounded by Cascading Water, Restaurant and Bar, Tennis Courts, Water Sports. A 12 Story Hotel with Standard Rooms, Kitchenettes, and Suites. Also Two and Three Bedroom Condominiums.

Bahia Mar Resort and Conference Center

SURF THIS!

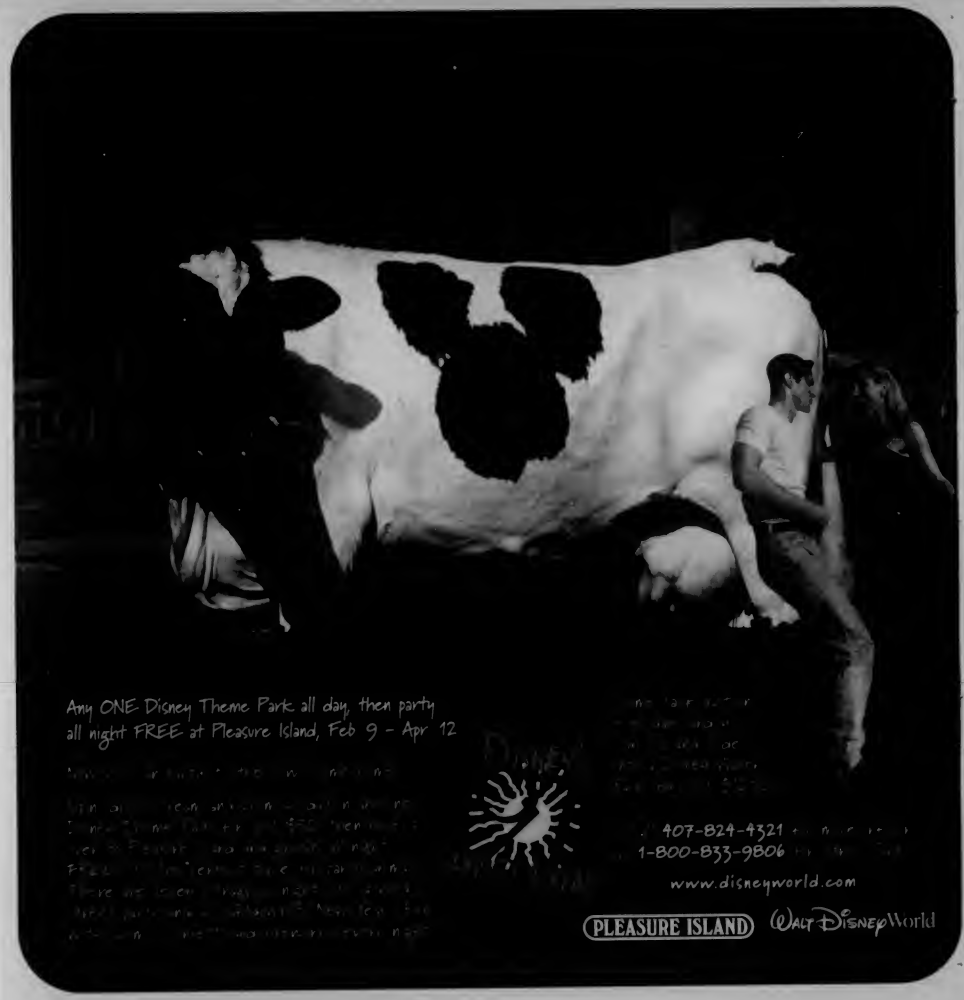
WEB PAGES

Trying to decide where to go for Spring Break? Go surfing...on the net.

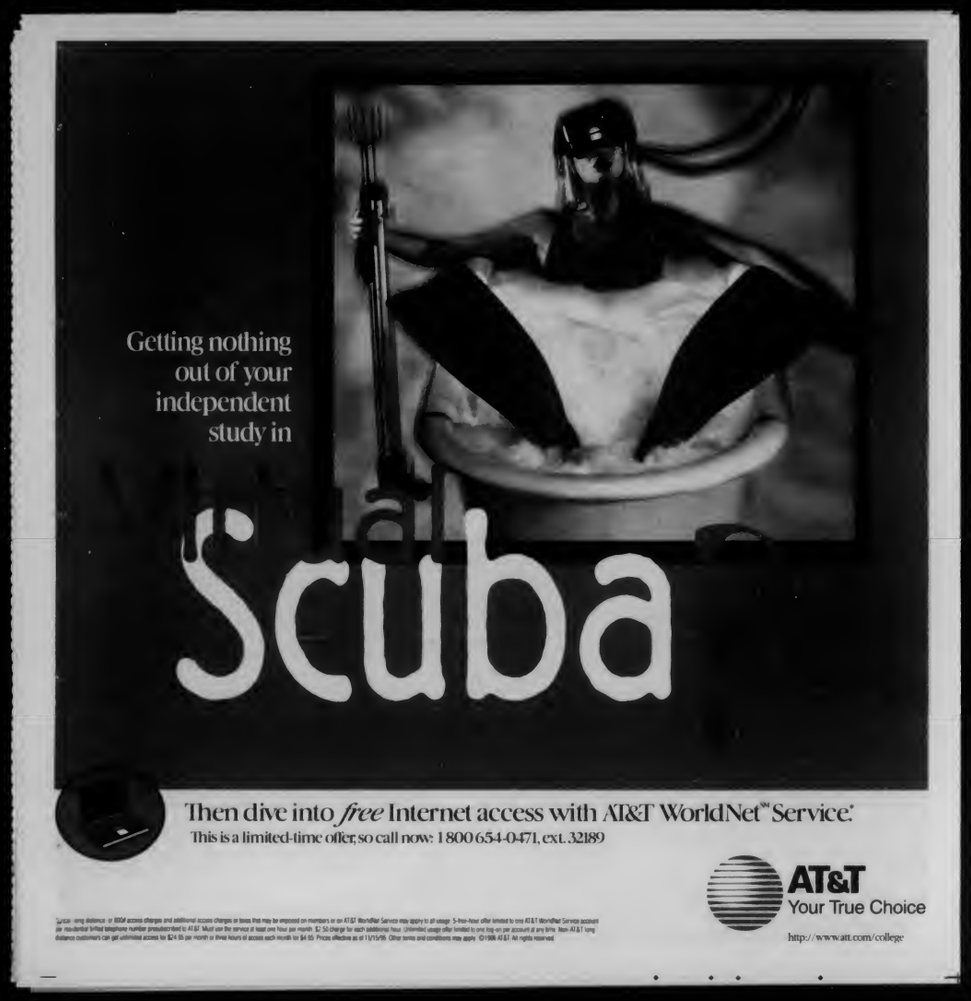
Many of the most popular Spring Break destinations have multiple pages on a variety of Web sites. (Info is literally like everywhere!) The sites list information on the region, activities, tourist attractions, local hotels and nightclubs. There are also Spring Break Web sites that are not destination specific, such as http://www.springbreak.com/. Many sites also throw in juicy beach pictures to entice you to come to their sunny location.

Each January, destinations start listing their local Spring Break events, such as what concerts are happening, which corporate sponsors are coming and where you can find the traditional beach beauty contests. Don't worry if you're searching for wet T-shirt contests, you can find them on the Web, too. Below is a list of web sites for popular Spring Break locations. Surf at your leisure...remember this list is only a start...

Cancun
http://www.cancun.com/
http://www.studentexpress.com
http://www.iminet.com/mexico/cancun.html



Daytona Beach
http://www.localdaytona.com
http://www.daytonabreak.com
http://www.daytonachamber.com



Florida
http://florida.com/fl_fact.htm
http://www.goflorida.com/
http://orchid-isle.com/fl/flcounty.htm

Fort Lauderdale
http://www.co.broward.fl.us/sunny.htm
http://q.paradise.net/online/
http://www.ftlauderdale.com

Panama City Beach
http://interoz.com/springbreak/
http://www.travelfile.com/get?pcbeach
http://pc.gulfnet.com/baycounty.htm

South Padre Island
http://www.sopadre.com
http://www.io.com/~iaa/spimain.htm
http://www.studentexpress.com

The Massachusetts

DAILY COLLEGIAN

Volume CVI Issue 71 | New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967 | Wednesday, January 29, 1997

A Smashing Evening

With "alternative" rock on its deathbed, the Smashing Pumpkins proved last night at the Mullins that they deserve to live on (See Arts & Living, p. 5).

Hokie Pokie

Crystal Carroll and the women's basketball team face Virginia Tech on the road tonight in Atlantic 10 action (see Sports, page 10).

WORLD

U.S. to aid post-Castro Cuba?

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cuba can expect considerable financial assistance from the United States and other members of the international community after President Fidel Castro is no longer in power, according to a Clinton administration report due out today.

The administration was required to present the report, titled "Support for a Democratic Transition in Cuba," by last year's Helms-Burton Act, which imposes U.S. sanctions on foreign companies operating in Cuba with assets of U.S. citizens seized by the communist government.

The Washington Post and The Miami Herald reported in yesterday's editions that the report estimates the first six years of post-Castro transition would cost between $4 billion and $8 billion, with the "predominant" share coming from the United States.

The report was drafted by the Agency for International Development, with assistance from other agencies.

NATION

Clinton proposes more assistance for students

WASHINGTON (AP) — Poorer students would get more help with their college expenses under a Clinton administration education budget proposal.

The plan calls for expanding Pell grants and increasing funding from the current $2,700 per student per year to $3,000, congressional and administration sources said Monday. The money to pay for the proposal would be raised by shifting funds from a tuition tax credit plan the administration had proposed earlier.

Critics, including some House Republicans, had said the tax plan would benefit middle-income families at the expense of poorer ones.

President Clinton was to discuss the proposal at news conference today.

The plan is part of a larger budget proposal for fiscal 1998 that would raise federal education spending to $29 billion, up from $26.3 billion this year.

The Pell grant plan modifies a proposal to make college tuition more affordable by offering families tax credits of up to $1,500 a year for the first two years of college. Clinton had dubbed the credits "HOPE Scholarships."

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 30	HIGH: 25	HIGH: 25
LOW: 25	LOW: 15	LOW: 15

INSIDE

Arts & Living.....page 5
Classifieds .....page 8
Comics .....page 9
Crossword .....page 8
Editorial .....page 4
FYI.....page 2
News .....page 3
Sports .....page 10

Grades, schedules, financial aid now listed on WISE web page

By Tamar Carroll
Collegian Staff

Using Web Information Systems for Everyone (WISE), University of Massachusetts at Amherst and Boston students can now access their schedules, grades, financial aid awards and bills using desktop computers.

"We want to make it easy for students to access all the services they get [at Whitmore] without having to come in and wait in line," said R. Flek Dinenno, a University Information Systems employee who works on the WISE project.

A combined project of the University Information Systems and the Office of the Amherst Undergraduate Registrar, WISE utilizes software developed at the University of Delaware to allow students to obtain information from Whitmore's IBM 3090 Mainframe using the World Wide Web and either Netscape version 2.0 or above or Microsoft's Internet Explorer.

Students can get to WISE through the UMass' home page (www.umass.edu) by selecting student information, through the registrar's office home page (www-ureg.admin.umass.edu), or at http://wise.umassp.edu.

The students need their UMass Personal Identification Number (PIN) to access their grades and other information.

"Some students were concerned about privacy, but without your PIN you can't get your grades, so the system is very secure," said Abdi Ali, an undergraduate student running the WISE demonstration in the Whitmore lobby this week.

In addition, all the transmissions from the students' computers to the SUN Sparc 5 server are encrypted with Secure Sockets Layer Encryption to prevent anyone from obtaining students' records over the World Wide Web.

"It's the best encryption in the industry right now," said University Information Systems Technical Support Analyst Howell Lee.

"We've taken all the reasonable precautions," added James A. Conz, an employee of the UMass President's Office.

Last semester, only students' schedules and addresses were available on WISE. According to Conz, grades, financial aid and billing information are not the last services to be added.

"In the future, more and more applications are being developed for WISE," Conz said. "The possibilities are endless."

Some applications UMass students may see in the future include information on forms needed from them by the Financial Aid Office, the ability to pay UMass bills over the Internet with credit cards, tax information for UMass employees, changes of address, room requests, transcripts with degree audits, some kind of on-line registration and information on credits for transfer classes.

"Overall, I think people are really interested and excited about it because it's very easy to access," said Ali, who estimated about 50 students had tried WISE yesterday at the demonstration computers in the Whitmore lobby.

Conz said there were over 4,000 accesses to WISE yesterday alone. "I definitely wish we had this when I was a student," he said.

THANG VO/ COLLEGIAN

Pumpkinmania

Bonafide rock star Billy Corgan led the Smashing Pumpkins through an eventful evening at the Mullins Center (See full review, page 5).

Ethics questions for Clinton nominees

By John King
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Republicans are pressing Cabinet nominees Rodney Slater and Alexis Herman about their involvement in President Clinton's re-election campaign while also working for the government.

They see potential for a confirmation fight in Herman's case in the wake of fresh disclosures about her work on White House political activities, a top Senate GOP leadership aide said Monday. The Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee has not scheduled a confirmation hearing for Herman, the nominee to be labor secretary. While the White House voiced fresh support for her on Monday, two friends with senior administration jobs described her as nervous about her confirmation prospects.

In contrast, Slater, Clinton's pick for transportation secretary, is to appear today before the Senate Commerce, Science and Transportation Committee, and his confirmation was described by several Republican aides as all but assured.

However, committee aides have alerted Slater to be ready for questions about his work for Clinton's presidential campaigns and also perhaps his role in generating black voter turnout in Clinton's campaigns for Arkansas governor. He is the federal highway administrator.

Meanwhile, Rep. Dan Burton (R-Ind.) asked Clinton

Turn to NOMINEES, page 2

In days since re-election, Rep. Olver busy with sub-committees, awards, bets

By Mark McGrath
Collegian Staff

In last November's elections, Rep. John Olver (D–Mass.), propelled by the University of Massachusetts and Amherst communities, held on to defeat challenger Jane Swift (R–North Adams), retaining his seat in the U.S. House of Representatives.

In the short period of time since the election, Olver has continued with the type of work that has helped to establish his popularity in western Massachusetts.

Keeping U.S. currency American

The most visible of Olver's efforts in January was his crusade to preserve the integrity of American currency and in the process to save Crane & Co., the Massachusetts based paper producer who has been manufacturing and supplying U.S. currency paper for the past 100 years.

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO
John Olver

The Treasury Department is attempting to subsidize foreign competition in the U.S. Currency Department. According to a press release, the plan would include buying equipment from foreign companies, providing them with payment up front, guaranteeing a long term contract and relaxing the standards for currency paper.

Olver is concerned not only with the business that would be lost in Massachusetts, but with the quality of paper that would be produced by foreign competitors. In addition, a precedent could be set with the shift away from American producers and toward competing markets.

"It is unconscionable that the federal government might circumvent the law in an attempt to offer a special deal to a foreign company," Olver said in a press release. "The law is clear. There cannot be a foreign-owned U.S.–based supplier of currency paper if there is an American-owned, U.S.–based supplier available."

Olver's intervening steps have included meetings with Larry Rolfus, the director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin, as well as sessions with the workers at Crane & Co. in Dalton.

In a letter to Rolfus, Olver expressed concerns regarding the security of American currency if it were to be given to the foreign competitor, citing the fact that their samples are not required to meet the current specifications. Olver maintains that sub–standard samples could mean that final product may not measure up.

In addition, Olver is considering sponsoring new legislation that would make it harder for foreign companies to become involved in the U.S. currency market.

House Appropriations Committee

In December, Olver was named a member of the most powerful committee in the House, the Appropriations Committee for the 105th Congress. Sitting on the committee, his role will be to help establish spending priorities for the 13 subcommittees, which range from Agriculture to Labor, Health and Human Resources and Education.

Additionally, Olver will sit on two of those subcommittees, the Transportation and Military Construction Subcommittees.

As a member of the Transportation subcommittee, he is in a position where he will be able to secure public funds for transportation projects in Massachusetts and will help dictate the direction of federally funded highway projects over the coming years.

"As a member of the Transportation Subcommittee, I will be in an important role as the advocate for transportation projects for the First District," Olver said. "Through my position, I intend to ensure that Western and Central Massachusetts receive their fair share when it comes to transportation dollars."

The Military Construction Subcommittee deals with military housing and facilities worldwide. Olver said that he will make sure all of our military personnel will be properly housed.

"As the defenders of our nation, our servicemen and women deserve quality facilities," Olver said.

Turn to OLVER, page 3

Halogen lamps pose dorm room danger

By Mark McGrath
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Office of Environmental Health and Safety has begun a campaign to educate students on the potential dangers associated with the use of halogen lamps.

According to David J. Beaudin, the University Fire Prevention officer, the campaign will include public education programs and the distribution of posters and brochures throughout residence halls.

Halogen lamps have become popular in college dormitories because of their simple design and space–saving construction, as well as the high amounts of light they produce.

The potential for danger was realized by the UMass community last semester when the first halogen lamp–related fire on campus was reported in Coolidge Residence Hall. The incident occurred when a poster came too close to the top of the lamp.

"[The concern] has been out there for awhile, but the price of the lamps has come down," Beaudin said, explaining why the dangers of the lamps are only now being dealt with. "They are economical for students who want to add something to their room."

According to Ed Mientka, Campus Safety and Fire Prevention Services manager, the lamps can heat up to 1200 degrees — hot enough to set paper ablaze within a matter of seconds.

The dangers of halogen lamps in dormitory rooms include, but are not limited to, hanging posters and tapestries, blowing curtains and drying clothes. Due to space limitations in the rooms, these dangers occur with a greater frequency.

Asked whether Environmental Health and Safety would attempt to impose a residence hall ban on halogen lamps similar to the ones on candles and incense, Beaudin said that it would not be necessary.

"They are one of those things that can be used safely," Beaudin said. "They're nice lamps. This is more of an educational campaign."

John Kinchla, a senior plant and soil sciences major, said that he was aware that halogen lamps posed a danger and remarked, "One time I noticed [a halogen lamp] cooking a bug on top."

Glenna Duffy, a freshman women's studies major, is glad to own and use a halogen lamp in her room.

"The lighting in the room sucks, the lamps are cheap and they light up the whole room," Duffy said. "They're like 12 bucks. And they don't take up that much room."

Michelle Medico, a freshman Italian major from Orchard Hill, noted the prevalence of halogen lamps on her floor.

"There's like six people that have them," Medico said.

To use halogen lamps safely, Environmental Health and Safety recommends keeping them out of areas in which they could be easily knocked over, keeping them at least 18 inches from walls and away from curtains and bunk beds, and keeping the power as low as possible and shutting the lamps off when leaving the room.

THANG VO/ COLLEGIAN

Stormy Mess

Monday night's storm brought a slippery mess to the pioneer valley, causing delays for many on the first day of classes.

For Your Information

PIIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an PYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Wednesday, Jan. 29

Music — The Five College Learning in Retirement Program will sponsor Nigel Coxe on Masterpelces of Piano Literature at Amherst College's Buckley Recital Hall from 10 a.m.–noon. The program is free and open to the public.

Meeting — Amnesty International will hold a General Meeting in 911 Campus Center at 7 p.m.

Meeting — Athletes in Action will hold a weekly meeting at 9 p.m. in the fifth floor lounge of Washington Residence Hall.

Religious — To celebrate the Yarhtzeit of Rebbetzin Chaya Mushka Schneerson, a special one–time class for married couples will be held at the Chabad House at 8 p.m. It is free and open to the public.

Friday, Jan. 31

Religious — A Welcome Back Shabbat will be held at the Chabad House at 6 p.m. A meal will follow the service.

Meeting — The Alliance Christian Fellowship will hold its weekly Time Out Fellowship meeting at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center. This week, Worship and speaker Rev. Dave Berman on the Refreshing Life.

Monday, Feb. 3

Auditions — The University Chorale needs a few good men (particularly basses), and women too. Auditions will be held from 3–5 p.m. or by arrangement. Call 545–4313 for more information.

Tuesday, Feb. 4

Meeting — The Ski Club will hold its first general meeting of the semester at 7 p.m. in Earthfoods. Members can get deals on tuning, waxing and lift passes for $30. For more info, call 545–3437.

Wednesday, Feb. 5

Community Service — The UMass Community Service Program is sponsoring its annual Spring Volunteer Fair today from 11 a.m. – 1 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. Over 40 local service agencies will be on hand to discuss opportunities to volunteer or participate in internships. Any questions, call 545–3327.

Meeting — The UMass Poetry Society will hold its first meeting of the semester at 7 p.m. in room 917 of the Campus Center. New members are always welcome. For more information, call Tim at 546–0562.

Meeting — Have you ever done theatre or always wanted to? If so, then the UMass Theatre Guild wants you! Come to our first meeting of the semester at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center. Many artistic positions are available for the spring shows, Fame and Heidi Chronicles. Audition information will be available. Call the UMTG office at 545–0415 or Tara 546–2104 for more information.

Notices

Orientation — Orientation tours for the W.E.B. DuBois Library will be held on Jan 29–31 and Feb. 3–7. The tours will leave from the Entrance lobby at 10:30 a.m. and 2:30 p.m. daily. We encourage you to come, visit and get to know the library.

Internships — Internships are available working on Earth Day, Hunger, Recycling and Clean Air. Call Melanie at MassPIRG, 545–0199 or stop by the office at 423–A Student Union Building.

Religious — The Alliance Church of the Pioneer Valley in south Amherst will provide rides to church. Pick up is at 9:40 a.m. on campus. Call Mark at 253–0361 for more information.

Support group — Overeaters Anonymous, a group of individuals who share an addiction to food and suffer from compulsive eating and other eating disorders, will hold weekly meetings on Saturdays at 10 a.m. in the Campus Center. The only requirement for membership is the desire to stop eating. There are no dues or fees. Donations are strictly voluntary. For more info, call (617)641–2303.

Astronomy — The Amherst Area Amateur Astronomers Association will hold free public planetarium shows at 4 p.m. every Saturday in February at Amherst College Bassett Planetarium. Appropriate for all ages. Dates: Feb. 1, 8, 15, 22. For information, call Tom Whitney at 256–6234.

Community — The Hampshire County Women, Infant and Children (WIC) Program has opened a new office serving the greater Amherst area, on 150 Fearing St., Amherst. Hampshire County WIC is a supplemental food and nutrition program serving eligible pregnant, breastfeeding and postpartum women and their infants and children under age 5. For more information, call (413)584–3591.

Dance — Cajun Dancing and Appalachian clogging beginner lessons will be offered on Sunday evenings from 6– 7 p.m. at 132 Elm St., Westfield. Partners are not needed and all ages are welcome. No prior dance experience is necessary. Classes are instructed by Maple Run, and non– profit dance group that performs at fairs and community functions. For more information, contact Jo Sarnelli at (413)746–9067.

Film — The interdepartmental program in film studies is offering its fourth annual Multicultural Film Festival: "Emigres, Exiles and Sojourners in Contemporary Cinema" this spring. Screenings and discussions with directors and faculty will be held on Wednesday evenings, 213 Herter Hall at UMass and Stirn Auditorium at Amherst College, at 7 p.m. The first event will be When Mother Comes Home for Christmas, a documentary by Nilita Vachani (Sri Lanka/Greece, 1995) on Feb. 25. For a full schedule, watch for brochures and posters at the beginning of February, or check out our webpage: www.umass.edu/film.

Film studies — Interested in earning a certificate in film studies? Take 18 credits in film and video courses and receive a film studies certificate (equivalent to a minor). Sign up at the beginning of the spring semester in the interdepartmental program in film studies office, 101 South College. Call 545–3659 or see webpage: www.umass.edu/film for more information.

Language — Casa Latina, the Center for Community Education and Culture, will conduct an 8–week Functional Spanish course, beginning February 18 at 7 p.m. in Northampton. Tuition is $260. Students will be divided into three small groups: beginners, intermediate and advanced. Classes will be taught by experienced language instructors who are also native Spanish speakers. For more information, contact Janet Gonzalez at 586–1569.

Outdoor program — Women Exploring the Outdoors will be conducing a series of outdoor adventure programs for women who are survivors of abuse. The focus of these day trips is to provide a comfortable environment within which women can increase their self–confidence, establish safe boundaries and experience their strength in the company of other survivors. All ages, abilities and levels of experience are welcome. Programs scheduled are: Snowshoeing on Sunday, Jan. 26, 8:30 a.m.–4:30 p.m., cost $25; A Day Hike in the Pioneer Valley on Sunday, April 13, 8:30 a.m.–4:30 p.m., cost $20; and Low and High Ropes Course on Sunday, May 4, 8:30 a.m.–4:30 p.m., cost $50. The cost for all three programs is $85.

Campus Police Log

Annoying Behavior
Jan. 27
Housing Staff at Mary Lyon Residence Hall reported threatening behavior by a resident.

Burglary/Breaking and Entering
Jan. 21
A door was found pried open in Washington Residence Hall. Nothing was reported stolen from the room.

Health/Safety Hazard
Jan. 21
There was a report from Dickinson Residence Hall that a water pressure valve was leaking. The Physical Plant was notified.

Jan. 23
A propane tank on a fork lift was reported leaking. Environmental Health and Services was notified.
The odor of gas was reported coming from the Campus Center Building. Environmental Health and Services was notified.

Larceny
Jan. 22
An individual reported a stolen wallet from Memorial Hall.

Jan. 23
An air bag was stolen from a vehicle in parking lot 79.
An individual from Baker Hall was reported to have stolen items from a vending machine.

Motor Vehicle Theft
Jan. 27
A vehicle that was reported stolen from North Village was recovered in Boston.

Vandalism
Jan. 27
A resident's room door was vandalized in Grayson Residence Hall.
Windows were smashed in a vehicle parked in parking lot 33 on University Drive.

nominees

continued from page 1

on Monday to keep White House counsel Bruce Lindsey from being allowed to collect fund-raising documents for congressional investigators because he participated in a meeting that is part of the inquiry.

"I would have preferred to resolve this matter without the necessity of requesting your assistance," Burton, chairman of the House Government Reform and Oversight Committee, said in a letter to the president. "However, I believe it is important that potential conflicts of interest are avoided at the outset."

White House special counsel Lanny Davis had no immediate comment on Burton's request. Before he left the administration recently, former presidential counsel Jack Quinn told Burton he did not believe Lindsey had a conflict of interest and should not be removed from document collecting.

The White House supplied a stack of documents last week about Herman's political activities while serving as director of the White House public liaison office, and committee Republicans are likely to submit written questions to her before settling on any hearing timetable.

Among the areas of GOP interest are Herman's relationship with John Huang, a former Commerce Department official and Democratic fund-raiser at the center of investigations about questionable campaign contributions from non-citizens and companies with foreign interests.

Also, Republicans are eager to explore Herman's role in arranging coffees and other receptions at which campaign contributors and potential supporters were invited into the White House to meet with Clinton.

At one such meeting, disclosed by the White House last week, banking industry leaders were given extraordinary access to Clinton, Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin and the government's top banking regulator, Comptroller of the Currency Eugene Ludwig, who said he would not have attended had he known the event was organized by the Democratic National Committee.

Several GOP sources said Herman probably would receive a detailed written questionnaire about her political activities before any confirmation timetable is considered.

"Everything depends on how long the review of this new material takes," said Joe Karpinski, a spokesman for the committee chairman, GOP Sen. James Jeffords of Vermont.

"The president has strong support for the excellent nominee he's put forward for secretary of labor," White House press secretary Mike McCurry said Monday when asked about the nomination. Herman and Slater coauthored a strategy for winning black voters that, among other things, urged Clinton to court community leaders and activists by inviting them to White House receptions and events. Both Herman and Slater are black.

Corrections

The place and time for the UMass hockey game vs. Merrimack College were incorrectly listed. The game takes place at 7 p.m. at UMass.

The time for the UMass men's basketball game was incorrectly listed. The game starts at 2 p.m.

The date for the US Club Tour '97 at Pearl Street was incorrectly printed. The event takes place on Saturday, Feb. 22.

The Collegian regrets these errors.

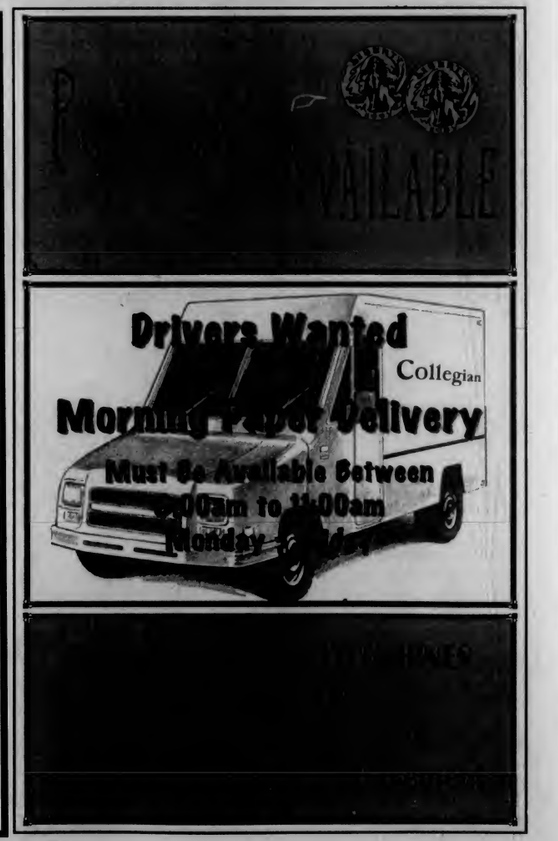
"Snowflakes are one of nature's most fragile things, but just look what they can do when they stick together."
-Vesta M. Kelly

Sorority Rush '97



February 1st - 6th

Information session - Wednesday, January 29th
6:30 -8:30 in Campus Center.

Registration: This week in Campus Center Concourse

All University Women Welcome

ΣΑΤ ΑΕΦ ΔΖ ΧΩ ΖΖΖ ΓΓΥ ΣΚ ΚΚΓ ΧΩ

Local Institute gets grants to continue studies

By Tamar Carroll
Collegian Staff

The Institute for Science and Interdisciplinary Studies (ISIS) in Amherst has recently been awarded two grants to continue their work with Multiple Chemical Sensitivity (MCS) disorder.

Karen Sutherland, director of ISIS' MCS Initiative, said "ISIS has been working to help MCS victims and increase understanding of this devastating but little–known condition for four years. We are very encouraged by this local recognition of their plight."

Multiple Chemical Sensitivity is a chronic, multi–symptom disorder in which people who have been exposed to toxic chemicals develop sensitivities to common everyday chemicals such as exhausts, pesticides, fragrances and cleaning products.

MCS sufferers may experience headaches, thinking disorders, asthma, fatigue, gastro–intestinal disorders, emotional volatility and body aches and pains as a result of very low–level exposure to these common chemicals.

These severe reactions to the chemicals often restrict the lives of MCS sufferers. In severe cases, the MCS sufferer may be constricted to their house and unable to visit with family and friends who carry these chemicals on them.

"In every single way you can think of, it effects your life. I am unable to go places and cut off from family and friends," said Sutherland, who was diagnosed with MCS in 1991. "I can't work in a normal building, I have to watch my diet, and make my home safe."

There is currently no cure for MCS sufferers, although a program of avoidance of chemicals and supplementation to restore normal body functions can ease symptoms and help patients lead more normal lives.

"That's why education is so important," said Sutherland.

Sutherland also stressed the increasing prevalence of the disorder, citing a recent study that reported that 7 percent of the general population in California had fully developed MCS.

The first grant ISIS received is from the Environmental Protection Agency under its Environmental Justice Program and will be used for public and professional education about MCS in Hampden and Hampshire counties.

Sutherland and the MCS Initiative have outlined four target areas: prevention of MCS in the schools, finding safe housing for people with MCS, education of health professionals, including school nurses and psychologists and education of the public.

ISIS has also been awarded a $6,000 grant from the Community Foundation of Western Massachusetts. This grant will be used to develop a research center which will house information on MCS and bring MCS sufferers together with researchers, health professionals, service agencies and other citizens to explore new ways of prevention and treatment of MCS.

ISIS, which is located on the campus of Hampshire College, is an independent science institute. In addition to writing books and magazine articles, ISIS staff conduct a series of educational seminars on how science relates to society and how science can be better and more helpful to people.

The most recent seminar was held Jan. 23 at the University of Massachusetts Campus Center and featured Chancellor David K. Scott.

ISIS is currently involved with several other projects, including the clean–up of toxic waste at the Westover Air Force Base in Chicopee, work with the Secoya of rainforest Ecuador to cope with oil development and research into quantum teleportation and human genomes.

"ISIS is a very good place to work on ways to make science better," said ISIS Director Herbert Bernstein. "We're both a think tank and an action tank. That's what's so good about it."

For more information on the MCS Initiative, including volunteer opportunities, call (413) 536–8059.

Annual Annex Experience
Juan Concepcion, a junior Biology major, working at the Textbook Annex to help students find the right books.

Olver

continued from page 1

The Appropriations Committee is nothing new for Olver, who served on the Foreign Operations and the Treasury, Postal Services Subcommittees during the 103rd Congress.

Starting the home fires

With the coldest of colds starting to inflict many regions of the United States, Olver joined a bipartisan coalition in signing a letter urging President Clinton to release $420 million in emergency contingency Low–Income Heating Assistance Program (LIHEAP) funds.

With the costs of energy skyrocketing, many families will be having a difficult time keeping themselves warm this winter, which has been especially cold in many areas of the country.

The money contained in the LIHEAP fund is allocated for use in these circumstances, and consists of the $300 million appropriated for this year and $120 million rolled over from the previous year. It can be freed up at the President's discretion and must be used for the purpose for which it was intended.

The letter, signed by 149 members of Congress, thanks Clinton for freeing $180 million last year and urges him use the fund again this year, citing statistics which indicate the level to which low–income families are being strained.

"With the cost of heating oil rapidly rising in New England, it is essential that we ensure that families are not forced to choose between heat and food this winter," Olver urged.

John "The Deficit Hawk" Olver

In mid–January, Olver received some recognition for his deficit–reducing work during second session of the 104th Congress. Along with Rep. Richard Neal (D–Springfield), Olver was recognized by the Concord Coalition, a non– partisan grassroots organization that advocates deficit reduction, a balanced budget, and fiscal responsibility.

"The Concord Coalition is one of the most respected organizations in the nation," Olver said in a press release. "This recognition is a clear sign that I am making the right choices in my quest to balance the federal budget."

The recognition came in the form of the 1996 Deficit Hawk Award and his naming to the organization's Honor Roll, both of which reflect the congressman's earnest desire to restore a financial balance in the country. Acknowledging that Congress has to make many tough decisions, Olver says he is proud "to be helping to put our nation on the right fiscal path."

Squeezing the cheese

Proving that he has not lost touch with the citizens he represents, Olver showed his support for the Super Bowl– bound New England Patriots by engaging in a friendly wager with his friends in the Wisconsin delegation.

Taking part in a tradition that has become common in championship qualifying areas, Olver and his fellow Massachusetts representatives staked some of the state's tastiest treats on the local team.

If the Patriots had won, Olver and friends would have been eating fine cheese and bratwurst for dinner this week. However, since they lost, the Wisconsin representatives are enjoying regional delicacies such as clam chowder, Mill City Beer, Indian pudding, Cape Cod potato chips, Boston cream pies, Portuguese soup and Harbor Suites chocolates, along with Olver's contribution, apple cider doughnuts.

The Collegian News Department

...always has room for new writers interested in reporting on various topics of interest to UMass students. Come to our office in the Campus Center basement, or call Laura Stock, News Editor, at 545–1762 and contribute to our news coverage.

UNIVERSITY STORE'S Textbook Annex UMASS AMHERST

The Textbook Annex will be open
EXTRA HOURS
for your Shopping Convenience

Tuesday	January 28	9AM - 8PM
Wednesday	January 29	9AM - 8PM
Thursday	January 30	9AM - 8PM
Friday	January 31	9AM - 6PM
Saturday	February 1	11AM - 4PM
Monday-Friday	February 3-7	9AM-6PM

Mental Health Groups Spring 1997

MONDAY	TUESDAY	WEDNESDAY	THURSDAY
Mindfulness-based Stress Management Group — Learn to live fully in the present moment. Mindfulness meditation will be used as the foundation for all stress management exercises. This group is appropriate for both general stress management as well as for assistance in managing stress related medical disorders. Group runs for 8 weeks, Mondays, 3:30 - 5:30 p.m.	Self-Discovery Groups — Learn to develop better social skills; improve relationships; become more assertive; improve connections with others; feel more in control of your life; and cope with sadness, lonliness, or isolation by talking with others who share your concerns. These groups run for 10 weeks. Group I - Tuesdays, 3:30 - 5:00 p.m.	Self-Discovery Groups — Learn to develop better social skills; improve relationships; become more assertive; improve connections with others; feel more in control of your life; and cope with sadness, lonliness, or isolation by talking with others who share your concerns. These groups run for 10 weeks. Group II - Wednesdays, 3 - 4:30 p.m.	Ninos Adultos de Familias Disfuncionales — This is a therapy group for individuals who would like to understand how their upbringing continues to influence relationships in the present. Issues such as exploring/expressing feelings, developing self-esteem and breaking dysfunctional patterns are central. Group is held in Spanish. Group runs for 8 weeks, Wednesdays, 3:30 - 5:00 p.m.	Men's Group - If you are a man who has difficulty with self-confidence, friendships, romantic relationships, or expressing anger you're not alone. This weekly discussion group can help you understand and overcome these problems as group members talk with and learn from each other. The group is co-led by a man and woman and runs for 8 - 10 weeks, Thursdays, 4:00 - 5:00 p.m

All groups require a pre-group interview. For more information, or to sign up for an interview, please call the Mental Health Division of University Health Services at 545-2337 or stop by 127 Hills North, M - F, 8:00 a.m. - 5 p.m.

Academics and More !!!

UMass Division of Continuing Education

For a free course catalog, call 413-545-0107 or e-mail contined@admin.umass.edu
Explore our web site and see how we can help you - http://www.umass.edu/contined/

Division of Continuing Education
University of Massachusetts Amherst
providing access to adult, nontraditional education for over 25 years

Tons of credit undergrad courses — in the evening!
Nearly 100 noncredit workshops — affordable, fun, practical, including
- Bartending,
- GMAT, GRE, LSAT, & MCAT Preparation,
- Magical Arts,
- Photography,
- ESL,
- EMT Training,
- Marketing,

and CHOCOLATE !

ge Pizza

- Come and See the NEW College Pizza
- Featuring new larger '18 Pizzas
- New Larger '16 Subs made with French Bread baked daily
- Open for lunch everyday.
- Your satisfaction is guaranteed - Your money back on food replacement if you are not fully satisfied.
- We promise fast delivery to our delivery areas in Amherst & Hadley.
- Come see 99.3 WHMP broadcast live from 2-4 pm Feb. 2 - Plenty of FREE GIVEAWAYS

150 Fearing St. Amherst
549-6098 or 549-6073

WHMP 99.3

College Pizza – Across from Southwest
We us goods & we're proud of our product.

DAILY COLLEGIAN

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592
http://www.umass.edu/rso/collegian

Jacob W. Michaels Editor-in-Chief Chris Taylor Conner Managing Editor
Alycia Hines Business Manager Josh Sylvester Production Manager Craig J. Brody Advertising Manager
David Voldan Advertising Production Manager Lisa Chiu Senior Diversity Editor

Jeremy Brothers Arts & Living Editor
Humphrey brown III Black Affairs Editor
Lisa Chiu Developing Nations Editor
Mike Burke Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jamie Sinsheimer Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sarah Kimmel Jewish Affairs Editor
Raghuram Vadarevu Multicultural Affairs Co-Editor
Christine Soh Multicultural Affairs Co-Editor
Laura Stock News Editor
Thang Vo Photography Editor
Casey Kane Sports Co-Editor
Chris Stamm Sports Co-Editor
Michelle Hillman Women's Issues Editor
Marc Dionne Editorial Production Manager
Position Vacant Systems Manager
Eric R. Remillard-IV Finance Manager
Position Vacant Circulation Manager
Feisal Ahmad Marketing Manager
Jaclyn E. Alberti Classifieds Manager
Lyle A. Henry Operations Manager
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Thomas F. Sweeney, Jr. Graphics Advisor/Instructor
David Quist Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Overseeing the overseers

Occasionally an odor of corruption floats out from behind the brightly-lit facade presented by our social authorities and "pillars of the community."

The authorities, however, seem less concerned that the scent will ruin their game than a couple of stoners smoking- up on the path behind school at recess. And after all, what do they really have to fear? One or two individuals may have to take the fall if things get really hot, but the institutions remain, unchanged and secure.

The Standing Committee on Law Enforcement and Development (SCOLED) is aiming for some real changes in the way law enforcement corruption is dealt with in Connecticut. SCOLED has presented a bill at a hearing for the Connecticut Legislature which, if passed, would create a statewide Civilian Law Enforcement Oversight Board. Introduced by Republicans, the bill has received bipartisan support.

Daniel Bodah

Civilian oversight of police is not a radical idea. Most of the other English-speaking populations in the world have recourse to well-established Civilian Boards should they complain of abuses of power by the police. The idea is as sensible and important as any limitation of conflict of interest.

What could be a bigger conflict of interest than allowing those accused of a crime to conduct their own investigation and hand down their own disciplinary actions? That is how allegations of departmental corruption at police departments are now handled in the United States.

The Civilian Oversight proposal SCOLED advances has several features intended to provide honest-to-goodness impartial investigations into cases of alleged police misconduct. The bill would create an Oversight Board consisting of elected commissioners from each county in Connecticut.

Working groups consisting of two of these commissioners, with a Staff Counsel, would carry out any investigations and then present recommendations to the Full Board for a final decision. No commissioner would work on a case involving their home county, to avoid conflict of interest. The Board could seek and enforce subpoenas, and its remedies could include job termination for officers found to have failed in the proper performance of their duties.

There's been a lot of attention given in the last few years to instances that prove the existence of police misconduct. It makes for great news, and that's educated a lot of Americans who won't ever be on the receiving end of an illegal baton blow that there is sometimes something awful- smelling behind the smiling blue facade of police respectability. The middle class in the United States is ready now for reasonable oversight of cops. The lower classes, who've always been heavily brutalized by the authorities, will certainly welcome any reprieve. There are some, however, who have been objecting strenuously to the SCOLED bill — and their objections are violent.

Mr. Ritt Goldstein, chairman and founder of SCOLED, is finding out that challenges to the political power of the police have a price. Goldstein claims that he has been the subject of two assassination attempts as well as daily attacks with toxic chemicals. According to Goldstein, blame lies with several area police departments. Goldstein has observed police cruisers spraying chemicals on his car. He has documents from the Health Department and a private lab showing that his home and car contain strangely high levels of toxins.

The assassination attempts claimed by Goldstein include an incident in which his rear window was shot out while he was in his parked car, and an incident in which his tire blew out and was found to show signs of deliberate cutting. What is going on here? Terrorism, plain and simple, right here in the land of the free.

Among the items presented at the SCOLED legislative hearing was a well-documented incident in which two cops tried to put out a $10,000 murder contract on an activist. Obviously, some cops in Connecticut take attempts at making them reasonably accountable very seriously. Perhaps a little too seriously. In the end, though, these actions only further prove the importance and necessity of civilian oversight of law enforcement.

The events surrounding the SCOLED bill, including the ongoing campaign of terror against Goldstein, are particularly important to watch because ground is being broken in Connecticut that could eventually establish a new national standard of civilian investigation into misconduct by the authorities. The attacks on Goldstein reveal how urgent these types of laws are. As a group including citizens of numerous states and other countries, we UMass students should take this opportunity to learn from the events in Connecticut and apply this awareness at home.

Daniel Bodah is a Collegian columnist.

Stupid is as stupid does

I was watching SportsCenter last week when I saw Dennis Rodman kick a cameraman in the groin in the middle of a basketball game. Knowing that the NBA was going to suspend him for a long, long time, and knowing that he's done things like this before, I commented to my housemates that I thought Rodman was the stupidest man alive.

My housemates thought about this for a minute, and then said, "No, Luke, we think you might be the stupidest person alive."

"How do you figure that," I said.

"Everything you do is stupid."

"Like what?"

This was probably not the best thing to say, because they've known me for a long time.

"Remember the time you got so stoned that you decided to dance like a leprechaun on the grass outside of Baker with nothing but loafers on and broke your ankle?"

"Yeah."

"That was pretty stupid."

I'm pretty sure Rodman gets stoned, but no broken ankles so far. Okay, chalk one up for Dennis.

"Or what about the time you skipped your term paper for Public Health because it was Halloween, and went out instead, and ended up with a C/D in the easiest class on campus. Remember that?"

"Yeah."

"That wasn't too bright."

I have to imagine that even Dennis Rodman could get at least a C in Public Health. Rebound, Rodman.

Luke Meredith

"Remember that time you hooked up with that girl and left a message on her machine the next day calling her the wrong name?"

"Oh yeah."

"Not too good there, schwag boy."

If you saw Rodman's TV show, you know he doesn't have to remember women's names because apparently they flock to him in droves. Another one for the Worm.

"And what about the time you drank almost a whole bottle of vodka and passed out at 8:30, only to resurface three hours later throwing piles of junk mail down the hall yelling, 'You want your mail, damn it?! Take it, take it all!'"

"Oh yeah." My firing from the dorm mailroom the next week wasn't really a big surprise.

"How about when you called Arizona St. quarterback Jake Plummer 'lim' in one of your columns. He almost won the Heisman, you know."

"Whatever. It's not like he'll ever read it."

"Schwag-esque, Luke."

"There was the time you cooked a whole box of ziti with only half a pan of water. Remember? The water evaporated and the pasta stuck to the pan, and you had to order Dominos — again."

They called me "idiot-boy" for a month after that one.

"How about when you went to Spring Carnival up at Plymouth State and you wore your sandals and nothing else. Recall how cold it got, chief?"

I think Rodman gets free shoes from Nike like every day. Alright, four for Dennis, none for me.

"You officially renounced your status as a Patriots fan last season, didn't you?"

"Yes."

"Not a very sharp decision, huh?"

"I guess not."

I started to see their point. Maybe Rodman wasn't so dumb after all. Maybe I am the dumbest person alive. I mean, my housemates made a valid argument. My mistakes over the past few years have been many, which I suppose has a lot to do with my complete lack of common sense.

"Remember Spring Concert 1995? You got tanked up and decided to go crowd surfing during Blues Traveler, and got dropped on your head. Nice call, pimp daddy."

I had had enough.

"Alright, alright. We've established my stupidity. Can we move on?"

"One last memory, and we'll be done. Remember that girl from South East St.? Oh my goodness!"

"That was you, Romeo!" I said.

"Oh yeah."

I think I owe you an apology. Mr. Rodman. Maybe my housemates and I aren't as bright as we thought we were. Stupid is as stupid does, I guess.

Luke Meredith is a Collegian columnist.

Welcome back!

We currently have space for new columnists. If you are interested in writing for the Ed/Op page, please attend an introductory meeting on either Thursday Jan. 30 at 6 p.m. or Monday Feb. 3 at 7 p.m. Come prepared with a sample column. Returning writers must attend one of these meetings as well. If you have any questions or problems please come down to the Collegian office and talk with Mike Burke, or call 545-1491.

Opinion/Editorial

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Whose country is this anyway?

Last November, students all over this campus, myself included, seized the moment so that our voices might be heard. We trudged down to the Bangs Center, the Immanuel Lutheran Church and various other spots around Amherst to perform what has been called our "civic duty." We voted.

Yes, our votes were counted, and the candidates who got the most of them are now sitting in their offices dictating how our lives are going to be for the next couple of years. But in light of recent revelations about the campaign financing business, one has to wonder how our voices will actually be heard now that the election has gone away.

Mark McGrath

The New York Times recently ran a story about Republican season ticket holders— — heavy campaign contributors who are given special access to politicians in Washington based on the fact that they have donated at least $250,000 to the National Committee.

What, you may ask, are the rewards an individual or corporation can receive for throwing around such large amounts of money? Season ticket holders received meetings with House and Senate committee chairmen, lunch with Republican Presidential Nominee Bob Dole and House Speaker Newt Gingrich and support personnel in Washington to help with party related requests. In other words, they have purchased special access to our government.

Current laws forbid individual donations over a certain amount, but leave giant loopholes in which corporations and "committees" can donate unlimited amounts of money to the National Committees, which in turn can pass the money on to particular candidates.

Once again, the people of this once-great country are being forced to bear witness as their government buckles under the pressure of Corporate America and the money it possesses.

It should come as no surprise that five of the leading contributors and season ticket holders are the Philip Morris Co., RJR Nabisco, Brown/Williamson, US Tobacco and the Tobacco Institute. The grandaddy of them all, Philip Morris, donated $2.5 million to politicians across the spectrum.

I've often wondered why a country of the people, for the people and by the people would allow certain corporations to poison the people, addict the people and kill the people with their products. The answer is evident.

One corporate executive admitted that his company donated in excess of $500,000 (more than seven times the average worker's salary) because he had to keep up with his competitors, who had given similar amounts. Otherwise, his voice would not have been heard. He agreed that the system was despicable, but couldn't offer a solution.

While that story highlights the Republican end of the spectrum, shady donations are hardly limited to the GOP.

Just look at President Clinton and the trouble he and fundraiser John Huang have run into with Asian and Asian- American campaign donors. The Democrats have already returned over $1.5 million in donations because the sources are of a questionable nature.

Among the donors are John Lee, a Korean businessman who owns a company which produces outdoor electronic display boards. Apparently, Lee was looking for an American partner, and he figured Clinton had a little power to throw around. A quarter of a million isn't such a high price when the deal will make millions. According to Lee's company, he wasn't looking for favors, but a backup musician. Clinton plays sax, and the piano-playing Lee figured it would be fun to have the president belt out a few tunes with him. Yep, I believe ya' Mr. Lee.

Other Clinton donors have given money with interests in opening up the American markets to their corporations and gaining American backing for business enterprises. Many of the donations currently under investigation were illegally received from sources outside the United States.

It's bad enough that our government has a price, but knowing that people who don't and never have lived here have more power over the actions of the United States President than American citizens makes my stomach turn.

In the days of old, city bosses would buy votes in order to win elections. Since then, the corrupt have found that buying public officials is a much more economical and reliable method of operating. Cut out the middle man. Politicians win, corporations win, foreign investors win, people lose. Rich get richer, poor get poorer. Politicians don't care— they've already won.

But the people of the United States need not worry. They rocked the vote. They made a difference. They put in office a cast of characters over whom they have little or no control. There's so much money floating around Washington that you or I would have to be stupid to believe that our vote carries any amount of influence in comparison with these corporations.

Last I remember, we the people were taking part in a democracy, a government exercised by its people. Apparently the President and House Speaker don't believe in democracy. Unfortunately, the road to reform goes directly through them. Clinton has proposed limiting contributions from any individual or corporation to $100,000, but the Republicans have strongly opposed such a plan.

Even if the Republicans would accept, the problem would not go away. The only answer is to take the money out of politics, to use tax money to finance limited campaigns, in which viable candidates receive equal access to the American people, who in turn could judge those candidates based on their convictions and their ability to act as an arm the people they represent.

Our vote may have meant nothing last election, but we must not allow the same to be said in two or four years. Support candidates and political action groups in favor of overhauling the election system. If the American people are to take their country back, someone's going to have to break Corporate America's hold on the government. And judging by Washington's unwillingness to adapt, it's going to have to be the voters.

Mark McGrath is a Collegian columnist..

Letters to the Editor

A call to help save the air

To the Editor:

Recently, I attended hearings in Boston regarding the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) proposal tightening health standards for smog and small soot particles. With 60,000 residents (including over 1,100 from Massachusetts) dying every year due to air pollution, I was elated to discover that we could finally do something to clean up the air we breathe.

However, this legalization will undoubtedly stall or emerge hopelessly diluted if it is not backed by the citizens that it aims to protect. The coal and oil industries, electric utilities, the chemical industry and the auto industry are mounting a major campaign against these life saving clean air rules. Their arguments against the health-based standards exaggerate their costs and ignore the cost to society in lives lost, health care costs and absenteeism at work and school.

Now is not the time for apathy. I urge students to take the advice of the medical community. Write or call your senator and representative to voice your concern about this critical issue. We cannot afford to wait any longer.

Kelcey Morange
MASSPIRG
Field

COLLEGIAN LETTERS POLICY

Letters to the Editors are encouraged. They can be mailed to:

Letters to the Editor, The Daily Collegian, 113 Campus Center, UMass, Amherst, MA 01003.

All letters must be typed and accompanied with a name, phone number and address for confirmation reaons.
Letters may also be faxed to 413-545-1592.

Arts & Living

Corgan leads Pumpkins into Mullins

By Mike Burke
Collegian Staff

SMASHING PUMPKINS
William D. Mullins Center
Jan. 28

Amazingly, the Smashing Pumpkins weren't one of the many casualties in the alternative rock world of 1996 — but their survival certainly didn't rest on their live show.

Unlike their highly orchestrated and often beautiful studio albums, the Smashing Pumpkins maintain a far harsher and intense sound in concert — often losing the band's knack for delicate and intricate songwriting.

Yet even with this major fault, the Smashing Pumpkins remain one of the few "alternative" rock acts who matter and last night the band proved their worth — even if it wasn't beautiful.

Opening up with the title track from their 1995 double-CD Mellon Collie and the Infinite Sadness, the band eased their way onto the stage. The Elton John influenced piano track marked one of the rare moments where the Pumpkins delicate side leaked out amidst the blinding strobe lights.

With thousands of teenage girls screaming, like a scene straight out of Beatlemania, the band hit stride with their hit single "Tonight, Tonight." Lead singer and guitarist, Billy Corgan ended the song with a brief, "We love you," going out to the packed arena sending much of the Mullins Center into a pubescent Pumpkinmania.

Dressed in his trademark outfit: long sleeve black t-shirt reading "Zero" and shiny metallic pants, Corgan appeared dwarfed in front of the 60 foot space age tower covered with stage lights. But his larger-than-life rock star image was in full effect as he pulled off all the classic moves of a rock-and-roll legend — including the small talk stage banter. Guitarist James Iha often chimed in while bassist D'arcy remained in her bandmates shadows.

At times Corgan's antics were excessive, but the Pumpkins have never been known for their frugality; the band recently released a five CD box set, entitled The Aeroplane Flies High set collecting various singles and B-sides from Mellon Collie.

Last night's show marked the seventh New England date in the Pumpkins seven month world tour, and for many fans the novelty had worn off. For the most part, last night's set list mirrored that of their November show in Hartford, Conn. One welcomed addition, "Rhinoceros," from the band's debut album Gish, highlighted the early portion of the show.

As expected, the band cruised through most of their made- for-MTV hit singles including Siamese Dream's "Disarm" and "Cherub Rock" and Mellon Collie's "Zero" and "33," which Corgan pointed out recently reached number one in the charts in South Africa. Unfortunately the band only played the three aforementioned tracks from their stunning first two albums, Gish and Siamese Dream.

For the first of three encores, the band opened with "1979," which has been nominated for the Record of the Year Grammy; the Pumpkins also scored six more nominations. With the help of Jimmy Frog (of the Frogs) Corgan sang an enjoyable, though lackadaisical, version of the hit song. Jimmy Frog, dressed all in green — like a frog — stumbled around the stage like he did in Hartford.

For the most part, last night's show offered little new for Pumpkins fans, but at least they kept their fans' interest — which most of the band's peers in the "alternative" rock can not claim.

Ironically, Corgan left the stage after the third encore with both fingers in his ears blocking out the droning generic feedback filling the Mullins Center. After three lackluster encores, even Corgan knew enough was enough.

It is safe to say the Pumpkins will never be hailed as, "The Greatest Live Band in the World," or anything close, but Corgan and company do shine in the studio, where they have produced three of the only records that will outlast this debacle known as "alternative" rock.

If the world was just, Fountains of Wayne, the opening band, simply would not exist. Here is a band that hasn't quite grasped the concept of "overkill." As the old saying goes: if you have heard one song you've heard them all. Attempting to recapture the greatness of pop legends like Brian Wilson and Ray Davies, Fountains drowned in their own lack of originality.

Why was such a band opening for the Pumpkins? Simple. The band, led by Chris Collingwood and Adam Schlesinger, released their self-titled debut album on Scratchie Records, owned by Iha and D'arcy.

Schlesinger may be best known for penning the hit title track to the Tom Hanks' film, That Thing You Do — and if last night was any indication, Schlesinger is bound for one- hit-wonder fame.

THANG VO \ COLLEGIAN
Smashing Pumpkins bassist D'arcy helped bring Pumpkinmania to the Mullins Center last night.

Academy of Music hosts NY Urban Bush Women

By Jeremy Brothers
Collegian Staff

The Northampton Arts Council is back at it again. This winter, they're heating up our weekends with their "Four Sundays in February" series at the Academy of Music in Northampton, co-sponsored with Smith College and Community Health Plan.

The first performance of the series, the Urban Bush Women's "From Harlem to Hamp '97: An Expanded Vision," can be seen on Feb. 2, at 2 p.m.

A resident company of the Harlem School of the Arts since 1984, the Urban Bush Women's performance combines dance, theater and musical works rooted in the folklore and spiritual traditions of African-Americans.

"From Harlem to Hamp '97: An Expanded Vision" is a special benefit for the Harlem School of the Arts' new satellite school which is scheduled to open at the Williston Northampton School in Easthampton this summer.

In addition to the Urban Bush Women, the first installation of the "Four Sundays in February" series presents the Harlem School of the Arts Renaissance II Dance Company and Movement Ensemble from Northampton.

With their upcoming performance, the Renaissance II Dance Company will mark their third straight year in the "Four Sundays in February" series. Their performance this year has been choreographed by the Roots of Brazil, another resident dance company of the Harlem School of the Arts.

Four Saturdays in February: The Urban Bush Women, will perform one show at 2 p.m. at the Academy of Music in Northampton. Tickets are $15 & $10 and are available at the Northampton Box Office in Thornes Marketplace, 586-8686.

COURTESY BETTE MARSHALL
The Urban Bush Women from the Harlem School of Arts.

TRAVEL SMART! FROM NEW YORK
One Way Roundtrip
LONDON $130 $245
PARIS $202 $379
ROME $235 $438
SAN JOSE, COSTA RICA $277 $517
Subsidized flights. Fares to worldwide destinations. Eurail passes available.
Weekend surcharges may apply. Customs-immigration taxes apply. Fares subject to change without notice. Int'l. student I.D. cards may be required.
PRISM TRAVEL
212-986-8420*
800 ?/? 9676

You Can
UNLOCK YOUR TALENT
at the Performing Arts Division
UMass Arts Council discounts for UMass students
MUSIC * THEATER * DANCE * INSTRUCTION
REGISTRATION JANUARY 27 - FEBRUARY 7
PAD OFFICE * 73 BARTLETT HALL * 545-0519

thinking about
medical school?
Kaplan can help.
Coming Soon!
"How to Get Into Graduate School"
The definitive guide from Kaplan and Newsweek
Each year, Kaplan helps prepare more students for the MCAT than all other test prep courses combined. Our expert teachers, customized curriculum and proven methods can help you get a higher score. We also offer the best in admissions and financial aid consulting. Call to find out how we can help you.
the leader in test prep and admissions consulting
KAPLAN
1-800-KAP-TEST
www.kaplan.com

SPRING BREAK
CANCUN • NASSAU • MAZATLAN
10% OFF
PACKAGES STARTING AT $299
INCLUDES 25 MEALS AND TRANSFERS
FREE TRIPS
FREE PARTIES
FREE DRINKS
FREE MEALS
FREE

Hats off to NU's Crowder

Fish–heads, Chowder–heads... Crowder–heads.

If you go to Quincy Market and the North End in Boston, you'll be able to find the first two phenomenons on almost every street corner and restaurant. If you take the E train on the Green line from North Station, you'll find the last phenomenon right off the Symphony stop in the Back Bay, near the corner of Mass. Ave and Huntington.

JORMA KANSANEN ON THE NHL

Bruce Crowder is in his first year as coach of one–fourth of the Beanpot register, the Huskies of Northeastern University, but his team is not yet a palatable sensation. Being a classic old hockey barn, Matthews Arena has history on its side, and so does the program (instated in 1953), but Crowder's Husky history has only begun. After last weekend's 4–0 win over UMass at home, the record for the Huskies stood at 6–17–2, with only two of those wins in Hockey East conference action.

As a former Boston Bruin, maybe it teamed up with his brother Keith in the early '80s, and ex–UMass–Lowell head coach, where he received New England, Hockey East and National Coach of the Year honors last season, character is not in question with Crowder. But his young team has had to learn his kind of character the hard way this year — and replacing UMass and Merrimack as the doormat team in one of the top leagues in the country.

After two consecutive losses to the Minutemen over intersession, where UMass came back from second period deficits, the frustration showed on Crowder's face. He has been put in an unenviable situation from the start of the season — dealing with a corps of players that he did not recruit, or even know specifically beyond the standpoint of an outsider.

"Its frustrating to a certain point," Crowder said, after his team's 4–3 loss on Jan. 17 to UMass at the Mullins Center. "Eventually, the kids got to wake up, do it themselves and learn to tackle the third period. A loss is a loss by either one goal or a hundred."

"It was tough at the start of this year, because the players didn't know the coach, and the coach didn't know the players. It took up to the first 12 games of the season for us to get used to each other, and this is not like the pros, with a lot of exhibition games before the season."

Crowder is more than a great coach, he is a great guy. He'll be the first one with a joke in the press room, and as I found out at HE Media day, he'll attack a buffet line with the fervor of his NHL days (i.e. elbows up). The Husky coach revived the Lowell Riverhawk program, taking them to the tournament twice in his five–year tenure, so UMass coach Joe Mallen knows Crowder can get the job done.

"The key is that they are a better team than their record shows, and have been in a lot of one goal games," Mallen said. "They'll get over the hump, and win some of those games in the second half. [Crowder] has had a lot of holes to fill, but he has a lot of young guys coming in, so they'll be alright."

Truthfully, Mallen exactly knows what Crowder is going through. Three years ago, Mallen had to start his own program from scratch with a tough conference schedule. Motivation is key for a team on the outside looking in on success, and the Huskies still have a HE playoff spot to shoot for since Maine is ineligible for postseason competition (due to a minor paperwork mishap by coach Shawn Walsh).

But Mallen also brought up the fact that, being a college hockey team in Boston, Northeastern has one of the ultimate, palatable motivations of all — the Beanpot.

"There's two things, the first is no matter what, as long as Maine is ineligible, [Northeastern] will make the playoffs," Mallen said. "They also have the Beanpot coming up, and that's a big, big hype thing for all the teams in the Beanpot, and so they have something else to play for."

"So, they still have something to shoot for, and they are not going to lay down and die. Actually, it is the same motivation I had to use in our first year. We will still make the playoffs, and that is enough to keep them focused."

"It makes it a lot easier as the season goes on, for example, if they're only going to take eight teams, and you're in ninth, all of the sudden you can lose guys quick. But right now, they can do both."

Jorma Kansanen is a Collegian columnist.

■ guards

continued from page 12

the Owls.

The senior guard combo of Edgar Padilla (20 pts.) and Carmelo Travieso (28 pts.) each knocked down six threes, while sophomore Charlton Clarke tallied three. The win over Temple (9–6, 3–3) marks the Minutemen's fourth consecutive win with a three guard line up.

In the first half, Padilla set the pace early, nailing his first four consecutive attempts from 3–point land while the Owls held the advantage 16–12.

In the second half, each of the three guards notched big treys that killed Temple's momentum. Clarke, who early in the season joked about his outside shooting, went 3–for–3 from behind the arc. In fact, Clarke just didn't miss at all going 4–for–4 from the line and 5–for–5 from the field tallying 17 points.

The UMass defense, most notably Inus Norville, did a good job equalizing Temple big–man Marc Jackson (13 pts., 8 rebs) and held freshman point guard Juan "Pepe" Sanchez scoreless in the first frame, while Tyrone Weeks crashed his hometown boards with a career–high 16 rebounds.

While the Minutemen found success in its outside shooting, that was not coach James "Bruiser" Flint's game plan.

"The game plan was to dribble, penetrate and take the open shots," Clarke said.

Padilla's thoughts were the same, "Coming in, we didn't want to shoot many threes. That's what they want us to do, and if we miss them, then we are playing their game."

Though UMass did not see much offensive output from its post players, as Ketner scored three points and Weeks six, that does not mean the Minuteman game plan has changed. Since day one at the helm, Flint has always said that a team without post presence is a fraud. Even with the success of the three guard attack, which has led UMass on a 4–0 win streak, Flint's mentality has not changed.

"We're not going to start shooting threes [all the time]," Flint said. "Temple plays the zone, that's going to give you certain things. The threes that we did shoot were open. I said don't get happy out there, if they start running at you, pump fake and find somebody else. We did the same thing in the B.C. game."

Temple coach John Chaney saw the UMass guards as the straw that broke the camel's back, even though he felt his camels did not use their heads. At times, the 6–foot–10, 270 pound Jackson found himself shooting from outside. Terry Mills, he is not.

"I think we played with too much emotion," Chaney said. "It is fine for football teams to play with emotion. In basketball, it is the worst thing. Really, they [UMass] have some leadership and poise. Our team had a chance if they played with their heads. Mass has never lost a step. When the guards are playing well, anybody can have a problem with them."

■ hockey

continued from page 12

UMass netminder Brian Regan while he dropped into his customary butterfly position.

The Minutemen wasted litule time in retaliating, this time victimizing Reasoner. As the sophomore manned the point of an umbrella–styled power play, Rob Bonneau stole the puck right off his stick and, without an Eagle within 40 feet, converted on a clean break away 4:37 into the game. Bonneau completed the goal with a brilliant deke, sneaking the puck past a befuddled Greg Taylor's left side while continuing to fake to the right.

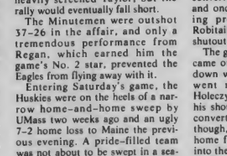
BC's Tony Hutchins tallied on a power play rebound at 1:14 of the third, followed by a blistering Chris Masters top shelf slap shot at 9:41 that put the Eagles up 3–1.

The Minutemen cut their deficit to 3–2 when Nathan Sell redirected a low Mike Gaffney slap shot past a heavily screened Taylor, but the rally would eventually fall short.

The Minutemen were outshot 37–26 in the affair, and only a tremendous performance from Regan, which earned him the game's No. 2 star, prevented the Eagles from flying away with it.

Entering Saturday's game, the Huskies were on the heels of a narrow home–and–home sweep by UMass two weeks ago and an ugly 7–2 home loss to Maine the previous evening. A pride–filled team was not about to be swept in a season series by UMass and looked to gain steam heading into Monday's Beanpot matchup with BC.

No one who bore witness to Saturday's game at Northeastern will deny that referee Drew Taylor was whistle happy. Husky, and former Boston Bruin, public address announcer Joel Perlmutter earned his pay as Taylor called just about everything from the get–go.



The game never developed a flow while the teams alternated between power play, shorthanded and 4–on–4 situations and seldom skated at full strength. For only 20:10, just a third of the 60 minute game, were the teams allowed to skate five aside.

"There was no flow to the game whatsoever," Mallen said. "You couldn't get regular lines over [the boards] and it was a very slowed down game."

The Huntington Hounds took advantage of the jumbled flow, killing all eight of their shorthanded situations, including a trio of UMass 5–on–3 advantages. Coach Bruce Crowder's team, meanwhile, converted twice on the power play and once while shorthanded, helping promising freshman Marc Robitaille to his first Hockey East shutout.

The game's lone full strength goal came on a UMass defensive breakdown when a failed breakout pass went right to Roger Holeczy. Holeczy had an easy goal but wrung his shot off the post. Todd Barclay converted on his open net chance though, sending Holeczy's rebound home for a 1–0 Husky lead 15:40 into the game.

Erik Kaminski tallied twice in the second for Northeastern and Barclay added his second of the night late in the third to close off the scoring.

NEED TO SELL A CAR?
Collegian Classifieds

What's on Tonight?
Check out the T.V. Listings on the Classifieds page.

NEW! TREADMILL
ULTIMATE AEROBIC TRAINING
Lifestride 9500 with Heart Rate Monitor
We Now Have FOUR!
Safe Convenient Fun

PLUS KEISER, NAUTILUS, FREE-WEIGHTS, STAIRMASTERS, LIFE CYCLES, LIFE ROWER, GRAVITRON, CYBEX UBE, NORDIC TRACK, AEROBICS
AMHERST Athletic Club 256-0080 Rte. 116 So. Amherst

U-SAVE AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Weekend Special
Noon Friday to Monday AM - Starting at $59.95
North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA
549-RENT
(One Mile From UMass on Bus Route)
- Cars - Mini Vans
- Trucks
- Cargo Vans
- 15 Passenger Vans
- Low Daily/Weekly/ Weekend Rates
- We Rent to Qualified Drivers 21 Years or Older
- Direct Billing To Insurance Co

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
A Student/Community Service Learning Program*
(*an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored program)
Assignment notification, Feb. 6th (Thurs.) at Boltwood table on Campus Center Concourse.
Volunteer while earning credit
Come and Learn How!!!
Your life will NEVER be the same!
You Can Earn 1-2 Credits
Recruitment Nights
(Attend one session - Required for all Applicants!!!)
SPRING SEMESTER '97
6:30 PM
(Note: Prompt starting time)
- Feb 3 Mon Campus Center Aud. or
- Feb 4 Tues. CC Room 163 or
- Feb 5 Wed. Campus Center Aud.

EMERGENCY MEDICAL TRAINING
- By Human Services Training Consultants, Inc.
- Part Time Evenings
- Classes Start Feb 10 1997
- Call UMass, Continuing Education at 545-0474

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139 STUDENT SPECIAL 4 MONTHS
KEISER • NAUTILUS • CYBEX
STAIRMASTERS • LIFECYCLES
TREADMILLS • V.R. BIKE
LIFEROWER • GAUNTLET
GRAVITON
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB Rte. 116 So. Amherst 256-0080

MOVIE STILLS • MOVIE POSTERS • FINE ART • ROCK BANDS • HUMOR
BACK TO SCHOOL POSTER SALE
Most Images Only $6, $7 and $8
ROMANCE • ANIMALS • SCENIC • ROCKWELL
MODELS • PAM ANDERSON • EINSTEIN • BRUCE LEE
Sponsor WMUA 91.1FM
Date: Monday, January 27 thru Friday, January 31
Time: 9am - 4:30pm
Place: Student Union Ballroom
Biggest & Best Selection
• X FILES • ESCHER • 60's • BEATLES • ALIENS • PHOTOGRAPHY • STAR WARS • PERSONALITIES •

■ hoop

continued from page 12

UMass' win over its longtime conference foe was highlighted by a school record 15 3–point field goals, as the Minutemen used their perimeter game to negate the Owls' zone defense.

Temple (9–6, 3–3 Atlantic 10) shot out to a quick 6–0 lead, but point guard Edgar Padilla kept UMass (10–9, 4–2) in the game by hitting the first four Minuteman shots, all threes. With 14:46 remaining in the first half, Temple's lead was only two points as the score stood Temple 14, Padilla 12.

The Minutemen took their first lead (17–16) with just over 13 minutes remaining in the first as Tyrone Weeks dumped in the first UMass frontcourt basket. Weeks would finish the game with only six points but also with a career high 16 rebounds.

After Weeks' basket, Temple would not lead again, and UMass pulled away by as many as 16 points. With 8:25 left Travieso gave UMass a 12–point lead with a trey from the right corner. After a Weeks jumper was cancelled out by a Lamont Barnes tip–in, Charlton Clarke drained his third 3– pointer of the afternoon, giving the Minutemen a 15–point edge and the sophomore guard a career high for 3–point field goals made.

UMass' 16–point lead (41–25) came on an Ajmal Basit lay up with 2:43 remaining before intermission. But the advantage was cut to 11 after Barnes put in a lay–up of his own and Julian Dunkley connected on a long–range shot.

The halftime break did nothing to slow UMass' pace. The touch that produced a 58.8 3–point shooting percentage (10– of–17) in the first half translated into a 62.5 percentage (5– of–8) in the second.

Carmelo Travieso, who matched his season high–point performance with 28, restored UMass' 16–point cushion when he took a Clarke assist, one of Clarke's career high 12 on the day, and struck nothing but net from beyond the arc.

The Minuteman lead hovered in the mid–teens for most of the second half until Travieso hit from downtown again at 7:17 to peak the edge at 17.

The Owls kicked into gear with just over five minutes remaining in regulation, chipping away at their deficit by forcing the Minutemen into committing fouls.

To the McGonigle Hall faithful, who gathered to watch the last UMass–Temple game in the arena (The Apollo at Temple is slated to open next season), the Owls appeared to have found a chink in the Minuteman armor.

With 3:31 remaining in the game Pepe Sanchez's flair for the dramatic equalled Padilla's fifth foul. With the floor leader off the court, the Owls twice brought the UMass lead to eight, but that was as close as the Minutemen would allow.

"Mass never lost a step," Temple coach John Chaney said. "When the guards are playing well, everyone will have a problem with them."

* * *

Before the Minutemen's trip to Philadelphia, they had to face Atlantic 10 up–and–comer Rhode Island. The Rams jumped out to an early lead, pulling ahead of UMass by as many as 12, 20–8, with 10:42 remaining in the first half.

Keyed by their frontcourt, the Minutemen fought back to lock things up at halftime at 28 apiece.

When Chad Thomas hit a lay–up with 13:24 left in the game, Rhody had its biggest lead of the second half at 40– 37. Clarke and Inus Norville answered for UMass, and gave the Minutemen a lead they would not relinquish.

All five were in double figures for UMass, as Lari Ketner led his teammates with 13. URI's Tyson Wheeler led all scorers with 16 points.

■ women's hoop

continued from page 12

from Maureen Costello and a 12–6 run to end the game to squeak out a road win.

The road doesn't get any easier for the Minutewomen. After tonight's game at Virginia Tech, who currently languish in last place in the A–10 at 1–7 and 6–13 overall, UMass returns home for its biggest game of the year on Sunday. Conference juggernaut George Washington comes to town, sporting a perfect 8–0 conference mark, a 13–4 overall record and a 10 game win streak. The game is also big in terms of the UMass program, because it's being broadcast nationally on ESPN2. It's the first game ever nationally broadcast from the Mullins Center for the Minutewomen.

■ Owls

continued from page 12

coolers, and hot dog steamers, and there you have it, a great place for a press conference. But that is what made this place so great.

UMass had an amazing game last weekend, yet the Temple fans didn't settle down for a second. Reminiscent of the final Rage in the Cage, the floor seemed to shake with the home crowd's enthusiasm, even when they were down by 12.

Students and North Philly locals crowded together on the same bleachers, heckling and jeering with the best of them, even though Padilla and Carmelo Travieso didn't give them much to cheer about. There was a definite family atmosphere as cheerleaders tossed cherry and white Temple T–shirts into the crowd. The public address announcer, clearly a "homie" pumped the crowd up counting down to tip off and read halftime point totals and shooting percentages during the break. They even had a guy on a unicycle perform a juggling routine at half time! Hardly characteristic of a "professional" program, but those are the types of things that get people going.

The new $85 million facility boasts an increased capacity of 10,200 for hoop games, a parking garage, retail stores and an adjacent recreation/community center complete with racquet ball courts and a three–lane 280–meter indoor jogging track.

Is bigger always better?

When I was in McGonigle last weekend, listening to Temple's wise old owl Chaney pontificating about the sport he loves in a dark and dusty gym, I thought, "This is how it is supposed to be." Temple is not a national powerhouse in the way that Duke, Carolina, or Kentucky is. However, it is still a widely recognized hoop program, and for years, it has carried on a tradition that has produced NBA stars such as Mark Macon, Eddie Jones, and Aaron McKie. They all came out of the same tiny gym.

In an NCAA climate where shoe deals, ESPN, and hard core merchandizing have made college hoops a "minor league NBA," the old–time, win–one–for–the–gipper feel was alive and well at Temple. There were no Armani suits or razzle dazzle attractions that drew attention away from the court. I know they are "the enemy," we played them on ESPN's rival week for Pete's sake, but even someone who bleeds Maroon and White like me had to respect the school's sense of history.

People stayed until the final buzzer for one reason, and one reason only. They loved their team, and more importantly, their tradition.

Chris Stamm is a Collegian columnist.

Thursday night, the Minutemen travel to GW's Smith Center to face the Colonials.

Men's swim sinks UConn

Jonathan M. Place
Collegian Staff

The rivalry between the University of Massachusetts and the University of Connecticut does not stop with women's soccer, football, or basketball. In fact, the rivalry is just as strong for the UMass men's swimming and diving team.

UConn may not always be the best opponent, but they are also never the worst, and no matter what the rankings are, this clash between both state school powerhouses always promises an interesting result.

This past Sunday was no exception when the Minutemen traveled down to the home of the Huskies to keep the tradition alive.

"The man of the meet was D.K. [Dave Koritkowski]," head coach Russ Yarworth said, "He started off the meet by swimming a strong first leg in the 400 medley relay."

Koritkowski's time was an impressive 51.72, leading UMass to first place with an overall finishing time of 3:31.58. He also swam strong in the 200 backstroke, finishing first with a time of 1:54.27.

Out of the 13 events, UMass finished first in six, and second in five. With the score 113–113 and only one race to go, the UMass 400 free relay team got revved up for victory. On that team were juniors Matt Davey, Kerry Heffernan and Sean Anderson and freshman Henry Turner. Their finishing time was a season best of 3:08.21, and that was plenty to ice the victory for the Minutemen. The final score was UMass 126, UConn 117.

"I couldn't ask for more," Yarworth said, "All the eggs are in the right basket."

Leading up to the UConn meet were several other notable tourneys, Back on Jan. 11, the Minutemen walked away with a double victory, scoring higher than La Salle and Rhode Island at the Rhode Island Invitational in Kingston, RI (353–317–241).

Sophomore Brian Wisniewski managed to lap In a couple of second–place finishes in the 200 backstroke (1:55.68) and in the 200 individual medley (1:57.50).

UMass finished first three times during the invite. The 200 free relay team took first over URI at a finishing time of 1:26.74, they finished first over La Salle in the 400 free relay at 3:12.25, and once again the relay team took first over URI in the 400 medley at 3:35.18.

The next day UMass clamped down on Providence (163– 73), taking first–place in 11 of 13 events. Freshman Bryan Grimes won a pair of long distance events in the 800 and 400 freestyle events at finishing times of 8:41.52 and 4:15.58. Anderson, Davey, and Turner took first, second, and third in the 50 free.

Other notable first–place finishers were Wisniewski in the 200 free, Matt Getty in the 200 individual medley, Geoff Gear in the 200 butterfly, Koritkoski in the 200 back, Davey in the 100 free, and Church and Hefferon took the two diving events.

Unfortunately, Yarworth's egg basket crumbled and all the eggs fell in the water against Dartmouth in a disappointing loss on Jan. 19 (155.5 to 145.5).

"It was the worst meet of the year," Yarworth said.

But the eggs didn't crack when they hit the bottom of the pool, and they were all retrieved by the time UMass had to host the University of New Hampshire on Jan. 25.

Ed Hefferon not only led his team to a 174–68 drowning of the Wildcats, but he dove onto the all–time 3–meter diving charts by scoring 278.25 on Saturday.

Hefferon wasn't the only one to get season best scores. Wisnicwski swam to fifth on the 500 free top times chart for 1996–97 at 4:56.71 and Grimes got second on the 1000 free top times chart at 9:49.24.

Other winners were Koritkoski in the 200 free at 1:44.91, Billy Hunter in the 200 IM, in a personal–best time of 1:59.53, and Anderson in the 50 free, in a UMass and personal–season best time of 21.45.

Also swimming to victory were Gear in the 200 fly, in a UMass seasons–best time of 1:58.41. Davey in the 100 free at 47.80. Koritkoski in the 200 back, in a season–best time of 1:56.41 and Cemil Atay in the 200 breast (2:18.25).

That all preceded the rival splashing against UConn, and Yarworth was left with little to complain about after what his team accomplished during the winter session.

"I can't be mad about Dartmouth after what they did this past weekend," Yarworth said, "I think now we're ready for the Atlantic 10 Championships."

MULTILEX
The World's Largest and Most Powerful English/Russian Language tool Available on The International Market Today!
ORDER TODAY!
By INTERNET: http://www.prolingua.com (click MEDIALINGUA)
Or Call toll free USA/Canada 1 (888) 717 3100
ONLY $39.95 + Shipping

!! AEROBICS !!
FLEX FITNESS CENTER
175 UNIVERSITY DRIVE, AMHERST, MA • 253-3539
!! TREADMILLS !!

"BIG" SALE.
Indoor Sidewalk Sale
Wed Jan 29-Sun Feb 2
Racks of clothes. Tables of shoes. Baskets of jewelry Lots more sale merchandise coming from other Zanna stores. All the awesome outdoor sidewalk sale savings, only indoors.
downtown Amherst

Wanted: Graphic Artist Assistant
Contact: Lynne Thompson For A Portfolio Review
University Health Services
Graphics Dept. 577-5181
With Graphic Design Skills And MAC Experience
(QUARK, PHOTOSHOP)

NEW! TREADMILL
ULTIMATE AEROBIC TRAINING
Lifestride 9500 with Heart Rate Monitor
We Now Have FOUR!
Safe Convenient Fun

PLUS KEISER, NAUTILUS, FREE-WEIGHTS, STAIRMASTERS, LIFE CYCLES, LIFE ROWER, GRAVITRON, CYBEX UBE, NORDIC TRACK, AEROBICS
AMHERST Athletic Club 256-0080 Rte. 116 So. Amherst

Amherst Drop Zone
ARMY/NAVY STORE
Route 9 • Hadley • Next to McDonalds
EVERYTHING IN STOCK
30% OFF!
2 DAYS ONLY
SATURDAY • FEBRUARY 1 • 9 A.M.-8 P.M.
SUNDAY • FEBRUARY 2 • 12 P.M.-5 P.M.
CLEARANCE!
- Zippo
- Hi-Tec
- Sorel Boots
- Dr. Martens
- Peacoats
- Mace
- Timex
- Duffle Bags
- Fatigues
- Flight Jackets
- Flags
- Knives

take Kaplan and get into the right school.
MCAT
- Highly trained, expert teachers who know the tests inside and out.
- Personalized, computerized study plans, tailored to your individual needs.
- Proven methods, guaranteed to raise your score.
Classes are starting now!
the leader in test prep
KAPLAN
1-800-KAP-TEST
www.kaplan.com

SKI & Snowboard from $239
SpringBreak '97
Mont Sutton, Canada
◆◆5 DAY LIFT TICKET
◆◆5 NIGHTS LODGING
◆◆5 NIGHTS PARTIES
1-800-848-9545

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Talamerketer Talent Search !! If you have enthusiasm, integrity and outstanding customer service talent, you could be our star performer!!! Mr Tuxx is searching for talented people to join our telemarketing team Mr. Tuxx acknowledges and rewards outstanding performances with competitive wages, flexible scheduling, and all the training you'll need to be successful! Call Adrian at (413)253-5286 to arrange for your personal interview.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Three Bedroom Apartment on bus route $585.00/month. First and last month required. Call (413)863-8413

EMPLOYMENT

Cruise Line Entry level on-board positions available. Benefits. Summer or year round. (612)643-4333

Cruise and Land Tour Employment work in exotic locations. Meet fun people and get paid! For industry information, call Cruise Employment Services (800)276-4948 ext. CS0017. (We are a Research and Publishing Co.)

Outside Jobs- Now hiring. National Parks, Beach Resorts, Ranches, Rafting. CO's benefits and Bonuses! Nationwide openings. Call (919)918-7767 ext. R180 Eastern Europe/Asian jobs- Live in Prague, Budapest, Tokyo, etc. Teaching simple conversational English. No languages/teaching exp. required. (919)918-7767 ext. W180

Child Care Northampton area Thurs. 2:30 pm.-8:30 pm. Car necessary. $6.00/hr. Joan 584-8086

Child Care 17 month old. Light housekeeping, 2-3 mornings a week. Nancy 253-5183

Exceptional Summer Opportunity- Camp Wayne, NE PA. Sports oriented. Counselor/Specialists for all land/water sports inc. tennis, camping, climbing/ropes, rocketry, roller hockey, sailing/waterskiing, ABC, drama, video. Campus Interviews Tuesday, March 11. Please call (800)737-9296

English Teachers Needed Abroad! Teach Conversational English in Prague, Budapest, or Krahow. No teaching certificate or European languages required. Inexpensive room and board plus other benefits. For details call (206)971-3680 ext. K50011

Personal Care Attendant Evenings, overnights and weekend mornings $7.85 per hour. Call 546-0666

Capa Cod group & summer rentals. Waterfront houses, Falmouth area. (508)477-6000

Sugarloaf Estates- Ultra modern two bedroom apartments. Free heat/hot water. New kitchens, baths, carpeting, washers/dryers and more! On bus-line. Minutes to Amherst. Great specials! Call 665-3856

Fridge Rentals 253-9742 Free Delivery

FOR SALE

486 New Laptop $585. VGA Color Monitor $175. IDE Hard Drive $110. Steve 566-3324-2

Color Printer Panasonic Super Quiet KXP-2123 24-pin dot matrix w/ cable & stand. 546-8983

PERSONALS

Camara: Pentax ME Super, w/Quantaray 49 mm Lens, plus Pentax A Zoom Lens, 1:4, 70-210 mm, plus mm, plus Zykkor flash 375D, with case, ex. cond. Asking $325 or BO. Rick 548-9911

For Sale Electric guitar Peavey black Strat copy, excellent condition. Sean 546-5734

MISCELLANEOUS

Start your own fraternity VETA BETA TAU is looking for men to start a new chapter. If you are interested in academic success, a chance to network and an opportunity to make friends in a non-pledging brotherhood, E-mail ZBT@IBT.National.ORG or call Brett Hrbeck at (317)334-1898

MISCELLANEOUS

Fundraiser- Motivated groups needed to earn $500+ promoting AT&T, Discover, gas and retail cards. Since 1969, we've helped thousands of groups raise the money they need. Call Gina at (800)592-2121 ext. 110. Free CD to qualified callers.

ROOM FOR RENT

Room is a 2 bedroom apt. Sublease $310 + utilities. Call 253-4824. On bus line.

Take over my lease One bedroom in a vacant two bedroom apartment. $300/month plus utilities. Call Jen @ 256-6034

Looking for a female to share a large room in Puffton. Cost is $197.50/month. Call 665-2067

TRAVEL

Europe $150, Caribo,/Mexico $189 R/T. Worldwide Destinations. Airhitch 7m. (800)326 2009. airhitchen@mcimail.com or www.isi.com.fr/airhitch

Pompano Beach, Florida March 8-15, sleeps two, $650/week. (413)786-7133. Partial kitchen

Spring Break '97 It's heaven. Wake and Bake in the hottest destinations-free parties!!! Organize group and travel. Free lowest price guarantee. From $99. (800)426-7710. www.sunsplashtours.com

Spring Break- Nassau/Paradise Island, from $379. Air, hotel, transfers, parties and more! Organize small group- earn free trips plus commissions! Call (800)9-Beach-1

TRAVEL

Spring Break Party in Daytona or Panama City. The largest Spring Break destinations ; excellent beachfront hotels. Students wanted to promote, earn free trip and cash $$$! Book ten friends and go FREE! Packages from $39.00. Info/book (800)569-5606

Personals Policy

1. All personals MUST be proofread by Collegian classified employees before payment and acceptance of the classified.
2. Last names MAY NOT be used in personals. ONLY first names and initials are allowed. The only exceptions are for birthday or congratulations personals, in which case the full name may be used.
3. Phone numbers are not allowed in personals. NO EXCEPTIONS.
4. Addresses are not allowed in personals. this means dorm room numbers as well.
5. Personals of a threatening or derogatory nature are not acceptable. Personals of a vindictive or libelous nature are not acceptable. Personals may not be used for the purpose of harassment.
6. Profanity may not be used in personals.
7. The personals section is for personals only. The personals section may NOT be used to sell items, seek roommates, advertise meetings, etc.
8. All personals must have the name, signature, and UMass I.D. number of the student placing the as filled in on the insertion order. Non-students must present a valid driver's license and the license number must be recorded on the insertion order. Use of false identities and/or misrepresentation is subject to penalties under the law.
9. The Collegian reserves the right to refuse or to edit any personal that does not meet the Collegian's standards in accordance with the statutes of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Standard Headings

Activities
Announcements
Apartment For Rent
Auto For Sale
Employment
Entertainment
For Sale
Found (2 days Free)
Happy Birthday
Houses For Rent
Instruction
Lost
Musicians
Miscellaneous
Motorcycles
Personals
Room For Rent
Room Wanted
Roommate Wanted
Services
Summer Sublet
To Sublet
Travel
Transportation
Wanted to Rent
Wanted

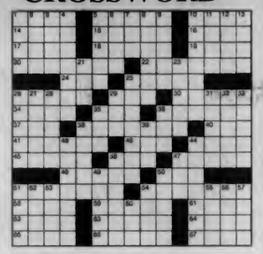
Rates

$2.00 minimum/day

Students

20¢ per word/day

All others



40¢ per word/day

NO REFUNDS
Please write clearly and legibly. We are not responsible for errors resulting from illegible handwriting or type.

Answers to Yesterday's Puzzle

CROSSWORD

ACROSS

1. Galvanizing metal
5. Hindu religious teacher
10. Blood or dinning
14. ___-cat (form of baseball)
15. Ruth's successor
16. New Haven university
17. Prevaricator
18. Stench
19. Doting teachers
20. Minimally (2 wds.)
22. Flights back
24. English cathedral city
25. Foolish birds
28. Didn't exist
29. She-deer
30. Complete
34. Bally dancer's assets
36. NFL ___
38. Sheltered
37. Language suffix
38. Alias Shrugged author (2 wds.)
40. Time division (abbr.)
41. Relished
43. Attain through effort
44. Hasidim, e.g.
45. Spills the beans
46. ___ violetta
47. Humble pies
48. Exalted
50. Labor or birth follower
51. More precipitous
54. Boring, informally
56. Rocky peak
59. Irked
61. Ark skipper
62. Distinctive quality
63. Cleanheart
64. ___ with the Wind
65. Cling
66. Title role for Dustin
67. Flower part

DOWN

1. Jacques author
2. Acronym unit (abbr.)
3. Actress Patricia
4. Lists
5. Lippy
6. Scottish inventor
7. Jackie's second
8. Actress Marilyn
9. Reacted the presses
10. Predecessors of word processors
11. Dumbo's ears jumbo
12. Vacancy
13. Guarding ___ (1994 comedy)
21. High, in music
23. Healthy
26. Room's entrance
28. Cradling ___ (Thomas Hart Benton)
27. Passage
28. Relieve
29. Hullabaloo
31. Sports official
33. ___ of Nantes
35. Fissures
36. Dancer Charisse
39. Bed-and-breakfast spot
39. The Hare and the Tortoise author
39. Be under the weather
42. Illicit
43. Proverbs
46. Endeavor
47. Author Amy
49. Wild
49. Pop
51. Strike replacement
52. Factual
53. Justice Warren
54. Blood's pathway
55. "Penny ___"
57. Attention getter
60. Cambodia's ___ Nol

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21-April 20
Don't seek to avoid difficulty—pain should mean not as a lesson you really need to learn. You're lucky in love, but don't trumpet this news too loudly: someone closer to you may be feeling pretty lonesome.

TAURUS
April 21-May 21
Working for a promotion is rewarding, but difficult. To allow yourself to be pampered if you're lucky enough to receive an offer. Premenstrual blahs as the weather grows balmy.

GEMINI
May 22-June 21
Tension builds at work as a deadline approaches. Pile up the extra time and finish ahead of schedule. You'll look good in the eyes of someone whose influence is growing. An enjoyable conversation could lead to some startling insights.

CANCER
June 22-July 22
A crabby person gets the week off to a sour start. Ignore irrational behavior as much as possible. There could be more involved than meets the eye. Invite a third party to participate in an important meeting.

LEO
July 23-August 23
If something's been bothering you lately, try sitting down in a quiet room and thinking your way to the heart of the matter. If you're honest with yourself, you may discover something that will help you improve your mood.

VIRGO
August 24-September 22
Spring cleaning could turn up a host of useless items that have been in storage for a long time. Make plans to clear them out. You'll enjoy having the extra room.

LIBRA
September 23-October 23
An emphasis on values allows you to make a decision you'll be happy with for years to come. Seek advice from someone with experience. Follow the advice of a trusted friend or mate when it comes to your finances.

SCORPIO
October 24-November 22
Your energy knows no bounds, so go ahead and tackle that huge project. If you break it down into smaller chunks, you could ride your wave of enthusiasm for weeks to come. A platonic relationship begins to show romantic undertones.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23-December 21
Although it's tempting to offer unsolicited advice, it may not be productive. Rather, you may have to work on remaining calm and patient while another person fumbles the ball a few times.

CAPRICORN
December 22-January 20
Work towards completing a large assignment early in the week. Conflicts at work could sap your energy towards the weekend, but if you maximize your skills at drawing up compromises, all will not be lost. A gift for your sweetie is in order.

AQUARIUS
January 21-February 18
Although it feels as though you're getting nothing done, you're laying the groundwork for an important project coming up soon. Focus on details and get things done right the first time around.

PISCES
February 19-March 20
You may be feeling impulsive this week, so try to lay low and consider your actions before you do anything. A conservative approach works wonders when it comes to your wallet.

Daily Listings sponsored by: Your Ad Could Be Here. Call 545-3500

HSCN Housing Services Cable Network

2 HSCN Bulletin Board
3 CBS/3 Hartford
4 CBS/4 Boston
5 ABC/5 Boston
6 PBS/57 Springfield
7 HSCN Movie Channel
8 UPN/20 Hartford
9 Weather Channel
10 NBC/30 New Britain
11 Fox/61 Hartford
12 PBS/24 Hartford
13 WOCH & HSCN
14 UMATV
17 HSCN Programming
19 TV–19
20 ABC/40 Springfield
22 NBC/22 Springfield
23 CNN
24 CNN/Headline News
25 BET
26 BET on Jazz
27 Laser Video
28 The Learning Channel
30 Comedy Central
31 Popcorn Channel
32 Satellite Programming

WEDNESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — JANUARY 29, 1997

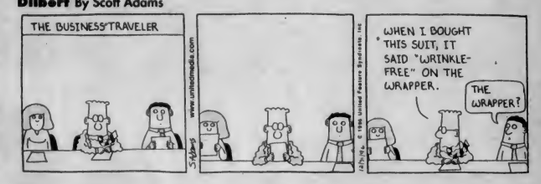
	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	Creatures	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		New Explorers	(In Stereo)	World of National Geographic		Great Performances		Going Places
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Barriers at Work		Nanny	Pearl	Coast to Coast (In Stereo)		Orleans "Hijack" (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News		CBS News	Ent. Tonight	Nanny	Pearl	Coast to Coast (In Stereo)		Orleans "Hijack" (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Grace Under	Coach (R)	Drew Carey	Ellen (R)	Primetime Live		News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Full House	Fresh Prince	Star Trek: Next Gener.		Sister, Sister	Nick Freno	Wayana Bros.	Jamie Foxx	News		Jenny Jones (In Stereo)
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Frasier (R)	Chicago Sons	Newsradio	Men-Badly	Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX		Fresh Prince	Martin	Judge Judy	Real TV	Sentinel "The Rig" (In Stereo)		Star Trek: Voyager "Cods"		News	LAPD	H. Patrol	Real TV
WVIT		News	NBC News	Ent. Tonight	Hard Copy	Frasier (R)	Chicago Sons	Newsradio	Men-Badly	Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	Simpsons	Roseanne	Home Imp.	Sentinel	Beverly Hills, 90210 "Face-Off"		Party of Five (In Stereo)		News		Coach	Deep Space 9
WWLP	9	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Frasier (R)	Chicago Sons	Newsradio	Men-Badly	Dateline (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	11	Creatures	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		New Explorers	(In Stereo)	Great Performances		Orpheus in the Real World		Charlie Rose	(In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Ent. Tonight	Grace Under	Coach (R)	Drew Carey	Ellen (R)	Primetime Live		News	Nightline
WSBK	61	Beverly Hills, 90210 (In Stereo)		Seinfeld	NBA Basketball	Boston Celtics at Miami Heat. (Live)					Martin	Mad Abo. You	Real TV
WTBS	72	Family Matters	Family Matters	Home Videos	Home Videos	NBA Basketball: Los Angeles Lakers at San Antonio Spurs. (Live)					Inside-NBA	Clash of the Champions (R)
A&E	23	Quincy		Equalizer "High Performance"		Biography: Barrows		American Justice "Eyewitness"		20th Century (R)		Law & Order
CNN	24	WorldView		Moneyline	Crossfire	Prime News	Inside Politics	Larry King Live		World Today		Sports Illus.	Moneyline
COM	25	Tick	Dreem On	Daily Show (R)	TV Nation	★★½ "Dikta Live" (1980, Comedy)		Gilda Radner, Don Novello		Pair of Jokers	Dreem On	Daily Show	TV Nation
DISC	26	Beyond 2000	Next Step (R)	Wings		Wild Discovery: Seals		Discover Magazine (R)		Firepower 2000: Navy		Wild Discovery: Seals
ESPN	27	Up Close	Sportscenter	College Basketball: Providence at Connecticut. (Live)				College Basketball: North Carolina at Duke. (Live)				Sportscenter
LIFE	28	Supermarket	Debt	Hope & Gloria	Designing	Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★★★ "Indictment: The M.Martin Trial" (1995) James Woods.				Living	Mysteries
MTV	29	Ren & Stimpy	Clueless-MTV	Singled Out	Idiot Savants	Prime Time	Football: Rock N Jock Super Bowl. (In Stereo)			Real World	Real World	Singled Out	Idiot Savants
NICK	30	Clarissa Expl.	Tiny Toon	Doug	Rugrats	Hey Arnold!	Happy Days	I Love Lucy	Munsters	M.T. Moore	Rhoda	Taxi	Odd Couple
SCIFI	31	Twilight Zone	Darkside	Time Trax "The Crash"		Tekwar "Slay of Execution"		Forever Knight "Father Figure"		Sightings (In Stereo)		Time Trax "The Crash"
TLC	32	Furniture	Renovation	Hometime (R)	Hometime (R)	SeaTek	Pop Science	Wonders of the East (R)		Non-Lethal Weapons		SeaTek (R)	Pop Science
TNT	33	In the Heat of the Night		In the Heat of the Night		★★ "Brokan Trust" (1995, Suspense)		Tom Selleck		"Last Stand at Saber River" (1997, Western)		Tom Selleck
USA	34	Renegade "South of Hell"		Highlander: The Series		Murder, She Wrote		"The Member of the Wedding" (1997, Drama) Alfre Woodard.				She Shellongs	? esm Sport
HBO	35	★★½ "Dying Rich" (1988, Comedy) Michael Keaton. (CC)				★★½ "Virtuosity" (1995, Science Fiction) Denzel Washington. (R)				Larry Sanders	Tracey Takes	"Natural Enemy" (1997) (NR)
MAX	36	(5:30) ★★★½ "The Hunt for Red October" (1990) Sean Connery.				★½ "Phantasm III: Lord of the Dead" (1994) (R)				★★ "The Crossing Guard" (1995, Drama) Jack Nicholson. (R)		"Nobody's P
SHOW	37	★★ "Canadian Bacon" (1995, Comedy) Alan Alda. (CC)				★★★½ "The Shawshank Redemption" (1994, Drama) Tim Robbins. (R)				★★½ "Powder" (1995) Mary Steenburgen. (R)

Frumpy the Clown Judd Winick

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Drabble By Kevin Fagan



Dilbert By Scott Adams

Bruno By C. Baldwin

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Loold By Roger & Salem Salloom

My girlfriend and I broke up, but this time I felt sure that I would always be alone.... and I would never again h e someone in my life.

I told my dad.

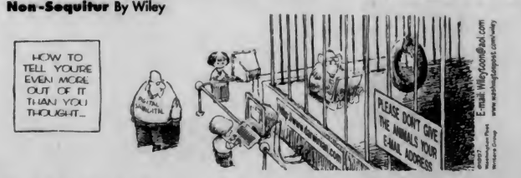
He said, "Don't feel bad. Take comfort.

Being alone..... can be a lovely peaceful gift to yourself.

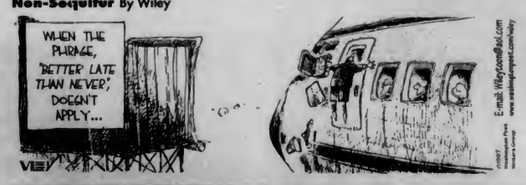
Also, as many people have done before you,.... you can spend a portion of your life working for others and within yourself to cultivate mercy, hope, truth, bec:ity, and daylight."

I asked him if there was anything of his I could break.

He brought me his favorite tobacco smoking pipe. I said, "Thanks dad." Life is good.



University² By Frank Cho



University³ By Frank Cho

Non-Sequitur By Wiley

Non-Sequitur By Wiley

Close to Home By John McPherson

"According to our background check, you missed seven days of kindergarten due to illness. That puts you in our high-risk category."

Quote of the Day

"Oh, rip off city!"

—Prof. J. Tager, on hearing the cost of his assigned readings

Collegian Graphics

Joke of the Day

Q: What do you call a sleepwalking nun?

A: A Roamin' Catholic

Today's Staff

Mark "Marty Moore" McGrath
Night Editor

Jacob "Larry Whigham" Michaels
Copy Editor

Thang "Corwin Brown" Vo
Photo Technician

Marc "Mike Sweatman" Dionne
Production Supervisor

Mark "Dave Meggett" Hohengasser
Dan "Tedy Bruschi" Bodah
Matthew "Tom Tupa" McCarthy
Production

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-3626 for more information.

Franklin

LUNCH
Chicken Puck
Macaroni & Cheese
Black Bean Burger

DINNER
Cheese Lasagna
Chicken Puck
Roast Beef

Hampshire

LUNCH
Hamburgers
Chicken Puck
Grilled Cheese

DINNER
Baked Ziti
Roast Beef

Worcester

LUNCH
Macaroni & Cheese
Tri Bean Casserole
Rotini w/ Sausage Sauce or Tomato Sauce

DINNER
Baked Ziti
Roast Beef
Pastabilities
Caponata w/Pocket

Berkshire

LUNCH
Macaroni & Cheese
Tri Bean Casserole
Rotini

DINNER
Roast Beef Pastabilities
Chicken Wings
Mushroom & Walnut Ravioli

SPORTS

Wednesday, January 29

The University of Massachusetts Daily Collegian

UMass downs Temple and Rhody

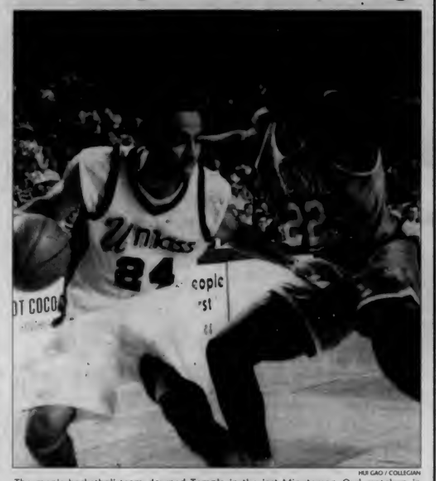
By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA — The formula seems to work for the Massachusetts men's basketball team: Saturday game, national television exposure, big rivalry.

Massachusetts	78
Temple	66

A week after humiliating intrastate rival Boston College in a CBS contest, the Minutemen continued on their warpath with a 78–66 victory at Temple to kick off ESPN's Rivalry Week.

"I thought we did a great job executing our game plan," UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint said. "We did the same thing in the BC game, same type of game plan, same type of matchup, same type of zone."



Turn to HOOP, page 7

UMass guards key to success, make cheesesteak out of Temple

By Chris Stamm
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA — North Carolina did not get to see it. Neither did Wake Forest or Connecticut. But last Saturday, the Owls of Temple saw just how potent Massachusetts' three guard offense can be.

In what was the last time UMass faced Temple in historic (and to opposing schools, horrific) McGonigle Hall, the Minutemen ran away with a 78–66 win. However, the game was historic for another reason. With a total of 15 3-pointers made, UMass (10–9, 4–2 Atlantic 10) set a school record for treys in a game. The previous mark of 13 3-pointers was set in 1987, ironically, against

MIR CAO / COLLEGIAN

The men's basketball team downed Temple in the last Minuteman–Owl matchup in McGonigle Hall.

Turn to GUARDS, page 6

Owl's old barn symbol of hoop history

CHRIS STAMM

The first six minutes of last weekend's men's basketball game against Temple was a shooting frenzy. Senior point guard Edgar Padilla knocked down his first three 3-pointers attempted, and with 14:42 on the clock drained his fourth — to a flurry of catcalls and boos?

Ah yes, welcome to Temple University's not-so-friendly McGonigle Hall.

While the Minutemen set a record for 3-pointers in a game, they also ushered in the end of an era as last week-end's game marked the last time the two rivals would meet in McGonigle. Come next December, the new Apollo of Temple will be the home of the Owls. So what's the big deal?

Entering the old Philly gym is like walking back in time. When you walk into McGonigle, you don't see neon signs selling you ice cream or modern concession stands with television monitors where you can watch the game while you buy a few dogs. Instead, you see portraits of Temple's Hall of Fame honorees and a tiny, 3,900 capacity bleacher lined basketball court.

On the Temple bench, the empty chair next to coach John Chaney remained empty, except for a small shamrock stuck to the front in memory of 23 year assistant Jim Maloney who died of a heart attack last May. The empty seat a testament to the proud tradition of Temple basketball.

Creature comforts in McGonigle are few, as the gym is so small, the press has to watch the game from atop an endzone concourse looking down from backboard level and radio broadcasters hang from a precarious

Turn to OWL'S, page 7

Women's hoop hits road, face V–Tech away tonight

By Jeremy Adams
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's basketball team hits the road for a mid-week Atlantic 10 match-up with Virginia Tech tonight. The Minutewomen, 6–2 in the A-10, face a rebuilding Hokie squad which has accrued the worst record in the conference, joining Xavier in the basement with a 1–7 conference tally.

Virginia Tech recently dropped a 84–67 decision to Duquesne in Pittsburgh, and are headed in the opposite direction from UMass. The Minutewomen have won eight of their last 10 and are 3–1 on the road in conference play. The Hokies have lost their last two meetings with UMass, for a 1–2 all-time series record between the schools.

Virginia Tech is led by point guard Renee Maitland. The 5–7 junior averages 2.3 steals and six rebounds per game, and shoots 37 percent from downtown.

Maitland averages 1.3 3-pointers per game, ranking ninth in the A-10, and is joined by the conference's ninth best scorer, Kim Seaver. As a freshman, Seaver is averaging almost 15 points per game, leading the Hokie attack from her spot on the low post. Senior guard Sherry Banks rounds out Virginia Tech's attack with a 12 point scoring average.

The Minutewomen will try to counter Maitland's abilities with those of center Crystal Carroll and guard Kelly Van Huisen. Carroll averages 7 boards per game and Van Huisen leads the A-10 with 53 percent shooting from behind the arc.

Massachusetts is coming of an important 61–45 win against rival Temple, and has a considerable obstacle ahead, in the form of a Feb. 2 meeting with defending conference champion George Washington at the William D. Mullins Center. The Colonials face 2–6 Rhode Island tonight in Washington.

The Colonials were the unanimous A-10 coaches selection to win the conference, and have answered the call with their 8–0 A-10 record. George Washington hosts 3–4 St. Bonaventure on Feb. 4, so the Minutewomen appear to be the only team on their docket with a legitimate chance to knock them off of their pedestal in the near future.

Sabriya Mitchell and Beth Kuzmeski join Van Huisen in the productive UMass backcourt. Mitchell led the Minutewomen with 11 points in the very guard-oriented, fast-paced win over Temple. Kuzmeski and Van Huisen combined for just 9 points in the game, but also totalled 8 assists.

Undefeated in conference and 13–4 overall, George Washington is a particularly imposing opponent at this part of the season. Tajama Abraham and Noelia Gomez were named A-10 Conference Player and Rookie of the Week, respectively. The two led the Colonials to their 10th straight overall win, extending their home winning streak to 27 straight games.

The Charles E. Smith Center in Washington, D.C. has been most hospitable to the Colonials since the 1994–95 season. The streak includes 23 straight A-10 victories.

UMass and GW face-off in a nationally televised contest, live from the Mullins Center on Feb. 2. ESPN2 will broadcast through the A-10 broadcasting network.

Women's hoop stuns Temple

By Luke Mered ith
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts	61
Temple	45

After a gut-wrenching 50–48 home loss to conference rival St. Joesph's on Jan. 23, the Massachusetts women's basketball team needed a big win over Temple on Saturday to keep pace with the A-10's elite and get back to their winning ways.

Bouncing back in convincing fashion, UMass spanked the Owls 61–45, to up their overall record to 12–6, and 6–2 in the Atlantic–10. The Minutewomen now sit in second place in the A-10's East Division, one game behind 7–1 St. Joe's.

UMass never trailed in their win over Temple, jumping out to a 12–3 lead seven minutes into the contest. The Owls cut the lead to four, 16–12, but the Minutewomen reeled off a 16–6 run to end the first half. UMass took a 32–18 lead into halftime, and stretched the advantage to 21 early in the second half. Crystal Carroll, still nursing a sore ankle she injured in the St. Joe's game and catching up on some long- needed rest, sat out most of the second half but still posted eight points and four rebounds in 21 minutes. Senior guard Sabriya Mitchell, playing perhaps one of her best games in a UMass uniform, scored 11 points, grabbed five rebounds and dished out four assists. Freshman Alison MacFarland scored 10 points, Jayvana Bradley added nine and steadily improving sophomore center Yolanda Rayside chipped in with eight points and seven rebounds.

"Today was a day when we couldn't spend too much time worrying about Temple," Massachusetts head coach Joanie O'Brien said. "We had to worry about taking care of ourselves at both ends of the floor. We got a lot of kids a lot of minutes. Crystal Carroll had probably her lowest minute output of the year, which is probably good considering we're coming off our toughest stretch of the season."

Saturday's clash with Temple was the fifth game in nine days for the Minutewomen. UMass was blown out on Jan. 18th 85–58 at Duquesne, but came back to top Rhode Island in overtime, 81–74 three nights later, led by Beth Kuzmeski's 21 points.

Last week's loss to St. Joe's was tough to swallow. The Hawks came into the game tied with UMass for first place in the A-10's East Division at 5–1, and now sit at 7–1 in the conference, one game ahead of the Minutewomen. UMass took a six point lead, 29–23, into the locker room but lost steam when Crystal Carroll rolled her ankle early in the second half. Carroll continued to play, but hit only one of eight shots in the second half, and the Hawks would use 12 second–half points

Turn to WOMEN'S HOOP, page 7

Boston College, Northeastern drop hockey in the Hub

JORMA KANSANEN / COLLEGIAN

The UMass hockey team fell to BC and NU last week.

By Leigh Torbin
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — The Hub was in a festive mood the weekend before the Super Bowl. The Prudential building was illuminated with "Go Pats" and throughout the contorted city streets grown men and women decked out in red, white and blue greeted each other with echoes of "Jambalaya."

While the team 35 miles south of Beantown couldn't quite pull off its upset victory, the Hub's college hockey teams did feel the flow as both Boston College and Northeastern posted tough wins over Massachusetts this weekend.

Northeastern	4
Massachusetts	0

In a scrappy contest the Eagles downed the Minutemen 3– 2 on Kelley Rink at Conte Forum Friday night, preceding a 4–0 win by the Huskies on Saturday night at venerable Matthews Arena.

"We're disappointed, upset, aggravated, whatever word you want to say about coming out of Boston and not getting a point," coach Joe Mallen said after the Northeastern game. "We're going to have nights like this. It wasn't one of our best efforts at all and we have to look forward to next weekend."

Boston College	3
Massachusetts	2

Before many of the impressive 4,686 found their seats, BC immediately took the lead in Friday's affair, compliments of Deerfield Academy product Marty Reasoner streaking down the left wing and feathering a wrist shot 5–hole on

Turn to HOCKEY, page 6

Women's gym falls in record setting meet vs. Michigan

Jeremy R. Adams
Collegian Staff

Nationally ranked Michigan edged Massachusetts in women's gymnastics action on Saturday at the William D. Mullins Center, but it was the record setting Minutewomen performances and Mullins Center crowd that made it an event that Massachusetts coach Dave Kuzara called unbelievable.

Michigin	195.000
Massachusetts	193.700

Despite falling to the No. 11 Wolverines 195.000 to 193.700, it was a banner day for the Minutewoman gymnastics program. School records fell throughout the meet, from a 2,435 attendance record to individual and team scores across the board.

"Michigan is a team that could win the National Championship this year," Kuzara said. "We gave them a run. We did everything we could in this competition."

Freshman Mandy Mosby was the top Massachusetts all– arounder in the meet, putting up a 38.8 score which was the third best mark overall. Mosby scored a 9.9 personal best in a clutch floor performance, keeping the score close in the meet's final rotation.

The Minutewomen had a strong start, setting a team record on the vault at 48.675. Michelle LoPresti set a personal record at 9.775 and Denise Johnson scored a 9.8 to lead Massachusetts on the vault.

LoPresti competed in just two events, setting personal best scores in both the vault and the bars (9.675), and earned the praise of Kuzara for her efforts despite sitting out a week of practice because of back problems.

"She's not one of my stars and not one of my seniors. It was a real gut check performance," Kuzara said.

Kuzara's one disappointment in the meet was pertaining to the Minutewomen's beam scores.

"I felt the judges were judging very tough on the beam. They have a right to do that and I have a right to be unhappy about it," Kuzara said.

Mosby scored a team–high 9.7 on the beam. Anita Sanyal and Betsy Collucci each scored 9.625, which is a personal best for Collucci, to lead the Minutewomen.

Massachusetts team records also fell on the uneven bars (48.275), floor exercise (48.9), and overall score. Perennial Big 10 gymnastics powerhouse Michigan matched Massachusetts' uneven bars score, and needed a season–best team overall performance to top the other three events.

"It was a very well put–on competition," Michigan coach Beverly Plocki said. "Hopefully this will do a lot for the [Massachusetts] program."

"I think that with continued support this program could be one of the nation's finest," Plocki added.

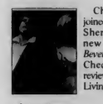
The support was there for the Minutewomen against Michigan. The record crowd was a good omen for Massachusetts gymnastics, hosting a meet in the Mullins Center for the first time.

"I think being in the Mullins Center and having so much crowd support definitely helps because it is so intimidating," senior co–captain Tara Swartz said.

"This event was unbelievable," Kuzara said. "It was a great crowd. It's overwhelming what happened today."

The Minutewomen take a two week lay–off, then host Rhode Island and Yale at 1 p.m. on Feb. 9 at the Boyden Gym.

JORMA KANSANEN / COLLEGIAN



Beth Kuzmeski and the Minutewomen travel to Virginia Tech to face the Hokies tonight.

The Massachusetts

DAILY COLLEGIAN

Volume CVI Issue 72 • New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967 • Thursday, January 30, 1997

Enter the idiot

Chris Farley is joined by Nicolette Sheridan in the new comedy Beverly Hills Ninja. Check out our review (See Arts & Living, page 5).

This time it's war

Edgar Padilla and the Massachusetts men's basketball team faces conference foe George Washington tonight at 7:30 p.m. at the Charles E. Smith Center (see Sports, page 12).

WORLD

Financial problems cause Albanian unrest

TIRANA, Albania (AP) — The poorest Albanians will get immediate cash payments from the frozen assets of failing get-rich-quick schemes, the country's president said yesterday, attempting to allay investors' fears that their savings are gone.

The rest will receive statement accounts proving they put money into the pyramid schemes, said President Sali Berisha. The schemes were declared illegal and were frozen earlier this month after unrest sparked by their failure to pay out.

It was unclear how many people would be reimbursed in cash, opening the way for more confusion and potential rioting from investors who fear their money could be lost for good.

Pro-government newspapers were to publish a list of those receiving cash payments today.

Meanwhile, political feuding linked to the failed investment schemes intensified yesterday, with the opposition Socialist Party claiming several of its members had been arrested in the provincial towns of Korca, Lushnja and Vlora — all scenes of unrest over the past week.

The Interior Ministry would not confirm the arrests, but during his news conference yesterday, Berisha said police had identified the masterminds of the riots as local Socialist Party leaders. Berisha also accused former members of the communist-era Sigurimi secret police and security forces of instigating the unrest.

NATION

Methuen resident found dead in dorm

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — A body of a student from Methuen, Mass., was found in his dorm room after reports of a foul odor; police estimated he had been dead two or three days.

Paul J. Wolfendale, 28, was found Monday night hanged by a belt. The medical examiner ruled it an accident, said University of Nebraska-Lincoln Police Chief Ken Cauble, who declined to elaborate.

A criminal justice major, Wolfendale was a senior living alone at Cather Hall, which is reserved for upperclassmen and consists mostly of single-occupancy rooms.

A dormitory supervisor discovered Wolfendale's body while investigating several reports of a foul odor from the dormitory's fourth floor.

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Friday	Saturday
HIGH: 20	HIGH: 25	HIGH: 35
LOW: 10	LOW: 15	LOW: 25

INSIDE

Arts & Living.....page 5
Classifieds .....page 10
Comics .....page 11
Crossword .....page 10
Editorial .....page 4
FYI.....page 2
News .....page 3
Sports .....page 12

Students pleased with earlier excess checks

By Tamar Carroll
Collegian Staff

This semester marks the first time that the University of Massachusetts Bursar's Office has made excess checks available to students before the first day of classes.

University students eligible to receive excess checks can pick them up in Room 161B, located in the basement of Whitmore Administration Building, from 9 a.m.–4 p.m. this week.

"I feel great about [receiving his excess check early]. I'm going to pay off Christmas and my winter break," said student Michael Singleton, a senior majoring in human nutrition.

Bursar Dan Maguffin said that having an offsite location and additional staff from the Financial Aid and Admissions Offices are what made the early dispersal possible this semester.

"Simply, we've arranged to disperse the excess checks before the first day of classes. That's much earlier than the past couple of years," Maguffin said. "The reason we couldn't do it before was difficulty in coordination and lack of space upstairs in Whitmore due to the hundreds of students paying their bills late."

The majority of the over 5,000 excess checks given out each semester are financial aid allowances for living expenses and books. Most of the checks average between $2,000–$4,000.

So far, several thousand students have picked up their checks. Maguffin felt that the majority of the students appreciated getting them early this semester.

"They are pleasantly surprised and very happy to walk out of here with their money before the first day of classes and before the first day of the month to pay their rent," he said.

Senior anthropology major Victoria Bamond agreed with Maguffin. "It's much quicker this semester," she said. "It's great because we have to pay for books and stuff like that."

Maguffin is unsure if this early dispersal will occur again in the fall.

"The jury is still out on that," Maguffin said. "I would like it to happen because I think it's a great service to the students and I think they appreciate it. Whether we can do that for the fall semester, I'm not sure.

"There's a lot more volume and mail in the fall, and students have just gotten their financial aid awards. I can't make any promise other than that I'll try," he said.

Students who do not pick up their checks this week at the special location should get them upstairs at the tellers' booths in Whitmore.

JENNIFER JUTRAS / COLLEGIAN

This semester, students will not have to wait in the long lines at the Bursar's office to get their excess checks.

Second bombing suspect misidentified

By Steven K. Paulson
Associated Press

DENVER — The man in the widely distributed sketch of John Doe No. 2 in the Oklahoma City bombing has been positively identified as an Army private who had no role in the attack, the Justice Department said yesterday.

In a brief filed yesterday in U.S. District Court in Denver, prosecutors said Pvt. Todd Bunting rented a truck at a Junction City, Kan., body shop the day after suspect Timothy McVeigh rented the truck believed to have been used in the bombing.

A mechanic at the body shop is "confident he had Todd Bunting in mind when he provided the description for the John Doe 2 composite," according to the government's brief.

Prosecutors say they still are looking for another person who may have been with McVeigh when he rented the truck.

The mechanic, Tom Kessinger, identified McVeigh as John Doe No. 1, the man who identified himself as "Robert Kling" when he rented the truck. Kessinger was the only witness to describe "Kling" and John Doe No. 2.

In their brief, prosecutors said Kessinger is now prepared to testify that his description of John Doe No. 2 was wrong, that he confused him with Bunting.

In establishing Bunting's identity, prosecutors said they relied on Kessinger's description of a tattoo visible below his sleeve, and a baseball cap featuring a zigzag pattern in the front. Some witnesses have said they saw the man described in the sketch of John Doe No. 2 in Oklahoma City shortly before the bombing, but investigators say they're mistaken.

Prosecutors said Kessinger remains sure that McVeigh is "Kling" and that two other workers who rented the truck to "Kling" are sure another man was with him.

Stephen Jones, attorney for McVeigh, offered the mistake in identifying John Doe No. 2 as evidence that eyewitness identifications should be thrown out, including the identification of McVeigh.

Jones is asking for a hearing to suppress the identifications as evidence. In their brief, prosecutors opposed a hearing, saying witness identifications should be challenged at trial.

McVeigh and codefendant Terry Nichols could face the death penalty if convicted on federal conspiracy and murder charges in the bombing, which killed 168 and injured more than 500.

McVeigh's trial is scheduled to begin March 31 in Denver and will be followed by Nichols' trial.

JENNIFER JUTRAS / COLLEGIAN

Decorating your dorm room...
Darbie Honey, a senior sports management major, looked at posters in the Student Union Ballroom yesterday.

UM students to compete in California tournament

By Christina Poletto
Collegian Staff

In early March three University of Massachusetts students will travel to San Jose, Calif., to compete in the finals of the annual international undergraduate programming contest, sponsored by the Association for Computing Machinery (ACM). The ACM is noted for being the leading computer science technical society.

The UMass team consists of Brian Hanechak, Ben Horowitz and John Sullivan, all undergraduate students of the University.

The contest, which began last fall, had over 1,000 participating teams from colleges and universities across the world. The finals will include 50 competing teams.

According to team coach Robert Moll, also a professor in the department of computer science, the competition will be based on the students' abilities to solve programming problems.

"The contest consists of the teams having to provide solutions to approximately six computer programming problems in a specific amount of time," Moll said.

In this final competition, the contenders will have five hours to solve six to eight programming puzzles.

In the preliminary regional competition, which took place last fall at Harvard University, the UMass trio placed second behind the Massachusetts Institute of Technology team.

In the northeast regionals held at Westfield State College, UMass tied for second with Harvard University, while the MIT team again took first place.

Under the guidance of Moll, the team will prepare for this final competition by working on sample problems similar to those encountered in competition.

Horowitz, a second bachelor's degree student in the computer science program, landed a spot on the UMass team following his high placement in an "in–house" competition held in the UMass Computer Science Department. The top three who placed in this tournament were chosen for the team.

Hanechak, a computer science and mathematics major and Sullivan, a physics major, will complete the team.

The cost of traveling to San Jose, which is estimated at about $1,100, will be funded by Microsoft Corporation and UPE, the computer honor society.

"We plan to do some fund raising to make up for the rest of the cost," Horowitz said.

Although unsure as to what the exact prizes were for the top placers in this competition, Horowitz commented that monetary prizes would be awarded.

"We didn't receive anything from the regional competition except bragging rights and the chance to go to California," Horowitz said.

Library betting on sweets to boost Feb. fundraiser

By Laura Forster
Collegian Staff

As Valentine's Day grows closer and the demand for chocolate becomes higher, the Friends of the Jones Library will sponsor their first "Chocolate Auction and More" fundraiser beginning Feb. 1 and culminating in a grand finale on Feb. 8.

The Chocolate Auction will offer approximately 45 gift baskets donated by 37 neighboring businesses. The gift baskets will be on display for silent auction throughout the week and then will be auctioned off vocally on Feb. 8.

The gift baskets range in value from $12 to $10, offering a variety of items.

In addition to the auction, the Jones Library's large meeting room will be transformed into a coffeehouse on the last day, with a jazz pianist and a variety of desserts donated by the Black Sheep Cafe.

Cookie decorating and face painting will be available for children and a chocolate cooking demonstration will be held at noon.

The library will also hold a raffle for a basket of fine gourmet chocolates. Raffle tickets will cost $1.

Katie George, coordinator of the Chocolate Auction and member of the Friends of the Jones Library, emphasized the importance of the library not only for the local residents but for University of Massachusetts members as well.

"Students and faculty in education and literary majors often use the selection of children's literature for their studies, so this auction is a great way to raise money for more books while enjoying the library's lovely atmosphere," George said.

George also added that students will be able to find "some great bargains" on the baskets.

George is positive that event will be a success. Despite the hard work and planning put into the event, she said, "what is so fun about this event is that it has struck a chord in people's creativity."

For Your Information

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Friday, Jan. 31

Religious — A Welcome Back Shabbat will be held at the Chabad House at 6 p.m. A meal will follow the service.

Meeting — The Alliance Christian Fellowship will hold its weekly Time Out Fellowship meeting at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center. This week, Worship and speaker Rev. Dave Berman on the Refreshing Life.

Monday, Feb. 3

Auditions — The University Chorale needs a few good men (particularly basses), and women too. Auditions will be held from 3–5 p.m. or by arrangement. Call 545–4313 for more information.

Tuesday, Feb. 4

Discussion — Portrait of a Lady, by Henry James, is the selection for the Odyssey Bookshop's monthly Open Book Discussion tonight at 7 p.m. Marjorie Kaufman, a professor emeritus of English at Mount Holyoke College, will lead the discussion.

Meeting — The Ski Club will hold its first general meeting of the semester at 7 p.m. in Earthfoods. Members can get deals on tuning, waxing and lift passes for $30. For more info, call 545–3457.

Wednesday, Feb. 5

Community Service — The UMass Community Service Program is sponsoring its annual Spring Volunteer Fair today from 11 a.m. – 1 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. Over 40 local service agencies will be on hand to discuss opportunities to volunteer or participate in internships. Any questions, call 545–3327.

Lecture — Susan L. Taylor, editor–in–chief of Essence Magazine and author of In the Spirit: The Inspirational Writings of Susan L. Taylor, will speak at Mount Holyoke College at 7:30 p.m. in Chapin Auditorium. The lecture is free and open to the public.

Meeting — The UMass Poetry Society will hold its first meeting of the semester at 7 p.m. in room 917 of the Campus Center. New members are always welcome. For more information, call Tim at 546–0562.

Meeting — Have you ever done theater or always wanted to? If so, then the UMass Theatre Guild wants you! Come to our first meeting of the semester at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center. Many artistic positions are available for the spring shows, Fame and Heidi Chronicles. Audition information will be available. Call the UMTG office at 545–0415 or Tara 546–2104 for more information.

Friday, Feb. 7

Auditions — Auditions for the UMass Theatre Guild's Spring production of Fame will take place at 7 p.m. in room 101 of the Campus Center. You only need one audition. Callbacks will take place Feb. 9 at 10 a.m. No need to prepare, come as you are. All are welcome. For more information call the UMTG office at 545–0415.

Notices

Orientation — Orientation tours for the W.E.B. Du Bois Library will be held on Jan 29–31 and Feb. 3–7. The tours will leave from the Entrance lobby at 10:30 a.m. and 2:30 p.m. daily. We encourage you to come, visit and get to know the library.

Independent study — Resources in Women's Studies Research, WOST 496B, will be held Wednesdays, 4–4:50 p.m. in the Calipari Instruction Room in the W.E.B. Du Bois Library. Reccomended for juniors and seniors. Call instructor Emily Sillverman at 545–0995 or email esilverman@library.umass.edu to register.

Volunteer work — Do you love community service, helping others, volunteering with children, leadership opportunities and making new friends? Join the UMass Circle K Club. 409 Student Union. Call Aimee or Suzanne at 665–7712 for more info.

Internships — Internships are available working on Earth Day, Hunger, Recycling and Clean Air. Call Melanie at MassPirg, 545–0199 or stop by the office at 423–A Student Union Building.

Religious — The Alliance Church of the Pioneer Valley in south Amherst will provide rides to church. Pick up is at 9:40 a.m. on campus. Call Mark at 253–0361 for more information.

Support group — Overeaters Anonymous, a group of individuals who share an addiction to food and suffer from compulsive eating and other eating disorders, will hold weekly meetings on Saturdays at 10 a.m. in the Campus Center. The only requirement for membership is the desire to stop eating. There are no dues or fees. Donations are strictly voluntary. For more info, call (617)641–2303.

Astronomy — The Amherst Area Amateur Astronomers Association will hold free public planetarium shows at 4 p.m. every Saturday in February at Amherst College Bassett Planetarium. Appropriate for all ages. Dates: Feb. 1, 8, 15, 22. For information, call Tom Whitney at 256–6234.

Community — The Hampshire County Women, Infant and Children, (WIC) Program has opened a new office serving the greater Amherst area, on 150 Fearing St., Amherst. Hampshire County WIC is a supplemental food and nutrition program serving eligible pregnant, breastfeeding and postpartum women and their infants and children under age 5. For more information, call (413)584–3591.

Dance — Cajun Dancing and Appalachian clogging beginner lessons will be offered on Sunday evenings from 6– 7 p.m. at 132 Elm St., Westfield. Partners are not needed and all ages are welcome. No prior dance experience is necessary. Classes are instructed by Maple Run, and non– profit dance group that performs at fairs and community functions. For more information, contact Jo Sarnelli at (413)746–9067.

Film — The interdepartmental program in film studies is offering its fourth annual Multicultural Film Festival: "Emigres, Exiles and Sojourners in Contemporary Cinema" this spring. Screenings and discussions with directors and faculty will be held on Wednesday evenings, 231 Herter Hall at UMass and Stirn Auditorium at Amherst College, at 7 p.m. The first event will be When Mother Comes Home for Christmas, a documentary by Nilita Vachani (Sri Lanka/Greece, 1995) on Feb. 25. For a full schedule, watch for brochures and posters at the beginning of February, or check out our webpage: www.umass.edu/film.

Film studies — Interested in earning a certificate in film studies? Take 18 credits in film and video courses and receive a film studies certificate (equivalent to a minor). Sign up at the beginning of the spring semester in the interdepartmental program in film studies office, 101 South College. Call 545–3659 or see webpage: www.umass.edu/film for more information.

Language — Casa Latina, the Center for Community Education and Culture, will conduct an 8–week Functional Spanish course, beginning February 18 at 7 p.m. in Northampton. Tuition is $260. Students will be divided into three small groups: beginners, intermediate and advanced. Classes will be taught by experienced language instructors who are also native Spanish speakers. For more information, contact Janet Gonzalez at 586–1569.

Special Olympics — The North Valley Area Special Olympics is actively seeking special athletes for its spring sports teams. Athletes interested in candlepin bowling or basketball should contact the area office at (413)584–9377. There are roster positions available for special athletes ages seven and up. Newcomers are strongly encouraged to join, and parents are invited to call with any questions.

Support group — A Women in Relationships Therapy Group, an ongoing therapy and support group for women who want to improve difficult relationships with friends, parents, children and colleagues, lovers or partners, led by Rebecca Reid, will meet Mondays from 7:30–9 p.m. in Amherst. Sliding scale fee. For information call 253–5494.

Campus Police Log

Accident — Property Damage
Jan. 28
A two vehicle accident occurred on Massachusetts Avenue due to icy road conditions.
A two vehicle accident occurred on Hicks Way due to icy road conditions.
A two vehicle accident occurred on University Drive.
A three vehicle accident occurred on Commonwealth Avenue due to icy road conditions.

Alarm — Fire
Jan. 28
A car fire on Stadium Drive was extinguished by the Amherst Fire Department.

Animal Complaint
Jan. 28
An individual asked that the well–being of a dog who was tied up outside of the W.E.B. Du Bois Library be checked on.

Assault & Battery
Jan. 28
A fight between two individuals at the Mullins Center was broken up by police.

Disturbance
Jan. 28
Two individuals had to be ejected from the Smashing Pumpkins concert at the Mullins Center.

Family Offenses, Domestics
Jan. 28
A restraining order was served on a resident of Knowlton Residence Hall.

Hazardous Materials/ Spills
Jan. 28
Malicious activation of a fire extinguisher was reported from Patterson Residence Hall.

Larceny
Jan. 28
Bicycle parts were stolen off of a bicycle that was located in a storage room in Leach Residence Hall.
A snow blower was stolen from a storage room in the Physical Plant.
An individual reported having money stolen from his wallet in Tobin Hall.
An individual reported having his wallet stolen from Lederle Research building.
An individual from Kennedy Residence Hall reported that his futon was stolen.

Vandalism
Jan. 28
A rear window was smashed on a vehicle located in parking lot 44 on Sylvan Drive.

WRITE FOR THE COLLEGIAN!

The Collegian News Department always has room for new writers interested in reporting on various topics of interest to UMass students. Come to our office in the Campus Center basement, or call Laura Stock, News Editor, at 545–1762 and contribute to our news coverage.

take Kaplan and get into the right school.

MCAT

- Highly trained, expert teachers who know the tests inside and out.
- Personalized, computerized study plans, tailored to your individual needs.
- Proven methods, guaranteed to raise your score.

Classes are starting now!

the leader in test prep

KAPLAN

1-800-KAP-TEST
www.kaplan.com

We're running our transition game to perfection!

NEW BENEFITS for UMass Student Credit Union members:
FREE ATM card
computer loans
24 hour Addie Teller access

WELCOME STUDENT CREDIT UNION MEMBERS TO YOUR TEAM!

UMass isn't the only team with a great transition game. We would like to welcome you, the members of the UMass Student Credit Union, as you make this important move.

You'll get many NEW BENEFITS — like a free ATM card and great rates on computer loans, just to name a few.

UMass Five College Federal Credit Union
6 University Drive • Amherst
549-7400
Across the street from Rafter's

"Snowflakes are one of nature's most fragile things, but just look what they can do when they stick together."

-Vesta M. Kelly

Sorority Rush '97

February 1st - 6th

ΔΖ ΙΓΥ

Registration: This week in Campus Center Concourse

All University Women Welcome

ΣΚ ΣΔΤ ΑΕΦ ΚΚΓ ΑΧΩ ΣΣΣ ΧΩ

New York sex offender files $8 million lawsuit

By John Affleck
Associated Press

BUFFALO, N.Y. — A sex offender who used a toy gun to force girls into his car has filed an $8 million lawsuit against authorities for revealing that he moved into a local school district while on parole.

John E. Grace, who was convicted for sex attacks in Erie, Niagara, Wyoming and Livingston counties, claims that his rights were violated when residents of the Maryvale school district in suburban Buffalo were told that he was living in their area. Grace, 58, is suing Maryvale Superintendent Gary Brader and three state Division of Parole officials in U.S. District Court in Buffalo.

The suit was filed in late November but only came to light this week when the Maryvale school board announced it would pay for Brader's defense. A copy of Grace's lawsuit was obtained by The Associated Press yesterday.

The board, headed by President Richard Augustine, released a statement saying it "has absolutely no doubts that Mr. Brader acted properly and responsibly at all times."

Grace was convicted of rape, kidnapping and attempted rape for a series of assaults in western New York and wound up serving more than 12 years in state prison.

He was paroled in June 1993 and returned to live in his hometown of Cheektowaga, just outside Buffalo. According to his lawsuit, Grace rented a home with two of his three sons and got a job working at a restaurant.

In 1994, the state Division of Parole instituted a policy under which they are to notify school districts if a paroled sex offender was living in their area.

Once state officials told Brader that Grace was in the district, the superintendent sent a letter to parents. While the letter did not release Grace's name, it told parents they could get that information and more by writing to the district.

The letter caused an outcry from residents who complained it didn't provide enough details. A meeting attended by about 250 residents was held to discuss the situation.

Grace said that when his identity was revealed, he was forced to quit his job and leave town. His children also were evicted. In his lawsuit, Grace said he now lives in a Buffalo halfway house and survives on welfare checks. He is no longer under parole supervision. Grace claims his right to privacy was violated and his punishment was effectively extended by what happened.

Brader defended his actions. "We felt at the time we were taking appropriate steps," he said.

A spokesman for the state Division of Parole declined to comment specifically on Grace's case but said the division makes such notifications on a case-by-case basis, depending on the possible threat to public safety.

The Grace case treads on similar ground as New York's so-called "Megan's Law." The New York Sex Offender Registration Act allows public officials and private individuals to consult a registry at police stations to learn whether a potentially dangerous sex criminal is living in their midst.

JENNIFER JUTRAS / COLLEGIAN

Can I get your autograph?
Swati Gupte, an epidemiology grad student, signs a petition supporting an updated bottle bill while Elizabeth Gartlan, a sophomore human nutrition major, fills her in on MassPIRG's ideas.

Guidelines could ease colon cancer testing

By Lauran Neergaard
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — An easy take-home test for colorectal cancer could lower the cost and unpleasantness that deter many Americans from being examined for the nation's second-leading cancer killer, say new medical guidelines being issued today.

Taking those simple tests to detect blood in stool samples every year after age 50 could cut colorectal cancer deaths by a third, making them about as effective as mammograms are for breast cancer, say the guidelines, endorsed by the American Cancer Society and seven other medical groups.

"For people who don't want to go through a lot of hassle and expense... that's a reasonable option," said Dr. Robert Fletcher of Harvard Medical School, who co-authored the guidelines for the American Gastroenterological Association.

But the guidelines offer options, including testing once every 10 years — by snaking a fiber-optics tube into the colon to spot precancerous growths that could be removed to prevent cancer from ever forming. The simpler stool tests, in contrast, detect cancer early enough to cure.

Even better for some people, the guidelines say those manual rectal exams doctors often do today aren't worth the time and embarrassment.

The guidelines are "a call to action," said co-author Dr. Sidney Winawer of Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center.

"The public and physicians have been skeptical" about colorectal testing, he added, but "the evidence is strong now for the benefits."

Some managed-care companies already cover these routine cancer exams, but Medicare, the federal health-care system for the elderly, only pays if someone has cancer symptoms. President Clinton will ask Congress for Medicare funding for routine colorectal tests in his 1998 budget, and Rep. William Thomas (R-Calif.) already has introduced similar legislation.

About 131,000 Americans get colon and rectal cancer each year and more than 54,000 die. It strikes men and women about equally. And while relatives of cancer patients or people with colon growths called polyps are more prone to the disease, the biggest risk is simply getting older.

"As the second-leading cause of cancer death, this offers the biggest potential for lives saved if the country would adopt these guidelines," said the American Cancer Society's Dr. Harmon Eyre. Some doctors already advise people over 50 to get regular manual rectal exams, stool tests and a more unpleasant exam called a sigmoidoscopy.

But only one in five Americans gets tested.

So the gastroenterological association assembled Independent experts to find the best tests. They decided most people over 50 should choose one of the following:

- Annual fecal blood tests, a $5 kit a doctor sends home for the person to collect six stool samples and mail back for analysis. Although easy to use, they can cause false alarms that necessitate further cancer testing.
- A sigmoidoscopy, where a tube threaded into the rectum checks just the lower half of the colon for polyps or cancer, every five years.
- A barium enema every five to 10 years, a 20-minute procedure that lets doctors view the entire colon by X-ray to spot large polyps.

NRC adds reactors to special watch list

By H. Josef Hebert
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission expanded its special watch list to 14 reactors — the most in nearly a decade — because of safety problems yesterday. It sent a scathing letter to the nation's largest nuclear operator, questioning its ability to run its reactors safely.

The agency added six new reactors to the list that already had eight reactors requiring special scrutiny by the NRC because of safety shortcomings. Nearly half of the reactors belong to Commonwealth Edison Co., in Illinois, which was singled out for particularly harsh criticism.

The action comes amid growing problems at a handful of the more than 100 nuclear power reactors in 31 states. Three reactors in Connecticut have been ordered shut down indefinitely and the NRC has issued a string of heavy fines over the last two years totaling more than $2.3 million against three utilities alone.

"The NRC is sending a message out to the industry to shape up or there will be drastic consequences," said David Lochbaum of the Union of Concerned Scientists, a nuclear watchdog group.

Steven Ungelsbee, a spokesman for the Nuclear Power Institute, said that while some plants have problems, "the industry is performing at record levels of safety and reliability."

Incidents where safety systems are activated have been cut from 2.4 events per plant in 1985 to 0.1 of an event per plant in 1995, he said. Nevertheless, the NRC staff made clear at a meeting with commissioners yesterday that at some nuclear plants safety problems persist year after year.

Eight of the 14 reactors are in temporary shutdown because of various safety problems, while six are producing electricity. The reactors are in Illinois, Maine, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey and Florida.

In a letter to Commonwealth Edison, Hugh Thompson, the NRC's director of operations demanded the Illinois utility immediately provide the agency with evidence it can operate safely its six nuclear stations on the watch list.

He noted that Commonwealth Edison, one of the largest nuclear operators in the country with 12 reactors in Illinois, has had facilities on the watch list since 1986 and failed to show safety improvements despite a major reorganization four years ago. Thompson cited a "lack of effective management... weak corporate oversight... a lack of adequate engineering support and an inability or reluctance to learn from experience" at Commonwealth Edison.

In a response, Commonwealth Edison Chairman James I. O'Connor said: "We are confident that ComEd will be able to satisfy the NRC's concerns and provide sufficient information to demonstrate that we can and will continue to operate our nuclear stations safely while improving our performance.

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139
STUDENT SPECIAL
4 MONTHS
KEISER • NAUTILUS • CYBEX
STAIRMASTERS • LIFECYCLES
TREADMILLS • V.R. BIKE
LIFEROWER • GAUNTLET
GRAVITON
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
Rte. 116 So. Amherst
256-0060

Mental Health Groups Spring 1997

MONDAY	TUESDAY	WEDNESDAY	THURSDAY
Mindfulness-based Stress Management Group — Learn to live fully in the present moment. Mindfulness meditation will be used as the foundation for all stress management exercises. This group is appropriate for both general stress management as well as for assistance in managing stress related medical disorders. Group runs for 8 weeks. Mondays, 3:30 - 5:30 p.m.	Self-Discovery Groups — Learn to develop better social skills; improve relationships; become more assertive; improve connections with others; feel more in control of your life; and cope with sadness, lonliness, or isolation by talking with others who share your concerns. These groups run for 10 weeks. Group I -Tuesdays, 3:30 - 5:00 p.m.	Self-Discovery Groups — Learn to develop better social skills; improve relationships; become more assertive; improve connections with others; feel more in control of your life; and cope with sadness, lonliness, or isolation by talking with others who share your concerns. These groups run for 10 weeks. Group II - Wednesdays, 3 - 4:30 p.m.	Ninos Adultos de Familias Disfuncionales — This is a therapy group for individuals who would like to understand how their upbringing continues to influence relationships in the present. Issues such as exploring/expressing feelings, developing self-esteem and breaking dysfunctional patterns are central. Group is held in Spanish. Group runs for 8 weeks, Wednesdays, 3:30 - 5:00 p.m.	Men's Group - If you are a man who has difficulty with self-confidence, friendships, romantic relationships, or expressing anger you're not alone. This weekly discussion group can help you understand and overcome these problems as group members talk with and learn from each other. The group is co-led by a man and woman and runs for 8 - 10 weeks, Thursdays, 4:00 - 5:00 p.m

All groups require a pre-group interview. For more information, or to sign up for an interview, please call the Mental Health Division of University Health Services at 545-2337 or stop by 127 Hills North, M - F, 8:00 a.m. - 5 p.m.

UNIVERSITY STORE'S TEXTBOOK ANNEX UMASS AMHERST

The Textbook Annex will be open
EXTRA HOURS
for your Shopping Convenience

Tuesday	January 28	9AM - 8PM
Wednesday	January 29	9AM - 8PM
Thursday	January 30	9AM - 8PM
Friday	January 31	9AM - 6PM
Saturday	February 1	11AM - 4PM
Monday-Friday	February 3-7	9AM-6PM

Academics and More!!!

UMass Division of Continuing Education

For a free course catalog, call 413-545-0107 or e-mail contined@admin.umass.edu
Explore our web site and see how we can help you - http://www.umass.edu/contined/

Division of Continuing Education
University of Massachusetts Amherst
providing access to adult, nontraditional education for over 25 years

Tons of credit undergrad courses — in the evening!
Nearly 100 noncredit workshops — affordable, fun, practical, including
- Bartending.
- GMAT, GRE, LSAT, & MCAT Preparation.
- Magical Arts.
- Photography.
- ESL.
- EMT Training.
- Marketing, and CHOCOLATE !

ge Pizza

- Come and See the NEW College Pizza
- Featuring new larger '18 Pizzas
- New Larger '16 Subs made with French Bread baked daily
- Open for lunch everyday.
- Your satisfaction is guaranteed - Your money back on food replacement if you are not fully satisfied.
- We promise fast delivery to our delivery areas in Amherst & Hadley.
- Come see 99.3 WHMP broadcast live from 2-4 pm Feb. 2 - Plenty of FREE GIVEAWAYS

150 Fearing St. Amherst
549-6098 or 549-6073

College Pizza – Across from Southwest
We us goods & we're proud of our product.

DAILY COLLEGIAN

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592
http://www.umass.edu/rso/collegian

Jacob W. Michaels Editor-in-Chief Chris Taylor Conner Managing Editor
Alycia Hines Business Manager Josh Sylvester Production Manager Craig I. Brody Advertising Manager
David Voldan Advertising Production Manager Lisa Chiu Senior Diversity Editor

Jeremy Brothers Arts & Living Editor
Humphrey brown III Black Affairs Editor
Lisa Chiu Developing Nations Editor
Mike Burke Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jamie Sinsheimer Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sarah Kimmel Jewish Affairs Editor
Raghuram Vadarevu Multicultural Affairs Co-Editor
Christine Soh Multicultural Affairs Co-Editor
Laura Stock News Editor
Thang Vo Photography Editor
Casey Kane Sports Co-Editor
Chris Stamm Sports Co-Editor
Michelle Hillman Women's Issues Editor
Marc Dionne Editorial Production Manager
Position Vacant Systems Manager
Eric R. Remillard IV Finance Manager
Position Vacant Circulation Manager
Feisal Ahmad Marketing Manager
Jaclyn E. Alberti Classifieds Manager
Lyle A. Henry Operations Manager
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Thomas F. Sweeney, Jr. Graphics Advisor/Instructor
David Quist Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Opinion/Editorial

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

New lows for The Heights

C. Taylor Conner

"If you went to such a good prep school in Philly, why did you come to UMass?"

Time and time again, people at this institution ask me this question, and I answer by stating the facts: a quality newspaper, the opportunity to run track and highly underrated academics lured me away from attending either Syracuse or Michigan.

This seemingly innate Bay State–bred aura of low self– worth and lack of pride surrounding a University of Massachusetts degree allows many here to believe that our school is indeed inferior to most — thus, the question gets asked.

Yet, it's not really the fault of our students that such unfavorable sentiments about UMass exist. Rather, it is the simple and unwaveringly harsh truth that Massachusetts is home to several of the nation's, if not world's, best institutions of higher learning. Such is our burden in Harvard Land as the state's largely unrecognized flagship state school.

But we can deal with this because we're cool like that.

What I and many other students just cannot stand, however, are outbursts of ill–mannered elitism much like the ones we at the Collegian saw in a recent copy of the Boston College newspaper, The Heights.

It would be foolish of me not to acknowledge the often good–natured and amusing rivalry that has developed between the UMass and BC sports teams, particularly since the Commonwealth Classic began two years ago.

But it would also be foolish of me not to acknowledge that in their news section, The Heights took an unwarranted and, quite frankly, journalistically–embarrassing swipe at UMass. In their "Voices from the Dustbowl" feature, a section similar to the Collegian's own "Campus Perspectives," the question of the day is, "Boston College is better than UMass because..."

To give an example of the ludicrous nature of the answers, (all of which are given by sophomores — you know, for diversity's sake) one of the participants responds, "...we uphold a strong Jesuit tradition."

"Scuse me, honey. Little thing called separation of church and state. Maybe if you hadn't just mindlessly regurgitated on tests all information pertinent to American history while trying to climb the college ladder, you would remember that it's one of the principles upon which this country is founded.

Repeat after me: we public, you private. Merci beaucoup.

Another response, although admittedly hyperbolic, is "...we scored over 50 on the SATs." Ironically, this backward–butted simian's sorry stab at snobbery ends up making us look fairly clever, considering you get a couple hundred points just for signing your name.

I can imagine his next response might be something to the effect of doubting our ability to spell our names.

Then again, I can imagine he's probably still stuck on the word "simian."

However, BC really reveals its true colors in its choice of students for the questions. When we at the Collegian do Campus Perspectives, our goal is to represent the broadest possible array of students by year, gender and race. In the BC spread, there are four white male sophomores and one white female sophomore.

When applying to colleges, I actually considered BC as one of my choices and did indeed take a look around campus–on the Boston leg of the Mass. tour. It reminded me instantly of Villanova — which, if you don't know, many minorities popularly refer to as "Vanilla–nova."

Eerily enough, the college guide I had with me mentioned that many students not admitted to BC choose Villanova as another option.

While Mass may have some ongoing problems with vanilla–ness of its own, at least the school doesn't pride itself on it. That's why I find it hard to believe the disclaimer at the bottom of the Heights' piece — "The views expressed in 'Voices from the Dustbowl' do not necessarily represent those of The Heights, Inc., or its staff" — to be true in the minds of most of BC students and newspaper writers and editors. They could at least relegate their pettiness to the Op–Ed page.

And, in closing, to the moron who answered, "...two words: Mickey Curley," I would just like to state for the record that the younger Curley makes his older brother, Bill, look like Hakeem Olajuwon.

C. Taylor Conner is a Collegian columnist.

Gloria Steinem vs. Larry Flynt

Bob Dunn

"The right to be heard does not automatically include the right to be taken seriously."
— Hubert H. Humphrey

Sticks and stones. Dogs and cats. Women and men. Larry Flynt and Gloria Steinem.

Not since the heady days of the 1970s when people wore bell bottoms and listened to disco without a single shred of irony and Bobby Riggs took on Billie Jean King in their much ballyhooed tennis matches has a battle of the sexes been taken so public.

Flynt threw the gauntlet first by having the unmitigated gall to agree to have a film made based on his life. Steinem returned fire by writing a blistering ed-op piece in the New York Times denouncing the movie, and its supposedly revisionist take on Flynt's work. Yawn, snore. Don't we have anything worthwhile to argue about anymore?

Steinem's big beef with The People vs. Larry Flynt is that it takes a "revisionist" view of Flynt's life, leaving out some of the more racist, misogynistic and lurid pieces and views that run in his publications. What Steinem has apparently forgotten in her haste to trash the film is the fact that it is just that... a film. As such it's entitled to dramatic license.

Another important fact that seems to have eluded Ms. Steinem is that the film is not, nor does it claim to be, a complete and fully documented account of Flynt's life or his work. It's a story about his court battles, his relationship with his fourth wife, Althea Leasure, and his recovery from an assassination attempt. It certainly doesn't pretend to be a history lesson.

Anytime Hollywood decides to tell a "true" story, there are going to be places where the script deviates, changes or omits events and facts. Did the recent Michael Collins tell the entire story about the man and the founding of the IRA? Will this year's Titanic give a completely authentic minute–by–minute account of that famous sea disaster?

Steinem also made a comment comparing the film's revisionist slant on Flynt's life to Watergate. In one fell swoop, Steinem has not only overemphasized the importance of Hollywood but also trivialized Watergate at the same time. The latter was a scandal involving the highest levels of government and the abuse of power; the former is a movie.

It's not Hollywood's job to educate the public (the fact that Chris Farley is still making movies is enough evidence of that) — their job is to entertain, and in this instance, Hollywood succeeded. If Steinem wants to write ed–op pieces about Hollywood product that she finds offensive she shouldn't have to look much further than her television set to such shows as Baywatch and its ilk. I find a film that simply tells the story it wants to tell a lot less offensive than a weekly piece of garbage that objectifies both sexes and reinforces people's obsessions with obtaining "perfect" bodies, while having the gall to make claims like it teaches kids CPR and water safety.

Flynt is the modern day P.T. Barnum who realized early on the sheer number of suckers there are out there. There's an old saying which says something to the effect that no one ever went broke underestimating the taste of the American public and Flynt is perfect evidence of that.

If Gloria Steinem wanted to attack Flynt himself for being a pig, that's what she should have done. He would be the first one to agree with her. She shouldn't have attacked a remarkably well done film for choosing to tell a different story than the one she wanted to see. Let Flynt say what he wants, let Hollywood make what it wants — it's their right. Don't take it seriously if you don't want to, that's your right.

Bob Dunn is a Collegian columnist.

Is South Africa forgetting its past?

Bradley Skaught

What? You mean that all that talk of black South African activists accidentally falling down seven flights of stairs, falling out of windows, and throwing themselves against walls wasn't true?

The badly named Truth and Reconciliation Commission of South Africa has recently announced that many former policemen have come forward and admitted to many of the hideous political killings that were practically the trademark of Apartheid era South Africa. Truth, undoubtedly; but reconciliation?

Central to the issue is the commission's ability to grant amnesty for full confessions. No one can deny the value of finally acknowledging the brutality of South Africa's apartheid regime, and there is certainly healing in the recognition. But it's hard to look closely at the violence and not feel like one is looking at a roster of war crimes. Is amnesty really the most effective way of achieving reconciliation?

Steve Biko's family certainly doesn't think so. They tried to stop the commission's investigation in order to prosecute the killers. As unusual as it may sound, many victims' families are protesting the commission's actions. They feel they have the right to bring their killers to justice — a right we in the United States certainly pretend to uphold and can understand. So why does the commission feel that amnesty is important and acceptable?

The issues brought up by the Truth and Reconciliation Committee reflect many of the general issues central to the Mandela government. The truth may be obvious to those who were victims of Apartheid era practices, and to those outside of South Africa who were aware, but how do you make the reconciliation palatable to the white community — the dominant economic community with whom nearly all of the international business responsibility lies? Many of whom were Apartheid era bureaucrats. Mandela can not afford to give favor to one group or the other — his ability to create a new South Africa, establish lasting change, and, indeed, his political future depends on careful balance and tentative steps. But where is the justice — the personal, human justice?

This is the wall the victims' families find themselves up against. It is a delicate situation — a precarious balancing act between perceptions of justice and a highly volatile political situation. The accomplishments and promise of the new South African government are valuable acquisitions. Neither perfect nor guaranteed of success, steps are taken and an attempt is made, but the wounds are deep and easily agitated. This is the wall that Mandela has found himself up against.

There are more questions. Questions raised when we use similar eyes to look upon ourselves. How have we dealt with our own violent past in America?

Did the C.I.A. facilitate the selling of crack? What happens to them if they get caught? If the F.B.I. had successfully assassinated Castro in the '60s, how would we achieve reconciliation with Cuba? Malcolm X? The Black Panthers? Where is the United States' Truth and Reconciliation Committee, and would we accept a committee with terms such as that of South Africa's?

There is sweet virtue in the search for the truth, but there is a bitter aftertaste — remembering the list of names that fills history books and graveyards.

Bradley Skaught is a Collegian columnist.

Our decaying world

Craig O'Connor

The malady of modern times, many have written, is the acquisition of power by inhuman things, like corporations, governments and machines, stealing power from the individual's own life.

This is something generations before have recognized and revolted against — through culture, politics, lifestyle and intellect. Today it seems as if we have not embraced this struggle to regain human control of human destiny. Too often we allow ourselves the comfort of believing that our government or our corporations are eternal — that we cannot change the system under which we live. Even our language — "under" — betrays our loss of human agency. It is high time that we rediscover the passion and fulfillment of creating a society, of working out the complicated problems, and of determining a just world.

In cultural terms, we have lost (or have had stolen) the prerogative of independent creation. All forms of rebellion seem commodified and cheap, sold back to us, the builders and progenitors of that rebellion as mere music or film or novel. How often do we think of the bands and singers, the filmmakers and writers that sustain us and give voice to our conception of the world as anything other than an isolated phenomenon of insight? Don't the popular trends of independent music labels, films of revolt and written works of dissent demonstrate that we, collectively, are not at peace with the society in which we exist? Even the super–famous artists, like Nirvana, began as an absolute denunciation of our times; yet they exist as products, sold as isolated and essentially apolitical works that signify little more than a mild distrust.

Why do these things (anger, alienation, distrust, fear) seem so familiar? Is it because we are the community from which they arose or because they speak of things in such a way that we feel but do not recognize as a common ailment suffered by many at the hands of the system? Few of us see in modern America the great social formation in which our desires are in concert with our reality. When we all feel this similar uneasiness about the world we inherit, shouldn't that emotion become collective, and shouldn't we put our minds together to work out a change that will bring us closer to the ideal we seek — a society that grants each individual the rights of dignity, self–determination and self–expression?

This trend towards acquiescing to an alienated, incomprehensible world is perhaps most plainly expressed in our attitudes toward the systems of governments and economics. We all know, instinctively, that the government does not exist to help us and promote our interests, but rather works to protect the prerogatives and lifestyles of the very few who run the nation — the corporate elite and their minions. We understand, without being told, that the corporations are in it for their own profit, seeking not the common good but their own selfish ends. It is not the men who run these corporations — they have given up their own human dignity long ago.

It is the system of corporate domination that makes us automatons, mere pieces in a vast empire of money making immorality. Perhaps the example of the 1960s has led us to lose faith in acting, as a generation and as a culture, to change the machinations of the power elite. That is a valid point — the self–indulgence of the hippies and the simpleness of the New Left conspired to make the revolt of the young (amidst a shameful and all–too–explicable war, during the courageous and existential civil rights struggle) seem a foolish and self–defeating social movement.

But the failure in the 1960s, due as much to internal contradictions as to government assassination and repression, only makes the present a more fertile time for dissent. The problems they sought to solve — a dehumanizing economy built around a military–industrial complex whose logic demanded war and colonization; a systematic racism that condemned many Americans to a life of degradation and poverty; a spiritual and cultural vacuum that was caused in part by the seemingly irrational pursuit of material wealth — remain today intensified and more odious, increasingly intolerable, ever more repugnant and indecent. Why are we so loath to educate ourselves about politics and economics? Have we forgotten that societies are merely the manifestation of the people who live in them, that societies are subject to our will?

In the generations since the Vietnam protesters cried out for peace, America has gone to war many times, killing countless hundreds of thousands, in places such as Panama, the Persian Gulf, Grenada, Nicaragua, Angola, the Middle East, Libya, El Salvador and the Philippines. The United States has assassinated or mutilated the democratic leadership in scores of nations like the Congo, Cuba, Ghana and Mexico. The United States has also rigidly stifled social protest and serious debate about our system of social, political and economic organization.

After 15 years of unbridled corporate expansion, of growing wealth among the rich and falling living standards for the rest of us, many of us now fear we will not get jobs because our government and the economic elite have decided that NAFTA and GATT and the coming Multilateral Investment Agreement, all of which globalize American corporations, best protect our well–being by making it simple for corporations to move out of the country or else pay very little if any taxes.

These are problems not only for radicals and intellectuals to discuss. The downsizing of our internal economy; the globalization of capitalist economy; the systematic narrowing of political opinion; the increasingly invalid cultural expressions; the growing sense of disillusion in our nation; the ever–present awareness that the future holds not the promise of the American Dream but an uncertain and potentially disastrous nightmare of economic depression and governmental authoritarianism — these issues affect our daily lives, each one of us, in innumerable and mutilating ways.

We, all of us, in some way and to some degree, understand that the world appears not ours to create but has been built and systematized, made rigid and set against us. If we are to escape the coming era of economic collapse; the martial heart–beat of a militarized and deadly economy; the moral, cultural and spiritual degeneracy experienced by any society falling from its purpose; and if we wish to prevent the future from becoming more bloody and more inhuman — more alien and creatively bankrupt — then we must begin to build. Starting with our own assumptions and our apathy about the world in which we live.

Easy answers — like blaming immigrants or the poor or ourselves — are no longer valid. Let us collectively confront the failures of our present and prevent the injustices being proscribed for the future. We must organize now into community groups, unions, independent progressive groups, literary discussions, and environmental and social organizations. We must organize to confront racism and the systematic causes of poverty, sexism and a brutal, logical and murderous foreign policy. If we don't, we will deserve the violent, totalitarian and indecent future that can already be predicted.

Craig O'Connor is a UMass student.

WANTED!!!

The Ed/Op page is seeking fresh, new voices for the spring semester. If you are interested in writing or have written before, please attend one of the following meetings in the Collegian newsroom: Tonight at 6 p.m. and Monday at 7 p.m. Please bring a writing sample.

If you have any questions call Mike Burke at 545–1491.

Farley fails martial arts

By Adam Levine
Collegian Staff

BEVERLY HILLS NINJA
Directed by Dennis Dugan
with Chris Farley, Nicollette Sheridan, Robin Shou
Playing at Mt. Forms Theater

The current mainstream success of Jackie Chan came along just in time to give slapstick comic Chris Farley some new material. After all, his previous film, Black Sheep, was nothing more than a carbon copy of his hilarious hit, Tommy Boy. Now the Saturday Night Live alumnus is back with a whole new premise based on the classic "Kung Fu" flicks, but unfortunately it's the same old antics.

Beverly Hills Ninja is a nauseating tale of the Great White Ninja, a legend foretold thousands of years ago by the ancient martial artists. The legend consists of a small child from the west mysteriously coming to a small ninja village and growing up to become the greatest warrior in the land. Farley is the realization of the legend, but instead becomes the Great Fat Clumsy and Pathetic Ninja, as opposed to the swift and cunning fighter which had been predicted. In a feeble attempt to prove his ninja capabilities, as well as his self–worth to his adopted father, Farley must travel to Beverly Hills to save a beautiful woman (Nicollete Sheridan) from her murderous counterfeiter boyfriend (Nathanial Parker).

The attempt at humor fades quickly as Farley repeatedly runs into walls, expecting a laugh each time. The ongoing fat jokes that Farley makes about himself may also prove that he is more funny looking than a genuine talented comic. In this film specifically, nearly every scene appears reminiscent of familiar material. Whether mocking real Kung Fu films or imitating other karate parodies such as Woody Allen's What's Up, Pussycat?, Beverly Hills Ninja offers nothing even remotely original. One scene including Farley dressed up as a Japanese chef throwing big knifes around is somewhat amusing, until one remembers that John Belushi did the act first, and a lot better too.

The film's one saving grace is the talented and typecast Robin Shou, who appeared as Liu Kang in Mortal Kombat. Shou plays the most talented ninja of the bunch who just also happens to be Farley's brother. Unfortunately, Shou must remain the butt of most of Farley's clumsy jokes, but his patience and amusing facial expressions aimed at his brother offer a slightly refreshing release from the otherwise zany stupidity.

Sheridan, on the other hand, safely remains one step ahead of a B–movie actress. She portrays nothing more than the object of male sexual desire, rather than attempting to actually act. Her lines are delivered melodically as the camera does nothing more than pan up and down her body. It's a shame that in this day and age, we still allow Hollywood to perpetuate such blatant stereotypes.

If all else fails, we can usually rely on Chris Rock for a laugh. This gifted young comic should definitely be careful next time he chooses a supporting role. Although he completely outshines Farley, which isn't saying much, His performance consists of, at one point, chasing a chicken around in order to decapitate it. His desire to be a ninja just like Farley is ridiculous and completely unwarranted. After all, who would follow Farley anywhere?

More should have been expected from director Dennis Dugan, whose last film, Happy Gilmore, was an unexpected delight. Maybe we should blame the writers instead of the brilliant producer who looked at the script and decided to actually invest money into it. D–

COURTESY ALCO TORRES

Chris Farley stars in Beverly Hills Ninja

History of Rock redux

Nick Kent offers seminal rock critique

By John Hendrickson
Collegian Staff

The Dark Stuff: Selected Writings On Rock Music 1972-1995
By Nick Kent
Foreword by Iggy Pop
Da Capo Press

It's tough to find good, honest, rock journalism nowadays. It seems that most pieces are total white–washes, based somewhere between the pretentious social parameters of "Bruce Springsteen —– Friend of the Working Man" and "Elvis Presley — He Loved His Mother," with the occasional sensationalist character assassination thrown in for good measure (see Rolling Stone's recent crucifixion of Eddie Vedder). As Diamond David Lee Roth once said, "Rock critics only like Elvis Costello because rock critics look like Elvis Costello."

The violations of such precedents are what make Nick Kent's The Dark Stuff so damn!exciting. For once, here's a writer who walks the walk, talks the talk, and most importantly, rocks the rock. Kent, who Lou Reed has dubbed "the Judy Garland of rock journalism," initially made a name for himself 25 years ago writing for Britain's weekly New Musical Express. As his career grew, so did his credibility; he played guitar with the embryonic Sex Pistols, had an affair with The Pretenders' Chrissie Hynde, ran the inside track with the day's most controversial superstars, and almost wound up in the grave from his association with and hero–worship of Keith Richards during the depths of the Stones' decade–long heroin addiction.

As the title suggests, The Dark Stuff focuses on the seedy underbelly of 40 years of rock's casualties and survivors. From Sun Records to Sub Pop, Kent leaves no stone unturned. His dismetrically opposed readings of 1950s pioneers Jerry Lee Lewis and Roy Orbison each illustrate the defining characteristics of the other; Orbison is seen as the man whose unyielding faith helped him survive one personal tragedy after another, while the Killer is the hellhound-on-my-trail hedonist who had the power in the palm of his hand, only to throw it all away with booze, pills, and wives dying under very mysterious circumstances.

Such casualties of the '60s as Syd Barrett, Brian Jones, and Roky Erickson are also given the full treatment here, but none as brutally as Brian Wilson, The Beach Boys' resident musical genius and emotional infant. In "The Last Beach Movie Revisited," Wilson's series of nervous breakdowns and his subsequent manipulation at the hands of psychiatrist Dr. Eugene Landy and his fellow bandmates are harrowingly documented, illustrating the musical and psychological decimation of one of rock's great talents.

The 1970s, though, provide Kent with his greatest and most revealing portraits. From the cartoonish pairing of The New York Dolls to the "exploding dim-wit" that was Sid Vicious, this decade offers the blackest moments of The Dark Stuff. Iggy Pop's drug-induced schizophrenia and Reed's descent into amphetamine psychosis are brutally depicted, but it is "Twilight in Babylon: The Rolling Stones after the Sixties" which serves as the cen-

Turn to ROCK, page 6

STUDENT SPEAKER
UNDERGRADUATE COMMENCEMENT

Is there something you would like to say before graduating? If so, you are invited to submit a proposal for consideration as Student Commencement Speaker.

Who Is Eligible:	Graduating Amherst campus seniors (Class of 1997).
Subject Matter:	Substance should concern higher education and be relevant to the University and your experience(s) here.
Format:	Submit up to three word-procéssed or typewritten pages, double-spaced, or the equivalent of 3-5 minutes speaking time.
Selection Process:	Authors' names will be deleted (by a non-voting staff person) after which a committee of students (majority), staff, and faculty will review the proposals. 3-5 individuals will be invited to "audition" before the committee (in March), after which the speaker will be selected.
Deadline:	Wednesday, February 12, 1997, 4:30 p.m.
Submit Proposals To:	Paul R. Appleby, Chair, Student Speaker Selection Committee, 305 Whitmore (545-3464).

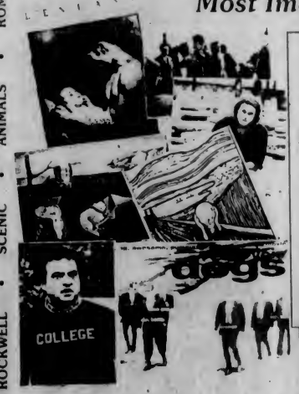
UNIVERSITY STORE'S Textbook Annex UMASS AMHERST

CASH FOR YOUR BOOKS

Textbook Buyback will be at The University Store Campus Center

Monday thru Friday Jan. 27 - Jan. 31 9 AM to 5 PM

Monday and Tuesday Feb. 3 - Feb. 4 9 AM to 5 PM



TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139 STUDENT SPECIAL 4 MONTHS
KEISER • NAUTILUS • CYBEX
STAIRMASTERS • LIFECYCLES
TREADMILLS • V.R. BIKE
LIFEROWER • GAUNTLET
GRAVITON
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB Rte. 116 So. Amherst 256-0080

Spring Break Fever! we've got it
Bahamas 7 nights land only $336
Grand Cayman 7 nights land only $394
Jamaica 7 nights land only $346
Aruba 7 nights land only $479
you catch it!
Prices are based on double occupancy, U.S. and Canadian departure dates and fees are not included. Prices and availability are subject to change.
Council Travel
44 Main Street, Amherst
Tel: 413-256-1261
http://www.ciee.org/

MOVIE STILLS • MOVIE POSTERS • FINE ART • ROCK BANDS • HUMOR
ROMANCE • ANIMALS • SCENIC • ROCKWELL • MODELS • PAM ANDERSON • EINSTEIN • BRUCE LEE

BACK TO SCHOOL POSTER SALE

Most Images Only $6, $7 and $8

Sponsor WMUA 91.1FM
Date: Monday, January 27 thru Friday, January 31
Time: 9am - 4:30pm
Place: Student Union Ballroom

Biggest & Best Selection

• X FILES • ESCHER • 60's • BEATLES • ALIENS • PHOTOGRAPHY • STAR WARS • PERSONALITIES •

■ Rock

continued from page 6

terpiece of the book.

Kent's observations of the Stones during the mid-'70s resonate like no other piece previously written about the band, primarily because he was right there in the thick of it. The sense of isolation and invincibility which pervaded the group during this time led to the near-destruction of its two central figures; Richards was a knife-carrying junkie outlaw with a death wish, and mass adulation coupled with too much cocaine turned Mick Jagger into a warped caricature of his stage persona. Fortunately, Kent's due credit to their eventual chemical and musical rebirth manages to temper the bleakness of the rot which had obscured their legend for so long.

Although the '80s and '90s have proven Kent to be more of an observer rather than a participant, his insight and delicate balance of humor and castigation have remained intact. The vitriol and spite of aforementioned fashion plates Elvis Costello and Miles Davis are tempered by the hilarious drunken escapades of Guns 'N' Roses and Shane McGowen. However, his portrait of Nirvana frontman/icon Kurt Cobain closes the book with its bleakest moment. Kent is one of the few knowledgeable voices who have called Cobain's suicide for exactly what it was — a pathetic end to a "sad little tale of a guy who never felt good about being alive."

If infamous writer Lester Bangs was the Hunter S. Thompson of rock criticism, Nick Kent has to be the field's Truman Capote. Flamboyant, insightful and unrelentingly honest, Kent never places himself above his subjects; he gives credit where credit is due, yet neither resorts to kissing the ass of the artist nor pandering to the reader. Kent's sincere appreciation and love for the music transcends everything else contained within — he's got as much rock 'n' roll attitude as any of his subjects and he isn't afraid to call them on their own lines of B.S. If you care at all about not only rock music but also the social landscape and popular culture of the last 25 years and want to bear witness to some excellent journalism, get this book. A

Van Zandt's desert sun sets

By Joshua Boyd
Collegian Staff

"So friends, when my time comes, as surely it will / You can carry my body out to some lonesome hill." This is what Townes Van Zandt, the great, elusive, Texan singer– songwriter wrote in his song, "My Proud Mountains."

Due to complications stemming from a hip injury, he suffered a heart attack and died New Year's day. He was at home with his wife and two young children. He was 52.

Van Zandt, the estranged child of a once–wealthy Texas family whose ancestors helped to found the state, was a man who will be remembered not only for his heart–wrenching songs that were, as one source wrote, "tales of outlaws, wild women, despair and loneliness," but also for his mysterious character. He would completely disappear in self–exile for up to six years at a time and then come back with songs that sounded as if his abilities increased tenfold.

His large abundance of country and blues–inspired songs, scattered on albums such as Live At The Old Quarter, The Late, Great Townes Van Zandt, and the recently re–issued Rear View Mirror, were revered by such artists as the Cowboy Junkies (whose dedication to him, "Townes' Blues" is one of their best songs), Jimmie Dale Gilmore, Nanci Griffith, Lyle Lovett, and Steve Earle. Guy Clarke, another Texan singer, was Van Zandt's lifelong friend.

Earle went so far as to write his praises in the liner notes to Van Zandt's 1987 album, At My Window, saying, "Townes Van Zandt is the best songwriter in the whole world, and I'll stand on Bob Dylan's coffee table in my cowboy boots and say that." Earle led a Nashville memorial service on Jan. 5, near Van Zandt's home in the Tennessee hills.

Van Zandt also wrote the songs "If I Needed You," which was a big Country charts hit for Emmylou Harris in 1982 and the No. 1 charting "Pancho & Lefty" duet by Willie Nelson and Merle Haggard in 1983.

The next time you're out in the hot deserts of the routhwest and there is a warm wind blowing, listen closely, you might even hear Van Zandt's tender, low voice. But, caution, because, as the man himself once said, "If you took [his songs] too seriously, you'd be in trouble."

Terrorzone releases 7"

New material from Sick Of It All

I'm back and here to update you on what you might have missed in the exciting world of hardcore without my column to keep you informed. First of all, Victory Records will now be distributed through Relativity, another member of the hardcore community keeping it real for the money — moneycore in full effect. There's nothing wrong with wanting to make money– — just be honest about it.

While I'm whining, Up Front got back together to play the Straight Edge Superbowl in New York. Please do not support bands like Up Front or any other band who had a moment of glory in the past and are now coming back because we have a healthy scene once again. New bands need your support, not old ones who gave up.

One of the new albums that came out over the break was One 4 One's debut, In Search Of, on Back Ta Basics. If you like Agnostic Front, check these guys out.

Long Island's Tripface released their debut, Some Part Sorrow, on Exit Records, and is my pick of this column. They mix up a late '80s feel with some newer effects that will have you dancing in no time.

Indecision's debut, Orthodox, came out on Exit and if you like Inside Out and bands of their ilk, you'll like this release. Indecision also gets props for being a SXE band who questions the edge and rags on Earth Crisis (who still suck).

Cirole Storm, which features ex–members of Chain of Strength, released their debut on Revelation Records. It sounds like C.O.S., so just buy it!

Commin Correct released their debut on Back Ta Basics and have Rick 25 Ta' Life on vocals.

In the new band department we have Terrorzone, who released their debut 7" on Gain Ground records and feature Kevone of Bulldoze fame on vocals. Elliot is a new band featuring the singer from Empathy, as well as three quarters of Falling Foward. Walter Schrieffels and Artie Sheppard (ex–Quicksand· and Mind Over Matter) will have an eight– song CD coming out on Island Records. Tim MacMahon, ex–vocalist of Mouthpiece, has a new band called Hands Tied, and they just played their first show at the SXE Superbowl.

Matt Bold has a new band called Endure to help support his habit — in case you were curious, he's no longer nailed to the X. George Reynolds of Mind Over Matter has a new band called A Day In The Life who are simply incredible.

Finally, Tim Singer of Kiss It Goodbye and Keith Huckins from Deadguy and released their aptly

Turn to 7", page 7

IRON HORSE
MUSIC HALL
20 Center St Northampton

ALL AGES
ALL THE TIME

january 30 & 31 .7&10 pm .$27.50 adv
TALES FROM THE HUDSON featuring
MICHAEL BRECKER, PAT METHENY
JACK DeJOHNETTE, DAVE HOLLAND, JOEY CALDERAZZO

saturday, february 1 • 7 pm
HOLMES brothers
$10 • rocking blues!!

saturday, february 1 • 10 pm
moonboot LOVER
great grooves • $5

monday, february 3 • 7&10 pm,
BRANFORD MARSALIS trio
student discount avail. • $25

wednesday, february 5 • 7 pm
BUCKWHEAT ZYDECO
zydeco dance floor!!! • $15

thursday, february 6 • 10 pm
lettuce
& VIPER HOUSE
heavy grooves from hampshire • $5

friday, february 7 • 10 pm
CHUCKLEHEAD
major funk • $8 adv

saturday, february 8 • 10 pm
JAZZ MANDOLIN project
acoustic improv: outta this world • $6

friday, february 21 • 7&10 pm
BO DIDDLEY
ba knows. $20

MUSIC SEVEN NIGHTS A WEEK
Coming: Savoy Brown, Chris Smither, Madeleine Peyroux, Poncho Sanchez

TICKETS: At the door, For the Record in Amherst, at the Northampton Box Office or call 586-8686 to charge by phone.
24-hour Concert info: 413.584.0610

"AMIGOS DON'T FEAR, PRUDDY'S IS STILL OPEN"
WELCOME BACK FRIENDS
SAME TIME SAME PLACE SAME DAYS
PRUDDY'S
• FOOD • TROPICAL DRINKS • FRIENDS •
MAIN ST., AMHERST 253-2899

NEW! TREADMILL
ULTIMATE AEROBIC TRAINING
Lifestride 9500 with Heart Rate Monitor
We Now Have FOUR!
Safe Convenient Fun
PLUS KEISER, NAUTILUS, FREE-WEIGHTS, STAIRMASTERS, LIFE CYCLES, LIFE ROWER, GRAVITRON, CYBEX UBE, NORDIC TRACK, AEROBICS
AMHERST Athletic Club 256-0080 Rte. 116 So. Amherst

ON SALE NOW!
MARILYN MANSON
PLUS GUESTS
L7
FEB 19
7:30 PM
SPRINGFIELD CIVIC CENTER
TICKETS ON SALE NOW!
AT THE CIVIC CENTER BOX OFFICE,
OUTLETS & CALL-FOR-TIX:
(413) 733-2500 • (860) 525-4500.
PRODUCED BY METROPOLITAN ENTERTAINMENT GROUP

TOC
Bar & Grill
Munchie Specials Mon - Fri 4 - 7 PM
Free Popcorn Draft Beer Drink Specials & Micro Brews
Thursday
Jan. 30 at 7:30pm
UMASS
vs.
George Washington
A-10 Conference Game
UMass
11th Floor
Campus Center
Mon.-Fri. 4pm - 12:30am
Sat. 5pm - 12:30am

Brecker & friends in Noho

By Joshua Boyd
Collegian Staff

The Iron Horse will host an all–star jazz cast telling Tales From The Hudson, the title of ensemble leader Michael Brecker's latest album, for two sets tonight and two sets tomorrow night. The band, which consists of Brecker on tenor saxophone, Pat Metheny on guitar, Jack DeJohnette on drums, Dave Holland on bass and Joey Calderazzo on piano, all played flowing, dramatic performances on Brecker's Tales, released last fall.

Metheny is no doubt the most well–known name in that list to people not familiar with the wide world of jazz. The dark–haired guitarist with the long mane has done both neo– bop recordings for various labels, as well as cosmic, dreamy soundscapes for ECM, the label that specializes in cosmic, dreamy jazz. His warm tones and otherworldly composing have earned him and various collaborators nine Grammy awards over the course of his nearly 20–year career.

Brecker, 47 years old, came out of the late '60s New York jazz–rock fusion scene, starting in older brother trumpeter Randy Brecker's band before finding himself to be a sought– after and respected player for his solemn, yet sweet, sound. This sound can especially be heard on pieces like "Song For Bilbao," the Metheny–penned tune that is the climax of Tales From The Hudson, which you may hear in one of the sets tonight or tomorrow night.

Calderazzo has been playing with Brecker for some time, and Brecker has said, in a press release, he likes Calderazzo's "excitement and urgency," possibly as contrast to Brecker's own laid back, explorative sound.

DeJohnette and Holland are both veterans of Miles Davis' dynamic late '60s/early '70s fusion bands. You can hear them with Miles on releases such as At Fillmore East and Black Beauty: Live At Fillmore West. Both went on to productive solo careers for ECM that last to this day. DeJohnette is still regarded as one of the greatest jazz drummers, thanks to his fast pace with room for texture. Holland helped to revolutionize jazz bass, when he just let it rock with a hard sound over Miles' electric acid wash.

With a cast like that, there should be no letdowns. These five musicians will surely deliver a sound that's as fluid and as wide as the mighty Hudson itself.

The "Tales From The Hudson" group featuring Michael Brecker and Pat Metheny will perform tonight at 7 p.m. and 10 p.m. and tomorrow night at 7 and 10 at the Iron Horse. Call the Northampton Box Office at 586–8686 for more information.

COURTESY MARK SELIGER
Pat Metheny joins Michael Brecker at the Iron Horse.

Sundance Film Festival kicks off

By Lynn Elber
Associated Press

PARK CITY, Utah — The windchill factor was negligible. But the schmooze factor was off the charts.

When actors, filmmakers, agents and studio executives descended on this snowy Rocky Mountains resort for the Sundance Film Festival, skiing was not the goal. Being seen and making deals were.

"It's like Hollywood has been transplanted here," marveled Lisa Kudrow, the "Friends" TV star who appears in "The Clockwatchers," an office–worker comedy that screened at Sundance. Strolling down Main Street with cellular phones pressed to eager ears, sweeping into one of the 100–plus movie screenings or angling for the best table at restaurants, the Hollywood contingent was hard at work.

For some, like "Gridlock'd" writer–director Vondie Curtis Hall (the "Chicago Hope" TV series co–star), there was a film to promote — and friends to rescue.

"Hey, man, we'll get you in," Hall assured a ticketless buddy caught in the crowd of hopefuls trying to see the film starring Tim Roth and the late Tupac Shakur.

For studio acquisition executives, the festival offers the chance to discover new talent and maybe — with fingers crossed — buy the next box–office hit or Oscar winner.

"It's like there's a sale on Gucci for studios," Kudrow said. For movie fans and paparazzi, it all makes for a stargazers' paradise. There's Emilio Estevez strolling down the street ("Hey, you look familiar. Don't I almost know you," yelled a flip passerby).

And an elegant Susan Anton and parka–clad John Turturro separately taking breaks in a restaurant's cozy bar. Or actresses Thandie Newton and Alyssa Milano defying the cold, at least indoors, in scanty, eye–catching outfits.

At a news conference for Robert Downey's "Hugo Pool," the veteran independent filmmaker was joined by his stars: Milano, son Robert Downey Jr., Cathy Moriarty, Malcolm McDowell and a wise–cracking Richard Lewis.

"Richard, you're a, you're a..." a reporter began, stumbling over the question.

"Jew," Lewis quickly responded, breaking up his colleagues and the media.

Sandra Bullock, in town to promote a short film she directed called "Making Sandwiches," caused a stir at the movie's premiere... make that a near–riot.

Strangefolk to make Butterfield boogie this Friday

By Jean Sienkewicz
Collegian Correspondent

Do first–week hassles already have you tearing your hair out? Is it time for you to dance away your frustrations? Or are you just looking for a place to kick back, mellow out and break in the new semester? In either case, Butterfield dorm may have the answers to your problems tomorrow night. Once again, Jan. 31, Butterfield will host Strangefolk — the groove–rock masters from Burlington, Vt.

For good reason, fans across the country have taken to this band like bees to spring flowers. With well–crafted, descriptive song lyrics and free–form jamming that lasts sometimes for half–an–hour or more Strangefolk's live energy that never fails to leave dancers breathless. A Strangefolk show is a fantastic way to pass a Friday night. The band has a repertoire of over 70 songs, more than 50 of them Strangefolk originals, and are also known for dropping covers, like "Funkytown," or Neil Young's "Helpless," into the middle of their own songs.

Strangefolk has an incredible sense of adventure when it comes to playing live, as well as the remarkable ability to listen to each other. And the SF boys are not only incredibly talented, but also some of the nicest guys you'd ever want to meet. Reid Genauer, lead vocalist and rhythm guitarist, writes many of the band's memorable lyrics. And it's hard to believe that the passion that creeps into his voice as a song builds can come from a man of such small stature. Jon Trafton, lead guitarist, has fingers that jump fret to fret, string to string almost effortlessly, leading listeners into new musical worlds. Erik Glockler contributes solid, often–funky bass lines, a pleasant, husky voice and down–to–earth songs to the setlist. And when Luke P. Smith, drummer extraordinaire, gets going, it's hard to keep the energy down: audiences go crazy.

Strangefolk will play Butterfield basement from 9 p.m. 1 a.m. Jan. 31. Tickets are $5 and available at the door with a picture ID. No backpacks, drugs or alcohol.

■ 7"

continued from page 6

titled demo, "Be Afraid." They have just signed to Revelation and are going to be one of the best bands in the history of hardcore, trust me.

Guilt and Threadbare broke up and both bands will be missed. Shift signed to Columbia Records. Stillsuit had their contract bought by TVT records and their full length, called At the Speed Of Light, will be out in three weeks. Yuppicide is back and playing shows. Sick Of It All's new album comes out in February.

Some upcoming shows at Pearl Street are H2O and Stillsuit, Agnostic Front and 25 Ta'Life, Descendents and Sensefield, and Deadguy. Local heroes Hallraker will be releasing their debut four–song 7" shortly and will be playing out a lot. That's it for now.

Adam Dlugacz is a Collegian columnist.

!! AEROBICS !!
FLEX FITNESS CENTER
175 UNIVERSITY DRIVE, AMHERST, MA • 253-3539
!! TREADMILLS !!

thinking about
medical school?
Kaplan can help.
Each year, Kaplan helps prepare more students for the MCAT than all other test prep courses combined. Our expert teachers, customized curriculum and proven methods can help you get a higher score. We also offer the best in admissions and financial aid consulting. Call to find out how we can help you.
the leader in test prep and admissions consulting
KAPLAN
1-800-KAP-TEST
www.kaplan.com

You Can
UNLOCK YOUR TALENT
at the Performing Arts Division
UMass Arts Council discounts for UMass students
MUSIC • THEATER • DANCE • INSTRUCTION
REGISTRATION JANUARY 27 - FEBRUARY 7
PAD OFFICE • 73 BARTLETT HALL • 545-0519

R&P Liquors
• Weekly Specials on Regular Beers • Fine Wines
• Largest Selection of Micro Brews in S. Amherst • Fridge Rentals

4 SEASONS
DISCOUNT LIQUORS
BEER • WINE • KEGS • ICE • CIGARS
Sale Until 2-6-97

SAM ADAMS 24-12 oz. Bott. $18.99 +DEP	HARPOON 24-12 oz. Bott. $17.99 +DEP	LABATTS 24-12 oz. Bott. $15.99 +DEP	MOLSON "Gold Ice" 24-12 oz. Bott. $15.99 +DEP	ROLLING ROCK 24-12 oz. Bott. $13.99 +DEP	MOOSEHEAD 24-12 oz. Bott. $14.99 +DEP
BUSCH & LT. 24-12 oz. cans $10.99 +DEP	KEYSTONE LT "30 PKS" $10.99 +DEP	MILWAUKEE'S BEST & LT "30 PKS" $10.99 +DEP	BUD DRY 24-12 oz. Bott. $9.99 +DEP	M.G.D. & LT 24-12 oz. Bott. $9.99 +DEP	MEISTERBRAU & LT 24-12 oz. Bott. $7.99 +DEP
SMIRNOFF VODKA $14.99 +DEP	SOUTHERN COMFORT $7.99 .750 ml	4 SEASONS VODKA $8.99 1.75 ml	JOSE CUERVO $9.99 .750 ml	ICE! 10 LBS ..... $1.29 50 LBS ..... $5.99 100 LBS $9.99
GLENN ELLEN Chard & Cab $7.99 1.5L	KORBEL Champagnes $8.99 .750 ml	FRANZIA $6.99 .750 ml	BOONES FARM WINES $1.99 .750 ml

KEG OF THE WEEK!
BUD $38.99 +DEP
* * * * * * * *
"KEGS" Bud Lt., Michelob, Icehouse, Lite, Michelob Lt., Bud Ice, Lowenbrau Dk., Michelob Amber Bock
$39.99 +DEP
* * * * * * * *
MICRO KEGS
Sam Adam's, Oregon, J.W. Dundee, Saranac, Plus Lots More

NEW! TREADMILL
ULTIMATE AEROBIC TRAINING
Lifestride 9500 with Heart Rate Monitor
We Now Have FOUR!
Safe Convenient Fun
PLUS KEISER, NAUTILUS, FREE-WEIGHTS, STAIRMASTERS, LIFE CYCLES, LIFE ROWER, GRAVITRON, CYBEX UBE, NORDIC TRACK, AEROBICS
AMHERST Athletic Club 256-0080 Rte. 116 So. Amherst

AT THE GATES OF SMITH COLLEGE
WESTERN MASS. PREMIERE STARTS THIS FRIDAY
CURTAIN DAILY 7 & 9:15 (tickets from 6:30)
From Woody Comes a Romantic Musical Comedy
"THE BEST MOVIE WOODY ALLEN HAS EVER MADE."
"DELIRIOUSLY ORIGINAL AND VERY FUNNY."
EVERYONE SAYS I LOVE YOU
Alan Alda, Woody Allen, Drew Barrymore, Lukas Haas, Goldie Hawn, Gaby Hoffman, Natasha Lyonne, Edward Norton, Natalie Portman, Julia Roberts, Tim Roth, David Ogden Stiers
ACADEMY MUSIC NORTHAMPTON Cinema Treasures 584-8435

Tagliabue rules in favor of New England

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

FOXBORO, Mass. — If Bill Parcells wants to coach another NFL team in 1997, it must be on the New England Patriots' terms. Just three days after losing the Super Bowl, the Patriots won their contract dispute with their coach.

Commissioner Paul Tagliabue's ruling yesterday in favor of New England owner Robert Kraft doesn't mean Parcells won't jump to the New York Jets, only that they can't hire him without first getting the Patriots' permission — or buying it with money, a player, draft choices or a combination.

Otherwise, Parcells can coach the Patriots for a fifth season, which is unlikely, or stay out of the NFL until after Jan. 31, 1998.

Parcells reportedly was in line to go to the New York Jets, who have the top pick in this year's draft but would not consider sending that to the Patriots as compensation. Their head coaching job has been available since Rich Kotite announced Dec. 20 that he wouldn't return.

ESPN reported that the Jets are putting together an offer for Parcells to the Patriots.

The Jets refused comment "until the entire process is completed," said team president Steve Gutman.

Tagliabue's ruling came in response to requests from Parcells and Kraft that the commissioner mediate their contract dispute. Parcells claimed his original five-year contract — negotiated with former owner James Orthwein — allowed him to get out of the last season by paying the owner $1.2 million, one year's salary. At Parcells' request, Kraft agreed last January to eliminate the last season, 1997, moving the expiration date up to this Saturday. That revision also gave the Patriots the exclusive right to employ.Parcells if he decided to continue working in the NFL next season, Tagliabue ruled.

Parcells can work as a college coach or pursue other business opportunities, such as broadcasting, without the Patriots' permission. After Jan. 31, 1998, he would be free to work as a head coach or in a comparable position in the NFL, according to the decision.

There is nothing to prevent Parcells from challenging the decision in court, although the NFL constitution and by-laws make the commissioner the final arbiter of such disputes.

Shortly after 3 p.m., about 2 1/2 hours before the decision was announced, Parcells evaded waiting cameramen by driving his dark green Cadillac outside a back exit.

The law firm representing Parcells, Friedman & Atherton of Boston, issued a statement yesterday, saying Parcells "is considering the various options available to him. He will make a statement as soon as possible."

Kraft left Foxboro Stadium without commenting about a half hour before the NFL announced the ruling.

The Patriots issued the following statement:

"We are pleased that the National Football League has affirmed the validity of the contract between the New England Patriots and Bill Parcells, as amended on Jan. 12, 1996. Bill Parcells has been an important part of the success of this organization. It is now time for the Patriots to move ahead and build on the success of the 1996-97 season."

Just one week ago, Kraft and Parcells appeared together in New Orleans in an attempt to show some sort of team unity after a published report said the Super Bowl would be the coach's last with the Patriots.

The relationship between the two soured during last year's draft when Kraft overruled the coach and sided with player personnel director Bobby Grier, who wanted wide receiver Terry Glenn. Parcells preferred a defensive player. Glenn ended up setting an NFL rookie record with 90 receptions.

"Bill and I had a great relationship," Grier said yesterday. "If he's not here, it's going to be hard to replace him." Grier commented while standing outside in the cold after the Patriots administration building was evacuated for about 45 minutes because of a bomb threat.

Kraft left the building at the time and drove away with Patriots assistant coach Bill Belichick shortly after 5 p.m.

"It's another day at the office," Grier said before Tagliabue's decision was announced.

Reports in the days before the Super Bowl had Parcells being replaced by Pete Carroll, San Francisco's defensive coordinator. Carroll had a 6-10 record with the Jets in 1994, his only season as an NFL head coach.

He was succeeded by Kotite, whose 1-15 record was the worst in the NFL last season.

Parcells won two Super Bowls with the New York Giants and then led the Patriots to an 11-5 record. New England lost to Green Bay, 35-21.

In his ruling, Tagliabue said Parcells' interpretation of his contract would make the key part of the revision "meaningless and of no effect" and would be "contrary to common sense, as well as to Massachusetts law," the commissioner said.

"Mr. Parcells not only promised to coach the Patriots in 1996 but also gave the Patriots a conditional option to extend the contract through the 1997 season," Tagliabue wrote in his decision.

Tagliabue, who was in Los Angeles en route to Sunday's Pro Bowl, made his ruling following a telephone conference call Tuesday with Kraft and his attorney in Boston, and Parcells and his representatives elsewhere in the city.

■ briefs

continued from page 12

time. Call the Intramural Office at 545-2693 or visit 215 Boyden Building for more information.

Upcoming sports include softball, soccer, volleyball and wallyball. Information about these sports and upcoming meetings can be obtained in the Intramural Office.

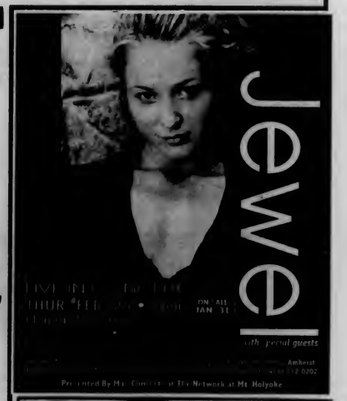
• The Intramural Office is looking for officials for basketball and wrestling. The positions are paid.

People interested in basketball must attend a two-part clinic, and those interested in wrestling must attend an orientation meeting. The meeting for wrestling orientation will be Feb. 20 at 5 p.m. in Boyden 223.

Sports Briefs was compiled by Collegian staff member Casey Kane.

The Ed/Op page is seeking fresh, new voices for the spring semester. If you are interested in writing or have written before, please attend one of the following meetings in the Collegian newsroom: Tonight at 6 p.m. and Monday at 7 p.m. Please bring a writing sample. If you have any questions call Mike Burke at 545-1491.

Knowledge Grows Here!
Summer Session at Stony Brook
Terms start June 2 and July 14
260 courses in 40 subjects
Day and evening classes
Low NYS tuition
Live on campus or commute
Please send me the 1997 Summer Session ... or check out our web page at Http://www.sunysb.edu/summer/
Name
Street/Box No
City State Zip
Telephone Area of interest
School currently attending Anticipated year of graduation
STONY BROOK STATE UNIVERSITY OF NEW YORK
Mail coupon or call 24 hours 1-800-559-7213.
E-mail: summerschool@cmail.sunysb.edu
Or write: Summer Session Office, Dept. GN, University at Stony Brook, Stony Brook, NY 11794-3370



90's
The Nineties Look
PROFESSIONAL NAIL CARE FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN
Hampshire Mall
341 Russell Street,
Unit D 06
Hadley, MA 01035
(413) 585-8780
✤ Full Set $28.00
✤ Fill-In $18.00
✤ Special 10% discount with student I.D.
✤ We have over 400 Airbrush Designs task for our Special Mon- Wed
Open 7 days a week
Mon. - Sat.
10:00 AM - 9:00 PM
Sun.
11:00 AM 6:00 PM

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
A Student/Comminity Service Learning Program*
(*an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored program)
You Can Earn 1-2 Credits
Recruitment Nights
(Attend one session - Required for all Applicants!!!)
SPRING SEMESTER '97
6:30 PM
(Note: Prompt starting time)
Assignment notification, Feb. 6th (Thurs.) at Boltwood table on Campus Center Concourse.
• Feb 3 Mon Campus Center Aud. or
• Feb 4 Tues. CC Room 163 or
• Feb 5 Wed. Campus Center Aud.
Volunteer while earning credit
Come and Learn How!!!
Your life will NEVER be the same!

RUSSELL'S LIQUORS
Discount Discount
18 Main St. Downtown Amherst 253-5441
Featuring/ Busch & Busch Light $11.22 30/PK
Genuine Draft bots. $9.99 case
Super Bowl
Elm City-Golden Ale & Draft Ale
Saranac-Mountain Berry
$3.99 6/pk. (your choice)
Micro" Madness Continues!
Petes - 10 different Flavors "WOW!"
Catamount - All flavors included "New Anniversary Ale!"
Harpoon - Alt, Pilsner Ale, I.P.A., Oct., & Winter Warmer!
New Amsterdam - Amber Ale I.D.A. & Black & Tan!
Shipyard - Export Ale Stout, Brown Ale.
Mix/Match "two" 6/PK . . . $9.99
Tagermeister $13.99
Vodka 80° $8.99
Bicardi Limon $8.99
Bicardi Spiced $10.99
All Beers Plus Deposit OPEN 9:00AM - 11:00PM VISA/MASTERCARD •Delivery Available•

7pm, Jan 31st at the MULLINS CENTER University of Massachusetts Amherst
Division 1 Hockey East
UMass Hockey
VS
MERRIMACK Hockey
Pick up your tickets at:
☞ Curry Hicks Cage
☞ 'TIX' in the Student Union
☞ Hockey Table in the Campus Center
☞ At the Game
Be a Part of the Action

Positions Available
Drivers Wanted for Morning Paper Delivery
Must be Available Between 8:00am to 11:00am Monday- Friday
If Interested, call ALYCIA HINES 545- 3500 or stop by the Collegian at 113 Campus Center Basement

■ intersession

continued from page 12

tory at GW, to start the season with a 1-0 record. Sanyal's 9.85 beam score and Lianne Laing's 9.75 on the vault boosted the Minutewomen over the Colonials.

Following the early success in D.C., which saw all 13 gymnasts compete, the Minutewomen were confident in their abilities.

"Penn State, going in we felt we were as good as anybody in that competition," Kuzara said. "We ended up starting slow again."

Johnson came through with her 9.9 on the vault, as well as a 9.8 floor exercise. Swartz tied for third all-around with a 38.125, and the Minutewomen topped New Hampshire but fell to Penn State. The Nittany Lions totalled a 193.075, besting Massachusetts' 190.255 and New Hampshire's 189.350.

"We ended up counting a few falls early, we really put ourselves into a hole there," Kuzara said. "The main key was that we came out of the meet healthy, looking forward to hosting Michigan at the Mullins Center."

Saturday's Michigan meet was exciting for all involved with Massachusetts gymnastics, who were happy to receive the support of 2,435 screaming fans in the first gymnastics meet in the Mullins Center. The record crowd which showed during winterseason, when most students were not around, spurred the Minutewomen to season and career best performances.

"This was the week that the entire team really put it together," Kuzara said. "We broke our school record by almost two points."

With the slow starts and inexperience of the early going behind them, the Minutewomen head towards a midseason match-up with Rhode Island and Bridgeport. Massachusetts hosts the tri-meet on Feb. 9 at Boyden Gymnasium.

■ honors

continued from page 12

Belle did not receive the award because of his public image, and that Vaughn, not only is great on the diamond, but off it as well, serving children in the community and being an all-around great guy for baseball.

Now here comes along another great person for his respective sport. He represents more ethnicities than the U.N., and has Grant Hill qualities as just being a nice guy out there doing his best to kick everybody else's hiney, but not doing it in a show-boating way.

Tiger Woods has exhibited greatness thus far in his young professional career, and has been dubbed by many golfers, including Jack Nicklaus, as the best thing that has happened to golf in almost a decade. The PGA has been a league, not unlike the NHL, that has been plagued with great foreign talent, and lacked American superstars. In the last few years, the golf wonders of the world have been people like the Australian, Greg Norman; the South Africans, Nick Price and Ernie Els; and the men from the United Kingdom, Nick Faldo and Colin Montgomery.

Now here is someone of American birth who has taken golf by storm and is making golf popular once again in the eyes of America's youth. With his Asian, European, African and Native American heritage, he has become someone that almost anyone can relate to. He is as disciplined as anyone can possibly be in the media's eye (thanks to his father and mother, a veteran and a follower of Buddha), is respectful with his golf colleagues, and has taken everything in stride. Now aren't these good enough reasons for someone to be named "Sportsman of the Year."

From the story on him in S.I.'s December issue, Woods was reported saying that the true money he feels he has really earned are the small checks he gets after competing in any given tournament, not the multi-million dollar deals he has signed with Nike and Titleist.

Is he too good to be true?

Being a very big golf fan, I am absolutely thrilled with S.I.'s decision. The magazine went out on a limb, choosing someone from a sport in dire need of popular support.

Already many writers have said that the decision was made solely on how much money Nike has dumped into him. But what if they had picked Jordan or Johnson? Both of them are with Nike, so S.I. would be safe any way they went. Then again, who isn't with Nike.

So far, everything Woods has done has been done with class and pretty close to perfection. After receiving the pressure and all the frills that come with being named "Sportsman of the Year," Woods answered the call by battling the man named "Golfer of the Year" for 1996, Tom Lehman, and beating him on the first hole of sudden death to take the Mercedes Open, the first tournament of 1997.

Since then, Woods took a week off, not participating in the Bob Hope Classic, but he did return this past weekend and competed in the Phoenix Open. Unfortunately, not even Tiger could have caught Steve Jones, who took control of the entire course and ran away with a victory at 24-under, leaving everyone in the dust. Woods finished at nine-under.

For the sake of American sports, Tiger Woods will be a wonderful ambassador for the rest of the world, as someone anyone can look up to and respect, not someone that is just associated with the millions of dollars they make. Let's just hope he is no fluke and carries his success far into the 21st century.

Jonathan M. Place is Collegian staff member.

■ Carroll

continued from page 12

senior co- captains Sabriya Mitchell and Beth Kuzmeski, have helped stabilize a team that started the season 3-4 and has two freshmen, Kelly Van Huisen and Alison MacFarland, playing significant minutes.

"Sabriya, Beth and I each have our role," Carroll said. "It more depends on whoever is more dominant on the court at that time."

One of the benefits of last year's NCAA tournament berth, the school's first, is national recognition for the program, and for the first time, a nationally televised game from the William D. Mullins Center, this Sunday against George Washington. Carroll has played a large part in that success in her four years, but she sees Sunday's game with the Colonials as exactly what it is — a basketball game.

"I think we're more worried just about George Washington than anything else," she said, "If we play well we can beat them. It would be a huge confidence boost [if we beat GW]."

The Minutewomen have the month of February to separate themselves from the pack and push for an A-10 title and a NCAA tournament bid, a fact that hasn't escaped Carroll.

"Coach O'Brien always tells us that we only have eight more games," Carroll says. "We have to make our run now."

With a healthy squad and a little bit of old-fashioned luck, UMass has a chance to go further than it's ever gone before, and Crystal Carroll will have to be the main force in that charge. But whether it be a national television audience, a pesky defender or a need for someone to lead the Minutewomen to the promised land, Carroll will be there.

And you can be sure it'll be automatic.

TYANNE WU / COLLEGIAN
Senior Crystal Carroll has been an integral part of the success of the UMass women's basketball team this year.

Read the Daily Collegian... because boxes are stupid
SPRING BREAK
CANCUN • NASSAU • MAZATLAN
10% BREAK
Organized Fun!
$299
INCLUDES 15 FREE PARTIES AND TRAVEL FOR FREE!
CALL TODAY!
http://www.LoneStarBreak.com
1-800-95-BREAK
TAKE A BREAK STUDENT TRAVEL
TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139
STUDENT SPECIAL
4 MONTHS
KEISER • NAUTILUS • CYBEX
STAIRMASTERS • LIFECYCLES
TREADMILLS • V.R. BIKE
LIFEROWER • GAUNTLET
GRAVITON
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB
Rte. 116 So. Amherst
256-0080
MIKARA'S
Saturday Feb 1
Itchy Fish
The Pearl Jam Show
10 pm 21+
Saturday Feb 8
SKA Night
NYC SKA Masters
"The Toasters"
with
"Rustic Overtures"
9 pm 18+
Thursday Feb 20
The J.G.B. Band
Members of the Jerry Garcia Band
9 pm 18+
Saturday Feb 22
Great White
80's Glam-Rockers
9 pm 21+
Tickets Available At the Northampton Box Office @ 586-8686 or 1-800-The-Tick, Protix Outlets or Strawberries Records

Amherst Drop Zone
ARMY/NAVY STORE
Route 9 • Hadley • Next to McDonalds
EVERYTHING IN STOCK
30% OFF!
2 DAYS ONLY
SATURDAY • FEBRUARY 1 • 9 A.M.-8 P.M.
SUNDAY • FEBRUARY 2 • 12 P.M.-5 P.M.
CLEARANCE!
• Zippo • Hi-Tec • Sorel Boots • Dr. Martens
• Peacoats • Maco • Timex • Duffle Bags
• Fatigues • Flight Jackets • Flags • Knives
"BIG" SALE.
Indoor Sidewalk Sale
Wed Jan 29-Sun Feb 2
Racks of clothes. Tables of shoes. Baskets of jewelry. Lots more sale merchandise coming from other Zanna stores. All the awesome outdoor sidewalk sale savings, only indoors.
downtown Amherst

HAMPSHIRE FITNESS CLUB
Hurry Special Ends February 15th
The Area's Most Complete Club • 256-6446
90 Gatehouse Road
"Off Rt. 9 2 miles East of Town Center"
•PVTA bus route to Rolling Green • pool •
• aerobics • aqua-aerobics • steps • nautilus •
• racquetball • free weights • jacuzzi •
• sauna • massage • bikes •
• indoor tennis & basketball •
•rowers • treadmills •
Join now for our 15 week Semester Special ($159) & get a free HFC T Shirt!

Spirit Haus
Specialty Beverage Center
Over ~500~ Microbrews
FULL REDEMPTION CENTER
Attention Grad Students: Take 10% off Regularly Priced Fine Wines
MICROBREWS
Magic Hat (Ale, Blind Faith, #9) $5.99/six
Wachusett (Country Ale, I.P.A., Nut Brown) $4.99/six Smuttynose (Black+Tan, Pale Ale, Amber, Golden, Wildberry) $4.99/six Sea Dog (Blade Ale, Brown Ale, I.P.A.) $4.99/six
BEER SPECIALS
Sam Adams Lager 12-pack bottles $8.99
Bud & Bud Light 30-pack cans $15.99
Red Dog & Icehouse 18-pack cans $8.99
HALF KEG SPECIAL
Sam Adams Ale $75
SPECIALS
Arrow Coffee & Blackberry Brandy $13.99/1.75Lt
S.S.PierceVodka $8.99/1.75Lt
Corbet Canyon Sauvignon blanc, white zinfandel $5.99/1.5Lt chardonnay, cabernet sauvignon, merlot $6.99/1.5Lt
Culbertston Blanc de Noir $9.99 each
B5 Ptr Wine Spectator 2 for $17.99
Micro-Brewed Beer Kegs in Stock
Rt 9 East College Street • 253-5305
one mile east of Amherst Center on Rt. 9E

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

Telemarketer Talent Search If you have enthusiasm, integrity and outstanding customer service talent, you could be our star performer!!! Mr. Tuxx is searching for talented people to join our telemarketing team. Mr. Tuxx acknowledges and rewards outstanding performances with competitive wages, flexible scheduling, and all the training you'll need to be successful! Call Adnan at (413)253-5286 to arrange for your personal interview.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Three Bedroom Apartment on bus route. $585.00/month. First and last month required. Call (413)863-8413

EMPLOYMENT

PREMIERE BROTHER-SISTER CAMPS IN MASSACHUSETTS ON CAMPUS INTERVIEWS Counselor positions for talented and energetic students in all Team Sports, especially Baseball, Roller Hockey, Gymnastics, Field Hockey, Soccer, Volleyball, 30 Tennis openings; also Golf, Archery, Riflery, Ropes and Rock Climbing, Weights/Fitness and Cycling, other openings include Performing Arts, Fine Arts, Figure Skating, Newspaper, Photography, Yearbook, Radio Station, Rocketry, Swimming, Skiing, Sailing, Windsurfing & Canoeing/Kayaking. Top salaries, room, board and travel. June 22nd-August 20th. Call for information MAH-KEE-NAC(Boys): 1-800-753-9110 DANBEE(Girls): 1-800-392-3752 Recruiters will be on campus Tuesday, March 11th 10am to 4pm at the UMass Camp Day.

Strong, reliable person wanted for occasional snow shoveling in Amherst. Good pay. 253-5700 Days.

Cruise Line Entry level on-board positions available. Benefits. Summer or year round. (612)643-4333

EMPLOYMENT

Cruise and Land Tour Employment work in exotic locations. Meet fun people and get paid! For industry information, call Cruise Employment Services (206)276-4948 ext. CS0017 (We are a Research and Publishing Co.)

Outside Jobs- Now hiring: National Parks, Beach Resorts, Ranches, Rafting, CO's benefits and Bonuses! Nationwide openings Call (919)918-7767 ext R180 Eastern Europe/Asian jobs: Live in Prague, Budapest, Tokyo, etc. Teaching simple conversational English. No languages/teaching exp. required (919)918-7767 ext W180

Child Care Northampton area. Thurs. 2:30 pm-8:30 pm. Car necessary. $6.00/hr. Joan 584-8686

Child Care 17 month old. Light housekeeping, 2-3 mornings a week. Nancy 253-5183

EMPLOYMENT

Exceptional Summer Opportunity- Camp Wayne, NE PA Sports oriented. Counselor/Specialists for all land/water sports inc: tennis, camping, climbing/ropes, rocketry, roller hockey, sailing/waterskiing, A&C, drama, video. Campus Interviews Tuesday, March 11. Please call (800)737-9296

English Teachers Needed Abroad! Teach Conversational English in Prague, Budapest, or Krakow. No teaching certificate or European languages required. Inexpensive room and board plus other benefits. For details call (206)971-3680 ext. K50011

Personal Care Attendant Evenings, overnights and weekend mornings. $7.85 per hour. Call 546-0666

FOR RENT

Cape Cod group & summer rentals. Waterfront houses, Falmouth area. (508)477-6000

Sugarloaf Estates- Ultra modern two bedroom apartments. Free heat/hot water. New kitchens, baths, carpeting, washers/dryers and more! On bus-line. Minutes to Amherst. Great specials! Call 665-3856

Fridge Rentals 253-9742 Free Delivery

FOR SALE

Futon $70.00, desk with file cabinet $50.00. Both one year old. Call 549-7481

486 New Laptop $585, VGA Color Monitor $175, IDE Hard Drive $110 Steve 566-3324-2

Color Printer Panasonic KXP-2123 Super Quiet w/ cable & stand. 546-6963

FOR SALE

Camera: Pentax ME Super, w/Quantaray 49 mm Lens, plus Pentax A Zoom Lens, 1:4, 70-210 mm, plus mm, plus Zykkor flash 3750, with case, ex. cond. Asking $325 or BO. Rick 548-9911

MISCELLANEOUS

Start your own fraternity VETA BETA TAU is looking for men to start a new chapter. If you are interested in academic success, a chance to network and an opportunity to make friends in a non-pledging brotherhood, E-mail ZBT@IBT.National.ORG or call Brett Hoeck at (317)334-1898.

ROOM FOR RENT

One bedroom for rent in two bedroom apt. Call Taryn (508)682-5607

Room is a 2 bedroom apt. Sublease. $310 + utilities. Call 253-4824. On bus line.

ROOM FOR RENT

Take over my lease One bedroom in a vacant two bedroom apartment. $360/month plus utilities. Call Jen @ 256-6034.

Looking for a female to share a large room in Pulfton. Cost is $197.50/month. Call 665-2067

ROOMATE WANTED

Roommates wanted to share house in Ocean City, NJ for the summer. Call Sue at 546-6407

TRAVEL

Jamaica- Spring Break Stay in beautiful Negril. Includes roundtrip airfare, hotel transfers, 7 nights lodging from $519. Don't take chances with other companies; go with the UMass Ski Club. Call 545-3437

Europe $155, Cancun/Mexico $189 R/T Worldwide Destinations. Airhitch Tm (800)326-2009 airhitch@netcom.com or www.itn.com.lr/airhitch

TRAVEL

Pompeoo Beach, Florida March 8-15, sleeps two, $650/week (413)786-7133. Partial kitchen.

Spring Break '97 It's heaven. Wake and Bake in the hottest destination-free parties!!! Organize group and travel. Free lowest price guarantee. From $99. (800)425-7710 www.sunsplashtours.com

Spring Break- Nassau/Paradise Island, from $379. Air, hotel, transfers, parties and more! Organize small group- earn free trips plus commissions! Call (800)9-Beach-1

Spring Break Party in Daytona or Panama City. The largest Spring Break destinations...excellent beachfront hotels. Students wanted to promote, earn free trip and cash $$$! Book ten friends and go FREE! Packages from $99.00. Info/book (800)599-5808

Personals Policy

1. All personals MUST be proofread by Collegian classified employees before payment and acceptance of the classified.
2. Last names MAY NOT be used in personals. ONLY first names and initials are allowed. The only exceptions are for birthday or congratulations personals, in which case the full name may be used.
3. Phone numbers are not allowed in personals. NO EXCEPTIONS.
4. Addresses are not allowed in personals. this means dorm room numbers as well.
5. Personals of a threatening or derogatory nature are not acceptable. Personals of a vindictive or libelous nature are not acceptable. Personals may not be used for the purpose of harassment.
6. Profanity may not be used in personals.
7. The personals section is for personals only. The personals section may NOT be used to sell items, seek roommates, advertise meetings, etc.
8. All personals must have the name, signature, and UMass I.D. number of the student placing the ad filled in on the insertion order. Non-students must provide a valid driver's license and the license number must be recorded on the insertion order. Use of false identification or misrepresentation is subject to penalties under the law.
9. The Collegian reserves the rights to refuse or to edit any personal that does not meet the Collegian's standards in accordance with the statutes of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Standard Headings

Activities
Announcements
Apartment For Rent
Auto For Sale
Employment
Entertainment
For Sale
Found (2 days Free)
Happy Birthday
Houses For Rent
Instruction
Lost
Musicians
Miscellaneous
Motorcycles
Personals
Room For Rent
Room Wanted
Roommate Wanted
Services
Summer Sublet
To Sublet
Travel
Transportation Wanted to Rent
Wanted

Rates

$2.00 minimum/day

Students
20¢ per word/day

All others
40¢ per word/day

NO REFUNDS
Please write clearly and legibly. We are not responsible for errors resulting from illegible handwriting or type.

Answers to Yesterday's Puzzle

Z	I	N	C		S	W	A	M	I		T	E	S	T
O	N	E	A		A	A	R	O	N		Y	A	L	E
L	I	A	R		S	T	I	N	K		P	R	O	S
A	T	L	E	A	S	T		R	E	S	I	S	T	S
			E	L	Y		D	O	D	O	S
W	A	S	N	T		D	O	E		U	T	T	E	R
H	I	P	S		C	I	O		I	N	S	I	D	E
E	S	E		A	Y	N	R	A	N	D		M	I	N
A	L	L	I	E	D		W	I	N		S	E	C	T
T	E	L	L	S		S	A	L		T	A	R	T	S
			L	O	F	T	Y		D	A	Y
S	T	E	E	P	E	R		V	A	N	I	L	L	A
C	R	A	G		R	I	L	E	D		N	O	A	H
A	U	R	A		A	V	O	I	D		G	O	N	E
B	E	L	L		L	E	N	N	Y		S	T	E	M

CROSSWORD

ACROSS

1. Persistent cough
5. ___ and gown
8. Tres fluids
12. "Country" Arthur
13. Bikers or Tarzans
15. Gray's subject (abbr.)
16. Beatles song
17. Oil-bearing rock
18. ___ Bikini (1960 film) (2 wds.)
19. Irreconcilable differences
22. Poetic time of day
23. Abner and Begley
24. Boston hill
28. Toledo's state
30. Ref's ish
33. Plant a new crop
34. Entreaty
35. Canadian Indian
36. Author Knight
37. Black-eyed ___
38. Warrior: Ish
39. Verdi's princess
40. Type of school, for short
41. Lie in the arms of Morpheus
42. Actress ___ Wallace Stone
43. Char
44. Cool one's sunglasses
45. Strange norm
46. Payable now
47. Medium's forte
48. "...baked in ___" (2 wds.)
51. Greek goddess of wealth
56. "___ My Own" (Frost)
58. Store
60. Forty-___
61. Tug's burden
62. Signs
63. Fuel
64. Maids

DOWN

1. Spy Mata
2. Straight ___ arrow (2 wds.)
3. Elegant
4. Lotto's kin
5. Cover with paint
6. ___ Daire (Starwreck film)
7. Common
8. Emulates Donna Corner
9. Parson in opposition
10. Tense start
11. Court order
13. Trembling tree
14. "Younger ___ Springtime"
20. Angora's sound
21. Birdie's vow (2 wds.)
24. Dagwood dividers
25. Frightening
26. Under-the-breath comment
27. The ___ Cola Kid (1985 film)
31. Ole of vaudeville
29. "It takes $ ___ or less..."
30. Encouraged
31. Confused fight
32. Chick sounds
34. Sound of contentment
35. Drink flavor
37. Jilting
41. NL sports locale
43. Red
44. Less dubious
45. Steals a glance
46. Frank Herbert novel
47. Madras wear
48. "Once ___ a midnight dreary"
49. Eat without gusto
50. Let-me highlight
51. Addition column
52. Speech therapist's concern
53. Marco Capac's empire
54. Put in storage
55. Cuts the grass

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21-April 20
Your hard work and perseverance begin to pay off. It may not be as much fun as winning the lottery, but you can be sure that it's deserved. Plan for the future by making a firm commitment and prudent investments.

TAURUS
April 21-May 21
You're able to do the work of an army this week, but avoid burnout by keeping your evenings free. Spontaneous activities are the key to relieving stress. A business opportunity holds great promise.

GEMINI
May 22-June 21
Even though you may be afraid of schedule on an important project, avoid wasting time in idle conversation. You could make a bad impression on someone you'd rather dislike. You might also spend your spare time troubleshooting.

CANCER
June 22-July 22
Make a strong case for something you've been wanting, and the odds are good you'll receive it -- if you've done your homework. In a partnership, focus on building up the other person's strengths, rather than improving their weaknesses.

LEO
July 23-August 23
Although a recent innovation may be clever, it's probably not the right tool for the job this week. A business luncheon could turn personal. Think ahead before deciding what you want, and then pursue it wholeheartedly.

VIRGO
August 24-September 22
Don't allow intense emotions to blind you to the realities of a situation. Get an expert's advice, then, strike out boldly. Avoid stretching yourself too thin.

LIBRA
September 23-October 23
If you're looking for more money, start by selling yourself. Could you be packaging some of your skills and talents differently? A spreadsheet tempts you to follow suit, but you'd be wiser to keep your spending habits under control.

SCORPIO
October 24-November 22
Unchanneled energy equals chaos, so before you leap off in a new direction, stand back and make some decisions. A relaxing weekend takes an interesting twist when a friend makes a startling revelation.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23-December 21
Take aim at a long-term goal and you'll hit your target. Plan on working hard and you won't be disappointed. A disorderly approach to life means some hardships in the near future. Play it safe.

CAPRICORN
December 22-January 20
Although you're a bundle of energy this week, you're not sharp when it comes to communicating. Focus on clarity and you could avoid a serious misunderstanding. Discuss the rules with someone who can change them.

AQUARIUS
January 21-February 18
A great inspiration could need some further refinement. Delegate some of your responsibility to a group to maximize your effectiveness. What seems like a cruel criticism could have an extremely useful core to it.

PISCES
February 19-March 20
Listen to a wise friend for advice on a personal problem. Simplicity is the key to most decisions this week. Take the high road when dealing with a difficult person. There could be more going on than meets the eye.

HSCN Housing Services Cable Network

Daily Listings sponsored by: Your Ad Could Be Here. Call 545-3500

2 HSCN Bulletin Board
3 CBS/3 Hartford
4 CBS/4 Boston
5 ABC/5 Boston
6 PBS/57 Springfield
7 HSCN Movie Channel
8 UPN/20 Hartford
9 Weather Channel
10 NBC/30 New Britain
11 Fox/61 Hartford
12 PBS/24 Hartford
13 WOCH & HSCN
14 UMATV
17 HSCN Programming
18 TV-19
20 ABC/40 Springfield
22 NBC/22 Springfield
23 CNN
24 CNN/Headline News
25 BET
26 BET on Jazz
27 Laser Video
28 The Learning Channel
30 Comedy Central
31 Popcorn Channel
32 Satellite Programming

THURSDAY EVENING — C - Campus — JANUARY 30, 1997

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	Newsbeat	With Jim Lehrer	G. Auriemma	Women's College Basketball: Boston College at Connecticut.			CelaTokyo		Mystery! "Inspector Morse"		T. Old House	Ancestors
WFSB	3	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Am. Journal	Diagnosis Murder		Moloney "Damage Control"		48 Hours (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	4	News		CBS News	Ent. Tonight	Diagnosis Murder		Moloney "Damage Contr.		48 Hours (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WCVB	5	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	High Incident (In Stereo)		★★ "Firestarter II" (1994, Science Fiction) Emilio Estevez.				News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Full House	Fresh Prince	Star Trek: Next Gener.		★★★ "Private Benjamin" (1980, Comedy) Goldie Hawn.				News		Jenny Jones (In Stereo)
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends	Single Guy	Seinfeld	Naked Truth	ER "Fortune's Fools" (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX	8	Fresh Prince	Martin	Judge Judy	Real TV	Cops "Impersonations"		Baywatch Nights "Possessed"		News	(LIVE)	Real TV
WVIT	10	News	NBC News	Ent. Tonight	Hard Copy	Friends	Single Guy	Seinfeld	Naked Truth	ER "Fortune's Fools" (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	61	Simpsons	Roseanne	Home Imp.	Seinfeld	Martin	Living Single	New York Undercover		News		Coach	Deep Space 9
WWLP	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Friends	Single Guy	Seinfeld	Naked Truth	ER "Fortune's Fools" (In Stereo)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	57	Creatures	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		T. Old House	Dns. on Call	Mystery! "Inspector Morse"		Dangerfield		Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Ent. Tonight	High Incident (In Stereo)		★★ "Freejack" (1992, Science Fiction) Emilio Estevez.				News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Beverly Hills, 90210 (In Stereo)		Seinfeld		NHL Hockey: Boston Bruins at Florida Panthers. (Live)					News	Med Abo. You	Real TV
WTBS	72	Family Matters	Family Matters	Home Videos	Home Videos	★★ "Big Trouble in Little China" (1986, Adventure) Kurt Russell.				★★½ "The Grinch Got You Scrooged" (1988) Karen Kirby, Wayne A.
A&E	51	Quincy		Equalizer "Beyond Control"		Biography: Ted Bundy		Ancient Mysteries (R)		Unexplained		Law & Order	Switch
CNN	29	World View		Moneyline	Crossfire	Prime News	Inside Politics	Larry King Live		World Today		Sports Illus.	Moneyline
COM	28	Tick	Dream On	Daily Show (R)	TV Nation	★★½ "Cadillac Man" (1990, Comedy) Robin Williams.				Jeff Altman	Dream On	Daily Show	TV Nation
DISC	52	Beyond 2000	Next Step (R)	Winge		Wild Discovery: Baby		Movie Magic	Next Step	Cronkite Remembers		Wild Discovery: Baby
ESPN	31	Up Close	Sportscenter		College Basketball: Massachusetts at George Washington. (Live)					College Basketball: Cincinnati at Louisville. (Live)			Sportscenter
LIFE	50	Supermarket	Debt	Celebrity Weddings (In Style		Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		Crystal Chron.: Art Alexakis (Chaka Sibby") (1964) Cynthia Gibb...				Living	Mysteries
MTV	53	Ren & Stimpy	Sports (R)	Singled Out	Idiot Savants	Prime Time (In Stereo)		Yo! (In Stereo)				Singled Out	Idiot Savants
NICK	55	Clarissa Expl.	Tiny Toon	Doug	Rugrats	Secret-of Alex	Happy Days	Love Lucy	Monsters	M.T. Moore	Rhoda	Taxi	Odd Couple
SCIFI	59	Twilight Zone	Darkside	Time Trax (In Stereo)		Tekwar "Alter Ego" (In Stereo)		Forever Knight "Spin Doctor"		Sci-Fi Buzz	Inside Space	Time Trax (R) (In Stereo)
TLC	26	Furniture	Renovation	Hometime (R)	Hometime (R)	Real America: 48 Hours		Ghosts of Wonder (R)		Small Arms - Soft Targets (R)		Real America: 48 Hours (R)
TNT	25	In the Heat of the Night		In the Heat of the Night		★★½ "The Sacketts" (1979, Western) (Part 1 of 2) Tom Selleck.				★★½ "The Sacketts" (1979, Western) (Part 2 of 2) Tom Selleck.
USA	27	Renegade "Hostage" (In Stereo)		Highlander: The Series		Murder, She Wrote		★★½ "Almost an Actor" (1994) Comedy) Paul Hogan.				Silk Stalkings (R) (In Stereo)
HBO	33	30:00 "Made in America" (1993)		★★ "Bye Bye Love" (1995, Comedy) Matthew Modine. PG-13				"Mercenary" (1997, Adventure) Oliver Gruner. (In Stereo) NYF				Inside the NFL (In Stereo)
MAX	34	★½ "Kazaam in Paradise" (1994) Nicolas Cage. PG-13				★★★ "Kiss of Death" (1995, Drama) David Caruso. R				★★ "Vampire in Brooklyn" (1995) Eddie Murphy.		"Mr. Money"
SHOW	35	(4:25)	★½ "Captain Nuke and the Bomberboys" (1995)					★★ "The Demolitionist" (1996) Nicole Eggert. R		★½ "The Scarlet Letter" (1995, Drama) Demi Moore. (In Stereo) R

Bruno By C.Baldwin

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Frumpy the Clown Judd Winick

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Frumpy the Clown Judd Winick

Drabble By Kevin Fagan

Leold™ (leold@javanet.com)
by Roger and Salem Salloom ©1996

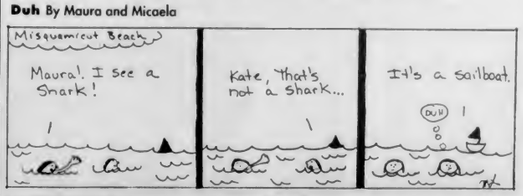
Sometimes when I visit my Uncle Petain I stare out of his living room window for hours. I always sit in one of his stuffed easy chairs.

All day long he plays classical music around the house. If I sit long enough by the window I drift into another world... like a trance. I become peaceful and content. If it happens to rain, then I get even better... you know, uh... urban nirvana.

The rain hits the window and patters on the sill... the world below makes sense... everything makes sense.

If I sit there long enough maybe I'll make sense.

University² By Frank Cho



Non Sequitur By Wiley

Non Sequitur By Wiley

Duh By Maura and Micaela

Close to Home By John McPherson

"Carol, your computer has a very serious virus. We can't risk having it spread to the other PCs. You know this is for the best. Please step aside."

Today's Staff

Jacob "Jester" Michaels
Night Editor

Chris "Sundown" Conner
Copy Editor

Jennifer "Charlie" Jutras
Photo Technician

Josh "Viper" Sylvester
Production Supervisor

Sam "Maverick" Smullin
Leon "Goose" Latino
Production

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Franklin

LUNCH
Hamburger on a Roll
Quiche Lorraine
Meatball Grinder
Wheatball Grinder

DINNER
Lemon Chicken
Veal Cutlet Cordon Bleu
Fiesta Rice and Cheese
Quarter Pound Burger

Hampshire

LUNCH
Hamburger on a Roll
Grilled Chicken Sand.
Turkey Bacon Swiss — Folded Pita

DINNER
Lemon Chicken
Veal Parmesan

Worcester

LUNCH
Turkey Burger
Beef Stew
Fettuccini /Tomato Sauce
Sesame Noodles/Pea Pods

DINNER
Lemon Chicken
Savory Stuffed Peppers
Pastabilities:
Manicotti w/ Sauce

Berkshire

LUNCH
Turkey Burger
Reuben Sand. on Rye
Fettuccini/Tomato Sauce
Sesame Noodles/Pea Pods

DINNER
Lemon Chicken
Veal Cutlet Cordon Bleu
Garden Chili
Manicotti w/ Sauce

Quote of the Day

"Why's he calling me meat? I'm the one driving the Porsche."
–Eddie Calvin LaLouche "Bull Durham"

Joke of the Day

What do you call a deer with no eyes?

–A no eye-deer

Flying Compass Graphics
Faster than a Speeding Bullet, and Higher than a Kite!
Call 888-compass or go to 17665 Main St. Good Luck Pilot!
Check out our website at: www.wicked.high.com
Compass Graphics. We just can't stop. We just can't stop. We just can't

UMass faces Colonials in D.C. showdown

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

There's always talk about revenge when the subject of a George Washington–Massachusetts men's basketball game arises. But this year, it wouldn't be surprising if the Minutemen were less interested in revenge and more interested in proving their mettle.

In last year's Atlantic 10 Tournament, UMass defeated GW for the first time in five meetings. This year, the Minutemen are riding a four–game winning streak that has come smack in the middle of the toughest stretch of the schedule.

That streak will be put on the line tonight at 7:30 p.m. at the Charles E. Smith Center in Washington, D.C., where the Minutemen (10–9, 4–2 Atlantic 10) and the Colonials (9–7, 4–3) duke it out as part of ESPN's Rivalry Week.

UMass has long had a problem with GW. The Colonials prevailed in an 86–76 Feb. 24 contest at the William D. Mullins Center that knocked the then–No. 1 Minutemen out of the top spot in the AP poll and ended UMass' 26–game win streak. The loss was also UMass' first of the season.

The Colonials also stung the Minutemen the previous year with a pair of losses. The Feb. 4, 1995 78–75 GW win at the Smith Center, that the Colonials eked out after Derek Kellogg's long–range 3–pointer missed, was witnessed by President Bill Clinton, but that loss was not as hard to take as the one that occurred 10 days later.

When George Washington stormed the Mullins Center on Valentine's Day, the 80–78 Colonial victory ended the Minutemen's longest home winning streak at 33 games and ended the longest on–campus win streak at 42 games.

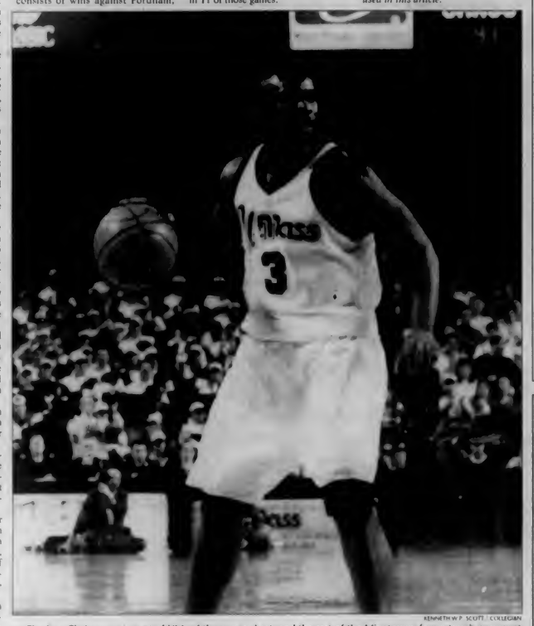
In fact, the last time UMass won against George Washington was a 56–55 nailbiter at the Mullins Center on Jan. 22, 1994.

Flint and this year's squad is hoping to change all that tonight. The Minutemen are coming off an impressive performance at Temple that included a school record 15 3–pointers.

As they have for the past four games (all wins), the Minutemen plan to go with a three–guard set, with Edgar Padilla running the point, Carmelo Travieso tackling the job of defending the opponent's top perimeter player, and Charlton Clarke playing in the three–spot.

George Washington has suffered a bit this year. Picked almost unanimously as the preseason No.1 team in the A–10 West, the Colonials have fallen on hard times during the conference portion of their schedule.

After racking up a 5–1 record in the season's early–going, the Colonials dropped three straight in December, losing to Maryland in the championship game of the Franklin Bank Classic, No. 1 Kansas and one of the lesser known UNC's — Charlotte.



From that point on, GW has not been able to string together a pair of wins. The team's Atlantic 10 record consists of wins against Fordham, Duquesne, Dayton and La Salle and losses to St. Joseph's, then–No. 15 Xavier (the A– 10's only ranked team) and an upstart St. Bonaventure squad.

While the Colonials' record in the last five games has been anything but consistent, their leading scorer has been just that. Alexander Koul has led his team in scoring in the last five games and 10 of the Colonials' 19 overall. In addition, the junior center has been the squad's top rebounder in 11 of those games.

Koul is not the only threat the Minutemen have to contend with. Sophomore point guard Shawnta Rogers leads GW in assists with 5.0 per game, 3–pointers (24), steals (48) and minutes (34.6 per game).

"They struggle from time to time, but they're always ready to play," Flint said of the Colonials. "[GW coach] Mike Jarvis has always said that the one team they get up for is us."

Material from WHMP FM was used in this article.

KENNETH P. SCOTT / COLLEGIAN

Charlton Clarke, a main part of UMass' three–guard set, and the rest of the Minutemen face a tough opponent at George Washington tonight at 7:30 p.m.

Steady play and leadership automatic from Carroll

By Luke Meredith
Collegian Staff

If you could describe Massachusetts senior forward Crystal Carroll's play in one word, automatic would have to be the word. Whether it be a perimeter, jumper, a putback under the boards, a few kinds words to an overanxious freshman or a hustling lunge at a ball certain to go out of bounds, Carroll is a smooth, flowing player with a quiet, confident intensity and a jumpshot as sweet as sugar.

And it's all automatic.

A two–time All Atlantic–10 third team selection, Carroll has stepped up in her senior season. The void left in the post by the loss of graduated seniors Octavia Thomas and Melissa Gurile has been filled almost singlehandedly by Carroll, who leads the Minutewomen in scoring at 17.1 points a game, while ranking second with 6.6 rebounds. The 6–foot–2 Watervliet, N.Y., native has been the driving force behind the 12–6 Minutewomen, something Carroll had to get used to.

"At first, I felt a little uncomfortable [being the offensive focus], but it helps a lot when plays are run towards you," Carroll said. "I've started to feel comfortable with the green light."

Carroll has been a contributor to the Minutewomen since the day she first suited up four years ago. She started all 28 games her freshman year, averaging 9.6 points a game and earning All–Atlantic 10 Rookie Team honors. Her sophomore and junior years were highlighted by third team All–Atlantic–10 selections, and a 37–12 record for the Minutewomen when she scored in double figures.

Carroll's a natural talent, to be sure, but she credits the coaching staff for her development from high school standout to college star. UMass assistant coach Bill Rooney has worked with her on an inside game that has become one of the best in the Atlantic 10.

"She's amazing. I learn something new every day in practice," Carroll said. "She's really helped my game a lot."

UMass coach Joanie O'Brien has also played a big role in Carroll's four years in Amherst.

"She's a great coach," Carroll said. "She has an unbelievable knowledge of the game, and she knows a lot of the little things that happen [in a basketball game] that are important."

This season's fantastic start by Carroll has put her among the elite in the A–10. She currently ranks seventh in the conference in scoring, fourth in free throw percentage, 12th in rebounding, and second in field goal percentage at .512.

"She's very good. We certainly know all of the good things Crystal can do," LaSalle coach John Miller said. "She has a very good touch around the basket. We thought that one of our keys to success was to contain Crystal. You certainly need to contain Crystal."

In addition to leading the team in scoring, Carroll's leadership abilities, along with those of fellow

Turn to CARROLL, page 2

Support women's hoop!

Support the UMass women's basketball team Sunday at the William D. Mullins Center and you could win big:

• USAir, Friendly's and D.P. Dough are sponsoring a shooting contest for a free round–trip airline ticket courtesy of USAir. • There will be a contest for the best poster that supports both UMass and ESPN2. • The first 200 people to buy a scorecard will get a Friendly's gift certificate. • UMass women's hoop posters will be given out all night.

Sportsman honors? Tiger deserves 'em

JOHNATHAN M. PLACE

As you probably know by now, rookie golf sensation Eldrick (Tiger) Woods has been given the 1996 award for "Sportsman of the Year" from Sports Illustrated. Since the December issue was put out on the street, speculation has risen as to whether or not the recently turned 21–year–old deserved such a prestigious award.

Some sports writers thought Michael Johnson should have won for his outstanding achievements during the Summer Olympic Games in Atlanta because he was the best in his respective field. Although Woods was great, he did not put up the best numbers overall this year in golf. Some put their ballots in for Michael Jordan, but how many times in one decade can he be called the greatest?

Well, what did Tiger Woods do this past year? First, he won his third consecutive U.S. Amateur Championship while at Stanford University. Second, he placed twenty–second, as an amateur, during the U.S. Open in Oakland Hills. Third, he turned pro and joined the PGA halfway through the season. Fourth, he signed for a combined $60 million dollars between Nike and Titleist alone. And finally, he won two tournaments out of his first 10, while only taking one week off all year, and still managed to gain enough respect to be selected as one of the four golfers picked to play in the Skins Game. For someone only 20 years of age, that's quite the resume.

Yes, Michael Johnson was flawless this year during the Summer Olympics, but, not to take anything away from his achievements, the Olympics are only two weeks long, Tiger played all year. I'm sure no one would have been that upset if Johnson had received the award, but did he truly deserve it?

Nor would anyone get sour about Michael Jordan winning. He's arguably the best all–around basketball player to play the game, and after coming out of retirement, has put himself right back where he left off.

From what I have seen this year in sports, this award seems to cover a little more than just the overall best athlete of the year. This award is given to the person who not only exhibits greatness in his or her field, but who personifies the sport they are in, and who is good for all sports in general.

In 1995, Mo Vaughn took the crown for the MVP in baseball. A controversial decision, considering Albert Belle put up better offensive numbers. Many believed, and they would be right in saying, that

Turn to HONORS, page 2

UM women's gym successful over intersession

By Jeremy Adams
Collegian Staff

While the Massachusetts student body took a break from the hard work and snowball fights of the 1996–97 winter, the women's gymnastics team used the time to begin its ascent through the ranks of Atlantic 10 and NCAA gymnastics.

Currently fourth year coach Dave Kuzara's squad is 2–2, having lost its recent match with No. 11 Michigan at the William D. Mullins Center.

During intersession, Massachusetts gymnasts set school records and placed top scores among the elite of the A–10. Despite falling to the Wolverines, they felt their performances in the big–time atmosphere of the Mullins Center showed that they could compete with anyone.

"Michigan is a team that can win the national championship this year," Kuzara said. "I thought we gave them a run."

The Minutewoman performances at the Michigan meet and the preceding George Washington, Penn State and New Hampshire matches have ranked as the top scores in all four events and all–around competition in the A–10 this season.

Denise Johnson scored a 9.9 on the vault at Penn State, and pulled off a 9.9 in the floor exercise against Michigan. Also at the Michigan meet, Tara Swartz scored a 9.9 on the uneven bars and Mandy Mosby notched a 9.9 floor tally en route to a 38.8 all–around score that stands as the conference's best performance of this season.

On beam, Anita Sonyal is tied for first place with a 9.85 mark earned against GW.

The common theme in the Minutewomen's meets up until the Michigan date was difficulties in early events.

"We had a very slow start to the [George Washington] meet," Kuzara said. "We did not do well on the bars, but we finished the last three events strong."

The Minutewomen pulled out a 187.725–187.250 vic–

Turn to INTERSESSION, page 2

Intramurals look for new officials

Editor's note: Sports Briefs is a relatively new column to the Collegian, but so far it has been very successful. The column is designed to give attention and credit to the athletes who don't play at the collegiate varsity level, but instead on club, intramural and recreational teams.

The feature runs every Thursday, and is comprised of information sent in from these teams and athletes. Submissions for Sports Briefs should be sent to the Collegian offices, and are due each Wednesday at noon. Submissions can be sent, brought down to the offices at 113 Campus Center Basement or faxed to 545–1592.

If there are any questions call co–sports editors Casey Kane or Chris Stamm at 545–0719.

SPORTS BRIEFS

Interested in Intramurals?

The Intramural and Recreational Sports program is ready to begin the spring semester. For basketball and ice hockey, there will be meetings tonight in Boyden Building at 6 p.m. Singles interested in playing these sports should attend the singles' meeting at the same

Turn to BRIEFS, page 1

THANG VO / COLLEGIAN

The UMass women's basketball team defeated Virginia Tech 54–52 last night in Blacksburg, Va.

Women's hoop escapes at VT

The game was probably closer than it had to be, but the Massachusetts women's basketball team escaped with a 54– 52 win over Virginia Tech last night at Cassell Coliseum.

With the win the Minutewomen improve to 13–6, 7–2 in the Atlantic 10, while the Lady Hokies drop to 6–14 and 1–8 in conference play.

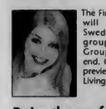
Kara Tudman was hard at work under the boards for the Minutewomen, grabbing a career high–10 rebounds in her 24 minutes of work.

UMass shot just 34 percent from the field, but complimented that with a 50 percent outing at the line. The victory was the second time UMass has won while shooting under 40 percent.

Virginia Tech shot just 40 percent from the floor.

The Minutewomen return to action this weekend, when conference power George Washington comes to town on Sunday. The game will be nationally broadcast on ESPN2, with Robin Roberts calling the play–by–play and former Connecticut stand–out Rebecca Lobo doing the color commentary.

Check out tomorrow's Collegian for more details on the Virginia Tech game and for a complete preview of this weekend's action with GW.



— Casey Kane

The Massachusetts

DAILY COLLEGIAN

Volume CVI Issue 73 • New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967 • Friday, January 31, 1997

Look Ma, no band!

The Fine Arts Center will host the Swedish a capella group, The Real Group this weekend. Check out our preview (see Arts & Living, page 5).

Raise the roof, baby!

Led by sophomore Lari Ketner's 16 points, the UMass men's basketball team beat George Washington away from home for only the second time in school history. For more on the Minutemen (see Sports, page 10).

WORLD

Hussein's son risks paralysis with surgery

AMMAN — Saddam Hussein's oldest son risks total paralysis if he opts for surgery to remove bullets lodged in his pelvis and near his spine since an assasination attempt, sources said yesterday.

Odai, widely considered Hussein's heir apparent, has been partially paralyzed since being shot Dec. 12 during an attack in an upscale Baghdad suburb, they said.

Odai, 32, was thought to have suffered some paralysis based on appearances on Iraqi television in which he was shown not moving his legs. But the sources yesterday gave the most detailed description yet of Odai's condition.

The latest on his condition followed rumors of turmoil in Hussein's inner circle and coincided with reports by dissident groups that 6,000 Iraqi troops have been sent near the border with Kuwait, site of the 1990–91 Persian Gulf War.

Speaking from Jordan's capital, Amman, the dissidents said at least two brigades of special forces were sent to the southern city of Basra over the past few days and were deployed in palm tree groves just outside the city.

The groves' landlords, workers and their families have been asked to leave the area along the strategic Shat Al–Arab waterway in the northern tip of the Persian Gulf.

NATION

Number of cases drop as flu strain slows

ATLANTA — After a fast start, the worst may be over for a flu strain that quickly spread fever, hacking coughs and death across the country.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said yesterday that the number of states reporting widespread cases has started to drop.

"We saw activity begin earlier than usual and occur throughout the country within a relatively short time," said Nancy Arden, a CDC medical epidemiologist. "Some flu epidemics spread slowly. But within a relatively short amount of time, we saw outbreaks all over the country."

Wuhan, a flu strain that can kill the elderly but affects all age groups, was the culprit in 97 percent of the viruses sent to government labs.

The CDC has not determined the total number of deaths from the flu, but Ms. Arden said the percentage of people dying each week has outpaced CDC predictions through the middle of this month. The flu usually kills about 20,000 people a year, but Wuhan–like strains can kill more than 40,000, Ms. Arden said.

The first cases were reported to the CDC in October, and a few weeks later, states had noticed widespread cases. By the end of November, the flu took Colorado and Pennsylvania by full force. Most of the outbreaks were reported in nursing homes. But the flu also hit hundreds at a job training center in Indianapolis and made some Marquette University students miserable in Milwaukee.

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Saturday	Sunday
HIGH: 35 LOW: 25	HIGH: 40 LOW: 30	HIGH: 35 LOW: 25

INSIDE

Arts & Living.....page 5
Classifieds .....page 8
Comics .....page 9
Crossword .....page 8
Editorial .....page 4
FYI.....page 2
News .....page 3
Sports .....page 10

Community service alive & well; UM Boltwood Project continues

By Tamar Carroll
Collegian Staff

The Boltwood Project, a community service outreach program, will hold recruitment nights for prospective student volunteers next week, Feb. 3–5.

A service learning course offered through the Department of Landscape Architecture and Regional Planning of the University of Massachusetts, The Boltwood Project coordinates approximately 250 student volunteers with physically and mentally disabled adults and children in Amherst, Northampton, Turners Falls and Holyoke.

Student Program Supervisor Melissa Hernandez, a junior sociology major, felt that she has gained an education at Boltwood.

"Working with disabled groups has been amazing for me," Hernandez said. "It's rewarding and challenging to learn how to deal with their disabilities and overcome stereotypes of disabled people and do something good."

The student volunteers are broken up into 21 groups who go to a site two hours each week for 10 weeks and socialize with the residents there. Most of the groups meet Monday through Thursday in the evenings, although one group meets in the afternoon.

Each group of volunteers is led by a student supervisor who plans an activity for the group each week.

Michael Khachadoorian, a sophomore School of Management student and a Boltwood supervisor, is currently planning activities for his group to do this spring.

"I can't wait to get started," Khachadoorian said. "Last semester we went to the Yankee Candle Company, made picture frames and flower boxes... this semester, because the weather will be better, we'll be able to do a lot more outdoor activities."

Students who participate in the Boltwood Project receive either one or two academic credits. All volunteers attend an orientation session, and those who wish to receive two credits, attend an additional seminar during the semester, as well as fulfilling some other requirements.

For their reflection component of the class, Boltwood students complete a journal and submit a paper at the end of the semester.

The Boltwood Project is open to all UMass students and undergraduate students from the Five College Area, but students who wish to join the program must come to one of the three recruitment nights.

The recruitment nights are being held next Monday and Wednesday at 6:30 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium and Tuesday at 6:30 p.m. in Campus Center Room 163.

Project Coordinator Jeffrey Chapdelaine will give an overview of the Boltwood Project at the recruitment nights, as well as introducing each of the 21 volunteer sites.

There are often more potential volunteers than positions in the project, so interested students need to complete a brief application at the recruitment night and speak to the supervisor of the group they would like to work with.

"Unfortunately, we're not able to place all the students that would like to volunteer. We're limited, just like any other class," Hernandez said.

Hernandez said that the supervisors are looking for enthusiastic students who really want to participate in the program, not students who are just trying to pick up an extra credit.

"We're looking for enthusiasm, dedication and commitment," Hernandez said. "Not people who just do it for the credit."

Chapdelaine said "We're looking for the most qualified, most diverse group of volunteers we can get."

Students who apply for the Boltwood Project can find out if they received placement next Thursday at the Boltwood table in the Campus Center Concourse.

The Boltwood Project began 37 years ago at Amherst College, and has been located at UMass for the past 20 years. Merle Willman, the assistant department head of Landscape Architecture and Regional Planning, has been the faculty director of the project for the past seven years.

In addition to Willman and the 21 student supervisors, Chapdelaine, project coordinator, Kelly Warren, associate coordinator and Mary Mix, assistant coordinator, work to organize and coordinate the Boltwood Project.

Jenna Kaleis, a senior family and community studies major who participated in the project for the past three years, said she felt that UMass students provide a valuable service the community through the Boltwood Project.

"I love doing it because I think what we're doing is really important," Kaleis said. "We're helping to make the lives of others more meaningful, including those of the volunteers."

The Boltwood Project is funded through the Department of Landscape and Architecture, the Student Government Association, and a $15 per student lab fee.

For more information on the project, stop by the Boltwood table in the Campus Center Concourse or contact Jeffrey Chapdelaine at (413) 545–6755.

CHRIS CESNEK/ COLLEGIAN

Keeping warm...

James Horty, an undeclared sophomore, tries to keep warm in yesterday's chilling temperature.

FBI called in to investigate racist notes on UPS parcels

By Karen Schwartz
Associated Press

NEW YORK — In a case taking on the outlines of racial harassment or corporate extortion, someone is sending prominent black people United Parcel Service envelopes defaced with bigoted messages.

UPS executives say they didn't know the dozen next–day air envelopes had passed through their system in December and January until contacted this month by The Associated Press.

The envelopes were sent to the Washington offices of two Chicago congressmen, Jesse Jackson Jr. and Bobby Rush; to the New York City home and office of New York State Comptroller H. Carl McCall; and to former Assistant U.S. Attorney for Civil Rights Deval Patrick. Police say at least three other people received defaced UPS envelopes, but would not release the names.

After looking into the complaints, UPS insisted none of its 339,000 employees was involved and suggested it may be an extortion scam.

The criminal investigation, meanwhile, involves at least four states and the District of Columbia; law enforcers working on it range from local police to the FBI bias crimes unit.

"This case has brought us in all sorts of different directions," said a spokesman for the New York state police, who asked not to be identified by name.

UPS said its tracking system — so sophisticated that commercials boast it can tell whether a person who signs for a package dots his I's — missed the scrawled words "niger" and "nigers day." Envelopes travel with labels up, and the slurs were written on the undersides, said UPS spokesman Ken Sternad at headquarters in Atlanta.

The flurry of mailings coincides with a nationwide class–action lawsuit against UPS by black managers who contend they were passed over in pay and promotions. In addition, black UPS employees in California have complained of harassment by supervisors.

UPS says it tolerates no work–place discrimination, and that the envelopes were sent by someone "using race and our service as a cover for another potentially illegal activity," Sternad said. He said UPS had traced many, if not all, of the envelopes back "to a single source" in St. Paul, Minn.

The culprit could be charged at a state level with aggravated harassment, or the federal level with violat–

Turn to RACISM, page 2

Local gov't focus of new course

SCERA works to increase awareness about town elections

By Victoria Groves
Collegian Staff

This semester, University of Massachusetts students will have the opportunity to learn about local government and run for public office at the same time.

The Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) is currently conducting the UMass Votes Campaign to raise the number of registered voters at UMass and increase awareness about town elections.

According to SCERA staff director Mark Kenen, last semester SCERA registered 6,500 new voters, while 1,500 more registered directly with the town of Amherst.

This semester, a program will be offered to all UMass undergraduates (excluding seniors) to introduce them to town government, and the process of running for public office.

Students will run for Town Meeting Representatives and will receive three credits whether or not they win the elec'–n.

"The main objective is to have students learn the elements of grassroots campaigning and organizing," said Joanne Levenson, director of Commuter Service and Housing Resource Center who will be running the course.

"Students will get experience doing coalition work and will learn how town interests and student interests intersect," Levenson said.

The course will also include lessons on public speaking, the workings of town government and University and town relations.

A series of lecturers from the UMass political science department and speeches from town officials and town meeting representatives are also scheduled.

This program is being conducted in conjunction with an effort to increase UMass voter turnout by establishing a polling place at the Hampden Dining Commons in the Southwest Residential Area for Southwest residents.

"We have been working for an on–campus polling place for about 20 years," said Jason Vecchio, student coordinator of SCERA.

After the two year period, the town will evaluate the results, and may agree to institute a polling place for the entire campus.

"We have been given the task of making it a success, focusing mostly on Southwest In the next two years," Vecchio said. "The goal is to see how we would function running a polling place in a town election."

"Participation in government is at an all–time low and we need to build interest from the bottom up. Democracy demands involvement and participation," Levenson said.

Students interested in running for Town Meeting should attend a meeting Tuesday, Feb. 4, at 4 p.m. in the Student Union, Room 428 (flyers posted around campus contain an incorrect date) or contact Joanne Levenson at 545–0865.

Assassinated labor leader buried; Algerian general also murdered

By Rachid Khiari
Associated Press

ALGIERS — With a sea of flowers and a minute of silence nationwide, Algeria's top union leader was buried yesterday after assassins cut short his political ambitions.

The slaying of Abdelhak Benhamouda was yet another high–profile killing in a 5–year–old Muslim insurgency that the military–backed government has promised — but so far failed — to halt.

The violence continued with the killing yesterday of a retired general, Habib Khalil. Algerian state radio announced the slaying by unknown assailants but did not elaborate.

President Liamine Zeroual was among the mourners at Benhamouda's burial in the "martyrs' quarter" of the El Alia cemetery in eastern Algiers, where major Algerian figures are buried.

Benhamouda, who supported Zeroual in the 1995 elections, was gunned down Tuesday in front of his union's headquarters. There was no claim of responsibility but suspicion fell on Muslim militants waging an insurgency that has left at least 60,000 people dead since 1992.

Benhamouda had been preparing to form a centrist party ahead of legislative elections expected by mid–year, and was seen by some as having a good chance at becoming prime minister.

The assassination came amid a wave of violent attacks that has left at least 270 people dead and 600 wounded since the start of the Muslim holy month of Ramadan on Jan. 10.

A French labor leader, Nicole Notat, went to Algeria to attend the funeral. Notat, head of the French Labor Confederation, praised Benhamouda as a "righteous man, with integrity, who had but one obsession: to unite Algerians to advance toward democracy, liberty."

In Paris, former French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing suggested there could be no peace in Algeria unless authorities allowed the banned Islamic Salvation Front to take part in planned legislative elections.

CHRIS CESNEK/ COLLEGIAN

Just chillin' out...

Kelley Scarmeas, a sophomore English major passes time in front of the Student Union.

For Your Information

PIPs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an PIP, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Friday, Jan. 31

Religious — A welcome back Shabbat will be held at the Chabad House at 6 p.m. A meal will follow the service.

Meeting — The Alliance Christian Fellowship will hold its weekly Time Out Fellowship meeting at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center. This week, Worship and speaker Rev. Dave Berman on, "The Refreshing Life."

Saturday, Feb. 1

Religious — A Shabbat morning service will be held at 10 a.m. in Hillel House. Free lunch to follow services.

Monday, Feb. 3

Auditions — The University Chorale needs a few good men (particularly basses), and women too. Auditions will be held from 3–5 p.m. or by arrangement. Call 545-4313 for more information.

Film — Le Colonel Chabert, directed by Yves Angelo, will be screened in Morrill 1 on the Amherst College campus at 4 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. In French with English subtitles. Free and open to the public.

Tuesday, Feb. 4

Discussion — Portrait of a Lady, by Henry James, is the selection for the Odyssey Bookshop's monthly Open Book Discussion tonight at 7 p.m. Marjorie Kaufman, a professor emeritus of English at Mount Holyoke College, will lead the discussion.

Discussion — Zionist for Action sponsors Israel Issues Discussion Group at 7:30 p.m. in the Hillel House. Topic: "Division and Conflicts in Israeli Society." Discussion led by Shoshana Madmoni.

Meeting — The UMass Ballroom Dance Club's first general meeting will be held at 5:30 p.m. in 101 Totman Gym. For info call Kevin Murpy at 549-4036.

Meeting — Hey math majors! Welcome back. Come to the first spring meeting of the Math Club at 7 p.m. in LGRT 1521D. As always, snacks provided.

Meeting — The Ski Club will hold its first general meeting of the semester at 7 p.m. in Earthfoods. Members can get deals on tuning, waxing and lift passes for $30. For more info, call 545-3437.

Meeting — UMass Hillel Council's Kick-Off meeting will be held at 6 p.m. in Campus Center 904. Looking for Jewish student activists to help set the 1997 Hillel Agenda for social, religious and cultural activities.

Notices

Orientation — Orientation tours for the W.E.B. Du Bois Library will be held today and Feb. 3–7. The tours will leave from the Entrance lobby at 10:30 a.m. and 2:30 p.m. daily. We encourage you to come, visit and get to know the library.

Independent study — Resources in Women's Studies Research, WOST 496B, will be held Wednesdays, 4–4:50 p.m. in the Calipari Instruction Room in the W.E.B. Du Bois Library. Reccomended for juniors and seniors. Call instructor Emily Sillverman at 545-0995 or email essilverman@library.umass.edu to register.

Volunteer work — Do you love community service, helping others, volunteering with children, leadership opportunities and making new friends? Join the UMass Circle K Club. 409 Student Union. Call Aimee or Suzanne at 665–7712 for more info.

Internships — Internships are available working on Earth Day, Hunger, Recycling and Clean Air. Call Melanie at MassPirg, 545-0199 or stop by the office at 423–A Student Union Building.

Comedy — The UMass improv comedy show, Mission Improvable will perform every Saturday in the Campus Center Basement at 8 p.m. Free.

Religious — The Alliance Church of the Pioneer Valley in south Amherst will provide rides to church. Pick up is at 9:40 a.m. on campus. Call Mark at 253-0361 for more information.

Support group — Overeaters Anonymous, a group of individuals who share an addiction to food and suffer from compulsive eating and other eating disorders, will hold weekly meetings on Saturdays at 10 a.m. in the Campus Center. The only requirement for membership is the desire to stop eating. There are no dues or fees. Donations are strictly voluntary. For more info, call (617) 641–2303.

Astronomy — The Amherst Area Amateur Astronomers Association will hold free public planetarium shows at 4 p.m. every Saturday in February at Amherst College Bassett Planetarium. Appropriate for all ages. Dates: Feb. 1, 8, 15, 22. For information, call Tom Whitney at 256-6234.

Community — The Hampshire County Women, Infant and Children (WIC) Program has opened a new office serving the greater Amherst area, on 150 Fearing St., Amherst. Hampshire County WIC is a supplemental food and nutrition program serving eligible pregnant, breastfeeding and postpartum women and their infants and children under the age of five. For more information, call (413)584–3591.

Dance — Cajun Dancing and Appalachian clogging beginner lessons will be offered on Sunday evenings from 6– 7 p.m. at 132 Elm St., Westfield. Partners are not needed and all ages are welcome. No prior dance experience is necessary. Classes are instructed by Maple Run, and non- profit dance group that performs at fairs and community functions. For more information, contact Jo Sarnelli at (413) 746–9067.

Film — The interdepartmental program in film studies is offering its fourth annual Multicultural Film Festival: "Emigres, Exiles and Sojourners in Contemporary Cinema" this spring. Screenings and discussions with directors and faculty will be held on Wednesday evenings, 231 Herter Hall at UMass and Stirn Auditorium at Amherst College, at 7 p.m. The first event will be When Mother Comes Home for Chrismas, a documentary by Nilita Vachani (Sri Lanka/Greece, 1995) on Feb. 25. For a full scedule, watch for brochures and posters at the beginning of February, or check out our webpage: www.umass.edu/film.

Film studies — interested in earning a certificate in film studies? Take 18 credits in film and video courses and receive a film studies certificate (equivalent to a minor). Sign up at the beginning of the spring semester in the interdepartmental program in film studies office, 101 South College. Call 545–3659 or see webpage: www.umass.edu/film for more information.

Language — Casa Latina, the Center for Community Education and Culture, will conduct an 8–week Functional Spanish course, beginning February 18 at 7 p.m. in Northampton. Tuition is $260. Students will be divided into three small groups: beginners, intermediate and advanced. Classes will be taught by experienced language instructors who are also native Spanish speakers. For more information, contact Janet Gonzalez at 586–1569.

Outdoor program — Women Exploring the Outdoors will be conducting a series of outdoor adventure programs for women who are survivors of abuse. The focus of these day trips is to provide a comfortable environment within which women can increase their self–confidence, establish safe boundaries and experience their strength in the company of other survivors. All ages, abilities and levels of experience are welcome. Programs scheduled are: Snowshoeing on Sunday, Jan. 26, 8:30 a.m.–4:30 p.m., cost $25; A Day Hike in the Pioneer Valley on Sunday, April 13, 8:30 a.m.–4:30 p.m., cost $20; and Low and High Ropes Course on Sunday, May 4, 8:30 a.m.–4:30 p.m., cost $50. The cost for all three programs is $85. For more information, contact Adventures Unlimited at (413) 774–3131 x293.

CHRIS CHANEY/COLLEGIAN

Students on the move...

Many UMass students move quickly to their next class during yesterday's below freezing temperatures.

racism

continued from page 1

ing civil rights statutes.

Depending on the motive, the sender might also face federal penalties for tampering with interstate commerce.

Some details about the deliveries come from one of the recipients, Angela Jackson, an art distributor with a business in Chicago called Afro-Centric Arts of Michigan Avenue.

She lives and works in St. Paul while attending law school. She is not related to the congressman and, according to St. Paul police, is not a suspect in the investigation.

On Dec. 4, Ms. Jackson, 27, received three brown padded bags with prints and negatives she had ordered from the African-American artist Bayo.

The stapled bags had been opened and the contents smeared with a substance she believes was feces. The bags were then taped shut.

On the backs of two bags, over the artist's inscription "Kwanzaa gift," someone had scrawled "nigers day" in red felt pen.

Ms. Jackson reported the delivery to police and to UPS in Chicago. Word apparently never reached UPS headquarters because of the company's system of regional hubs, Sternad said.

Ms. Jackson said she'd insured the artwork through UPS for $150,000, but her claim was denied. She plans to sue UPS for $500,000, for damages and emotional distress.

WALKER'S GRILL
41 BOLTWOOD WALK • AMHERST
Munchie Specials - Every Week!
Mondays - after 10 — 20¢ Mozz. Sticks
Tuesdays - after 10 — 15¢ Wings
Wednesdays - after 10 — $1 Personal Nachos
Thursdays - after 10 — $1 Hamburger Tacos
Friday - after 10 — $1 Spicy Fries
Drink Specials Through Feb. 28
Blue Kamikaze Shots - $2.25
70oz Bud Light Pitchers - $5.75
We Accept All Major Credit Cards!
Member O.C.M.P. - Call Delivery Express for Takeout
Open 7 days/week 11:30 am - 1am
Full menu all day/all night
253-4040

UNIVERSITY STORE'S UMASS AMHERST
The Textbook Annex will be open
EXTRA HOURS
for your Shopping Convenience
Tuesday January 28 9AM - 8PM
Wednesday January 29 9AM - 8PM
Thursday January 30 9AM - 8PM
Friday January 31 9AM - 6PM
Saturday February 1 11AM - 4PM
Monday-Friday February 3-7 9AM-6PM

Campus Activities at the University of Massachusetts presents
"Something Every Friday"

A Touch of Reality
This three-person group uses poetry to express important issues like AIDs; gang violence; and day-to-day reality. This powerful trio has opened for the Fugees, the Lost Boys, and the Last Poets.
For more information check our website: http://www.umass.edu/campact/events/sef.htm This series is made possible by a grant from UMASS Auxiliary Services, the Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs, and the Daily Collegian.
Bluewall Cafe
February 7, 1997
8:00pm
Free

Academics and More !!!
UMass Division of Continuing Education
For a free course catalog, call 413-545-0107 or e-mail contined@admin.umass.edu
Explore our web site and see how we can help you - http://www.umass.edu/contined/
Division of Continuing Education
University of Massachusetts Amherst
providing access to adult, nontraditional education for over 25 years
Tons of credit undergrad courses — in the evening!
Nearly 100 noncredit workshops — affordable, fun, practical, including
- Bartending,
- GMAT, GRE, LSAT, & MCAT Preparation,
- Magical Arts,
- Photography,
- ESL,
- EMT Training,
- Marketing,
and CHOCOLATE !

Campus Perspectives

Compiled by Mark McGrath • Photos by Thang Vo

What's your opinion on the legalization of marijuana for medicinal use?

"I'm absolutely in favor. Doctors routinely prescribe substances which produce much more harmful side effects."

John Lanzerotta
senior, environmental science
Medford

"I think it would be a good idea if they did do it, because it doesn't have as many bad effects as cigarettes and alcohol."

Nina Copeland
freshman, early childhood education
Hartford, Conn.

"I guess for medicinal purposes, but only for medicinal purposes. For it to be legalized in general, I totally disagree."

Jennifer Wakem
junior, sports management
Scarborough, Maine

"I think if it's going to help someone... and if it's prescribed professionally, and has been proven to help, I don't see any reason why it wouldn't be legitimate."

R.J. Merlino
junior, mechanical engineering
Vernon, Conn.

"I'd think it shouldn't but then I guess it depends on what they're using it for. It's good if it can help people and it's under control."

Lindsay DeCecco
freshman, psychology
Methuen

"Well, I don't see what all the fuss is about, because there are other drugs out there with similar or even worse side effects that doctors prescribe every day."

Nathan Peyton
sophomore, political science
Springfield

"I think it would be a good idea. If used right, marijuana could help the people who need the drug."

Heidi Galonek
junior, biochemistry
Charlton

Journal endorses medical use of marijuana

By Daniel Q. Haney
Associated Press

BOSTON — The New England Journal of Medicine has come out in favor of allowing doctors to prescribe marijuana for medical purposes, calling the threat of government sanctions "misguided, heavy-handed and inhumane."

"Whatever their reasons, federal officials are out of step with the public," Dr. Jerome P. Kassirer, the journal's editor, wrote in an editorial in yesterday's issue. The journal is one of the world's most prestigious medical publications.

After voters in Arizona and California passed propositions letting doctors prescribe pot for medical uses, Attorney General Janet Reno said doctors who do this could lose their prescription-writing privileges, be excluded from Medicare and Medicaid and even be prosecuted.

Some doctors believe marijuana can relieve internal eye pressure in glaucoma, control nausea in cancer patients on chemotherapy and combat the severe weight loss seen in AIDS patients. However, administration officials note that such uses of marijuana have not been proved.

Kassirer said marijuana is safer than some drugs used legally for some of the same conditions, such as morphine.

Furthermore, he said experiments to prove marijuana's value would be hard to do because of the difficulty of measuring nausea and other such sensations.

"What really counts for a therapy with this kind of safety margin is whether a seriously ill patient feels relief as a result of the intervention, not whether a controlled trial 'proves' its efficacy," Kassirer wrote.

In a written response, retired Army Gen. Barry McCaffrey, director of the Office of National Drug Policy, said marijuana might someday be approved for specific medical purposes.

"But up to this point, smoke is not a medicine," McCaffrey said. "Other treatments have been deemed safer and more effective than a psychoactive burning carcinogen self-induced through one's throat."

Doc quits to protest anti-pot lecturer

By Jon Marcus
Associated Press

CAMBRIDGE — A psychiatrist who supports the medical use of marijuana has resigned from a Harvard University-affiliated center for addiction to protest the selection of President Clinton's drug adviser to deliver a lecture.

Dr. Lester Grinspoon, editor of the Harvard Mental Health Letter and author of Marijuana: The Forbidden Medicine, says he doesn't begrudge retired Army Gen. Barry McCaffrey the right to speak against the use of marijuana. He objects to the White House drug policy office director's threats that doctors who prescribe it may be prosecuted.

"The problem is not controversy," Grinspoon said yesterday. "The problem is, you're giving the award to a man who has no scholarly accomplishments and is doing harm by insisting that patients who need this medicine desperately should be subjected to confiscation and arrest."

McCaffrey is one of two people invited to deliver this year's Norman E. Zinberg Memorial Lecture on March 7 as part of a conference at the Harvard Medical School. His official topic is effective treatment for addiction. A second lecture will be given the next day by former U.S. Sen. George McGovern, who has written about his daughter's alcoholism. McGovern is to speak about what happens when treatment fails.

"When we have a difference of opinion on matters of grave importance, we have to talk about them and come to a resolution," said Dr. Howard Shaffer, a Harvard psychologist and head of the university's Division on Addictions, who chaired the selection committee. "I don't think it's useful to silence voices under these circumstances."

He said there will be a question-and-answer period that will enable critics of the general to ask about his stance on marijuana. Given the broad attention to the issue, Shaffer said, "I can't imagine someone wouldn't."

The university is not endorsing any position by inviting McCaffrey to the campus, he said. Grinspoon himself spoke at the conference two years ago about the medical use of marijuana, "so it is not as if we have not addressed this," Shaffer said. "What we are saying is that Gen. McCaffrey is an important person in the contemporary public policy domain, and we have an opportunity to talk with him and discuss these issues in a civilized manner," he said.

In protest of McCaffrey's lecture, Grinspoon has resigned from his affiliation with the Norman E. Zinberg Center for Addiction Studies at Cambridge Hospital, which Shaffer formerly directed. He still holds his positions on the Harvard faculty, with the Harvard-affiliated Massachusetts Mental Health Center and as editor of the Harvard Mental Health Letter.

"The only thing I could do was resign to make it clear that I have no part in this decision," Grinspoon said.

Collegian news...
take us now or lose us forever.

POSITIONS AVAILABLE

Drivers Wanted
Collegian
Morning Paper Delivery
Must Be Available Between
8:00am to 11:00am
Monday - Friday
...ested, call ALYCIA HINES
@ 545-3500
...up by the Collegian
...mpus Center Basement

7pm, Jan 31st at the
MULLINS CENTER
University of Massachusetts Amherst
Division 1 Hockey East
UMass Hockey
VS
MERRIMACK Hockey
Pick up your tickets at:
☞ Curry Hicks Cage
☞ 'TIX' in the Student Union
☞ Hockey Table in the Campus Center
☞ At the Game
Be a Part of the Action

...ge Pizza

- Come and See the NEW College Pizza
- Featuring new larger '18 Pizzas
- New Larger '16 Subs made with French Bread baked daily
- Open for lunch everyday.
- Your satisfaction is guaranteed - Your money back on food replacement if you are not fully satisfied.
- We promise fast delivery to our delivery areas in Amherst & Hadley.
- Come see 99.3 WHMP broadcast live from 2-4 pm Feb. 2 - Plenty of FREE GIVEAWAYS
150 Fearing St. Amherst
549-6098 or 549-6073
...We us... College Pizza – Across from Southwest
...goods & we're proud of our product.

DAILY COLLEGIAN

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592
http://www.umass.edu/rso/colegian

Jacob W. Michaels Editor-in-Chief Chris Taylor Conner Managing Editor
Alycia Hines Business Manager Josh Sylvester Production Manager Craig J. Brody Advertising Manager
David Voldan Advertising Production Manager Lisa Chiu Senior Diversity Editor

Jeremy Brothers Arts & Living Editor
Humphrey brown III Black Affairs Editor
Lisa Chiu Developing Nations Editor
Mike Burke Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jamie Sinsheimer Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sarah Kimmel Jewish Affairs Editor
Raghuram Vadarevu Multicultural Affairs Co-Editor
Christine Soh Multicultural Affairs Co-Editor
Laura Stock News Editor
Thang Vo Photography Editor
Casey Kane Sports Co-Editor
Chris Stamm Sports Co-Editor
Michelle Hillman Women's Issues Editor
Marc Dionne Editorial Production Manager
Position Vacant Systems Manager
Eric R. Remillard IV Finance Manager
Position Vacant Circulation Manager
Feisal Ahmad Marketing Manager
Jaclyn E. Alberti Classifieds Manager
Lyle A. Henry Operations Manager
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Thomas F. Sweeney, Jr. Graphics Advisor/Instructor
David Quint Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

The scene is tired

Jamie Sinsheimer

For the past two-and-a-half years, I have been on a constant journey out of my own closet.

Throughout my last year of high school and my first year of college, I have had to deal with coming to terms with my own sexuality. I came to this area with the knowledge of Northampton in my heart and the thought of sexual freedom in my mind.

Over the past year though, I have experienced a strange type of discrimination, within my own community. This includes attending gay pride day in Northampton last spring semester and being stared at as if I were some kind of alien, and walking down the street at home and being called a dyke or some other fun name.

I went home for break to New York City, which many claim to be one of the most diverse and exciting cities in the world. After living there my whole life, all it really has going for it is a kick-ass nightlife and a whole mess of people who are willing to discriminate against you any chance they get. Well, I experienced a good deal of both over the past six weeks and all I can really say is that it was tiring and stressful.

Well, being gay or lesbian or bisexual or transgender or whatever else you may be, you know that it is hard to find people who are like you. That holds true everywhere. There are tons of gay folk in New York, I even did an inexact count on one of my slow days at home, though I forgot the number I came up with.

There are all these people who I can identify with and not one who is anything like me (except my girlfriend and even then, we have problems!). As frequently as I went out and attended gay sponsored clubs and events, I just wanted to curl up on my couch and watch television or do something completely brainless.

The scene is tired. The drag queens are still fun and exciting, as always, but the people are stuck-up, or totally screwed up on drugs, or too out there to do anything but stand around and talk about everyone else. I used to completely appreciate going out and having fun. Now it's hard because if I go to a so-called "straight" club, I have an awful time and if I go to a gay club people look at me funny.

In a big city the belief usually tends to run that everyone can fit in and be happy because of the diversity. I don't truly believe that anymore. On several occasions I have been called a "dyke" or other such vulgarities over the course of my time spent there. One recent enactment was quite interesting, it happened about three weeks ago.

My girlfriend and I were walking on Waverly Place in the Village and we were returning to our car after seeing the movie Scream. Our arms were entwined around each other's bodies, clearly stating "YES, in fact, we are LESBIANS."

Anyway, we're walking and we hear this group of boys (I call them boys because that's what that were) screaming: "Ohhh, look at the lesbians " and "Yo, are they lesbians?" and my favorite "That's nasty." It' funny, when you live in such a big place that you don't really think about the existing prejudice that has been there for years.

I guess it's everywhere. Up here at school, I get discriminated against by the "dykes" who have short hair because I look too much like a girl. Either way I can't ever win. I'll always either be too much of a lesbian or not lesbian enough.

You know though, it really is okay. I assume that these other people are not secure enough in their own sexuality or some other aspect of their psycho personalities — hence they feel threatened by those who look or act different; such as me and plenty of other people that I know.

For those of you who were offended by any part of this column, well, I'm sorry, someone is always getting offended at some place and time. We live in an offensive world which grabs us in at the moment of our birth and lets feel the harshness of our surroundings from day one. We get through it though, eventually everyone does.

I've learned to take the hate and the sexism and the homophobia and deal with it. If I didn't I would never leave my house. Unfortunately, at the rate things are going I almost don't want to.

Jamie Sinsheimer is a Collegian columnist.

A class struggle

Chris Stamm

Picture it. You're a junior with all of your general education and introductory requirements out of the way. With a solid G.P.A. under your belt, you figure your final semesters will be filled with upper-level electives in your major. The light at the end of the tunnel begins to shine on your face, and at first glance, the view is good.

Until the first two days of add/drop, when you find yourself with only two classes, the latest victim of "add drop evolution" — survival of the luckiest.

This week, I've been hearing the voice of that charming, computer generated add/drop woman in my sleep. It seems as though trying to add a course through the computer is about as easy as dialing Ticketmaster for Superbowl tickets.

Like many students, I looked at my pale blue add/drop slip to find a pair of classes stamped with the fateful O word: oversubscribed.

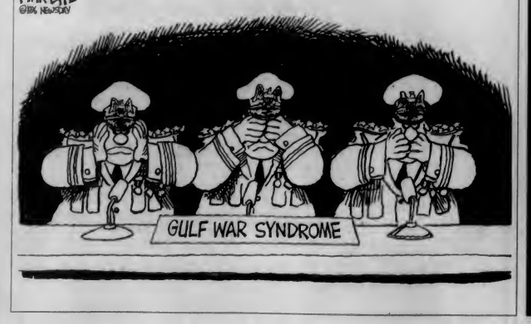
After unsuccessfully wrestling with the computer, I figured I could attend a few classes and persuade the professor to let me in. Unfortunately, in each of the three classes I attended, 12 to 20 people had the same thing in mind. Some professors offerred sympathy and waiting lists, others sternly told the flock of vagrant students they should try another class because they just did not have the room.

Understandably, if you are an underclassman "working your way down the winding path of general education classes, you are bound to find the larger classes that any undergraduate can take oversubscribed: Psychology 100, Astronomy 100, Philosophy 100 etc. However, once you have been admitted into your major and have taken the necessary prerequisite classes, there is no reason why you should be shut out of upper level electives

The frustrating thing was, these were not one of a dozen gen eds that could be replaced with any other gen ed. These were upper level electives, classes in which we are supposed to be exploring areas of interest within our major. At this point in the game, upper level classes should be open to anyone in the major. The weeding out process should be done and the distribution of courses offered should correspond to the number of students in the department eligible to those classes. How do so many students get left out in the cold?

One prospective professor I came across (and minutes later handed me my walking papers and wished me well) thought it had something to do with the number of faculty alloted to each department. In his off-the-cuff analysis, he described that during his tenure the number of professors in his department had been cut considerably while the number of students in the department had stayed the same or increased.

His solution?



If enough students were left out in the cold and became angry enough, they would write to their representatives and senators, soliciting money for higher education. Given how rapidly the wheels of justice spin, I would probably get into my class some time before I finished my doctoral thesis, but I wouldn't count on it. Besides, given Massachusetts' track record of funding higher education ("This is not California, this is not Virginia. This is Massachusetts." — ring any bells?) the end result would probably be a 50 percent hike in tuition.

Last year, we heard how UMass President Bulger raised the minimum SAT scores for incoming freshmen and wanted to increase the caliber of students on campus. How can our school, which is constantly competing with the state's top-notch private schools, lure motivated students when they can not even take the classes they want?

If it is a matter of drawing proper funding from the state, then students, faculty and administration should collaborate on ways to turn things around. If there is such a collaboration, it needs to be more vocal.

Until then, I'll just have to settle for underwater basket weaving this semester.

Chris Stamm is a Collegian columnist.

Opinion/Editorial

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

Megaplex equals mega bucks

Matthew Wurtzel

The Superbowl is over, and now Bill Parcells, the Patriot's coach, and Bob Kraft, the team's owner, are embroiled in a dispute over Parcells' contract. Unfortunately, this petty story overshadows the more important debate centered around a proposed Megaplex in Boston which would serve as both a stadium and convention center.

The Megaplex would bring billions of dollars to Boston-businesses, hence millions of new tax revenue for the state. The most conservative estimates suggest that a new convention center alone would boost Boston's economy. The Boston Globe on Jan. 29 predicted spending to increase by $436 million while creating 6,800 new jobs.

If the Globe's prediction is accurate, the increase in spending will generate almost $22 million in new revenue through the state's 5 percent sales tax. However, the process does not end with the initial $436 million because in macroeconomics, there is a multiplier effect. The principle basically suggests that for every new dollar infused into the economy, people will spend a fraction of each new dollar. Which therefore causes a snowball effect in spending. The fraction is the marginal propensity to consume.

This process work on many levels from janitors to restaurant owners. The janitor has a new job with an income, while the owner of a nearby restaurant can expect his establishment to become more profitable.

The above figures are solely the expected outcome of building the 600,000 square foot convention center. First the state must spend about $650 million to build the facility. Considering the conservative estimates, the center would pay for itself and start turning a profit in the second year of operation. The building of the new convention center would bring short term economic benefits because it would employ thousands of construction workers to build it.

Couple this new convention center with a $175 million dollar new stadium for the Patriots, and not only would Boston receive an economic windfall but the entire state as well. According to the Globe, the proposed 70,000 seat stadium plan will be one of a few in the nation that solely depends upon private financing. While other major metropolitan areas watch their teams head to the suburbs, or leave the area all together, like Los Angeles and Cleveland, New England's NFL franchise would leave the suburbs for the city that is the crown jewel of the region.

The current plan not only calls for the development of a stadium, but the NFL has also proposed to build a $15 million NFL pavilion that they expect will attract over a million tourists a year. The pavilion would be one of only three in the nation.

The construction of both the stadium and pavilion would bring 4,000 new construction jobs paying an average annual income of $38,000. After completion the stadium and pavilion will hire over 1,600 permanent workers, according to the Globe.

Think about the potential outcome that both the stadium and convention center would bring to the state. The proposed stadium coupled with the Fleet Center and neighboring college facilities in and around Boston makes the city a prime candidate for a future Summer Olympics. The convention center might attract trade shows like COMDEX and the Summer Consumer Electronics Show. Couple the growth of mutual funds — most major mutual fund firms are located in Boston — and the real development of Boston, and the city can again renew its age old competition with New York.

A few readers are probably thinking, "What does this have to do with me?" It is simple. A professor once told me that 90 percent of University of Massachusetts graduates remain in the state. Since Boston remains the economic life blood of the state, and arguably New England, you will probably work in or around the city upon graduation. This development and its multiplier effect will ultimately lead to jobs in unrelated areas — possibly in your potential career choice.

If you couple the economic growth that a convention center brings Boston with a new stadium for the Patriots, then the money will roll in.

Matthew Wurtzel is a Collegian columnist.

Letters to the Editor

What's this? Good news!

To the editor:

Wednesday's edition of the Collegian was the best that I have ever read. Mike Burke should write all of your concert reviews; in his article about the Smashing Pumpkins, he nailed every point that I would have made if I wrote it. Secondly, Luke Meredith's editorial was one of the funniest things I have ever read. Also, I am at a loss for words on how I can describe Mark McGrath's article on the state of our government. I'm glad somebody besides me cares what happens when Philip Morris donates $2.5 million to politicians. Lastly, the three columns on UMass basketball were excellent, and it was appropriate to have additional stories on UMass's guard play and McGonigle Hall. I usually think of writing a letter to the editor when I have a complaint; this time, I'm happy to say, "It's all good." Keep up the good work, guys.

Geoffery Harm
MacKimmie

From gopher to insubordinate

To the Editor:

This letter to the public is in defense of countless hard working students in this area who are not only the life blood of the local economy, but whose life long attitudes and characters are so enormously influenced during their years in our midst.

Of primary subjectiveness here, is a fifth year senior at UMass. Son of a single parent, it has been necessary for him to work all during his college years. He was fortunate during his freshman year to obtain employment at that gracious institution, the Hotel Northampton. He began as a "gopher," lugging buckets of ice and cases of beer for established bartenders — working nights and weekends when his roommates were partying, studying or otherwise enjoying their new found freedom of college life away from home.

As time passed, he proved his worth, always appearing clean and well groomed, repeatedly accepting short notice assignments to substitute for others. Eventually he became a "functions bartender." He took his job seriously. This writer has in fact been present as a hotel guest when this young man received unsolicited compliments from guests as to his helpful and pleasant demeanor.

Holiday season kept everyone busy at the Northampton. Our young man's excitement grew with anticipation of the impending return of his young lady so that they could attend the employees' holiday party on Jan. 6. Prior to that date, a memo circulated from the General Manager, Mansour Ghalibaf decreed that the attendance of a previous employee must have his sanction. Thinking it sufficient, the young fellow told his supervisor that of course his special gal was coming! indeed, whomever else would he rather attend with? She too was looking forward to seeing her former co- workers.

Recently, without warning, and with one semester left to execute and finance, he has been impersonally terminated from his job for what seems (to this adult with 40 years of work in a service profession) a minor infraction, if not just a communication misunderstanding.

It goes like this: the young man's fiancee, one semester ahead of him was also employed by the hotel during her college years. Responsible and capable, she earned the position of night manager, admirable for one so young and carrying a full course load. Last fall, upon completion of her studies she resigned her position and returned home to New York.

Party time! Mr. Ghalibaf circulated, stopping at the bar to cordially greet the young couple. Imagine then, the shock, dismay and sense of desperation when 10 days later the lad was told by his same immediate superior that Mr. Ghalibaf had fired him. Impersonally, without conference or query he was let go on grounds of INSUBORDINATION! Not for skimming profits; not for leaving his shift with a bottle of hotel booze up his sleeve; not for supplying free drinks to friends. Rather for taking his ladylove to the party without the express personal approval of his boss.

Kudos here to this writer's employer who hosts an annual party at which all employees, including those that have worked during that year and terminated amicably are welcomed with their spouse, significant other, or guest of choice. For he's a jolly good fellow!

Something is very unfair here. Does Mr. Ghalibaf have a burr in his britches or what? Why no discussion with the young man as to his "noncompliance?" Why the cordial greeting at the party? Why not call him aside and make the assertion. Perhaps even suggest that the couple leave, if the guest was not welcome.

Indeed, why would she not be welcome? Is this some sort of retaliation either politically or racially motivated? Where does this student turn now for employment, carrying the label of insubordinate like some infidel?

Perhaps Mr. Ghalibaf does not feel that the respect or admiration of his youthful charges is of very much value. How very wrong of him. For anyone of any age in a managerial capacity, the respect of underlings is fundamental to harmonious and efficient productivity. The fact that many of the hotel's employees are young adults presents to Mansour Ghalibaf an opportunity unavailable to many CEO's: a chance to meld, mold, instill and influence the attitudes and actions of those who will care for and manage our world in the years just ahead.

M. Dexter Rebello
Fairhaven

Are you the next Dave Barry? Come write for the Ed/Op page. Attend Monday night's meeting for new and returning writers at 7 p.m. in the Collegian newsroom. Please bring a writing sample. Just think about it — over 17,000 people may read your next article. Who needs Dave Barry anyway?

Arts & Living

A capella at UMass

By Seema Gangatirkar
Collegian Staff

The Fine Arts Center resumes its 1996–97 season tonight when an a capella quintet takes the stage at the Concert Hall. The Real Group hails from Sweden and their Amherst performance will kick of their first major North American tour. The concert begins at 8 p.m.

A cappella music uses the voice as the main instrument, rather than traditional band instruments. Not only does The Real Group sing, but it also scats and imitates the instruments. The quintet has the ability to sound like a bashed choir, finger-snapping swingers, a syncopated calliope or soulful gospel-blues singers.

The Real Group demonstrates versatility in their repertoire. From jazz to rock, the Real Group covers a large spectrum of music, including some Latin American tunes. Imitating ABBA and the Count Basie Orchestra are among their talents.

Capturing the swing rhythms of jazz, the melancholy blues and elements of the '40s and '50s pop era are everyday expressions of American pop music. The Real Group celebrates American pop music in a way that few American a cappella groups would. They offer an interpretation of music that gives a cohesive ensemble sound, with a deeper understanding of rhythm and phrasing.

Formed in 1984, The Real Group released their first recording, The Real Group, in 1987. Two years later, Nothing but the Real Group followed. In 1991, the group released Voices, followed by 1994's Vartor Far Man inter Bara Vara Som Man Ar. Last year, the group released Live in Stockholm in the United States and Canada.

In 1995, the A Cappella Society of America recognized the Real Group for Best jazz song for Flight of Foobirds and also for Best contemporary cover, Dancing Queen.

Tickets for the Real Group are $27, $23 and $15.

COURTESY FINE ARTS CENTER

The blending of a capella voices of the Real Group hits the Concert Hall tonight.

Tickets are $10 for children 17 and under and $5 for Five College students. Tickets are available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office or by calling at 545–2511 or (800) 999-UMAS.

Bharatanatyam classical Indian dance graces SUB

By Jeremy Brothers
Collegian Staff

This weekend the Student Union will be graced with a performance of Bharatanatyam by Aparna Sindhoor. Bharatanatyam is a form of classical Indian dance. Sindhoor comes from Mysore, the cultural capital of Karnataka, India where she studied under Padmabhushan Dr. K. Venkatalakshamma, once the court dancer of Mysore and recipient of awards from both the national government of India and from the state of Karnataka.

The Bharatanatyam is a form of dance that emphasizes Abhinaya (facial expressions,) and Jathis (pure dance composition). The first part of the evening will feature traditional Bharatanatyam items like Poorva Ranga Vidhi, Jatiswaram, Varna Daru and Tillana. The second part will feature an experimental dance based on Kannada short story called "Ondu Ghatane Mattu Anantara" (The Incident and After) by Anupama Niranjana. Sindhoor will dance to music and spoken text.

Sindhoor began her formal dance career when she was nine. At the age of 11, she was spotted by Venkatalakshamma with whom she trained for 14 years. Since then, she has performed at the Dashara festival in Mysore and the Lakshadeepa festival in Dharmastala in addition to conceiving and choreographing and performing 11 dance features which have been produced by the Bangalore Television. More interestingly, the Bharatanatyam goes beyond exhibiting the traditions of an ancient culture — It shows how the traditional dance form can be used to tell contemporary stories.

The Bharatanatyam Dance Concert will be held at 7:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. It is a free event.

Altman snub shows Oscar's politics

By Lynn Elber
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — If Robert Altman's Kansas City receives any Academy Award nominations, the director won't have Fine Line Features to thank.

The distributor of Altman's jazz-soaked film set in the Missouri city of the 1930s declined to mount an Oscar campaign for the film or its actors, including the critically praised Harry Belafonte. While industry trade papers are thick with ads touting such unlikely Oscar contenders as the Sylvester Stallone flop Daylight, academy voters won't have their memories jogged by Kansas City hype.

Nor will they find Fine Line videocassettes of the film in mailboxes crowded with tapes from other Oscar hopefuls: Altman footed the $18,000 bill to send the movie to some in the academy, including the performing branch.

The company's snub has irritated Altman and admirers of his film — and helps illuminate who gets such support, who doesn't, and just how much it counts in the quest for Oscar gold. (The ballot deadline is Friday, Jan. 31; nominations are announced Feb. 11 for the March 24 awards.)

"I just think it's such disrespect to Harry Belafonte I can hardly stand it," said Altman, speaking by phone from the Savannah, Ga., set of his latest movie, John Grisham's The Gingerbread Man.

"It's the treatment. It's the disrespect for the artists that I find kind of sickening," said Altman, whose films include the Oscar-winning M-A-S-H (1970) and Oscar-nominated The Player (1992).

Altman acknowledges that Kansas City — at once a tribute to his hometown's jazz-era scene and a hard-eyed take on American class, race and politics — performed poorly at last summer's box office.

But the film received positive notices from top critics such as Andrew Sarris, who called it one of the best movies of the year in The New York Observer.

Belafonte was repeatedly singled out for his work as an eloquent, vicious gangster with the colorful name of Seldom Seen. In December, he was named best supporting actor by the New York Film Critics Circle.

Although Fine Line declined to comment officially, a company executive called its action sensible for a small film saddled with a money loser like Kansas City.

The French-financed film, which has grossed $1.3 million, probably cost Fine Line between $5 million and $5 million for North American rights, another source familiar with the project said. Big studios routinely sink hundreds of thousands of dollars into Oscar campaigns, even if chances for a nod are slim. They're not delusional: The goal may be simply to retain the goodwill of a filmmaker or star.

If a film does hit big at the Academy Awards, box office grosses can increase substantially.

Smaller companies like Fine Line say they must weigh a film's financial performance and its chances for a major Oscar in deciding whether to launch a costly campaign.

That's true even when the director is Altman and company and artist have a track record (with The Player and Short Cuts.

"It's important that this is a relationship business, but it's also important that actors, directors and producers see companies act responsibly," the Fine Line executive said.

So, wonders New York-based film critic Armond White, how does Fine Line justify its Oscar campaigns for poor box-office performers Mother Night and The Grass Harp?

"Here you have Robert Altman, one of the great uncontested geniuses of American cinema, and Fine Line seems to have zero respect for his efforts," White said. "That really mystifies me."

(The Grass Harp, starring Walter Matthau and directed by his son Charles, had a Fine Line contract requiring an Oscar campaign.)

Ultimately, just how much do Oscar campaigns count? A great deal, in some cases.

It worked for Miramax's The Postman, a heavily promoted Italian film that became a best-picture nominee last year. And consider Shine, about the real-life emotional breakdown and recovery of piano prodigy David Helfgott.

It has no stars, Helfgott is considerably less than a household name, and it's not a traditional film. But it also has a heavyweight Fine Line campaign behind it, and is a surefire Oscar contender.

There are examples of lobbying's limitations, of course. With 1994's Quiz Show, Disney went all out for stars Rob Morrow, Ralph Fiennes and John Turturro, but not Paul Scofield.

Yet it was the veteran British actor who was nominated. For the movie Georgia, Marc Winningham received a more tempered campaign than the film's star, Jennifer Jason Leigh — but it was Winningham who got a nomination last year.

ONLINE!
www.umass.edu/rso/colegian

DESIGN INVENT CREATE

Use your EDUCATION in ways you never thought possible. DESIGN a new software program. MARKET the next remote access product. CREATE products that fit in the palm of your hand. U.S. Robotics gives entry-level sales professionals MEANINGFUL experience. (You may be new, but your VALUABLE contributions are encouraged, and expected.)

U.S. Robotics is the LEADER in information ACCESS. We make PRODUCTS that connect people with INFORMATION — anytime, anywhere. We hire SALES PEOPLE — with DEGREES in marketing, business, sciences and liberal arts.

Now that you know more about US, we'd like to know more about YOU.

Come see us at the
Career Fair
February 12

If you are unable to stop by, send your resume to: U.S. Robotics, College Relations, 7770 N. Frontage Rd., Skokie, IL 60077, or e-mail: resumes@usr.com We are an equal OPPORTUNITY employer m/f/d/v.

There are NO limits.

U.S.Robotics
The Intelligent Choice in Information Access
HTTP://WWW.USR.COM

BayBank
X 24
5412 3128 4567 8111
2570 10-98 K MasterCard
JANE WHALEN

Use it to buy a new CD.

(No, not a Certificate of Deposit. Duh.)

The Student Value Package™ gives you the freedom to get whichever kind of CD you're into. It comes with the BayBank Card with X-Press Check™ so you can make ATM withdrawals all over the place, and you can use it as a plastic check wherever MasterCard® is accepted.* Like at Strawberries, where you can get big discounts on cool stuff just for showing your BayBank Card and your student I.D. For more information about the Student Value Package or to open an account, call 1-800-BAY-FAST® or stop by any branch.

SIGN UP NOW AND YOUR FIRST ORDER OF CHECKS COMES FREE WITH YOUR STUDENT VALUE PACKAGE.

Hey, life's right outside your door. Don't miss any of it.℠

Big Discounts On Cool Stuff.

BayBank®
A BankBoston Company
Member FDIC

Visit our Web site at www.BayBank.com * X-Press Check only available to qualified customers.  For a limited time only.  Check offer good only through Feb. 28, 1997.

Xavier

continued from page 10

weekend's win over the Owls, sophomore guard Charlton Clarke did not miss a single shot, going 5-for-5 from the floor, 3-for-3 from 3-point range, and 4-for-4 from the line. Combine this with solid 20 and 28 point totals for Edgar Padilla and Carmelo Travieso respectively, and UMass is a force to be reckoned with.

However, even when the guards are not shooting the lights out, like in last night's win over the Colonials, the Minutemen have shown that they have gelled since their early, struggling days. With center Lari Ketner and power forward Tyrone Weeks dominating in the paint, Flint has developed a winning combination.

UMass has also found strength off the bench, most notably in junior Inus Norville. While Norville has not been a major scoring threat for the Minutemen, his defensive hustle and consistent rebounding has proven valuable along the stretch. Norville has filled in the gaps well, especially when Weeks and Ketner are in foul trouble.

Will a win over Xavier propel UMass back into the top 25? No one can be sure, but with its success as of late, a win over the Musketeers could be just the thing to put them over the hump.

Material from WHMP FM was used in this article.

women

continued from page 10

for fifth in the A-10. Van Huisen has been most effective behind the three point arc. She leads the conference in three point percentage at .526, .070 points ahead of the next closest competitor.

One of the pleasant surprises in the last few weeks for Coach O'Brien's squad has been the play of Yolanda Rayside. Rayside, a sophomore from New York City, has stepped it up as of late, and now ranks first on the team with 6.8 rebounds a game, and ninth in the conference. Senior point guard Sabriya Mitchell has also been playing well lately, contributing seven points a game for the Minutewomen.

The Minutewomen can console themselves with the fact that they're not playing George Washington on the road. The Colonials have won 27 straight games at the Smith Center, the third longest streak in the nation. GW is 4-4 on the road this season.

hockey

continued from page 10

weekend.

"The biggest difference is going to be the speed," Mallen said. "Merrimack doesn't have the same amount of speed, or the depth in their roster, that UNH has. UNH is loaded with speed and talent up front, so we'll have to prepare for one style of game one night and a more wide-open style of game the next night."

Minutemen Notes: Defenseman Tom O'Connor will miss another weekend of action, still feeling the residual effects of a leg injury suffered in the opening period of UMass' Jan. 18 game at Northeastern. Expect to see Framingham's Jason Hurley on the blue line this weekend and the possible return of O'Connor a week from tonight against Boston University.

Men on track to continue after perfect intersession

By Steven Grant
Collegian Staff

While many students were lounging around the house waiting for school to resume, the Massachusetts men's indoor track and field team began what it hopes will be another successful season.

The Minutemen (7-0) placed third in the New England Challenge Cup Finals on Jan. 17, after finishing first out of four teams in the Trials one week earlier. This past Saturday, they downed Central Connecticut, Hartford, Holy Cross and UNH in a five-way meet at New Hampshire.

"This team's strength is that we're very solid," UMass coach Ken O'Brien said. "You have to be a very solid team if you're going to beat us. You need a lot of good athletes in each event, as we have.

"I feel we have two or three great athletes in each event. We're not going to knock your socks off with a lot of superstars, but we're a very strong team nonetheless."

Junior sprinter Scott Price is currently the team-leader in points with 50.5 points, followed by sprinter Tom Toye (44.5), sprinter Nell Concepcion (30.25), shot putter Jan Stevens (24) and triple jumper Andre Roach (23).

The last meet at New Hampshire featured 27 point scorers for UMass, the most this season. There were also 19 season- best performances registered, one of them being shot putter Jan Stevens' throw of 53-feet-9 3/4-inches, which set a school record and qualified him for the New England Championships as well as the IC4A's.

Concepcion (1:06.32 in the 500m dash) and Roach (47- feet-4 1/2-inches) both qualified for the New Englands and the IC4As. Concepcion's mark was sixth all-time at UMass.

The New England Cup Finals marked the first time the team competed in the newly built Reggie Lewis Community Center track facility. The third place finish was the highest in team finish in the four-year history of the New England Challenge Series.

There were a whopping 11 New England qualifying performances, five IC4A qualifying performances and four top-10 all-time UMass indoor times.

Dave Cahill's time of 1:05.99 in the 50m dash at the Trials was the fifth best time ever for UMass, and it won him a trip to the New England Championships. Cahill, along with Price, Toye and Concepcion, is on the 4 x 400m relay team that qualified for the IC4As and New Englands at the Finals. The squad also earned the sixth best time in the school's history.

The Minutemen's 27 points at the Trials beat out BC (26), Maine (23) and UNH (19).

"I'm glad for our relay team's success, we're really training hard," Cahill said. "The rest of the track teams are doing great, too. I'm hoping we can win the Atlantic 10 Championship."

"I'm happy with the way things are going," Price said. We'll just get better with time, and that's really encouraging."

O'Brien says he's impressed with the success of his team thus far.

"In general terms, we're very happy about the way things are going. Everyone pretty much returned at a high level of fitness. Now that winter break is over, hopefully we can get even better."

Right now, the squad is preparing for its upcoming meet at Rhode Island, where it will face UNH, Holy Cross, Central Connecticut and Hartford.

"This meet was pretty close last season," said O'Brien. But I like the way things are going. I think we're going to be ready."

Winter Sports with the Collegian!!!

Forum of Progressive Asian
Free!! BHARATANATYAM DANCE CONCERT Free!!
A Traditional Bharatanatyam Concert with Brief Description Before each Dance. And an Experimental Dance on a Kannada Short Story.
(a form of IndianClassical Dance)
Aparna Sinbdhoor
Feb. 1, Sat., 1997.
7:30 p.m. Student Union Ballroom Umass, Amherst
Supported by: Umass Arts Council, Graduate Student Senate, New World Theater, and ISA.

NEW! TREADMILL ULTIMATE AEROBIC TRAINING
Lifestride 9500 with Heart Rate Monitor
We Now Have FOUR!
Safe Convenient Fun
PLUS KEISER NAUTILUS FREE-WEIGHTS STAIRMASTERS LIFE CYCLES LIFE ROWER GRAVITRON CYBEX UBE NORDIC TRACK AEROBICS
AMHERST Athletic Club 256-0080 Rte. 116 So. Amherst

Knowledge Grows Here!
Summer Session at Stony Brook
Terms start June 2 and July 14
260 courses in 40 subjects
Day and evening classes
Low NYS tuition
Live on campus or commute
Please send me the 1997 Summer Session [illegible] or check out our web page at Http://www.sunysb.edu/summer/
Name
Street/Box No.
City State Zip
Telephone Area of interest
School currently attending Anticipated year of graduation
STONY BROOK STATE UNIVERSITY OF NEW YORK
Mail coupon or call 24 hours 1-800-559-7213
E-mail: summerschool@ccmail.sunysb.edu
Or write: Summer Session Office, Dept. CN, University at Stony Brook, Stony Brook, NY 11794-3370

Amherst Laundromat
326 College St. Rt. 9
Amherst, MA
253-5072
• Open 7 days a week 8 a.m.-9 p.m.
• Drop off Service & Self Service

THE FINE ARTS CENTER SERIES
Hot A Cappella
THE REAL GROUP
Direct from Sweden on their first US tour, this glorious a cappella vocal quintet performs its Basie-to-Beatles-to-Beach Boys repertoire with a Scandinavian passion for American jazz. Winner of two A Cappella Society of America Awards and the acclaim of fans around the world.
"Absolutely irresistible." – Jon Hendricks
FRIDAY, JANUARY 31, 8PM, FAC CONCERT HALL
PRESENTED WITH THE GENEROUS SUPPORT OF EASTHAMPTON SAVINGS BANK AND WRNX 100.9FM
For more info on this event visit our website at HTTP://WWW.ALCONET.SE/~RG
Heartwarming Theater
HAVING OUR SAY
The triple Tony-nominated play celebrates the lives of Sadie and Bessie Delany, two centenarian sisters who have witnessed two world wars, the rise of Jim Crowe laws, the Harlem Renaissance, the Clarence Thomas hearings and more. Join them in their house as they bake a ham, stuff a chicken and mix the ingredients for a delightful evening of stories and sage advice.
"The most provocative and entertaining family play in a long time." – Vincent Canby, The New York Times
THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 8PM, FAC CONCERT HALL
PRESENTED WITH THE GENEROUS SUPPORT OF PEOPLES BANK AND WGGB-TV 40
For more info on this event visit our website at HTTP://HAVINGOURSAY-THEPLAY.COM
Fire and Flash
THE MINNESOTA ORCHESTRA
EIJI OUE, MUSIC DIRECTOR
PETER SERKIN, PIANO
One of America's finest orchestras and most renowned soloists present Argento's "Valentino Dances," followed by Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 21 in C major and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4. A heavenly way to celebrate Valentine's Day!
"...an adroit balance of passion and polish." – Detroit News
FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 8PM, FAC CONCERT HALL
PRESENTED WITH THE GENEROUS SUPPORT OF FIRST MASSACHUSETTS BANK AND WFCR 88.5 FM
For more info on this event visit our website at HTTP://MNORCH.ORG
The Center Series Winter Warmers
FOR TICKETS OR INFORMATION CALL 545-2511 OR 1-800-999-UMAS
CELEBRATE THE RHYTHMS OF LIFE
THE FINE ARTS CENTER UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST

AT THE GATES OF SMITH COLLEGE
WESTERN MASS. PREMIERE STARTS THIS FRIDAY
CURTAIN DAILY 7 & 9:15 (tickets from 6:30)
From Woody Comes a Romantic Musical Comedy
"THE BEST MOVIE WOODY ALLEN HAS EVER MADE."
"DELIRIOUSLY ORIGINAL AND VERY FUNNY."
EVERYONE SAYS I LOVE YOU
Alan Alda, Woody Allen, Drew Barrymore, Lukas Haas, Goldie Hawn, Gaby Hoffman, Natasha Lyonne, Edward Norton, Natalie Portman, Julia Roberts, Tim Roth, David Ogden Stiers
ACADEMY OF MUSIC NORTHAMPTON Cinema Treats 584-8435

Amherst Drop Zone
ARMY/NAVY STORE
Route 9 • Hadley • Next to McDonalds
EVERYTHING IN STOCK
30% OFF!
2 DAYS ONLY
SATURDAY • FEBRUARY 1 • 9 A.M.-8 P.M.
SUNDAY • FEBRUARY 2 • 12 P.M.-5 P.M.
CLEARANCE!
• Zippo • Hi-Tec • Sorel Boots • Dr. Martens
• Peacoats • Mace • Timex • Duffle Bags
• Fatigues • Flight Jackets • Flags • Knives

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
A Student/Comminity Service Learning Program*
(*an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored program)
Assignment notification, Feb. 6th (Thurs.) at Boltwood table on Campus Center Concourse.
Volunteer while earning credit
Come and Learn How!!!
Your life will NEVER be the same!
You Can Earn 1-2 Credits
Recruitment Nights
(Attend one session - Required for all Applicants!!!)
SPRING SEMESTER '97
6:30 PM
(Note: Prompt starting time)
• Feb 3 Mon Campus Center Aud. or
• Feb 4 Tues. CC Room 163 or
• Feb 5 Wed. Campus Center Aud.

!! AEROBICS !!
FLEX FITNESS CENTER
175 UNIVERSITY DRIVE, AMHERST, MA • 253-3539
!! TREADMILLS !!

Minutemen to host RU

Jonathan M. Place
Collegian Staff

Not to be overlooked in this busy week of sports action here in Amherst, the Massachusetts men's swimming and diving team splashes into action Saturday when the Rutgers Scarlet Knights visit the Joseph R. Rodgers pool.

UMass recently pulled off one of their most successful weekends of the season, beating both the University of New Hampshire and Connecticut. After drowning two state schools from New England, the Minutemen set their targets on New Jersey and its own Scarlet Knights.

This weekend's meet will feature swimmers who stepped up for UMass over the winter session and helped make them 5-1 over the break, defeating Rhode Island, LaSalle and Providence, on top of UNH and UConn. Massachusetts' only loss was to Dartmouth last week.

Sean Anderson and David Koritkoski are coming off of career days, after both recording season-best times and placing second in both their respective columns for Atlantic 10 top times in the 50 freestyle (Anderson) and the 200 backstroke (Koritkoski.).

Billy Hunter, Matt Getty and Geoff Gear also managed to put out their best results versus the Huskies on Sunday, and make their own spots on the A-10s top times list.

All of these swimmers stepped it up for the team over the break, when leadership and upperclassmen victories were necessities. Wisniewski was one of the few who kept the fire alive during the beginning of the season, when the rest of his team was still a little rusty. Last Sunday, Wisniewski swam the 200 individual medley in 1:55.55, an Atlantic 10 top time for the 1996-97 season. Wisniewski has also made the top times list in the 200 free, 100 back, 200 back and 100 free races. Out of all his top times, four of them are at the top of the A-10 list.

With a 6-2 record overall, the Minutemen plan to make their streak three in a row. Head coach Russ Yarworth reportedly made it clear that the victory over UConn was the biggest win of the year and a great motivation and confidence booster leading into the Atlantic 10 Championships, which are being held on the third weekend in February in Buffalo. He truly felt that the team was ready, and now a contender to defend last year's Atlantic 10 Championship.

Last year, Massachusetts beat Rutgers for the first time 123-120. This match-up will be the third meeting in as many years, and this one is the rubber match.

With the Minutemen on a roll, it seems hard to believe the Scarlet Knights will be able to pull off a victory, especially when UMass is hosting the meet in the Rodgers Pool.

Skiing ready for weekend

By Jackie Leroux
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts ski team heads north this weekend to ski in the Brown/UConn Tournament, to be held at Loon Mt. in New Hampshire.

The men will be competing against eight other squads and the women against nine. The toughest competition for the men will come from Plymouth State and Boston College.

In the two tournaments of the season thus far, Plymouth State has won every race. UMass has topped BC only once this season, at the UMass Tournament held at Berkshire East over intersession break.

At the UMass Tourney, the Minutemen finished second in the slalom, behind Plymouth State, with BC finishing third. But they gave up second place to Boston College the next day in the giant slalom.

The Minutewomen will face their toughest competition from the same names the men will see, powerhouse Boston College and Plymouth State. Smith College, which has made a habit out of beating UMass in the past, will also look to give them some trouble.

In the UMass Tournament, the Minutewomen took fifth in both the slalom and the giant slalom.

Last weekend the ski teams traveled to Waterville Valley in New Hampshire for the Plymouth State Tournament. Despite losing their top skier, senior Tom Schaeffer, to muscle spasms, the Minutemen took third place in both races. They finished the slalom with a team time of 530.99 and the giant slalom in 323.08. The Panthers took first and BC second.

Tom Holden, a sophomore out of Lincoln, came in first for UMass and in both the slalom and giant slalom races. Overall, he was third in the slalom with a time of 99.67, and sixth in the giant slalom at 62.30.

Coming in second for UMass was sophomore Todd Fowler. He took tenth overall in Saturday's slalom at 104.03 and seventeenth in Sunday's giant slalom at 64.62. Behind Fowler was senior Aaron Harsh, a transfer from Trinity College, at 15th in 107.98, and junior Aaron White of Oneonta, N.Y. at 18th place in 109.40.

Others placing for UMass in the giant slalom were senior Justin Rouleau at 20th in 65.25, Eric McCormack at 21st in 65.24, and Harsh at 22nd with a time of 65.69.

The Minutewomen had a team time of 395.55 in the slalom to finish in seventh place, and then took fifth in the giant slalom at 217.34. Boston College took first place in both races.

All-American Leah Mullero led the way for the Minutewomen in both races. She captured third place in the slalom at 109.02 and fifth in the giant slalom at 65.29. Sophomore Heather Schmitz finished second for UMass in the slalom and 29th overall, with a time of 136.88. Allison Smaldone took 36th place at 149.65.

In the giant slalom Katie Keane took 18th 70.31, and Jill Gash, a transfer from the New Mexico Military Institute, finished 39th at 81.30.

Coach Bill MacConnell is looking forward to this weekend's return of Tom Schaeffer. Schaffer has been a force for the Minutemen, taking first in the slalom and eighth in the giant slalom at the UMass Tournament.

The Minutemen would like to finish ahead of Boston College this time.

"We are anxious to topple BC a few more times this season," MacConnell said.

The women's team will need Muliero to ski especially well this weekend, with junior Jill Gash out of commission from a sprained ankle she suffered in practice on Wednesday.

The slalom races are scheduled for Saturday, and the giant slalom for Sunday. Competition is slated to begin at 9 a.m. on both days.

Swimming faces last meet

By Jorma Kansonen
Collegian Staff

Forget about the Star Wars Special Edition premiering tonight, the circle will be complete for the seniors of the Massachusetts women's swimming and diving team this weekend.

Four years of toil and hard work will be celebrated at 12 a.m. on Saturday, and the local faithful will have their last look at the Minutewomen (8-3) as they take on Rutgers at Joseph R. Rogers, Jr. Pool.

Saturday's meet will be the last one on campus for UMass before it heads off to Fordham (Feb. 8), the New England Open (Feb. 15), and then the Atlantic 10 Championships at Erie Community College in Buffalo, N.Y. (Feb. 20-22).

Divers Krystin Carpenter and Darbie Honey, and swimmers Jessica Farley, Kerrie Hodge, Pam Perog, Kristin Schambach, Jodi Walters and Toni Youngdahl have helped the program to a winning record in their tenure, compiling a 25-15-1 mark since 1993.

Coach Bob Newcomb realizes the impact his long-time- ago freshmen have had on his team's success, and their graduation will leave some big holes to fill next season.

"This is a group that have been good leaders, and we have Jodi Walters as our captain," Newcomb said. "Jess Farley, talent-wise, is one of the best swimmers we've ever had in this program. Every single one of these people have contributed to this program with their work ethic, speed, personalities and their sense of enjoyment with each other and the team. It's a tough class to lose."

Senior diver Krystin Carpenter believes her experience at UMass is going to help her down the road.

"It has been fun, enjoyable and a good experience here, but I guess I'm ready to move on," Carpenter said. "Coming from Syracuse [two years ago], it was not as good a atmosphere as it has been here. Over here, everyone has made it a lot more enjoyable."

The competitive premium for this weekend's meet will not be the level of competition the Minutewomen face, but more as a tuneup for the remainder of the season. Rutgers will not pose a challenge like a team such as Connecticut, but in Newcomb and Carpenter's minds, this last home meet for the seniors will only help the team down the stretch.

"Rutgers has been a good challenge kind of meet the last couple of years, good competitive meets," Newcomb said. "We have a whole bunch of seniors, and its just a good way to send them off in a meet that has been very competitive for us, very challenging. We have a lot of excitement for it, and we got a lot of stuff going on for it. All indications are we'll go out and swim well again."

"This meet will be good practice for me, and the A-10's," Carpenter said. "The Rutgers divers are good, and they will give me a chance to push my scores up."

Minutewomen Notes: It was a successful intersession for UMass, going 3-1 in dual meets against Providence College (156-83), Dartmouth (171-129), New Hampshire (168-132) and Connecticut (95-148), while winning the Rhode Island Invitational last Jan. 10-11... Against UNH, junior diver Angelique Rodriguez took her third school record, scoring a 278.25 in the one-meter to break Alison White's previous record of 263.10 from 1992-93... One of the newcomers to this year's team that will definitely fill her senior teammates' shoes is Lia Lansky. The freshman from Memphis, Tenn. won the 200 fly versus UConn, with a time of 2:08.76, which now ranks her second on the all-time University performance chart.

For Newcomb, it was a good break, and the team did what they had to do to get prepared for the postseason.

"The biggest thing I think barring the loss to UConn, which is not bad because they are an incredibly impressive team, is that we've been swimming great," Newcomb said. "They are very, very tired right now, and the name of the game for the next three weeks is rest. Let the bodies heal, and let the bodies get ready to swim fast when we shuffle off to Buffalo... If you want a stupid quote like that."

Sports...Sports....Sports...

Hey Hoop Fans!

The Massachusetts women's basketball team is hosting its first ever nationally televised game live Sunday at the Mullins Center. Prizes will given away throughout the contest while our Minutewomen look to topple A-10 leader George Washington. Game time is scheduled for 2 p.m. Admission is free for UMass students.

TOTAL FITNESS
WITHOUT WAITING IN LINE
BEST AEROBICS BEST MACHINES
$139 STUDENT SPECIAL
4 MONTHS
KEISER • NAUTILUS • CYBEX
STAIRMASTERS • LIFECYCLES
TREADMILLS • V.R. BIKE
LIFEROWER • GAUNTLET
GRAVITON
AMHERST ATHLETIC CLUB Rte. 116 So. Amherst 256-0080

UMass INTRAMURAL SPORTS
STILL TIME TO ENTER
Basketball (M/W/C)...A.S.A.P.
GET THOSE FORMS IN BY
Wallyball (M/W/C).....2/3
Wrestling (M/W).....2/4
PAID OFFICIALS NEEDED FOR BASKETBALL, CALL FOR CLINIC DATES.
Don't Miss The Action
For entry forms and info 545-2693 545-0022

BEADS
Great Selection
Classes
Hemp Twine
Also Featuring Gift Items
•Silver Jewelry •Pottery •Unique Imports •Candles •Picture Frames •Stationery •Cards •Incense •Tapestries
August the First
197 N. Pleasant St. Amherst Ma. 01002 413-256-0276

Do you have a Judicial Conference, Hearing or Appeal?
The Judicial Advisors Program, located at 432 Student Union, is staffed with knowledgeable Advisors/Advocates that can:
●Explain the UMass judicial process.
●Advice you of your rights during a conference, hearing, or appeal.
●Accompany you to most hearings.
●Help with an appeal.
Take advantage of this free service, provided to you by the Dean of Students Office and SGA.
Call 545-1272 before your conference or hearing.
If you are interested in becoming an Advisor/Advocate call Jim at 545-1272

Do You Need Money?
The Collegian is hiring!
✓ Accounts Coordinator
✓ Drivers to Deliver morning papers
✓ Distribution Manager
$$$$$$
Make $ and build your resume!
Call Alycia at 545-3500 or come to the Collegian 113 Campus Center

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

ACTIVITIES

Telemarketer Talent Search If you have enthusiasm, integrity and outstanding customer service talent, you could be our star performer!!! Mr. Tuxx is searching for talented people to join our telemarketing team. Mr. Tuxx acknowledges and rewards outstanding performances with: competitive wages, flexible scheduling, and all the training you'll need to be successful! Call Adrian at (413)253-5286 to arrange for your personal interview.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Three Bedroom Apartment on bus route $585.00/month. First and last month required. Call (413)863-8413

EMPLOYMENT

Wanted: Marketing student to market custom software via the Internet- Pay is on commission. 548-8896

Wanted: Tour guides. Summer Counselors, Student Admissions Representatives. Applications available at the Admissions Center.

EMPLOYMENT

Strong, reliable person wanted for occational snow shoveling in Amherst. Good pay. 253-5700 Days

Cruise Line Entry level on-board positions available. Benefits Summer or year round. (612)643-4333

Cruise and Land Tour Employment work in exotic locations. Meet fun people and get paid! For industry information, call Cruise Employment Services (800)276-4948 ext. CS0017. (We are a Research and Publishing Co.)

Outside Jobs- Now hiring. National Parks, Beach Resorts, Ranches, Rafting. CO's benefits and Bonuses! Nationwide openings. Call (919)918-7767 ext R180. Eastern Europe/Asian jobs. Live in Prague, Budapest, Tokyo, etc. Teaching simple conversational English. No languages/teaching exp. required. (919)918-7767 ext. W180

Child Care Northampton area. Thurs. 2:30 pm -8:30 pm. Car necessary. $8.00/hr. Joan 584-8086

EMPLOYMENT

Child Care 17 month old. Light housekeeping, 2-3 mornings a week. Nancy 253-5183

English Teachers Needed Abroad! Teach Conversational English in Prague, Budapest, or Krakow. No teaching certificate or European languages required. Inexpensive room and board plus other benefits. For details call (206)971-3680 ext. K50011

Personal Care Attaadant Evenings, overnights and weekend mornings $7.85 per hour Call 546-0666

FOR RENT

Cape Cod group & summer rentals. Waterfront houses, Falmouth area (508)477-6000

Sugarloaf Estates- Ultra modern two bedroom apartments. Free heat/hot water. New kitchens, baths, carpeting, washers/dryers and more! On bus-line. Minutes to Amherst. Great specials! Call 665-3856

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals 253-9742 Free Delivery

FOR SALE

For Sale Ricoh KR5 Super II Camera, lens, body, flash- $100; neon light $90. Sarah 253-3241

Soowboard w/bindiegs 148GNU Dukester, brand new. 665-8680. CHEAP!!

FREE Two computer desks in good condition. 548-8896

MAC Plus 20 meg hard drive, lots of software. Excellent condition. First one takes it. (-) $150 John 6-8369

Power Mac 6116CD 8mb CDROM 14" monitor, tons of pre-loaded software w/color printer $1600 B/O 546-1449 Brian

Futon $70.00, desk with file cabinet $50.00. Both one year old. Call 549-7481

Color Printer 546-8963

FOR SALE

486 Now Laptop $585. VGA Color Monitor $175. IDE Hard Drive $110. Steve 566-3324-2

Camera: Pentax ME Super, w/Quantarey 49 mm Lens, plus Pentax A Zoom Lens, 1:4, 70-210 mm, plus mm, plus Zykkor flash 3750, with case, ex. cond. Asking $325 or BO. Rick 548-9911

MISCELLANEOUS

Start your own fraternity VETA BETA TAU is looking for men to start a new chapter. If you are interested in academic success, a chance to network and an opportunity to make friends in a non-pledging brotherhood, E-mail ZBT@BIT.NATIONAL.ORG or call Brett Hrbeck at (317)334-1898

PERSONALS

Tsa!, I'm very sorry about the way I treated you lately. I really am. With amor, Ur Maame

ROOM FOR RENT

One bedroom in 2 bedroom apt. Available immediately. On bus route. Sugarloaf Estates. Keira (203)294-1336. Females Only.

One bedroom for rent in two bedroom apt. Call Teryn (508)682-5607

Room in a 2 bedroom apt. Sublease $310 + utilities. Call 253-4824. On bus line.

Take over my lease One bedroom in a vacant two bedroom apartment. $300/month plus utilities. Call Jon @ 256-6034

ROOMATE WANTED

Roommates wanted to share house in Ocean City, NJ for the summer. Call Sue at 546-0407

SERVICES

www.smartbomb.com Serving all your smart drug needs.

TRAVEL

Jamaica- Spring Break Stay in beautiful Negril. Includes roundtrip airfare, hotel transfers, 7 nights lodging from $519. Don't take chances with other companies, go with the UMass Ski Club! Call 545-3437

Europe $155, Caribb./Mexico $189 R/T Worldwide Destinations Ainhitch Tm (800)326-2009 ainhitch@netcom.com or www.isi-com.fr/ainhitch

Pompano Beach, Florida March 8-15, sleeps two, $658/week (413)786-7133 Pariiel kitchen

Spring Break '97 It's heaven. Wake and Bake in the hottest destinations-free parties!!! Organize group and travel free- lowest price guarantee from $99. (800)426-7710. www.sunsplashtours.com

Spring Break- Nassau/Paradise Island, from $379. Air, hotel, transfers, parties and more! Organize small group- earn free trips plus commissions! Call (800)9-Beach-1

TRAVEL

Spring Break Party in Daytona or Panama City. The largest Spring Break destinations, excellent beachfront hotels. Students wanted to promote, earn free trip and cash $$$! Book ten friends and go FREE! Packages from $99.00. Info/book (800)95-9808

Policy

1. All personals MUST be proofread by Collegian classified employees before payment and acceptance of the classified.
2. Last names MAY NOT be used on personals. ONLY first names and initials are allowed. The only exceptions are for birthday or congratulations personals, in which case the full name may be used.
3. Phone numbers are not allowed in personals. NO EXCEPTIONS!
4. Addresses are not allowed in personals, this means dorm room numbers as well.
5. Personals of a threatening or derogatory nature are not acceptable. Personals of a vindictive or libelous nature are not acceptable. Personals may not be used for the purpose of harassment.
6. Prisoners may not be used in personals.
7. The personals section is for personals only. The personals section may NOT be used to sell items, seek roommates, advertise meetings, etc.
8. All personals must have the name, signature and UMass I.D. number of the student placing the ad filled in on the insertion order. Non-students must provide a valid driver's license and the license number must be recorded on the insertion order. Use of false identification or misrepresentation is subject to penalties under the law.
9. The Collegian reserves the right to refuse or to edit any personal that does not meet the Collegian's standards in accordance with the statutes of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Standard Headings

Activities	Motorcycles
Announcements	Personals
Apartment For Rent	Room For Rent
Auto For Sale	Room Wanted
Employment	Roommate Wanted
Entertainment	Services
For Sale	Summer Sublet
Found (2 days Free)	To Sublet
Happy Birthday	Travel
Houses For Rent	Transportation
Instruction	Wanted to Rent
Lost	Wanted
Musicians
Miscellaneous

Rates

$2.00 minimum/day

Students

20¢ per word/day

All others

40¢ per word/day

NO REFUNDS

Please write clearly and legibly. We are not responsible for errors resulting from illegible handwriting or type.

CROSSWORD

ACROSS

1. One hundred dollars, in slang
5. Spill and ___
10. Before precious or sweet
14. Continent west of Hawaii
15. Orange type
16. Midwifery
17. Wise Ino
18. Viscous stuff
19. Shepard of NASA
20. Cartoon dogs
22. Love pat
24. Tater
25. Poet's contraction
26. Half of the diameter
28. "Exile of ___"
31. Summit
34. Monsters
35. Condescending one
36. Cry of triumph
37. ___ about (2 wds.)
39. Street's boss
40. ___ the night before...
42. Boggy land
41. Public assembly
42. Squints
43. Compass dir.
44. Actress Sommer
45. Ice-cream concoction
46. Guido's high note
47. Strengthen
48. Rolls ready for schmearing
51. Humor
54. List abbr. (2 wds.)
56. "Let ___ say what s will" (Hamlet)
58. Wild goat
59. Heavy book
60. Supped
61. "Ooh" ender
62. Put the pedal to the metal
63. Finch
64. Danve (from)

DOWN

1. Starchy staples of Africa
2. POQ, in a memo
3. Capital of Latvia
4. Mons delicate
5. Map parts
6. Valley girls' hangouts
7. Caesar's bird
8. Dasden ornament
9. Primary, for one
10. Takes wing
11. Competition for Miller
12. Unaccounted-for soldiers (abbr.)
13. Electric particles
21. Gambler's notes
23. "Is so!" rebuttal
26. Housekiss
27. Second Mrs. Copperfield
28. Hum
29. Follow
30. Kitchen or study
31. Pulled
32. John or Maureen
33. Sheriff's band
35. Island east of Guernsey
36. Treacle
38. Vine parts
41. Took a spill
42. Unpolluted
45. Mute
46. Went on s moray binly
47. TV marine Pyle
48. Pokar moves
49. Resting upon
50. Wild animals collectively
51. Toodle-oo!
52. Blind as ___ (2 wds.)
53. Prefix for gram or port
54. Outz
57. Old ___

Answers to Yesterday's Puzzle

H	A	C	K			C	A	P		S	A	P	S
A	S	H	E		A	T	O	L	L		A	N	A	T
R	A	I	N		S	H	A	L	E		I	T	S	A
I	N	C	O	M	P	A	T	I	B	I	L	I	T	Y
			E	E	N		E	D	S
B	E	A	C	O	N		O	H	I	O		U	M	P
R	E	S	O	W		P	L	E	A		C	R	E	E
E	R	I	C		S	U	S	A	N		O	G	L	E
A	I	D	A		P	R	E	P		S	L	E	E	P
D	E	E		B	U	R	N		S	H	A	D	E	S
			P	A	R			D	U	E
S	U	P	E	R	N	A	T	U	R	A	L	I	S	M
A	P	I	E		I	R	E	N	E		I	N	T	O
R	O	C	K		N	I	N	E	R		S	C	O	W
I	N	K	S		G	A	S				P	A	W	S

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21-April 20

Check out a recently discounted scene. It looks aren't too important. You could have found a real bargain. A relationship takes a turn for the better- keep working to improve it.

TAURUS
April 21-May 21

Go for security rather than extravagance—it's the wiser course in the long run. Wrap up a project with a flourish by giving it the thoughtful, enthusiastic presentation it deserves. Then, treat yourself to a special evening.

GEMINI
May 22-June 21

The more tightly you focus your efforts, the greater your accomplishments will be. Pay close attention to details—they will help you discover the reality behind an appearance.

CANCER
June 22-July 22

You're in a mood for a new thrill, but your routine won't allow you to travel far. The excitement could even lead to a burst of creativity—make the most of it.

LEO
July 23-August 23

A walk in the outdoors allows you to both appreciate the season and get to know someone better than you ever thought possible. One day holds the possibility for an unexpected development in an old drama.

VIRGO
August 24-September 22

Changes at work could offer you a unique chance to get ahead. Don't waste it by submitting amateurish— it's better to make a positive effort. Look for the diamonds in the rough, whether people or objects, and you'll be well on your way to being more content with your life.

LIBRA
September 23-October 23

The impulse to spend is running high, so lock up your credit cards and stick to your grocery list. Be sure to include small indulgences so you don't feel deprived. Entertain this weekend to add extra pleasure to your social life.

SCORPIO
October 24-November 22

Your "full-speed ahead" approach to life could have you on the edge of burnout. Take a few steps back and enjoy some of the simpler things. Focus on concrete issues when it comes to an old dispute.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23-December 21

Devote all your energy to a project that needs extra attention. Other things will wait if you manage your time effectively. Increase your savings by reevaluating your spending patterns.

CAPRICORN
December 22-January 20

Make an extra effort to stay in the good graces of someone who could pull strings for you. You could need their influence in the near future. Don't be afraid to make a bold career move. It could be just the change you've been looking for.

AQUARIUS
January 21-February 18

Be sure that you have all the information you need before attempting to make a life-altering decision. Then, once you make your choice, stick to it. In love, build on a relationship with someone who shares your values and interests.

PISCES
February 19-March 20

An old connection offers a new opportunity. Be sure that any group propositions you make have an incentive for everyone. Romance flourishes when you devote extra time and attention to another.

WHERE ELSE CAN A HANDFUL OF CHANGE BUY YOU AN AD?

Daily Listings sponsored by: Your Ad Could Be Here. Call 545-3500

HSCN Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN	Bulletin Board
3	CBS/3	Hartford
4	CBS/4	Boston
5	ABC/5	Boston
6	PBS/57	Springfield
7	HSCN	Movie Channel
8	UPN/20	Hartford
9	Weather Channel
10	NBC/30	New Britain
11	Fox/61	Hartford
12	PBS/24	Hartford
13	WOCH & HSCN
14	UMATV
17	HSCN	Programming
19	TV-19
20	ABC/40	Springfield
22	NBC/22	Springfield
23	CNN
24	CNN/Headline News
25	BET
26	BET on Jazz
27	Laser Video
28	The Learning Channel
30	Comedy Central
31	Popcorn Channel
32	Satellite Programming

FRIDAY EVENING — C - Campus — JANUARY 31, 1997

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	7	12	Creatures	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (R)		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	McLaughlin	Connection	Fourth Estate	First Flights	World at War "Japan Strikes"
WFSB	8	3	News (R)	CBS News	Inside Edition	Am.Journal	Dave's World	Raymond	JAG "Crossing the Line" (R)		Nash Bridges "The Web" (R)		News	Late Show (R)
WBZ	4	4	News		CBS News	Ent. Tonight	Dave's World	Raymond	JAG "Crossing the Line" (R)		Nash Bridges "The Web" (R)		News	Late Show (R)
WCVB	5	5	News (R)	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle (R)	Family Matters	Boy-World	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless (R)	20/20 (R)		News (R)	Nightline (R)
WLVI	56		Full House (R)	Fresh Prince	Star Trek: Next Gener.		★★"Wickets" (1995, Comedy)		Dokkie Hawn, James Keach		News		Jenny Jones (In Stereo) (R)
WHDH	7		News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (R)	Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		Dateline (In Stereo) (R)		Homicide: Life on the Street (R)		News	Tonight Show
WTXX		6	Fresh Prince	Martin (R)	Judge Judy (R)	Real TV (R)	"Dead Before Dawn" (1993, Drama)		Cheryl Ladd, Jamieson Parker		News	LAPD	N. Patrol	Real TV (R)
WVIT		30	News	NBC News	Ent. Tonight	Hard Copy (R)	Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		Dateline (In Stereo) (R)		Homicide: Life on the Street (R)		News	Tonight Show
WTIC	3	61	Simpsons (R)	Roseanne (R)	Home Imp.	Seinfeld (R)	Sliders "Paradise Lost" (R)		Millennium (In Stereo) (PA) (R)		News		Coach (R)	Deep Space 9
WWLP	9	22	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy! (R)	Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		Dateline (In Stereo) (R)		Homicide: Life on the Street (R)		News	Tonight Show
WGBY	11	57	Creatures	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer (R)		Wash. Week	Wall St. Week	Wire/Antrix—The Show (In Stereo)				Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	28	News (R)	ABC News	Seinfeld (R)	Ent. Tonight	Family Matters	Boy-World	Sabrina-Witch	Clueless (R)	20/20 (R)		News (R)	Nightline (R)
WSBK	38		Beverly Hills, 90210 "Highway"		Seinfeld (R)	Mad Abo. You	Sentinel "The Rig" (In Stereo)		Star Trek: Voyager "Cote" (R)		News	Merlin (R)	Mad Abo. You	Real TV (R)
WTBS	72		Family Matters	Family Matters	Home Videos	Home Videos	★★½"Fast Times at Ridgemont High" (1982, Com				★★"Better Off Dead" (1985, Comedy) John Cusack
A&E	67		Quincy		Equalizer "Cartel Persuasion"		Biography: Jamie Lee Curtis		★★★½"The Road Warrior" (1981, Adventure) Mel Gibson				Law & Order (R)
CNN	10	23	WorldView (R)		Moneyline (R)	Crossfire (R)	Prime News (R)	Inside Politics	Larry King Live (R)		World Today		Sports Illus.	Moneyline (R)
COM	15	26	Tick (R)	Dream On	Pee-wee Herman (R)		★★½"Fierce Buddies's Day Off" (1986, Comedy)		Matthew Broderick, Mia Sara		Howie Mandel		Pee-wee Herman (R)
DISC	69		Beyond 2000	Next Step (R)	Wings		Wild Discovery: Leopard		Invention	Beyond 2000	Wings "Avenger" (R)		Wild Discovery: Leopard
ESPN	21		Up Close	Sportscenter		NFL's Greatest	Winter X Games (Live)						Sportscenter (R)
LIFE	63		Supermarket	Debt	Dish	Pandora	Wire	3 Blind Dates	"Little Girls in Pretty Boxes" (1997, Drama)		Swoosie Kurtz (R)		Dish (R)	Pandora (R)
MTV	70		Ren & Stimpy	Week in Rock	Singled Out	Idiot Savants	Music Videos (In Stereo)				Beavis-Butt.	Sports (R)	Singled Out	Idiot Savants
NICK	68		Clarissa Expl.	Tiny Toon	Doug (R)	Rugrats (R)	Kablam!		Happy Days	I Love Lucy (R)	Munsters		M.T. Moors	Rhoda	Taxi (R)	Odd Couple (R)
SCIFI	66		Twilight Zone	Darkside	She-Wolf of London		★★½"Nightmare on Elm Street 5: The Dream Child" (1989)				Friday the 13th: The Series		She-Wolf of London
TLC	62	28	Furniture	Renovation	Home3ms (R)	Hometime (R)	Quest (R)		What's a World	Seven Wonders of the World	Invisible War (R)		Quest (R)	What's a World
TNT	64		In the Heat of the Night (R)		In the Heat of the Night (R)		NBA Basketball: Houston Rockets at Indiana Pacers. (Live) (R)					Inside-NBA	★★½"The Omen" (1976)
USA	65		Renegade "SWM Seeks Victm"		Highlander: The Series (R)		★★"Conan the Destroyer" (1984) Arnold Schwarzenegger (R)				Ls Femme Nikita "Simons" (R)		Big Easy "Gatorade" (R) (R)
HBO	33		(4:30) "Forrest Gump" (1994) (R)		Inside the NFL (In Stereo) (R)		★★★ "Waiting to Exhale" (1995, Drama) Whitney Houston. (R) (R)				★½ "Il the End of the Night" (1994) (R)			Dennis Miller
MAX	35		★★"Tommy Boy" (1995, Comedy) Chris Farley, Pgb 13 (R)				"The Sweeper" (1996, Drama) C. Thomas Howell. (In Stereo) (R)				★ "Fair Game" (1995) Cindy Crawford. (R) (R)		Erotic
SHOW	37		"Whispers" (1997, Fantasy) Michael Caton			Boxing Report	★★"The Baby-Sitters Club" (1995) Schuyler Fisk		Tina Turner		Outer Limits		Outer Limits "The Message" (R)	Fright Night 2 (R)

Bruno By C. Baldwin

Frumpy the Clown By Judd Winick

Frumpy the Clown Judd Winick

Leold By Roger & Salem Salloom

I was on the phone yesterday with my mother.

I told her I was experiencing a deep personal crisis.

I was on the edge of an abyss looking into the black nothingness: My whole life was passing before me like a meaningless parade of failures.

I told her, "Something is missing mom. I'm going to collapse right here on the phone. I need help."

Finally, she said , "Did you pick up your shoes at the store today?"

I said, "No, but thanks for reminding me. I'll get them later."

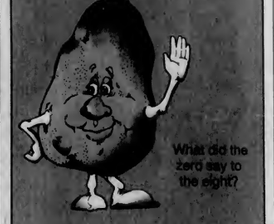
Daily Collegian
It's what's for dinner

Drabble By Kevin Fagan

Non Sequitur By Wiley

Duh By Maura and Micaela

Speedy By Todd Hartzler



Quote of the Day

"What if I said something shocking to you, like my whole life has been a lie, and I'm really....left-handed?

–"Ellen"

Joke of the Day

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Dilbert By Scott Adams

Close to Home By John McPherson

A growing service industry: chaperones for people who met on the Internet.

Today's Staff

Seema Gangatirkar
Night Editor

Lisa Chiu
Copy Editor

Chris Cesnek
Photo Technician

Mark McGrath
Production Supervisor

Sandi Krauss
Elizabeth Brown
Production

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Franklin

LUNCH	DINNER
Hot Turkey Sandwich	Bar-B-Q Spare Ribs
Grilled Cheese	Baked Ziti
Fish Muchies!	Charbroiled Chicken
YUM!	Sandwich

Hampshire

LUNCH	DINNER
Hamburber on Roll	Beef Strips/
Chicken Cutlet	Snow Peas and
Worcester Breakfast	Mushrooms
Sandwich	Fish

Worcester

LUNCH	DINNER
Fish Munchies	Beef Strips/
Misquite Chicken	Snow Peas and
Bow Ties/Pesto	Mushrooms
Tri-Bean Casserole	Stir Fry Veggies/Tofu

Berkshire

LUNCH	DINNER
Fish Munchies	Beef, Peas, Mushrooms
Misquite Chicken	Baked Ziti
Ravioli w/ Tomato Sauce	Stir Fry Veggies/Tofu
Vegan Ravioli

SPORTS
Friday, January 31, 1997
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Minutemen down GW 68–63, winning streak now 5

Lari Ketner, Inus Norville shut down Koul, Clarke shining in three–guard lineup

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's basketball team may have just gotten the monkey off its back.

With the Minutemen's 68–63 win over George Washington last night, UMass has strung together a five–game winning streak, a two–game streak over the Colonials, while pushing its record to two games over .500 for the first time this season.

The win over GW was especially sweet considering the Minutemen haven't won at Washington D.C.'s Charles E. Smith Center since the current crop of UMass seniors were baby–faced freshmen (1993–94).

But revenge–factor aside, UMass' win showed that the Minutemen, who are undefeated since going to a three–guard set against St. Bonaventure on Jan. 14, have become a true team, instead of just a collection of healthy, or somewhat healthy, bodies.

UMass (11–9, 5–2 in the Atlantic 10) shot poorly in the first half, allowing the Colonials (9–8, 4–4) to jump out to a lead as large as 10 points. Outside shots that strung the net so easily at Temple, wouldn't have hit water if they had fallen out of a boat in the first half. UMass was a paltry 1– for–8 from beyond the arc before intermission.

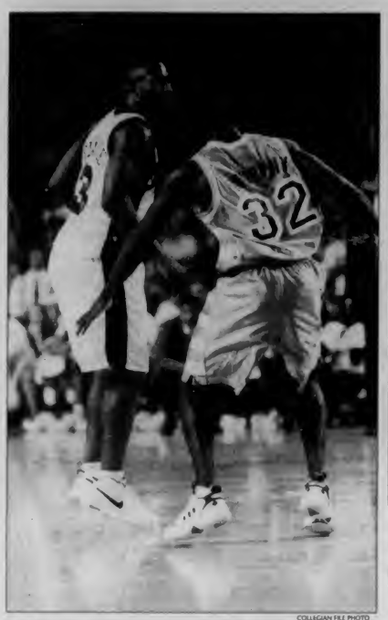
The Minutemen's 34 percent from the floor (first half) was buffered by 66 percent from the free throw line, but that was little consolation for the team down 5 at the half.

But all that changed in when the teams emerged from the locker rooms.

UMass continued its late–first half surge and chipped away at the Colonial lead. George Washington's inside men, which had had little trouble with UMass' post players, struggled against the Minutemen's now stifling defense. The perimeter game was just as successful.

Defense wasn't the only area of improvement for the second–half Minutemen. Scoring went up, shooting percentage went up, and the Minutemen settled down.

In the first half, when shots weren't falling for UMass, the offense became rushed in an attempt to make up for the proverbial lost time. In the second half, a calmer, more focused attack led to higher percentage baskets, and a more consistent style of play.



A large part of that more focused attack was Lari Ketner. After scoring only three points at McGonigle Hall last Saturday, Ketner exploded in the second period and finished with a team–high 16 points.

To make matters worse for the Colonials, Ketner added to his line with five rebounds and a pair of blocks.

The sophomore center wasn't the only one getting the job done in the second half. Junior Inus Norville, who shut down Temple's Marc Jackson last week, was equally effective on GW's Alexander Koul. Norville, who finished with eight points and two blocks, combined with Ketner to limit Koul to only 10 points — GW's fourth best on the night — after the import had been leading his team in scoring for the past five games.

Not to be outdone by the play of the big men, UMass guard Charlton Clarke lit up the Smith Center nets for 12 points of his own. The sophomore guard, who has played the three–spot in UMass' three–guard offense, was everywhere, hitting from under the basket, mid–range and even from outside (one 3–pointer).

With the uniformity of a solid line–up — UMass' starters have been consistent with its win streak — the Minutemen have melded into a strong team, and they have a couple of impressive wins to show for it.

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

UMass sophomore Charlton Clarke's 12 points and two steals helped push the Minutemen past George Washington on the road. UMass has now won five straight.

Minutewomen to battle GW Colonials on ESPN2

By Luke Meredith
Collegian Staff

For the first time in the 28 year history of the Massachusetts women's basketball team, the Minutewomen will host a nationally televised game.

Beamed across the nation on ESPN2 Sunday at 2 p.m., UMass will host George Washington in a game that will be less about bright lights and Sportscenter highlights and more about what's shaping up to be a battle for A–10 supremacy.

GW comes into the Mullins Center this weekend on a roll. The conference juggernaut Colonials are in the middle of a 10–game win streak, and have yet to lose in A–10 play, posting an 9–0 record so far. Overall, GW is 14–4, and own the distinction of claiming the last three A–10 conference titles, in addition to an incredible 24 game A–10 win streak. Against UMass, they've had more than their share of success, winning 22 of the 26 games against the Minutewomen. The last time UMass took a game from GW was in 1993, when the Minutewomen beat the Colonials 59– 57. UMass head coach Joanie O'Brien has faced George Washington 12 times, and that remains her only win against the conference power.

The Colonials are lead by superstar Tajama Abraham, who averages 20.4 points and eight rebounds a game. Noelia Gomez joins Abraham in the post to form quite a 1–2 punch down low. Gomez is averaging 15 points and seven rebounds a game for the league leading Colonials.

But don't leave the Minutewomen for dead just yet. After starting the season 3–4, UMass has won 10 of its last 12 games, and is second in the Atlantic 10 East at 7–2, behind 8–1 St. Joseph's. The top two teams in the A–10's East and West divisions receive first–round byes in the A–10 Tournament.

"Coach O'Brien always says that we have only eight games left to prove ourselves," UMass senior forward Crystal Carroll said. "Now's the time to make our run."

Carroll will be a key factor in that run. She leads the Minutewomen with 16.6 points and 6.5 rebounds a game. Freshman guard Kelly Van Huisen has played like a veteran all season, averaging 10.6 points to go along with 4.5 assists a game, good

Turn to WOMEN, page 6

GAME PREVIEW

UMass Minutemen vs. #20 Xavier Musketeers

at the Mullins Center
7:30 P.M. Saturday February 1, 1997

ON THE AIR
TV ABC
Radio WMUA 91.1 FM
WHMP 99.3 Mark VanDerMeer and Jack Leaman

GAME PREVIEW

UMass Minutewomen vs. George Washington Colonials

at the Mullins Center
2:00 P.M. Sunday February 2, 1997

ON THE AIR
TV ESPN2
Radio WMUA 91.1 FM Robin Roberts play-by-play, Rebecca Lobo color

Rebounds key in UM win

By Jeremy Adams
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's basketball team had to fall back on its usual strong points, good rebounding at both ends and strong play by Crystal Carroll, to combat its poor 34 percent shooting to pull out a 54–52 win over the Hokies of Virginia Tech on Wednesday.

Carroll was good for 18 points in her 37 minutes of play. The remaining Minutewomen scoring was spread among seven players and led by Beth Kuzmeski's eight points.

The most telling statistics are the Minutewomen's contrasting poor shooting and strong rebounding. Massachusetts out–rebounded Virginia Tech 44–34, with a distinct 20–9 advantage for the Minutewomen in their defensive end. They also did not back down in the Hokies' end, grabbing 20 offensive boards compared to 25 Hokie defensive rebounds.

Kara Tudman led the UMass attack on the glass, pulling down 10 boards. Tudman was aided by Kuzmeski and Carroll, who combined for 13 rebounds.

The 34 percent shooting by UMass was matched by a poor performance from the line. The Minutewomen shot 50 percent without defenders' hands in front of them, including just 46 percent in the first half.

The Minutewomen found the going tough early on, turning the ball over on each of their first four possessions. Virginia Tech jumped out to a 6–2 edge in the first 5 minutes, but after an officials' time–out UMass came out gunning.

The Minutewomen made a 14–1 run to take an 11 point lead, their largest of the game. The Hokies battled back to take a 26–22 advantage with under 3 minutes left in the half. Carroll came through big, hitting two jumpers to tie the game at 26 as the first half wound down.

The lead changed hands again early in the second half. Virginia Tech's Kim Seaver won a battle on the low post for the 28–26 Hokie advantage.

Kuzmeski knocked down one of her two 3–pointers to take the lead back, and the Minutewomen held it for the rest of regulation. Massachusetts' lead never exceeded eight points in the second half, and it drew close in the later minutes.

With 2:41 on the clock, the Hokies pulled to within one point at 48–47. Massachusetts freshman Kelly Van Huisen responded to the pressure, hitting a clutch 3–pointer. Carroll followed with a deuce on UMass' next possession, and Van Huisen went 1–for–2 from the line to round out the Minutewomen scoring for the game.

Thirty–four percent shooting will likely be a focal point in the Minutewomen's preparation for their upcoming William D. Mullins Center ESPN2 date with George Washington on Sunday at 2 p.m.

It'll be a tale of two teams for hockey this weekend

By Leigh Torbin
Collegian Staff

Comparative literature and English professors should be huge Hockey East fans. Every weekend has a theme to it.

Usually there is "the Providence weekend" or "the BU weekend," when teams will face each other in a home–and– home series. In some odd weekends a Hockey East team faces two different teams, but there's often a connection to be drawn. Last weekend for example, UMass traveled to Boston to face Boston College and Northeastern, the common theme being the location of the separate opponents.

The same carries over to other conferences. ECAC teams, for example, deal with "the Capitol District weekend," when they face Union and RPI in Albany suburbs Schenectady and Troy respectively on Friday and Saturday night.

What the UMass hockey team will face this weekend makes no logical sense. There are absolutely no connections to be drawn between a home game tonight against near cellar–dwelling Merrimack (7 p.m. at the William D. Mullins Center) and a road trip to Durham, N.H. to face the nationally–ranked New Hampshire Wildcats tomorrow night (7 p.m.)

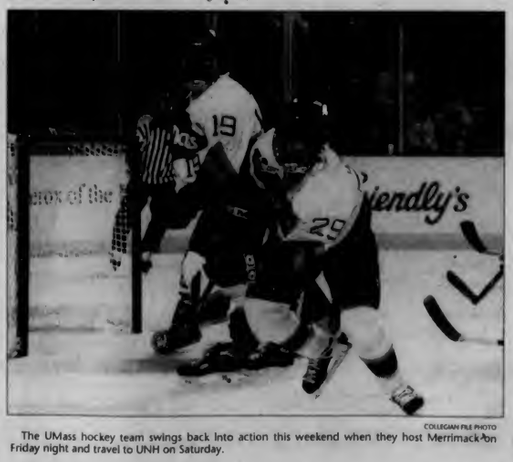
None. Find one and bring it to your professor for an A. I respectfully give up and tip my cap to the league schedule makers.

Regardless, tonight and tomorrow evening's affairs are challenges that UMass must tackle to continue progressing towards its goal of hosting a Hockey East quarterfinal series in March.

"It's difficult when you get away from the home–and–home games," UMass coach Joe Mallen said. "After the first game in those it's easy to analyze what you did right and wrong and try to set a game plan for the second day.

"So our first onus is to beat Merrimack first and then to come back and think about the second game next. Once [the first] game ends its time to start looking at UNH stuff and set a game plan [Saturday] morning."

The eighth–place Warriors (8–15–1, 4–9–1 HE) represent a team that UMass has defeated in four of the last five meetings between the schools. Merrimack, which takes to the road for the first time since Jan. 3 for tonight's contest, is 2–7 away from the frigid confines of the Volpe Complex.



Tomorrow night the Minutemen will find themselves making potentially their final NESN appearance as they face off at the gleaming new Whittemore Center, where at least 4,654 have gathered for every league game this year.

UNH (20–6, 13–3) swept UMass earlier this year at the Mullins Center, taking a pair of one–goal contests (1–0 and 5–4 in overtime) on the strength of its talented top four forwards Eric Boguniecki, Jason Krog, Mark Mowers and Eric Nickulas.

Coach Dick Umile's team utilizes its own Olympic–sized ice sheet with a trademark high–flying attack, on the contrary to the more methodical Warriors.

In addition to the radical site difference, UMass will have to contend with tremendous differences between the playing styles of its two opponents this

Turn to HOCKEY, page 6

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

The UMass hockey team swings back into action this weekend when they host Merrimack on Friday night and travel to UNH on Saturday.

UMass hosts Xavier on Sat.

By Chris Stamm
Collegian Staff

Tomorrow, the Massachusetts men's basketball team wraps up a four–game series with the Atlantic 10's toughest opponents when it hosts No. 20 Xavier (14–3, 5–2), at the William D. Mullins Center at 2 p.m.

Following a traditionally tough schedule, the Minutemen (11–9, 5–2) have faced A–10 powerhouses Rhode Island, Temple and George Washington consecutively along a 5–0 win streak. After last night's win at GW, the first time UMass has knocked off the Colonials in the Charles E. Smith Center since the '93–94 season, the Minutemen carry a considerable amount of momentum into the contest with the Musketeers.

Xavier kicked off its season by winning its first 10 straight games, breaking into the top 25 when it beat then–No. 1 Cincinnati 71–69 and stayed there for nine weeks following the win. As for conference games, the Musketeers have banged with the big boys, beating Temple 68–64 in OT and squeaking by GW 62–61. However, Xavier dropped a game to Duquesne 70–78 before the No. 1 team in the A–10 East Rhode Island 91–79.

"They [Xavier] have had a great season," UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint said. "They beat Cincinnati early and on tape, they are really, really good. They're fast, they press all over the place and they play really well together, so it is going to be another tough game on Saturday."

Leading the Musketeer attack, which returns all five of its starters, is 6–foot–2 guard Lenny Brown. The sophomore from Wilmington, Del. has averaged 18.4 points per game, and last month was added to the final national ballot for the John R. Wooden Award, making him the first Xavier player to be nominated for the award in the school's history. The nomination places him in such company as Antawn Jamison (North Carolina), Ron Mercer (Kentucky), Mike Bibby (Arizona) and Tim Thomas (Villanova).

Brown pairs up with fellow guard Gary Lumpkin (13.7 ppg) for a powerful backcourt tandem. While they were not born on the same day, in the same town, on the same island, the Brown–Lumpkin connection has stood the test of time. This is the seventh season the duo has shared a backcourt, as they have played together for two years at Xavier, three in high school and two in junior high.

On the boards, the Musketeers boast the talents of 6–foot–7 forward James Posey (7.6 rpg) and top–rated juco prospect Torraye Braggs (7.3 rpg).

For the Minutemen, it's hard to pick one player that stands above the rest, as the entire squad has been working together since Flint introduced a three–guard rotation that sparked a five–game win streak. When the UMass guards are shooting, they're tough to beat. In last

Turn to XAVIER, page 6

The Massachusetts

DAILY COLLEGIAN

Volume CVI Issue 74 | New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967 | Monday, February 3, 1997

Chicken Marsalis?

Branford Marsalis brings his sax to the Iron Horse in Northampton tonight. Check out our preview (see Arts & Living, page 5).

Bitter sweet

Carmelo Travieso led UMass with 29 points and reached the 1,000 point career plateau, but UMass fell to Xavier 87–84 in OT (see Sports Weekend, page 10).

WORLD

Peru police maintain reduced activity

LIMA, Peru (AP) — An armored troop carrier patrolled outside the Japanese ambassador's residence yesterday, a day after President Alberto Fujimori promised that police would not provoke the leftist rebels inside.

Tupac Amaru rebels, who are holding 72 hostages, last week responded with gunfire to a similar patrol, nicking one of the vehicles.

But yesterday's maneuvers were more subdued. Police refrained from the obscene gestures that drew guerrilla gunshots last Monday. Rebels limited their response yesterday to singing revolutionary anthems and shouting slogans through a megaphone. Police drowned out the guerrillas with sirens amplified through huge speakers set up outside the residence.

Fujimori, who met Saturday in Canada with Japanese Prime Minister Ryutaro Hashimoto, admitted that the police behavior was a mistake and said the officers who made the obscene gestures would be punished.

The meeting between the two heads of states came after Hashimoto upbraided Peru twice last week for the aggressive police maneuvers. Fujimori said Saturday his security forces would avoid provocative action, but said they would remain deployed in strength.

NATION

Police arrest alleged Californian bomber

VALLEJO, Calif. (AP) — Police made an arrest yesterday in the bombings that struck a courthouse and bank in the past week, and recovered explosives in a plot they believe was designed to subvert the criminal justice system.

The name of the suspect was withheld while the investigation continued. Arrest warrants were issued for two other suspects and numerous search warrants were served, Police Chief Robert Nichelini said.

"It is our belief that this was a deliberate attempt to stop the criminal justice system from operating in Solano County," Nichelini said.

Early Sunday, authorities seized a car with 60 sticks of wired dynamite from outside an apartment complex, which was evacuated for three hours as a precaution. If there had been an explosion, Nichelini said the results would have been catastrophic.

Besides making additional arrests, of immediate concern was finding more explosives the group may have stored in Vallejo. When asked if the person arrested is the mastermind of the bombings, Nichelini said, "I'm not sure we'd characterize anyone as a mastermind. Only time will tell who knows what and who did what."

Nobody was injured in the two bombings, which tore a 3-foot crater in the Solano County courthouse on Thursday and damaged three automatic tellers outside a Wells Fargo bank last Sunday.

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Tuesday	Wed.
HIGH: 38	HIGH: 32	HIGH: 35
LOW: 20	LOW: 15	LOW: 20

INSIDE

Arts & Living.....page 5
Classifieds .....page 8
Comics.....page 9
Crossword .....page 8
Editorial .....page 4
FYI.....page 2
News.....page 3
Sports .....page 10

UMass to undergo technology upgrade for Internet connections

By Christina Poletto
Collegian Staff

As part of an $11 million upgrade in technology services at the University of Massachusetts, fiber optic connections and new computer classrooms are near completion in some campus residence halls and academic buildings.

Patterson and Washington Residence Halls will be among the first of campus buildings to be hooked up to this system.

"This new fiber optic network will eliminate use of the Terminal Adaptor Unit's [TAU's] in residence halls and allow faster connection," said Associate Chancellor John Dubach, head of the Office of Information Technologies (OIT).

"The TAU's presently work at a speed of 19,000 bits per second. The fiber optic connection will go directly into the network working at a speed of 10-million bits per second," Dubach said.

There will be two connectors installed per dorm room to allow both residents access to the system simultaneously.

The fiber optic connections will be provided at no cost to the students. Computers will have to be provided by the student. OIT will be available to help students with any hardware or software installation problems.

Alongside residence hall fiber optic implementations, the program will include ameliorating campus telecommunication services and the systems responsible for e-mail and electronic links.

According to Dubach, new computer classrooms will be constructed in Patterson and Crabtree Residence Halls.

"The classrooms will be fitted with Internet connections to the on-line network," Dubach said.

New computer equipment will also be purchased for classroom and lecture hall use. This includes projector and audio/video devices.

More computers will soon be available in Morrill Science Center and the W.E.B. Du Bois Library for student use in the computer classroom and e-mail carrels.

Administrative and academic buildings on campus are also included in this encompassing technological upgrading. Operations are nearing completion to connect Arnold, Machmer, Bartlett and Herter Halls into the primary network. Eventually, all buildings on the UMass campus will have direct link to the network.

The core concept of this multi-million dollar project was pioneered by Chancellor David K. Scott in his 1996 report: "Strategic Action: Towards a Commonwealth of Learning."

"One of our principles calls for a commitment to a new enviroment for learning, discovery and outreach through the creative uses of technology. There is no doubt that the distinctive campus of the future will make extensive use of networks and information technology both on and off campus," Scott wrote in his report.

Under the proposal, the technology improvements are part of project Learning, Information and Research Network (LIRN).

According to Dubach, additional funding was made available for these changes following a re-financing of the telecommunications budget.

In recent years, the use of OIT accounts has increased from 6,000 in September 1994 to 14,000 in September 1996. A current survey has tallied the quantity of e-mail messages sent in the month of September 1996 at two million.

"We're working to keep up with the demand for services," Dubach said.

KENNETH W. P. SCOTT \ COLLEGIAN

Blimp Commander!

Doug Knuth, 24, a staff assistant for the athletic department is the official blimp commander. The helium filled blimp can be seen inside at most of the Mullins Center games.

Microcredit Summit aims to help poor

By Harry Dunphy
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — World leaders opened a microcredit summit yesterday with calls to support an innovation in banking that may strike a blow against poverty — loans to poor people to start businesses in the United States and abroad.

Bangladesh Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina, a co-chairman, said the world has taken too long to realize that charities and handouts help maintain and deepen poverty, are invented to avoid giving the poor equal opportunities and deny them the initiative to improve their lives.

"This summit provides the perfect opportunity for practitioners, non-government organizations, savings and credit cooperatives, foundations, educational religious institutions, governments and leaders in finance and business to take a pivotal next step in creating a poverty free world and help human potential bloom," she said.

Hasina was the first of 18 speakers that included three presidents, a prime minister, Queen Sophia of Spain and representatives of international aid organizations, private companies and the World Bank.

Today first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton and Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin will address the meeting, attended by more than 2,000 people from 100 countries.

Another speaker from Bangladesh was Mohammad Yunus, who founded the microcredit movement in his country 20 years ago when he lent $27 from his own pocket to a furniture maker. He said the meeting was a celebration of "the freeing of credit from the bondage of collateral."

He said the microcredit was at the same level of development as the Wright Brothers made their first flight in 1903.

"Some find our plane unsafe, clumsy, not good enough, but we'll soon be flying our Boeings, our Concordes and launching booster rockets," he said to prolonged applause.

Noting the two-thirds of the beneficiaries of microcredit were women, Queen Sophia, also a co-chairman of the conference, said such loans gave the poor leverage in the economy and "allow them to become players, not recipients of charity."

President Omar Konare of Mali warned against microcredit "becoming fashionable or an alibi to relieve consciences so the existing system can continue."

President Yoweri Museveni of Uganda said the objective of microcredit should not be "to alleviate poverty but to eliminate it." He also called ending protectionism so developing countries could sell what they produce for a fair price.

President Alberto Fujimori of Peru called for great involvement by the private sector, saying few "existing programs in the world today rely primarily on private capital."

But Michael Chu, president of Accion International, another microcredit pioneer, said certificates of deposit dedicated solely to microcredit have been sold to investors in the United States. "So that in many ways," he said, all that is missing to reach the summit's goals are our professional skills, discipline and creativity, our commitment and our will to succeed."

Organizers of the summit estimate they need to raise $21.6 billion by 2005 for programs that typically offer an average of $100 to borrowers to help them open stores, raise poultry and start vegetable gardens for profit. The conference was organized by dozens of non government organizations, foundations and cooperatives around the world. Sponsors include several private companies, among them big U.S. banks.

So far, 8 million people have used microcredit in places ranging from Kenya and Peru to inner city Chicago and Washington D.C.

Two thirds of those who have benefited from such loans are women, unable to obtain credit from commercial banks. Many of the lending organizations claim repayment rates of more than 90 percent so the programs often fund themselves.

The World Bank plans to spend $200 billion in expected donor pledges on microcredit.

KENNETH W. P. SCOTT \ COLLEGIAN

A moment in time...

This Iris blooms in the morning and wilts in about 8 hours. And it can be found in the green houses located at Smith College. I bet you could find it flowering there today.

Library offers new programs on electronic researching

By Mark McGrath
Collegian Staff

In the upcoming semester, the reference desk at the W.E.B. Du Bois Library will be offering a number of workshops and accredited classes geared toward making the library more accessible to University of Massachusetts students.

The workshops, which will be held in the Instruction Room on the main floor of the library, will cover research in subject areas such as health sciences, education, history, literature, business, law and the Internet.

"[The workshops] came about because we have subscriptions to electronic indices. So initially we did workshops on the data bases, but that didn't work," said Jill Ausel, instructional services librarian.

Gearing the sessions toward particular subject areas seems to have remedied the situation, as Ausel reports that from last spring to fall, the number of particlpants in the series of workshops has grown from just over 150 to 250. The numbers are expected to rise again this semester.

The workshops focus on the resources of the library, particularly electronic ones. Topics covered include Internet and Web sites and printed material.

Asked whether technological novices take advantage of these workshops, Ausel said, "They always come. We have students who are unfamiliar with keyboards to students who own PC's. Some embrace it, and some are fearful."

Additionally, the library is continuing to offer workshops orienting students toward Lexis\Nexis — one particular resource available at the library.

Lexis/Nexis is an all-text database that is available to UMass students and faculty conducting curriculum-related research. It combines news sources, wire services, business and professional journals, case laws and medical journals. Available to all students, the service is most heavily used by law and business-related majors.

Because of the limitations of the subscription, Lexis/Nexis is restricted to two heavily-used terminals in the library which require sign-up sheets, but Ausel anticipates the number of terminals growing in the future.

Workshops are also being offered for faculty and graduate students in the areas of women's studies and Latin American studies. Led by Emily Silverman and Peter Stern respectively, the workshops will take place throughout February and March.

"Women's studies is such an interdisciplinary discipline, there's a lot of material to be aware of," Ausel commented on why Women's studies required such a workshop.

In addition, a course titled

Turn to WORKSHOPS, page 2

No shadow means early spring, say acolytes of furry woodland

By Casey Combs
Associated Press

PUNXSUTAWNEY, Pa. — An outdoor bash that looked like a summertime rock concert, complete with bare-chested men and fireworks, was a fitting prelude yesterday to Punxsutawney Phil's forecast: Spring is nearly here.

The sky was cloudy on Groundhog Day and the celebrated rodent failed to see his shadow at sunrise, just the 14th time that's happened in 111 years of Pennsylvania prognostications. (The last time, in 1995, turned out to be a bad guess.)

"He's just kind of complacent and ready to go about the things groundhogs do," said Bud Dunkel, president of the Punxsutawney Groundhog Club.

A shadow sighting, according to tradition, would have indicated six more weeks of winter.

It was a unanimous decision among groundhogs around the nation. Concurring opinions came from New York City's Staten Island Chuck; Gen. Beauregard Lee of Lilburn, Ga.; Jimmy of Sun Prairie, Wis.; Wanda at the Milwaukee County Zoo, and Buckeye Chuck of Marion, Ohio.

"We don't really care what he [Phil] says," said Jimmy spokesman Scott Lange.

Even a prairie dog got into the act: "early spring" said Lander Lil of Lander, Wyo.

Phil was pulled from his temporary burrow in a hollowed-out maple stump at 7:25 a.m. by handler Bill Deeley, whose heavy glove saved his fingers from the annoyed critter's sharp teeth.

Dunkel then looked into the 15-pound woodchuck's eyes and pretended to translate "groundhogese."

The forecast won a cheer from the estimated 20,000-plus fans who

Turn to GROUNDHOG, page 2

For Your Information

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Monday, Feb. 3

Auditions — The University Chorale needs a few good men (particularly basses), and women too. Auditions will be held from 3–5 p.m. or by arrangement. Call 545–4313 for more information.

Film — Le Colonel Chabert, directed by Yves Angelo, will be screened in Merrill 1 on the Amherst College campus at 4 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. In French with English subtitles. Free and open to the public.

Tuesday, Feb. 4

Discussion — Portrait of a Lady, by Henry James, is the selection for the Odyssey Bookshop's monthly Open Book Discussion tonight at 7 p.m. Marjorie Kaufman, a professor emeritus of English at Mount Holyoke College, will lead the discussion.

Discussion — Zionist for Action sponsors Israel Issues Discussion Group at 7:30 p.m. in the Hillel House. Topic: "Division and Conflicts in Israeli Society." Discussion led by Shoshana Madmoni.

Meeting — The UMass Ballroom Dance Club's first general meeting will be held at 5:30 p.m. in 101 Totman Gym. For info call Kevin Murphy at 549–4036.

Meeting — Hey math majors! Welcome back. Come to the first spring meeting of the Math Club at 7 p.m. in LGRT 1521D. As always, snacks provided.

Meeting — The Ski Club will hold its first general meeting of the semester at 7 p.m. in Earthfoods. Members can get deals on tuning, waxing and lift passes for $30. For more info, call 545–3437.

Meeting — UMass Hillel Council's Kick–Off meeting will be held at 6 p.m. in Campus Center 904. Looking for Jewish student activists to help set 1997 Hillel Agenda for social, religious and cultural activities.

Wednesday, Feb. 5

Community Service — The UMass Community Service Program is sponsoring its annual Spring Volunteer Fair today from 11 a.m. – 1 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. Over 40 local service agencies will be on hand to discuss opportunities to volunteer or participate in internships. Any questions, call 545–3327.

Dance — Israeli dancing will be held from 8:30–10 p.m. in the Greenough Residence Hall basement. Instruction included. The event is free and sponsored by UMass Hillel.

Lecture — Susan L. Taylor, editor–in–chief of Essence Magazine and author of In the Spirit: The Inspirational Writings of Susan L. Taylor, will speak at Mount Holyoke College at 7:30 p.m. in Chapin Auditorium. The lecture is free and open to the public.

Meeting — The Animal Rights Coalition will be holding their first general meeting at 7 p.m. in Campus Center room 908. All beliefs are welcome and diversity is encouraged. Refreshments available.

Meeting — The UMass Poetry Society will hold its first meeting of the semester at 7 p.m. in room 917 of the Campus Center. New members are always welcome. For more information, call Tim at 546–0562.

Meeting — Have you ever done theater or always wanted to? If so, then the UMass Theater Guild wants you! Come to our first meeting of the semester at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center. Many artistic positions are available for the spring shows, Fame and Heidi Chronicles. Audition information will be available. Call the UMTG office at 545–0415 or Tara 546–2104 for more information.

Notices

Karate — The UMass Shotoran Karate Club is now accepting new members. No prior experience necessary. Come watch and join our daily training in a traditional Japanese martial art. For more info, contact Loukia at 549–8058 or Ian at 549–5485.

Orientation — Orientation tours for the W.E.B. Du Bois Library will be held Feb. 3–7. The tours will leave from the Entrance lobby at 10:30 a.m. and 2:30 p.m. daily. We encourage you to come, visit and get to know the library.

Independent study — Resources in Women's Studies Research, WOST 496B, will be held Wednesdays, 4–4:50 p.m. in the Calipari Instruction Room in the W.E.B. Du Bois Library. Recommended for juniors and seniors. Call instructor Emily Sillverman at 545–0995 or email essilverman@library.umass.edu to register.

Volunteer work — Do you love community service, helping others, volunteering with children, leadership opportunities and making new friends? Join the UMass Circle K Club. 409 Student Union. Call Aimee or Suzanne at 665–7712 for more info.

Internships — Internships are available working on Earth Day, Hunger, Recycling and Clean Air. Call Melanie at MassPirg, 545–0199 or stop by the office at 423–A Student Union Building.

Comedy — The UMass improv comedy show Mission Improvable will perform every Saturday in the Campus Center Basement at 8 p.m. Free.

Religious — The Alliance Church of the Pioneer Valley in south Amherst will provide rides to church. Pick up is at 9:40 a.m. on campus. Call Mark at 253–0361 for more information.

Support group — REFLECT, the Five College bereavement support program is offering two support groups this semester: A grief support group for those who have experienced the death of someone close to them; and an illness group for those currently coping with the serious illness of a loved one. If you or someone you know is interested, please call us at 577–5316 for more information.

Support group — Overeaters Anonymous, a group of individuals who share an addiction to food and suffer from compulsive eating and other eating disorders, will hold weekly meetings on Saturdays at 10 a.m. in the Campus Center. The only requirement for membership is the desire to stop eating. There are no dues or fees. Donations are strictly voluntary. For more info, call (617)641–2303.

Astronomy — The Amherst Area Amateur Astronomers Association will hold free public planetarium shows at 4 p.m. every Saturday in February at Amherst College Bassett Planetarium. Appropriate for all ages. Dates: Feb., 8, 15, 22. For information, call Tom Whitney at 256–6234.

Community — The Hampshire County Women, Infant and Children (WIC) Program has opened a new office serving the greater Amherst area, on 150 Fearing St., Amherst. Hampshire County WIC is a supplemental food and nutrition program serving eligible pregnant, breast–feeding and postpartum women and their infants and children under age 5. For more information, call (413)584–3591.

Dance — Cajun Dancing and Appalachian clogging beginner lessons will be offered on Sunday evenings from 6– 7 p.m. at 132 Elm St., Westfield. Partners are not needed and all ages are welcome. No prior dance experience is necessary. Classes are instructed by Maple Run, and non–profit dance group that performs at fairs and community functions. For more information, contact Jo Sarnelli at (413)746–9067.

Film — The interdepartmental program in film studies is offering its fourth annual Multicultural Film Festival: "Emigres, Exiles and Sojourners in Contemporary Cinema" this spring. Screenings and discussions with directors and faculty will be held on Wednesday evenings, 231 Herter Hall at UMass and Stirn Auditorium at Amherst College, at 7 p.m. The first event will be When Mother Comes Home for Chrismas, a documentary by Nilita Vachani (Sri Lanka/Greece, 1995) on Feb. 25. For a full schedule, watch for brochures and posters at the beginning of February, or check out our webpage: www.umass.edu/film.

■ workshops

continued from page 1

"Essentials of Library Research" will be meeting once a week and is worth credit for students who enroll. Not open to the general public, the course is designed to make the library more accessible to students for whom English is a second language.

Ausel said the course will "give them an introduction to the library that the language barrier would make more difficult."

Asked about the changing role of libraries as we head toward the turn of the century and the Information Age, Ausel noted that even she couldn't predict what the next 20 years will hold, though she does know her profession will be impacted.

"It has a huge impact on us. Librarians are trained to manage information," Ausel said. "Technology makes it possible for librarians to reach greater numbers of people, to have a librarian outside of a library [who] can take pieces of the library with them."

Even with such revolutionary changes on the horizon, Ausel feels the printed book has no reason to be afraid.

"I don't think people can sit and read a computer screen for three hours like a book," she said. "People like holding on to things."

■ groundhog

continued from page 1

gathered in a small clearing at Gobbler's Knob in the central Pennsylvania woods. Most had waited for hours as the temperature hovered around a relatively balmy 30.

At sunup, Phil got a wakeup call from a round of fireworks. If that wasn't enough noise, there was a mass dance and sing-along to "YMCA," chants of "Day-O! Daylight come and I want to see Phil," and portly local radio station manager Chris Lash dancing atop Phil's stump to "Play That Funky Music."

Police occasionally confiscated beer as zealots waved signs reading "We came to see the rat," "Phil rules!" and "The other white meat."

"I think we've created a monster," Dunkel said.

"It's a combination of a little bit of cabin fever... plus it's on a weekend," he said.

Kevin Mason, a sophomore at Villanova, drove five hours through the night on a lark with a carload of classmates.

"We heard it's ragin'," said Mason, 19.

Attention potential news writers:

There will be an important meeting for all people interested in news writing Thursday at 7 p.m. in the Collegian Newsroom. Everyone is welcome, even if you have already contacted me about writing. Call 545–1762 if you cannot attend. Thanks!

-Laura Stock, News Editor

Hurry! Get Your Senior INDEX Yearbook Photo

NOW!

This will be the Final Sitting!

February 3 - February 28

Campus Center Rm. 177

Call Now To Schedule a sitting.

There is a $5 sitting fee.

the INDEX

(800) 836-0558

CAREER OPPORTUNITIES

ATTENTION JUNIORS & GRADUATING SENIORS!

Learn more about our exciting Executive Training Program & Summer Internship Opportunities!

Be sure to bring your resumé!

Join Recent Alums at our Open House where you can learn more about the fast-paced world of retail and the many opportunities that are available.

MAY

Or contact us...

◊ By phone... 617-357-2085
◊ By FAX... 617-357-2434
◊ By E-Mail... Recruiting@Filene's.com

OPEN HOUSE

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 10AM-4PM
SOM 312 (FACULTY LOUNGE)

FILENE'S

A Division of the May Department Stores Company

Scientists warn of unknown effects from tobacco ingredients

By Martin Finucane
Associated Press

BOSTON — Little is known about what happens in the tiny inferno at the end of a cigarette where tobacco and additives go up in smoke, scientists said Friday.

But people should know what chemicals are burning there because it may be harming their health, the scientists said.

The tobacco industry in 1994 released a list of 599 additives that companies put into their products. The vast majority are approved by the federal government for use in food products, said John Pauly, a cancer researcher from Buffalo, N.Y.

That doesn't mean, however, that they are harmless when burned and inhaled, said Pauly, who claimed that licorice, one of the additives, produces a carcinogen when burned.

"Licorice, when added to a cigarette, takes on a whole new dimension," Pauly said.

The testimony came during the second day of a Department of Public Health hearing on the state's first-in-the-nation law that requires tobacco companies to disclose the ingredients in cigarettes, snuff and chewing tobacco.

The law is to go into effect on July 1, but the department must first hold public hearings on how to implement the law.

The tobacco industry says the law, which would require the companies to divulge the additives on a brand-by-brand basis, would damage their business by forcing them to reveal trade secrets. They're fighting the measure in federal court.

They declined to testify in person at the two-day hearing, which concluded Friday, but submitted a written statement, saying the state law was unconstitutional and conflicted with federal law in the same area.

"This is the single most toxic and carcinogenic product available anywhere. On top of that, you're putting things into it, and you don't know what they are and you don't know what effect they'll have," said Dr. David Burns, of the University of California at San Diego.

Ronald Davis, former director of the Office on Smoking and Health at the Centers for Disease Control, testified that research was needed on how the ingredients in cigarettes interact when they burn. He said that research couldn't be done without knowing what ingredients are in each brand.

He also warned that "substances recognized as safe when eaten because they are rendered harmless by stomach acid might be carcinogenic when burned."

Tobacco company lawyers said most of the ingredients added to cigarettes didn't change their chemical form when they were burned. The additives have been approved for use in food and the toxicological studies allowing their use in food are "relevant" when it comes to inhaling them, Clausen Ely, a partner in the Washington firm, Covington and Burling, said in a telephone interview.

The additives are safe when inhaled in cigarettes "assuming the levels of exposure are no greater" than in food, he said. Those additives that do change their chemical form when burned "produce compounds similar to compounds produced when tobacco leaf itself is burned," said David Remes, another industry lawyer. The lawyers also pointed to a consultants' review of industry research on the health effects of additives, including licorice. The report — released when the industry released its list of ingredients in 1994 — found "there was no evidence that any ingredient added to cigarette tobacco produces harmful effects under the conditions of use in cigarettes."

KENNETH W. P. SCOTT \ COLLEGIAN

I'm watching you...
This squirrel seen up in a tree was more concerned with passing students than the mild temps of yesterday.

Police use water cannon on protesters

By Misha Savic
Associated Press

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — Riot police used their shields and a water cannon to clear thousands of pro-democracy protesters from a Belgrade bridge and beat fleeing protesters following a tense four-hour standoff yesterday.

Opposition leaders urged the protesters to disperse peacefully and to avoid clashes.

Reporters for the independent Radio Index station said police were clubbing protesters who fled into neighboring streets. Radio stations said some television crews had been beaten. The extent of their injuries was not immediately clear.

After police earlier prevented opposition leader Vuk Draskovic from leading supporters over the bridge to a daily pro-democracy rally, he urged Belgrade citizens to confront the police but not clash with them.

"Come out, citizens of Belgrade," Draskovic said live on an independent radio station Sunday, the 75th straight day of protests demanding the government honor opposition victories in Nov. 17 municipal elections.

The government, led by Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic, refused to acknowledge the opposition victories, which were confirmed by international observers, in Belgrade and 13 other major cities.

Other opposition leaders who joined their supporters in different districts of Belgrade scrapped plans to rally downtown and instead marched toward the bridge, which leads to downtown Belgrade.

As Belgrade citizens poured to the scene of the standoff from side streets, opposition leaders said their supporters would continue facing the police until the police let them move around freely.

Radio Index said police reinforcements were also grouping in adjacent streets.

Hundreds of riot police first used their shields, then brought in the water cannon.

Meanwhile, editors of two newspapers critical of the government have been interrogated by police in what could be another crackdown on independent media in Serbia.

Petar Lazic, chief editor of the satirical weekly Krmaca (Sow), was taken from his home Saturday and questioned for two hours by police, Bosko Savkovic, business manager of the weekly, said Sunday.

Lazic was questioned about a satirical photomontage that compared Milosevic to the Iraqi dictator Saddam Hussein. Police said Lazic could face charges of slander.

Editors and staff of the independent daily Demokratija (Democracy) were also questioned in the newspaper office by plainclothes policemen, journalists at the paper said.

The policemen had an order from the district attorney, who is investigating whether the paper broke laws by publishing a paid advertisement urging readers to flood government institutions with telephone calls and block their lines.

Milosevic previously has shut down Radio Index and Radio B-92, another independent radio station that carries live reports from the protests, but allowed them to continue after international pressure.

Sunday Bloody Sunday recalled 25 years later

By Shawn Pogatchnik
Associated Press

LONDONDERRY, Northern Ireland — Twenty-five years after British troops gunned down 13 Roman Catholic demonstrators, more than 20,000 marchers and political leaders called for justice yesterday in a display of anger and grief.

Locals flanked the podium carrying 25-foot-high banners depicting each of Bloody Sunday's victims, who included both IRA supporters and moderates.

The commemoration yesterday served as a de facto election rally for leaders of the IRA-allied Sinn Fein party, which hopes to win seats in upcoming British Parliament elections.

Many of those at yesterday's commemoration were Sinn Fein supporters bused from across Northern Ireland. They were accompanied by fife-and-drum corps in black berets, their drums and banners honoring slain IRA members.

The additives are safe when inhaled in cigarettes "assuming the levels of exposure are no greater" than in food, he said. Those additives that do change their chemical form when burned "produce compounds similar to compounds produced when tobacco leaf itself is burned," said David Remes, another industry lawyer. The lawyers also pointed to a consultants' review of industry research on the health effects of additives, including licorice. The report — released when the industry released its list of ingredients in 1994 — found "there was no evidence that any ingredient added to cigarette tobacco produces harmful effects under the conditions of use in cigarettes."

Do You Need Money?

The Collegian is hiring!

✓ Drivers to Deliver morning papers
✓ Distribution Manager

$$$$$$

Make $ and build your resume!

Call Alycia at 545-3500 or come to the Collegian 113 Campus Center

BECOME AN AIR FORCE OFFICER.

Take the first step to becoming a leader in today's Air Force. Put your college degree to work in the Air Force Officer Training School. After completing Officer Training School you can become a commissioned Air Force officer with:

- great starting pay
- medical and dental care
- 30 days vacation with pay per year
- management opportunities

Discover how far a career in the Air Force can take you and what it takes to qualify. Call

AIR FORCE OPPORTUNITIES
TOLL FREE
1-800-423-USAF

AIR FORCE

TOC Bar & Grill

Munchie Specials Mon - Fri 4 - 7 PM

Monday Feb. 3 at 7:30pm UMASS vs. Fordham A-10 Conference Game

Free Popcorn Draft Beer Drink Specials & Micro Brews

UMass basketball

11th Floor Campus Center
Mon.-Fri. 4pm - 12:30am
Sat. 5pm - 12:30am

DAILY COLLEGIAN

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592
http://www.umass.edu/rso/collegian

Jacob W. Michaels Editor-in-Chief Chris Taylor Conner Managing Editor
Alycia Hines Business Manager Josh Sylvester Production Manager Craig J. Brody Advertising Manager
David Voldan Advertising Production Manager Lisa Chiu Senior Diversity Editor

Jeremy Brothers Arts & Living Editor
Humphrey brown III Black Affairs Editor
Lisa Chiu Developing Nations Editor
Mike Burke Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jamie Sinstheimer Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sarah Kimmel Jewish Affairs Editor
Raghuram Vadarevu Multicultural Affairs Co-Editor
Christine Soh Multicultural Affairs Co-Editor
Laura Stock News Editor
Thang Vo Photography Editor
Casey Kane Sports Co-Editor
Chris Stamm Sports Co-Editor
Michelle Hillman Women's Issues Editor
Marc Dionne Editorial Production Manager
Position Vacant Systems Manager
Eric R. Remillard IV Finance Manager
Position Vacant Circulation Manager
Feisal Ahmad Marketing Manager
Jaclyn E. Alberti Classifieds Manager
Lyle A. Henry Operations Manager
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Thomas F. Sweeney, Jr. Graphics Advisor/Instructor
David Quist Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Opinion/Editorial

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

A hungry Minuteman on revenge.

Black History Month

· Editor's note: The following piece is the first in a multi- part series dedicated to Black History Month that will run throughout February on this page. Future topics include the influence of W.E.B. Du Bois, the Ebonics controversy, the Black Mass Communications Project and the Nation of Islam.

Martin Luther King exposed

R. Jay Allain

Fifty years ago, George Orwell wrote his classic work 1984 to warn humankind that the seeds of a most terrible tyranny were already present in society and, if we failed to heed his wake-up call, Big Brother would eventually rule.

We laugh nervously or dismiss outright the nightmarish world he depicted where no one is free to think independently or dissent. In fact, so intent is the ruling clique on total social control that they employ citizens, including the protagonist, Winston, to rewrite history by going through old newspapers and removing any reference to former times when acts of rebellion and conflict occurred.

You are probably wondering what Orwell has to do with Reverend Martin Luther King Jr., and Black History Month today. The point I'm evoking is: To what extent has the real Dr. King been rewritten? Has the radical nature of his life, ideas and struggle been watered down for popular consumption? Even if true, some would argue the Civil Rights Era is long ago and rather than sanitizing Dr. King's vision for some sinister reason, it is more likely that the mere passage of time has clouded our collective memory. Besides, what sinister force or forces would do this?

For many of us, the memory of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. conjures up distant memories of his eloquent "I Have a Dream" speech, marches in the deep South and his tragic murder on a motel balcony in Memphis in 1968. Yet we easily forget that his trenchant critique of society struck at the very pillars that undergird it — and are at least as relevant today as they were 30 years ago. The three mighty pillars he took on are: racism, militarism and materialism. He perceived the terrible linkage between these socially accepted "ism's" and saw that no genuine advancement of human aspiration — white as well as black — was possible until these structures of oppression was dismantled.

In his politically adept and spiritually profound piece, "Letter from a Birmingham Jail," King explains why he led protests to overturn the status quo in Birmingham, Ala. The letter, in response to one issued by eight white clergymen deploring the demonstrations and calling them "unwise and untimely" replied: "[It] is even more unfortunate that the white power structure of this city left the Negro community with no other alternative."

Even today most whites have been socialized to blame the victim; we readily dismiss the misery people of color endure in the job market, in housing, in the legal system. Perhaps our quickness to label is meant to shield us from the challenge articulated by writer Greg Williams: "As members of the dominant society with all the privileges that pigmentation — even if it is unwanted — brings or allows, whites have a specific obligation to act against racism."

Thus racism festers today: A given, just like a mean teacher or an uncle who gossips — unfortunate but tolerated until it affects me.

King saw the suffering of his people and watched when he told his 6-year old daughter that she couldn't go to the local amusement park because she was not white; he saw "the depressing clouds of inferiority begin to form in her little mental sky" and he knew sermons to fellow Negroes were not enough. It was time to act. The Big Brothers of today want us to forget there is power when people unite and protest injustice.

King's revulsion at militarism's stranglehold on society flared when he saw thousands of Negro soldiers denied first- class status here sent to Southeast Asia to oppress and kill the people there — also a people of color.

With countless Negroes in the United States groaning under the weight of poverty wages, unemployment and substandard living conditions, he remarked: "A country that continues to spend more money on weapons of destruction than on programs of social uplift is approaching spiritual death."

Like a fiery prophet from the Old Testament, he exposed the ugly truths that the best and brightest were supposed to ignore. He, again, was scorned for his staunch rejection of the war in Vietnam. He refused to be quiet when legitimate human needs were stifled beneath the pseudo–logic of the "Domino Theory" (if South Vietnam goes Communist, who will be next?) and the Cold War (use any method possible to undermine the USSR).

But today with the Cold War over, the U.S. military budget remains at Cold War levels. Policy elites have squelched all talk of the so–called "peace dividend" — new social spending made possible by the USSR's demise — and we nod.

Finally, materialism has become such a prevailing norm that It is hard to detect anymore — at least until the credit card bill comes due, bankruptcy is considered, or the second job become untenable. Credit card debt has doubled over the past five years as a squeezed middle class vainly tries to accumulate the trappings of success. We forget the playing field itself is being savagely warped. A 1980s Congressional survey showed more than 50 million people in this country lived in families earning less than $5,000 per year. Yet when one finds the typical household watching television for more than six hours a day, with ads intoning us to purchase everything from cars to snack foods, one glimpses the depth of our plight. As Erich Fromm observed, the guiding belief to becoming: "I consume, therefore I am."

As a true humanitarian, Dr. King witnessed the corrosive effect of materialism on the human spirit. And alas, that corrosion now is even further along.

In conclusion, we recall but a vestige of the real Dr. King because his whole story makes us uncomfortable. While we know society faces severe and mounting social ills — and racism, militarism and materialist are deeply implicated as the culprits — it is hard to muster the resolve necessary to address them.

Thus like all great prophets, Dr. King was forced from the scene.

The Big Brother of 1997 has given us February as Black History Month. We appease ourselves, asking: Why should I be disturbed hearing some radical message? Surely conditions are better than they were.

R. Jay Allain is a UMass graduate. He currently resides in Springfield.

Shakespoor

Evan Young

This is my last semester of undergraduate work at this university. In fact, this is my last semester of undergraduate study ever. No more Gen Eds, no more electives, no more classes in cramped auditoriums with dry lecturers.

On one hand, I am ecstatic about graduating. To tell the truth, I'm tired of all the work. Too many times it seems like I've written papers simply for the sake of handing one in and getting a good grade. Too many times I've taken classes that simply stunk, with disinterested or uninteresting professors.

As an example, I took a Shakespeare class last semester because I love Shakespeare. Combine the facts that a) Shakespeare is the greatest playwright ever, and b) I love reading his works — how could this class go wrong?

To sum it up, that class turned out to be the worst class I've ever taken at this school. I can't say enough bad things about either the way the professor conducted his lectures or the material he used to effectively suck the interest out of every play we covered.

At one point, he read most of a scene of The Merchant of Venice to us, supplementing each one of Shylock's lines with a horrendous Jewish accent. To English majors: This is not a joke.

Why am I belaboring this issue? Because now, in looking back at my undergraduate career, I struggle to think of what it is I've truly learned here at the University of Massachusetts. I also struggle to think about what it is that I have been taught. Have I not learned everything that I could have? It's easy to let four years slide by, doing as little actual work with as possible, and yet still get good grades. I've often found that getting an A in some classes does not require a complete grasp of the materials. It's easier to get good grades by making it sound like you know what you're talking about than it is to actually learn and understand the course material.

So where can I put the responsibility of educational learning? In many cases, the student has almost complete control of what they want to study, what they want to skim and what they want to wipe with. The knowledge you will get out of a course directly correlates with the work you want to put into it. This can range anywhere from everything it has to offer down through absolutely nothing.

But lets face it: students can only do so much. I have thought countless of times that if I had only one or two classes a semester instead of five, then I would have had the time to do all of the work that professors wanted me to. Don't you really hate it when every one of your professors thinks that his or her class is the most important? It's almost as if they think that you are only taking their one class, not four others requiring the same amount of work.

So who is really in charge of education? While students can learn what they want, professors have the real control over what they teach and how much of it they think you should learn and be graded on. Remember this, because it is an integral part of education: Professors not only have the ability to make learning interesting, but the responsibility as well.

I am completely within my rights to lay the full amount of blame for a horrible class on a professor who I think ruins his subject matter, such as my Shakespeare professor did. He failed to make me want to learn, and as a result my grades suffered. I struggled through completely uninteresting lectures with a professor who was downright incompetent at leading a decent class discussion. Of course I got a lousy grade! Drudgery is worth no more of my attention!

The sad part of this is that what you are reading, this column, is the only retaliation that I have as a student. Many professors say that their departments take end–of–the–year course evaluations very seriously. Was I the only one who thought it was a bad class? How can such a professor continue to teach, for years and years, without anyone noticing his shortcomings? He must be getting bad evaluations from other students — what has been done?

I may not know the extent to which any of the teachers go to make their courses constantly better. This particular professor may be trying very hard, may be working with his peers, getting advice from any number of other people, or doing mounds of research to improve his classes. Maybe he and other department members take a very serious and hard look at the student evaluations, and amend their practices every year. But I expect the result after 15, 20, even 30 years to be much, much better.

I am using this particular professor as an example; because I have had one bad English class does not mean that I think the English department here is full of equally poor teachers. I think just the opposite. The English program at our school is filled with incredible professors who are not only interesting teachers but interesting writers or poets as well. I suggest our University's English program to anyone who thinks that they might be interested. After all, if it weren't for our fine program, I would not have been able to write this article.

But, as a student, you are entitled to the highest quality of teaching in the classroom that your tens of thousands of dollars is affording. Expect the best, raise hell for anything less. You are here to learn, but you are here to be taught and interested as well.

Evan Young is a Collegian columnist.

Is there any way to save a system that's rotten to the core?

Daniel Bodah

I had a chance to speak with Mr. Ritt Goldstein this past week. Goldstein is the chairman and founder of the Connecticut–based Standing Committee on Law Enforcement and Development (SCOLED,) and has written the Civilian Oversight of Law Enforcement bill currently before the Connecticut State Legislature, which was written about in this column last week.

Goldstein's efforts have made him a hero to some. He says that, since gaining prominence for challenging systematic police abuses of power, he has been receiving mail from dozens of people. By his estimate, three out of every four of these letters are from victims of police brutality asking for help. One particularly harrowing letter he received came from a woman who'd been stopped by police who then subjected her to an improper strip search and raped her with a pistol barrel.

In fact, Goldstein is a veritable encyclopedia of incidents in which cops have victimized citizens. From theft of money during searches (a common offense, according to Goldstein,) to more serious incidents of sexual harassment and rape, to violent attempts at silencing their critics, the offenses of the police against those they are hired to protect and serve should outrage all who value their freedom.

Goldstein also knows about police brutality firsthand. The day I spoke to him, he had been maced by police. This is a daily event, with officers often macing him from behind and then standing there smiling when he turns around. According to Goldstein, "chemicals are the rubber hose of the '90s." Testing has found that Goldstein's body contains a dangerously high level of chemicals used to manufacture toxic agents for pesticides an[d] chemical weapons.

The National Association for Civilian Oversight of Law Enforcement (NACOLE), has interceded on Goldstein's behalf with the Connecticut Attorney General's office in an attempt to get an official investigation into these charges. This effort comes after numerous letters to the Attorney General's office, as well as to U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno, went unanswered.

Obviously there is a need for civilian oversight. Goldstein says, "the biggest problem America faces today is realizing the reality of what America is — and making it what It was." But is that really the direction we need to move for change?

Looking back at what the U.S. was in those glorious days of its youth is disillusioning. We know that our nearly– sacred founding fathers, the ones who said things like "all men are created equal," often owned slaves, rejected outright the idea that women had rights, and systematically worked to exploit, displace and "exterminate" (to quote Benjamin Franklin) the indigenous inhabitants of this continent.

Our heritage isn't one of freedom. The corruption of our authorities — so readily on display through campaign finance improprieties, systematic police brutality and blatant kowtowing to corporate profit cravings — is our heritage, totally consistent with the governance of our founders. What we need is nothing less than a complete revision of the principles underlying our political system.

We should support efforts like the SCOLED bill, and let our "representatives" know that we favor citizen involvement in policing. And we should demand justice for persecuted citizens like Goldstein. But that isn't enough.

As has been proven time and time again, the powers–that– be are master manipulators at keeping their institutions secure through scandals and reforms. The nightmare they are struggling against is the nightmare of true democracy, in which we the people (and that means all the people) truly govern ourselves. Civilian oversight of cops is only a small step; why not civilian oversight of all government? Why not civilian government?

Daniel Bodah is a Collegian columnist.

Doonesbury BY GARRY TRUDEAU

TONIGHT!

NEW AND RETURNING WRITERS ARE ENCOURAGED TO ATTEND TONIGHT'S MEETING FOR THE ED/ OP DESK AT 7 P.M. IN THE COLLEGIAN NEWSROOM. WE ARE CURRENTLY SEEKING WELL INFORMED WRITERS TO COVER POLITICS, UNIVERSITY AFFAIRS, SOCIAL ISSUES AS WELL AS A PLETHORA OF OTHER TOPICS. JOIN US TODAY AND YOUR ARTICLE COULD BE HERE TOMORROW! IF YOU CAN NOT MAKE THIS IMPORTANT MEETING PLEASE CALL MIKE AT 545–1491 OR STOP BY THE OFFICE.

Arts & Living

Monday, February 3, 1997
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Jazz king Branford Marsalis brings act to Iron Horse

By Joshua Boyd
Collegian Staff

Tonight the Iron Horse in Northampton will welcome the most famous name in jazz of the '90s: Branford Marsalis. While most probably know the saxophonist from his days as Jay Leno's former bandleader on "The Tonight Show," Marsalis has recorded numerous albums both on his own and with other leaders.

Aside from straight jazz, he has also recorded and/or jumped on the concert stage with the likes of Sting (especially on The Dream Of The Blue Turtles album and accompanying tour) and the Grateful Dead (an amazing rendition of their jazzy original "Eyes Of The World" can be heard on the live Without A Net double–set) as well as Bruce Hornsby.

COURTESY TIMOTHY WHITE

Ex–"Tonight Show" bandleader Branford Marsalis at the Iron Horse.

On his albums, Marsalis has hit all the bases on the modern jazz spectrum. While synthesizers would rudely budge their way easily into some of his '80s recordings, he has also featured plain old be–bop as well as more abstract ideas including the textures and off–beat explorations from his latest album The Dark Keys, released last fall. Marsalis also has a jazz/hip–hop project, called Buckshot Lefonque.

The shows, tonight at 7 and 10 p.m., features his trio of Rodney Whitaker on bass and Jeff "Tain" Watts, who churned out a fantastic performance on The Dark Keys, on drums.

Marsalis is not a Cinderella story in jazz as he was born into the legendary Marsalis family featuring Ellis, Wynton and Delfeayo. Branford's father, Ellis, was a well–known pianist and jazz instructor around New Orleans. Wynton, a trumpeter, has been on the jazz scene longer than his brother Branford, but has not shared the same success. Another brother, Delfeayo, produced The Dark Keys and should be hailed for his pure and up–front production job, as well as his own trombone skills.

Branford Marsalis should provide some inspirational playing tonight. His appearance here in the Valley is a great treat and it should be a melodic and exciting night for all fortunate enough to attend.

The Branford Marsalis Trio performs tonight at the Iron Horse at 7 and 10 p.m.. Both shows are sold out.

H_2O & company take Pearl Street by storm

By Adam Dlugacz
Collegian Staff

H2O
Pearl Street
Feb. 1

Bodies crashing into other bodies, kids diving on top of each other, microphone stands flying and not one frown in the whole place — New York's H2O blew Pearl Street up Saturday night.

Proving that you don't have to be political or play heavy metal to get the crowd moving, H2O reminded the crowd what it's like to have fun at a hardcore show.

As soon as frontman Toby Morse hit the stage with his band, the crowd proved that, yes, hardcore fans can jump. Following up with crowd favorites like "Surrounded," the anthem "Here Today Gone Tomorrow" and "Scene Report," the crowd was singing along like it was their jobs.

Showing that they are in tune with their roots, H2O covered Minor Threat's "Salad Days" and "Hard Times" by the Cro–Mags. A[n] U2's "With Or Without You" was also enjoyed by most. They also busted out three new songs that will have you doing the Roger Rabbit or the Running Man in no time.

H2O are a throwback band to the time when hardcore was fun, when you could sing along, stagedive, dance with abandon, bug out, or chill.

Stillsuit, Hallraker and Fastbreak opened up the show. Fastbreak play old–school, youth crew–style hardcore; while they are not the most original band, they're tight and it's always good to see you[ng] kids in bands.

Hallraker once again proved why they are the best band in the Valley and are on the verge of making some serious noise. Plus they added a cover of the Bad Brains' "Supertouch" causing stage diving craze.

New York's Stillsuit were amazing, but the crowd just didn't really know them.

Strangefolk live up to name in Butterfield

By Sarah J. Kimmel
Collegian Staff

STRANGEFOLK
Butterfield Basement
Jan. 31

The Strangefolk concert held in the Butterfield basement on Friday sold out in under an hour. The quartet returned to the University of Massachusetts to present another hand– clapping, can't–stop–dancing show that rocked throughout the Central Residential Area.

The Vermont band woke up the audience with the Star Wars theme song and continued to rock the walls of Butterfield until 1 a.m.

Reid Genauer, Strangefolk's lead vocalist and rhythm guitarist, has a voice that is like no other. He creates an energy in the air that forces people to get up and dance. Genauer is backed by lead guitarist Jon Tafton, bassist Erik Glocklear and percussionist Luke P. Smith.

Strangefolk's sound is similar to that of another terrific Vermont band, Phish. This is not to say that they are formed in the cookie cutter image of Phish. Strangefolk has it's own original mix of rock, bluegrass and folk that creates a sound not often heard among many band's today.

Playing off each other, Trafton jams utilizing various pedals and distortion on his acoustic guitar and Genauer responds with a rhythm that carries the tunes.

Tafton is a crafted guitarist who solos in almost every song. He uses his guitar to fill the air with an emotion that coincides with the feeling and honesty that is reflected in their lyrics. One of the night's show stoppers was the bouncy and uplifting beat of their tune, "I'd Rather Go Fishin'" which was sung by Glocklear. The bassist's energetic voice and the catchy lyrics create such a positive vibe that even those who don't really know the words find themselves singing along.

"Sometimes," sung by Genauer, began with a lively acoustic rhythm and inspired all of Butterfield to get up and jam. The lyrics, "I've got a reason to believe/ lonely days are gonna go away," maintain the light mood and epitomize the sound and feeling of Strangefolk.

Even though there were some technical difficulties in the first hour of the concert, the band managed to pull through in the end and put on an incredible performance.

The majority of the songs that were played at the Butterfield concert are from Strangefolk's album, Lore, that has sold hundreds of copies all over the east coast.

The grassroots band has opened for several big name groups such as the Dave Matthews Band, The Band and Jiggle the Handle. Strangefolk has definitely made a name for themselves, not only in Vermont, but at UMass as well.

Check out the Collegian's web page at www.umass.edu/rso/colegian

Wanted: Graphic Artist Assistant
Contact: Lynne Thompson For Portfolio Review
Will Graphic Design Skills And MAC Experience (QUARK, PHOTO
University Health Services
Graphics Dept. 577-5181

DESIGN INVENT CREATE

Use your EDUCATION in ways you never thought possible. DESIGN a new software program. MARKET the next remote access product. CREATE products that fit in the palm of your hand. U.S. Robotics gives entry-level sales professionals MEANINGFUL experience. (You may be new, but your VALUABLE contributions are encouraged, and expected.)

U.S. Robotics is the LEADER in information ACCESS. We make PRODUCTS that connect people with INFORMATION — anytime, anywhere. We hire SALES PEOPLE — with DEGREES in marketing, business, sciences and liberal arts.

Now that you know more about US, we'd like to know more about YOU.

Come see us at the
Career Fair
February 12

If you are unable to stop by, send your resume to: U.S. Robotics, College Relations, 7770 N. Frontage Rd., Skokie, IL 60077, or e-mail: resumes@usr.com We are an equal OPPORTUNITY employer m/f/d/v.

There are NO limits.

U.S.Robotics
The Intelligent Choice for Information Access

HTTP://WWW.USR.COM

EMERGENCY MEDICAL TRAINING
• B[illegible]
• [illegible]
• P[illegible]
• C[illegible]
• C[illegible]
• C[illegible]

COMPUTER FAIR & SALE
TRI-STATE FAIRS
10AM-4:00PM
Buy at wholesale prices right at the show from a[illegible] to 60 companies. 150 exhibit tables featuring the IBM/PC compatible market. From full systems to libraries of CDs, it's all here. Adm $7.50 with ad $5.50 after 1:00 pm $4.50 w/ad only
MULLINS CENTER AMHERST SUND, FEB 9

Go to the Game on the
UNIVERSITY STORE
Register to Win 2 FREE Tickets for
UMass vs. Duquesne
Thursday February 6 7:30 PM
William D. Mullins Center
Enter at the University Store Campus Center
Entries Close Wednesday Feb. 5 at 5PM
UNIVERSITY STORE
Campus Center
545-2619
Hours: M - F 9 AM - 5 PM
Sat 10 AM - 5 PM
ENTRY FORM
NAME
LOCAL PHONE
LOCAL ADDRESS
REGISTER TO WIN 2 FREE TICKETS TO UMASS VS. DUQUESNE
ENTER AT THE UNIVERSITY STORE
EMPLOYEES OF THE UNIVERSITY STORE ARE NOT ELIGIBLE TO WIN

ProENGINEER® → Pro/MECHANICA™ → Pro/ENGINEER® →

Hot Company. Cool Technology.

In the red hot CAD/CAM/CAE marketplace, Parametric Technology Corporation continues to lengthen its lead. Our Pro/ENGINEER® software products and Pro/MECHANICA™ design automation tools have made us the world's #1 vendor in our field. PTC has achieved 35 consecutive quarters of increasing revenues, currently exceeding $600 million...placed #14 on the NASDAQ 100 Index of America's top growth stocks...and won the coveted 1996 COMPUTERWORLD Smithsonian Award for Technical Innovation in Manufacturing. At PTC, you'll find the best of high tech talent, the coolest new technologies, and a fast-paced environment rich in challenge, stimulus and rewards.

We are actively seeking undergraduate and graduate students in the following disciplines:
• MECHANICAL, MANUFACTURING, and AEROSPACE ENGINEERING
• MIS, COMPUTER SCIENCE, MATH, and PHYSICS
• RELATED TECHNICAL FIELDS

PTC provides highly competitive compensation, a matching 401(k) plan, employee stock purchase plan, educational assistance, and a fully paid benefits package.

To explore a future with PTC, please visit your Career Center today. Direct resumes are also accepted. Mail/fax to Human Resources, specifying location preference and either Mechanical Engineering or Software Development interest. Job locations include the following: SAN JOSE, CA — Dept. LT/COL, Parametric Technology Corp., 2590 N. First St., San Jose, CA 95131. Fax: (408) 953-8700; BOSTON, MA and all other offices in N. America, Europe, and the Far East — Dept. PJ/COL, Parametric Technology Corporation, 128 Technology Drive, Waltham, MA 02154. Fax: (617) 398-5674. We are an equal opportunity employer M/F/D/V.

"It's exciting to be on the cutting edge of CAD/CAM and to make an impact on the quality of the product."
Heather Lattanzio, BSME, 1992
Section Manager, Quality Assurance

Catch the latest on PTC and positions worldwide, visit us on the Web.

PARAMETRIC TECHNOLOGY CORPORATION

■ Merrimack

continued from page 10

cle, consequently beating Regan stick-side for the eventual game winner. Goals by juniors Tom Nolan (2 goals) and Eric Nickulas rounded out the first period onslaught, and the verbal cascades of "sieve" followed Regan out of the 4-0 game, with Mallen replacing him with senior goalie Rich Moriarty.

The start of the second period left nothing positive for UMass to build off, and junior Mark Mowers made sure of that fact, netting probably the easiest goal of his career.

All the action was to Moriarty's left, when the puck squirted out into clear ice to his right, and Mowers buried the open netter just :34 into the period. At the 8:23 mark, freshman John Sadowski batted a pop fly that Moriarty could not glove, putting the score to 6-0.

Two and a half minutes later, the senior goalie made a brilliant stop off of senior Tim Murray's initial slap shot. But fellow senior Eric Boguniecki capitalized on the rebound, scoring from his back to put UNH up by a 7-0 score.

A goal by junior Greg Dumont less than a minute later rounded out the second period scoring, and after a fast- paced, exciting third period, UNH added insult to injury with two more scores to make the final of 10-0.

"I thought we had a good chance coming out, but I'll tell you one thing, they got some snipers in that lineup," Mallen said. "When [UNH] got in tight, they were burying pucks, and that's one thing in our program we really don't have.

"That is the one thing over the course of recruiting, and starting to get into the next couple of classes, that we'll be looking for. They can bury them, and they buried their chances early in this game."

On Friday night against Merrimack, UMass got off to a slow start, and the Warriors took advantage, pressuring Regan consistently in the first 10 minutes of the game.

But it was the Minutemen who got on the board first, with sophomore Steve MacKinnon scoring his 13th goal of the season on a power play with 3:57 left in the period.

Junior Brad Norton took a slap-shot from high in the center of the slot, which was redirected first by Bonneau, and then MacKinnon, beating senior goalie Martin Legault for the 1-0 advantage. That advantage was quickly taken away, and freshman Jayson Philbin scored a goal :52 later on Regan that his namesake, Regis, could have scored.

A harmless backhander proved to be a painful reminder not to play any shot casually, and hurt even more with senior Rob Beck's power play goal at the 19:16 mark, making the 2-1 score at the end of the first period.

UMass got quickly back into the game, tying the score up on freshman Jeff Blanchard's strike 2:05 into the second frame.

Blanchard let a rocket fly from the far side of the faceoff circle to Legault's left, and all the goalie could do was scoop the puck out of the net behind him.

But once again, the Minutemen lost any momentum, and the Warriors came back with two unanswered goals by junior Martin Laroche and sophomore Darrel Scoville.

Junior Dan Juden pulled UMass within one goal on a power play at the 12:41 mark, but senior Tom Johnson netted a backhander 3:27 later off of freshman Drew Hale's slap shot to finalize the scoring and the game.

"I think right now we are in a slump, and we got to find a way to work ourselves out of it," Mallen said. "I think a lot of it has to do right now with that we are a little bit beat up. We have a lot of nagging injuries that the guys have had, and a lot of that stuff is catching up to us.

"Basically, I think we need to take a couple of days, get some rest, heal up, and get ready for BU [at home next Friday]. We have been streaky all year, and let's hope that we are streaky by the end of the month, and into March."

■ UNH

continued from page 10

guys, back to going to the old Hockeyfests at the Boston Garden and seeing Donemic Amodeo and others face 'em up for the Wildcats, but Saturday night was something new that puts even the Sasquatch and his buddies on Comm. Ave. to shame.

Wild E. Cat, the team's dancing mascot is the best skating mascot my partner Iorma or I have ever seen in a combined 49 years of hockey fandom (most of those his). It's a small thing, but it really helped fire up the crowd and keep the energy high throughout the dull affair. The cat was performing Laura Stamm caliber backwards crossovers with an awkward costume on, all while dancing like the game was a frat party.

The game had this consistent festive atmosphere as a sea of rowdy students, undoubtedly looking for something to do in the sleepy town, taunted Moriarty and Brian Regan with an incredible intensity, using cheers that were anything but cliche and occasionally quite obscene.

Couple the mascot and fans with a great band that even played Led Zeppelin's "Immigrant Song," with horn sounds to echo Robert Plant's eerie screams perfectly, and despite the long haul and stinker of a game, there was some enjoyment to be had Saturday night if one looked for silver linings.

It's long been my dream since I took this job three years ago to be able to speak as highly of games at Mullins; to see this potential sleeping giant awake. The 10-0 loss to No. 4 UNH is in the past, now UMass must focus on No. 5 Boston University, something far easier to do with a full house at home that's even half as rowdy as the Whit.

Leigh Torbin is a Collegian columnist.

■ regroup

continued from page 10

The first time the Minutemen stretched the lead to seven was on a Travieso 3-pointer 8:15 into the game. Despite having to deal with the pesky Xavier press, Travieso led the way for UMass with a season-high 29 points. In addition, Travieso tied his school record for 3-pointers made in a game (8), yet would go on to set another mark in the second half.

However, the fast Xavier attack led by guards Gary Lumpkin (21 points, 5 assists, 4 steals) and Lenny Brown (16pts, 3 assists) would not lay down.

With 4:20 to go in the first, Lumpkin sank a jumper to bring Xavier within two, 28-26. The Minutemen stretched the lead to seven once again on a Tyrone Weeks bucket with 1:11 to go, giving UMass a 37-32 lead at the half.

In the second frame, both teams struggled for control, as the score was knotted eight times. Down by one, 41-40, the Minutemen got a spark early when Travieso broke the 1,000 point plateau on a 3-pointer. Travieso becomes the 30th UMass hoopster to break the 1,000 point mark, joining the ranks of Julius Erving, Lou Roe and Marcus Camby.

To Travieso, breaking the plateau was bitter-sweet.

"It was special," Travieso said. "Just the way my whole career played out here at UMass. My first year, I didn't think I was going to play, and now, scoring 1,000 points, I obviously did a lot in the past two and a half years. I have to thank my team mates and the coaching staff, they set the plays so I can get open shots. It was tough, because we lost."

UMass has to put this one behind them as they face Fordham in the Bronx, N.Y. tonight at 7 p.m. The Rams (5- 11, 0-6 A-10) have yet to beat an A-10 opponent.

"We don't have much time to think about it [the loss]," Flint said. "We have to go down there on Monday and we got to play Fordham. We just have to go out and play hard. If we keep giving the same type of effort, we'll win some games."

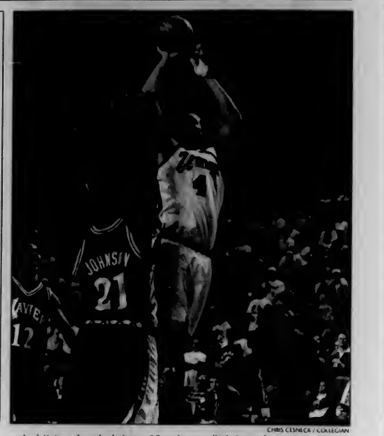
The Minutemen are back at home in the Mullins Center on Thursday when they face Duquesne at 7:30 p.m.

■ Travieso

continued from page 10

Prosser said. "Maybe they all talked about, but we didn't talk about it much in terms of preparation for the game. We did challenge our players that we had been at the same point last year, and had the game somewhat in hand and Massachusetts proved more resolute and won.

"The challenge to our players was not to let that happen this afternoon," he continued. "But it was not, by the coaching staff, built up as much of a revenge motif."



Regardless of the revenge factor, this year's version finished almost exactly the same as last year's.

In regulation, Xavier's last ditch effort came from Lenny Brown. His shot wouldn't fall, but James Posey was there to tip it in.

In overtime, a key steal at the end of the game sealed the game. Last year it was a Padilla steal that resulted in a Charlton Clarke lay-in to cap the scoring. This time around, Xavier ended with the ball after a UMass inbounds pass.

• Creativity abounded during the game as fans went all out designing signs to catch the attention of ABC network cameramen.

Some of the artwork that was spotted included signs that read: "A-10's Best Center," "All 'Bout Clarke," "Amherst is Bruiserball Country," "America Beware Cause UMass is back," "Ajmal Basit and Co.," and "A-10 Basketball Clash."

CHRIS CESNECK / COLLEGIAN

Lari Ketner knocked down 10 points, pulled down four rebounds and blocked five shots in Saturday's loss to Xavier.

Xavier 87, Massachusetts 84

AT MULLINS CENTER

Xavier
(15–3, 6–2 A–10)

Johnson 2–3 4–6 8, Williams 2–5 0–2 4, Braggs 7–10 5–7 19, Brown 5–11 6–7 16, Lumpkin 7–9 5–8 21, Anderson 0–0 2–3 2, Payne 0–0 0–0 0, Carr 0–1 0–1 0, Posey 3–4, 9–10 17.

Massachusetts
(11–10, 5–3 A–10)

Clarke 4–9 4–6 12, Weeks 4–9 4–4 12, Ketner 5–6 0–0 10, Padilla 2–9 3–4 7, Travieso 9–19 8–12 29, Smith 3–3 0–0 6, Basit 2–4 0–0 4, Norville 2–2 0–0 4.

Halftime — Massachusetts 37, Xavier 32. 3-point goals — Massachusetts 8–17 (Travieso 8–12), Xavier 4–7 (Posey 2–2). Fouled out — Padilla, Ketner, Norville. Rebounds — Massachusetts 29 (Weeks, 6), Xavier 27 (Braggs, Lumpkin 5).

Player of the Game

Carmelo Travieso — 29 points, two rebounds, one assist.

Highlights...

Carmelo Travieso led UMass with a team–high and season– high 29 points while scoring his 1,000th career point. Both teams battled for the lead through out, yet No. Xavier took control in the OT. With seconds on the clock, Travieso nailed a 3–pointer putting the Minutemen down 84-85, but in the final 1.5 second of the game, Travieso had a 3-point attempt blocked by Xavier's James Posey. Charlton Clarke and Tyrone Weeks each chipped in with 12 points each while Lari Ketner tallied 10 points before fouling out. Xavier's scoring was lead by Gary Lumpkin who knocked down 21 points in the victory.

Academics and More!!!

UMass Division of Continuing Education

For a free course catalog, call 413-545-0107 or e-mail contined@admin.umass.edu
Explore our web site and see how we can help you - http://www.umass.edu/contined/

Division of Continuing Education
University of Massachusetts Amherst
providing access to adult, nontraditional education for over 25 years

Tons of credit undergrad courses — in the evening!
Nearly 100 noncredit workshops — affordable, fun, practical, including
- Bartending,
- GMAT, GRE, LSAT, & MCAT Preparation,
- Magical Arts,
- Photography,
- ESL,
- EMT Training,
- Marketing,
- and CHOCOLATE !

RUSH ΔY
DELTA UPSILON INVITES ALL UNIVERSITY MEN TO OPEN RUSH!
mon. feb. 3 join us in DU's most historical game... NAGLESCHLAUGEN!!!
tues. feb. 4 come back for a fun night of gambling on... CASINO NIGHT!!! -no money needed-
wed. feb. 5 join us on... HOOTERS NIGHT!!!
ALL EVENTS AT 8pm
FOR MORE INFO CALL KEITH AT 549-3831 OR STOP BY THE HOUSE AT 778 N. PLEASANT STREET
FEEL FREE TO CALL FOR A RIDE
RUSH THE DUCKS

BUY NOW AND SAVE
BACK TO SCHOOL SALE
35% off all Pictoral Calendars
50% off Academic Planners and Calendars
25% off UMass imprinted Spiral Notebooks
10% off Ticketed Price of all Size Coaxial TV Cables - 8', 12', 16' and 25'
10% off all Clocks and Extension cords
Special Back to School Pricing on Popular Calculators
Example TI 85 reg. 129.99 - Now 99.99
Stop in for Weekly "in store" Specials
Books on the New York Times Best Seller List
Always 20% off list
UNIVERSITY STORE
Campus Center 545-2619
Mon-Fri 9-5
Sat 10-5

KENNETH W.P. SCOTT / COLLEGIAN

Kelly Van Huisen and the women's hoop team fell to GW 83–61 yesterday in the Mullins Center.

■ Washington

continued from page 10

61 percent mark from the field, and 89 percent from 3-point land. GW set an A–10 record by going 8–for–9 from downtown, led by senior Lisa Cermignano's 4– for–4.

"Everytime they got a good look at the basket they knocked it down," O'Brien said. "It was that kind of day for them.

"You don't expect someone to go 4–for–4 from 3-point land. You go 8–for–9 and you're having a good day," O'Brien exclaimed.

Cermignano scored 14, shooting a perfect 4–for–4 from the field and 2–2 from the line to complement her unblemished day from the perimeter. The 5–foot–11 forward is the leading 3–point shooter in GW basketball history, men or women. Her third trey at 17:03 of the second half brought her career total to 224, one more than GW's former men's player Kwame Evans for the school record.

The Colonials were strong offensively outside and in the paint, which Coach O'Brien attributed to the inevitability of trying to shut down a powerful offense. "You go inside too much and they're going to shoot you down from outside, you stay out on the shooters and they'll play you one–on–one in the box.

"They've got all the weapons it takes to be a good team, O'Brien added. "They play solid defense. They do all the things you need to do to win."

The times that the Colonials' perimeter shooters were under wraps, additional star–quality performances came from down low. GW's Tajama Abraham and Noelia Gomez proved to be a very solid duo in the Colonials' frontcourt.

Abraham, a 6–foot–3 center from the Virgin Islands lived up to coach Joe McKeown's touting her as one of the three or four top players in the nation. Abraham scored 28 points, going 8–for–8 from the line and blocking four shots in 33 minutes played. Gomez scored 18 points, shooting 7–for–11 from the field while grabbing five boards and blocking three shots.

"Noelia Gomez is one of the best forwards we've ever had," McKeown said. "She doesn't care if she scores 20 points or two points and that is what is great about our team."

As a team, the Minutewomen had their difficulties dealing with a high–pressure GW defense. Eight UMass shots were led on detours by malicious Colonial shot–blockers. The Minutewomen shot 39 percent, including 11–30 in the first half.

The positives were not abounding for the Minutewomen. They had problems dealing with the powerful GW frontcourt, and shot 1–for–6 from outside the arc.

"We played adequately, we played hard, but we didn't get enough things accomplished that we needed to," O'Brien said.

Crystal Carroll led UMass with 18 points, aided by 9 point efforts by guards Kelly Van Huisen and Sabriya Mitchell. The Minutewomen shot 16–for–18

George Washington 83, Massachusetts 61

George Washington
(15–4, 10–0 A–10)

Cermignano 4–4 2–2 14, Gomez 7–11, 3–3 18, Abraham 10–17 8–8 28, Myers 5–9 0–1 15, McCrea 0–2 0–1 0, Turner 0–0 2–2 2, Egleson 2–2 0–0 6, Chiparus 0–1 0–0 0, McGlyn 0–0 0–0 0, Deas 0–0 0–0 0, Brown 0–0 0–0 0.

Massachusetts
(13–7, 7–3 A–10)

Carroll 6–14 6–6 18, Bradley 2–7 1–2 5, Rayside 0–0 2–2 2, Kuzmeski 1–5 0–0 2, Mitchell 4–10 0–0 9, Madajova 0–1 2–2 2, Van Huisen 4–9 1–2 9, Tudman 2–3 0–0 4, Macfarland 3–7 4–4 10.

Halftime — George Washington 34, Massachusetts 22. 3– point goals — George Washington 8–9 (Cermignano 4–4), Massachusetts 1–6 (Mitchell). Rebounds — George Washington 25 (Cermignano 5), Massachusetts 28 (Rayside, Mitchell 6).

Player of the Game

Crystal Carroll – 18 points, 3 rebounds, one assist.

Highlights...

George Washington dominated the inside and outside games as they continued their Atlantic 10 undefeated streak. Lisa Cermignano did not miss a single shot going 4–for–4 from the floor, 4–for–4 from 3–point range, and 2–for–2 from the foul line. UMass' Crystal Carroll was able to penetrate a tough GW defense and managed to knock down 18 points in the contests, while Alison MacFarland chipped in with 10 points of her own.

■ Minutewomen

continued from page 10

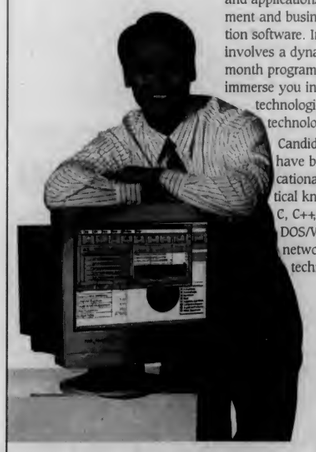
open behind the three point line she's got the green light. She did a great job of getting open in the second half.

The three's really killed UMass in the second half. GW employed a pressing defense early in the ballgame that netted them a quick 14–4 lead. GW led throughout the contest, but the Minutewomen cut the lead to two, 18–16, on a pull–up jumper by Beth Kuzmeski.

The Colonials outscored UMass 9–2 to end the first half, and took a 34–22 lead into the locker room that they extended right away at the start of the second half.

The barrage, a six for seven explosion that ended UM momentum time and time again, started early in the second half. They hit three 3's in the first three minutes of the second frame, including two by Cermignano, to push the lead to 16, 45–29.

The Colonials had rung up five three's by the 11:50 mark of the second half, and would push the lead to as much as 25 before cruising to their 25th straight win in A–10 play.



Of course, you don't beat a team the caliber of the Minutewomen by playing just one part of the game we!.. GW also beat UMass down ?. v. The starting frontcourt of the Colonials outscored the Massachusetts starting frontcourt 60–25, led by 28 points from Abraham and 18 points and three blocks from Noelia Gomez.

A bright spot for the Minutewomen down low was Crystal Carroll, who scored 18 points despite being double–teamed most of the game.

If anything, UMass can take solace in the fact that the second largest crowd in UMass history was on hand Sunday. Three thousand, five hundred and fifty-three people put their butts in the seats, and they were vocal for much of the game, even when the Minutewomen fell hopelessly behind.

"It's exciting, because it's hard for women's teams in general to get any exposure," Abraham said. "But you just have to go out and play."

Geniuses Wanted.

Why not start your career at the world's leading independent software company?

Right now, we're looking for programmers to develop, support and enhance systems and network management, database and applications development and business application software. Initial training involves a dynamic 3 1/2 month program that will immerse you in key industry technologies and CA's technology strategy.

Candidates should have both an educational and a practical knowledge of C, C++, UNIX, MS-DOS/Windows and networking technologies.

Benefits include generous compensation packages, including 401(k) and profit sharing, company-paid health and dental coverage, corporate fitness centers and tuition reimbursement. Ability to relocate is a must.

Call us today and find out why CA is rated one of Computerworld's best places to work!

20th Anniversary COMPUTER ASSOCIATES Software superior by design.

Join Us On-Campus
February 5, 1997
Or Contact Your Career Development Center.

Computer Associates
One Computer Associates Plaza
Islandia, NY 11788-7000
Tel: 1-800-454-3788
Fax: 516-342-5737
Or visit: http://www.cai.com

Computer Associates

© 1997 Computer Associates Inc., Islandia, NY 11788-7000
All product names referenced herein are trademarks of their respective companies.
Equal opportunity employer M/F/D/V.

COMPUTER FAIR & SALE
TRI-STATE FAIRS
10AM–4:00PM
141 North exit 19 turning right onto Rte 5 & 4 miles left at Staples onto Rte 116N. Exit right at light, left at Center 1-91 S. Take exit 20
Buy at wholesale prices right at the show from up to 60 companies (150 exhibit tables) featuring the IBM/PC compatible market. From full systems to libraries of CDs, it's all here. Adm $7 ea. with ad $5ea; after 1:00 pm $4 ea w/ad only.
MULLINS CENTER AMHERST SUND, FEB 9

Spring Break Fever we've got it
Bahamas 7 nights land only $336
Grand Cayman 7 nights land only $394
Jamaica 7 nights land only $346
Aruba 7 nights land only $479
you catch it!
Prices are based on double occupancy, U.S. and Canadian citizens only and may not be limited. Prices and availability are subject to change.
Council Travel
44 Main Street, Amherst
Tel: 413-256-1261
http://www.ciee.org/

SKI & Snowboard from $239
SpringBreak "97"
Mont Sutton, Canada
5 DAY LIFT TICKET
5 NIGHTS LODGING
5 NIGHTS PARTIES
$$ SAVE $, Walk to Lifts from the condos
1-800-848-9545

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
A Student/Comminity Service Learning Program*
(*an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored program)
Assignment notification, Feb. 6th (Thurs.) at Boltwood table on Campus Center Concourse.
Volunteer while earning credit
Come and Learn How!!!
Your life will NEVER be the same!
You Can Earn 1-2 Credits
Recruitment Nights
(Attend one session - Required for all Applicants!!!)
SPRING SEMESTER '97
6:30 PM
(Note: Prompt starting time)
• Feb 3 Mon Campus Center Aud. or
• Feb 4 Tues. CC Room 163 or
• Feb 5 Wed. Campus Center Aud.

!! AEROBICS !!
FLEX FITNESS CENTER
175 UNIVERSITY DRIVE, AMHERST, MA • 253-3539
!! TREADMILLS !!

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

EMPLOYMENT

The Ultimate Summer Job Whitewater Rafting Guides needed. No experience necessary. Looking for outgoing, enthusiastic people- previous outdoor or athletic experience is a plus. For more info send resume and letter of interest to: Crab Apple Whitewater, P.O. Box 295, Charlemont, MA 01339 or call (413)339-0188

PREMIERE BROTHER-SISTER CAMPS IN MASSACHUSETTS ON CAMPUS INTERVIEWS Counselor positions for talented and energetic students in all Team Sports, especially Baseball, Basketball, Roller Hockey, Gymnastics, Field Hockey, Soccer, Volleyball, 30 Tennis openings; also Golf, Archery, Riflery, Ropes and Rock Climbing, Weights/Fitness and Cycling; other opportunities include, Performing Arts; Fine Arts, Figure Skating, Newspaper, Photography, Yearbook, Radio Station, Rocketry, Swimming, Skiing, Sailing, Windsurfing, Canoeing/Kayaking, Top Salaries, room, board and travel. June 22nd-August 20th. Call for information: MAH-KEE-NAC(boys): 1-800-753-9118 DANBEE(girls): 1-800-392-3752. Recruiters will be on campus Tuesday, March 11th from 10am to 4pm at the UMass Camp Day.

EMPLOYMENT

Teaching Substitute $8.25/hour. Hampshire Franklin Day Care Center, Route 63 Near Amherst-Leverett town line. 548-9674

PUBLIC RELATIONS/MARKETING STAFF

If you seek an ever-changing high-energy workplace, this may be the job for you. Hinsdale/Greyhound Park/simulcast betting capital of the Northeast, is looking for enthusiastic individuals experienced in Public Relations/Marketing/Promotions. Exciting work atmosphere, competitive salary, and benefits. Send confidential resume to Ron Algeni, GM, Hinsdale/Greyhound Park, Route 119, Hinsdale, NH 03451. F/PT Equal Opportunity Employer.

Summer Opportunities at Jewish Residential Camp One hour from Washington D.C. Spend your summer with a great bunch of Jewish teens. Positions available in: Drama, A&C, Lifeguarding, Video/Photography, Sports, Ropes and Music. To arrange an interview E-mail us: capcamps@aol.com or call (301)468-2267. http://mambers.aol.com/capcamps

Tour Counselors/Tour Directors to lead teenagers on 3-6 week adventures in Canada and the U.S. Must be 20 years of age or older by July 1. Enormous responsibility coupled with unique travel opportunities. Contact Westcoast Connection (800)767-0227

EMPLOYMENT

English Teachers Needed Abroad! Teach conversational English in Prague, Budapest or Krakow. No teaching certificate or European languages required. Inexpensive room and board and other benefits. For details call (206)971-3680 ext. K50011

Exceptional Summer Opportunity- Camp Wayne, NE PA Sports oriented. Counselor specialists for all land/water sports including tennis, camping, climbing/ropes, rocketry, roller hockey, sailing/waterskiing, A&C, drama, video. Campus interviews Tuesday, March 11. Please call (800)737-9296

Wanted: Marketing student to market custom software via the Internet- Pay is on commission 548-8896

Wanted: Tour guides. Summer Counselors, Student Admissions Representatives. Applications available at the Admissions Center.

Strong, reliable person wanted for occasional snow shoveling in Amherst. Good pay. 253-5700 Days.

Cruise Lina Entry level on-board positions available. Benefits. Summer or year round. (617)643-4333

EMPLOYMENT

Cruise and Land Tour Employment work in exotic locations. Meet fun people and get paid! For industry information, call Cruise Employment Services (800)276-4948 ext. C50017. (We are a Research and Publishing Co.)

Outside Jobs- Now hiring. National Parks, Beach Resorts, Ranches, Rafting. CO's benefits and Bonuses! Nationwide openings. Call (919)918-7767 ext. R180. Eastern Europe/Asian jobs- Live in Prague, Budapest, Tokyo, etc. Teaching simple conversational English. No languages/teaching exp. required. (919)918-7767 ext. W180

Child Care 17 month old. Light housekeeping, 2-3 mornings a week. Nancy 253-5183

Personal Care Attendant Evenings, overnights and weekend mornings $7.85 per hour. Call 546-0666

FOR RENT

Cape Cod group & summer rentals. Waterfront houses, Falmouth area (508)477-6000

Sugarloaf Estates- Ultra modern two bedroom apartments. Free heat/hot water. New kitchens, baths, carpeting, washers/dryers and more! On bus-line. Minutes to Amherst. Great specials! Call 665-3856

FOR RENT

Fridge Rentals 253-9742 Free Delivery

FOR SALE

For Sale Electric Guitar Peavey black strat copy, excellent condition. $200.00 Seen 546-5734

Word Processor: Brother Whisper Writer WP-7550. Ink Jet Printer. Asking $299 or B/O. Bill 582-9175

MAC Plus excellent condition. CPU, monitor, keyboard, mouse, lots of software. $125. John 6-6358

Smith Corona WP compact, great condition. $150 or B/O. Call 256-5470

For Sale Ricoh KR5 Super II Camera, lens, body, flash- $100, neon light $90. Sarah 253-3241

Snowboard w/bindings 148GNU Dukester, brand new. 665-8680 CHEAP!!

FREE Two computer desks in good condition. 548-8896

Power Mac 6116CD 8mb CDROM 14" monitor, tons of pre-loaded software w/color printer. $1600 B/O 546-1449 Brian

486 Now Laptop $585. VGA Color Monitor $175. IDE Hard Drive $110 Steve 566-3324-2

INSTRUCTION

Performing Arts Division offers group and private instruction in Music, Theater and Dance. PAD is located in 73 Bartlett Hall, UMass Call (413)545-0519 for info.

MUSICIANS

Blues Harmonica Player looking for musicians to play Chicago style harp with! Call Eric @ 256-6324

MISCELLANEOUS

GORILLAGRAMS Valentines, Birthdays, Roses, Balloons, Poems. Send the Crazy Gorilla. We'll go anywhere, anytime. Student Rates. Call ahead for Valentine's Day. 256-0287

Fundraiser- Motivated groups needed to earn $500+ promoting AT&T, Discover, gas and retail cards. Since 1969, we've helped thousands of groups raise the money they need. Call Gina at (800)592-2121 ext. 110. Free CD to qualified callers.

Start your own fraternity VETA BETA TAU is looking for men to start a new chapter. If you are interested in academic success, a chance to network and an opportunity to make friends in a non-pledging brotherhood, E-mail ZBT@IBT.NationalORG or call Brett Hoback at (317)334-1898

PERSONALS

"What's love got to do with it?" Tina Turner, Free love and Valentines at www.mainquad.com

ROOM FOR RENT

One bedroom in 2 bedroom apt. Available immediately. On bus route. Sugarloaf Estates. Keira (203)294-1336. Females Only.

One bedroom for rent in two bedroom apt. Call Taryn (508)682-5607

ROOMATE WANTED

Roommates wanted to share house in Ocean City, NJ for the summer. Call Sue at 546-0407

SERVICES

Piercings by the Bearded Lady 272 State Street, Northampton. (413)586-9829

Seeking Financial Aid? Don't limit your possibilities for financial aid! Student Financial Services profiles over 200,000+ individual awards from private and public sectors. Call (800)263-6495 ext. FS0016. (We are a research and publishing company)

www.smartbomb.com Serving all your smart drug needs.

TRAVEL

Jamaica- Spring Break Stay in beautiful Negril. Includes roundtrip airfare, hotel transfers, 7 nights lodging from $519. Don't take chances with other companies, go with the UMass Ski Club. Call 545-3437

TRAVEL

Europe $155, Caribb./Mexico $189 R/T Worldwide Destinations Airhitch Tm (800)326-2009 airhitch@netcom.com or www.is-com.fr/airhitch

Spring Break '97 It's heaven. Wake and Bake in the hottest destinations-free parties!!! Organize group and travel. Free lowest price guarantee. From $99. (800)426-7710. www.sunsplashtours.com

Spring Break- Nassau/Paradise Island, from $379. Air, hotel, transfers, parties and more! Organize small group- earn free trips plus commissions! Call (800)9-Beach-1

WANTED TO RENT

Six bedroom house for the fall. Willing to take over summer lease. Call 549-5362!

Here's something to do with all the ¢hange you have in your pockets... Collegian Classifieds

Unfortunately, there's still no use for pocket lint.

Personals Policy

1. All personals MUST be preapread by Collegian classified employees before payment and acceptance of the classified.
2. Last names MAY NOT be used in personals. ONLY first names and initials are allowed. The only exceptions are for birthday or congratulations personals, in which case the full name may be used.
3. Phone numbers are not allowed in personals. NO EXCEPTIONS.
4. Addresses are not allowed in personals. We means room numbers as well.
5. Personals of a threatening or derogatory nature are not acceptable. Personals of a vindictive or libelous nature are not acceptable. Personals may not be used for the purpose of harassment.
6. Profanity may not be used in personals.
7. The personals section is for personals only. The personals section may NOT be used to sell items, seek roommates, advertise meetings, etc.
8. All personals must have the name, signature, and UMass I.D. number of the student placing the ad filled in on the insertion order. Non-students must provide a valid driver's license and the license number must be recorded on the insertion order. Use of false identification or misrepresentation is subject to penalties under the law.
9. The Collegian reserves the right to refuse or to edit any personal that does not meet the Collegian's standards in accordance with the statutes of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Standard Headings

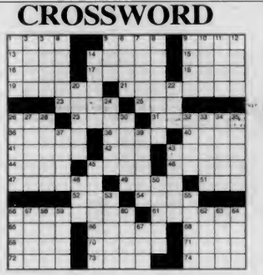
Activities
Announcements
Apartment For Rent
Auto For Sale
Employment
Entertainment
For Sale
Found (2 days Free)
Happy Birthday
Houses For Rent
Instruction
Lost
Musicians
Miscellaneous
Motorcycles
Personals
Room For Rent
Room Wanted
Roommate Wanted
Services
Summer Sublet
To Sublet
Travel
Transportation
Wanted to Rent
Wanted

Rates

$2.00 minimum/day

Students

20¢ per word/day



All others

40¢ per word/day

NO REFUNDS

Please write clearly and legibly. We are not responsible for errors resulting from illegible handwriting or type.

CROSSWORD

ACROSS

1. Great Salt Lake's state
5. Race tipster
9. Cat's-paw
13. Be dependent
14. Puppeteer Lewis
15. Famous Robt.
16. Fuller Brush man's quest
17. Join together
18. Basket strip
19. Donohoe of "L.A. Law"
21. Snakes
23. Young Guthrie
25. Letters in genetics
26. Australian avian
29. Writer Wiesel
31. Absconder
36. ___ Monica, CA
38. Chatterley, for one
40. Crush
41. Frustrated 007
42. Personality
43. Brown in butter
44. Heights (abbr.)
45. AKA Mars
46. Arm of the sea
47. Courteous child's response (2 wds.)
48. Remainder
51. "Wherefore ___ thou Romeo?"
52. Get-up-and-go
54. Dispatch
56. Examination
61. Make-one's-blood boil
65. Jane's neighbor
66. Vapid
67. Ohio Indian
68. Exec's vehicle
70. "You'll ___ Know"
71. Public-opinion sampling
72. Spurs
73. Increased
74. Swing to and fro

DOWN

1. Beer (Latin)
2. Mr. T is a
3. Actress Nazimova
4. Nocturnal carnivore
5. Alternative to café
6. Galley implements
7. Encouraged
8. Actress Gene
9. Parisian parent
10. Writer Sillitoe
11. Moved on
12. Actor Beatty et al.
14. Kind of talk or potatoes
20. Recoil from
22. Buddy
24. Tanner
26. Theme
27. Farmers source
28. Military groups
30. Arabian gulf
33. Comic Foundalone
34. Trim conclusion?
35. ___ Butler
37. Hardy lass
39. Prescribed amounts
43. Act of civil disobedience (2 wds.)
45. Springing (from)
48. "Halls of ___"
50. Word on a hosiery package
53. Actress Jan
55. Studies, for short
56. Up to the task
57. Brad, for one
58. Diva Gluck
59. Friend of Androcles
60. Hoard
62. In perfect order
63. ___ Cliff Dwellings (national monument)
64. Like a moray
67. "... something ___ something borrowed..."

Answers to Yesterday's Puzzle

Y	A	R	D		I	M	A	G	E		S	E	M	I
A	S	I	A		N	A	V	E	L		O	L	I	O
M	A	G	I		S	L	I	M	E		A	L	A	N
S	P	A	N	I	E	L	S		C	A	R	E	S	S
		T	O	T	S			T	I	S
R	A	D	I	U	S		E	R	I	N		T	D	P
O	G	R	E	S		S	N	O	O	T		O	H	O
O	N	O	R		M	A	S	O	N		T	W	A	S
F	E	N		F	O	R	U	M		P	E	E	R	S
S	S	E		E	L	K	E		S	U	N	D	A	E
		E	L	A			G	I	R	D
B	A	G	E	L	S		T	O	L	E	R	A	T	E
E	T	A	L		S	H	A	M	E		I	B	E	X
T	O	M	E		E	A	T	E	N		L	A	L	A
S	P	E	D		S	T	A	R	T		S	T	E	M

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21-April 20

Don't allow a disagreement to fester this week. The longer it lasts, the more the other person will gain the advantage. An early compromise is best. Major purchases require extra attention to details, or you could miss some vital fine print.

TAURUS
April 21-May 21

Now that you've checked out all your options, go ahead and make a decision. Your instincts are pretty good. Don't try to mix business and pleasure this week, or you'll end up feeling shortchanged in both.

GEMINI
May 22-June 21

A reluctant companion threatens to ruin a pleasant outing. Don't force the issue. Instead, change the subject and enjoy a lively conversation. Concentrate on domestic issues by starting a new family tradition.

CANCER
June 22-July 22

A simple conversation turns ugly when egos are at stake. Steer clear of emotional comments to keep things from getting out of hand. Suggest a distraction at work to break out of a stale routine.

LEO
July 23-August 23

An emotional commitment begins to flower, so nourish it with a thoughtful, romantic gesture. Do not mistake silence for assent at work—you may need to work harder to ferret out objections to a plan you've made.

VIRGO
August 24-September 22

A shopping spree could get out of hand this week, so leave your plastic at home. During a meeting or discussion you may need to ask more questions than usual to be certain you understand everything.

LIBRA
September 23-October 23

To feel good, it's important to look good, so treat yourself to a little luxury. Your charm is running high, so schedule activities that will take advantage of this. You might even consider asking for a raise, but be graceful if it doesn't happen.

SCORPIO
October 24-November 22

The pressure of a deadline begins to encroach upon your peace of mind. Delegate the responsibility, and you'll accomplish more than you would have alone. Honesty is the best policy, especially when it comes to an intimate relationship.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23-December 21

Your organizational talents shine this week, so take on extra responsibilities, especially if you need to make a good impression. You're full of great ideas—just think of a way to get the word out.

CAPRICORN
December 22-January 20

Don't follow suggestions blindly, especially where large sums of money are concerned. You need to find the solution that's right for you. Enjoy a leisurely outing with an old friend.

AQUARIUS
January 21-February 18

Anticipation is your best ally as you navigate your way through a simple encounter. Plan ahead, and you'll stay on top of things as the situation suddenly becomes complicated. A labor saving idea offers more trouble than it's worth.

PISCES
February 19-March 20

Avoid getting bogged down in details, especially as the weekend approaches. Your clear vision and enthusiasm will be needed to supply energy for a group discussion.

Daily Listings sponsored by: Your Ad Could Be Here. Call 545-3500

HSCN 4 Housing Services Cable Network

2 HSCN Bulletin Board
3 CBS/3 Hartford
4 CBS/4 Boston
5 ABC/5 Boston
6 PBS/57 Springfield
7 HSCN Movie Channel
8 UPN/20 Hartford
9 Weather Channel
10 NBC/30 New Britain
11 Fox/61 Hartford
12 PBS/24 Hartford
13 WOCH & HSCN
14 UMATV
17 HSCN Programming
19 TV-19
20 ABC/40 Springfield
22 NBC/22 Springfield
23 CNN
24 CNN/Headline News
25 BET
26 BET on Jazz
27 Laser Video
28 The Learning Channel
30 Comedy Central
31 Popcorn Channel
32 Satellite Programming

MONDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 3, 1997

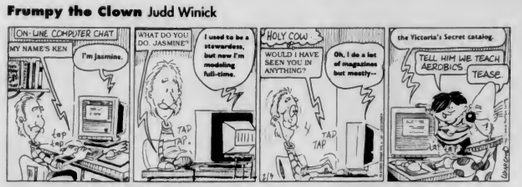
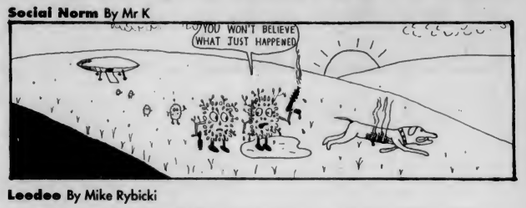
C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	(12)	Creatures	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer	Going Places		American Experience		Knife to the Heart		In the Life Quarterly
WFSB	(3)	News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Am.Journal	Cosby	ink (In Stereo)	Murphy Brown (Cybill	Chicago Hope (In Stereo)		News	Late Show
WBZ	(4)	News	CBS News	Ent. Tonight	Cosby	ink (In Stereo)	Murphy Brown (Cybill	Chicago Hope (In Stereo)			News	Late Show
WCVB	(5)	News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	★★½ "Class'and Present Danger" (1994, Drama) (PA) Harrison Ford, Willem Dafoe. (In Stereo)					News	Nightline
WLVI	(7)	Full House	Fresh Prince	Star Trek: Next Gener.		7th Heaven "Screen Is Enough"			News		Jenny Jones (In Stereo)
WHDH	(7)	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Foxworthy	Mr. Rhodes	"Into the Arms of Danger: A Moment of Truth Movie" (1997)			News	Tonight Show
WTXX	(8)	Fresh Prince	Martin	Judge Judy	Real TV	In the House	Malcolm-Eddie	Sparks	Goode Beh.	News	FLIPPD	Real TV
WVIT	(9)	News	NBC News	Ent. Tonight	Hard Copy	Foxworthy	Mr. Rhodes	"Into the Arms of Danger: A Moment of Truth Movie" (1997)			News	Tonight Show
WTIC	(10)	Simpsons	Roseanne	Home imp.	Seinfeld	Melrose Place "Great Sex-Pectations" (In Stereo)			News		Coach	Babylon 5
WWLP	(22)	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Foxworthy	Mr. Rhodes	"Into the Arms of Danger: A Moment of Truth Movie" (1997)			News	Tonight Show
WGBY	(57)	Creatures	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer	Going Places		American Experience		Knife to the Heart		In the Life Quarterly
WGGB	(25)	News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Ent. Tonight	★★★ "Class'and Present Danger" (1994, Drama) (PA) Harrison Ford, Willem Dafoe. (In Stereo)					News	Nightline
WSBK	(38)	Mad Abo. You	Seinfeld	NBA Basketball: Boston Celtics at Toronto Raptors. (Live)				Mad Abo. You	News		Martin	Mad Abo. You
WTBS	(72)	Family Matters	Family Matters	Home Videos	Home Videos	★★★ "Internal Affairs" (1990, Drama) Richard Gere, Andy Garcia.					★★ "Shattered" (1991, Suspense) Tom Berenger
A&E	(23)	Quincy "A Star Is Dead"		Lovejoy "Memoirs of Moron"		Biography: Rosa Parks. Mother	Poirot		Miss Marple (Part 2 of 2)		Law & Order "Point of View"
CNN	(29)	World View		Moneyline	Crossfire	Prime News	Inside Politics	Larry King Live	World Today		Sports Illus.	Moneyline
COM	(26)	Tick	Dream On	Daily Show (R)	TV Nation	★★★ "10" (1979, Comedy) Dudley Moore, Julie Andrews.			On Delivery	Dream On	Daily Show	TV Nation
DISC	(27)	Beyond 2000	Next Step (R)	Strange Planes	"Catapults" (R)	Wild Discovery: Red Kangaroo		Skyscraper at Sea (R)	Wildest of Tribes (R)		Wild Discovery	Red Kangaroo
ESPN	(31)	Up Close	Sportscenter		College Basketball: Georgetown at Connecticut. (Live)			College Basketball: Texas Tech at Texas. (Live)				Sportscenter
LIFE	(32)	Supermarket	Debt	Designing	Designing	Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		"Murderous Intent" (1995, Suspense) Corbin Bernsen.			Intimate Portrait
MTV	(33)	Pen & Stimpy	Alt.films-MTV	Singled Out	Idiot Savants	Music Videos (In Stereo)		Road Rules	Fashionably	Fashionably Loud II (In Stereo)	Singled Out	Loveline
NICK	(34)	Clarissa Expl.	Tiny Toon	Doug	Rugrats	Hey Arnold!	Happy Days	Love Lucy	Munsters	M.T. Moore	Rhoda	Taxi
SCIFI	(35)	Odyssey	Sci-Fi Trader	Time Trax "The Scarlet Kasia"		★★½ "Critical Denial" (1993, Science Fiction) Parker Stevenson.			V (R) (In Stereo)		Time Trax "The Scarlet Kasia"
TLC	(28)	Furniture	Renovation	Hometime (R)	Hometime (R)	Extreme Machines: Choppers		Zulu Wars (R) (Part 1 of 3)	Body Styles (R) (Part 1 of 2)		Extreme Machines: Choppers
TNT	(30)	In the Heat of the Night		In the Heat of the Night		NBA Basketball: Houston Rockets at Indiana Pacers. (Live)				Inside-NBA	★★★ "The Omen" (1976)
USA	(37)	Renegade "Rabbit Redux"		Highlander: The Series		World Wrestling Federation Monday Night Raw			La Femme Nikita "Charity"		Wings	Wings
HBO	(39)	★★ "The Amazing Panda Adventure" (1995) PG		Testament		★★½ "Sense and Sensibility" (1995) Emma Thompson. PG			★★ "Eye for an Eye" (1996, Drama) Sally Field. (In Stereo) R
MAX	(40)	★½ "Iron Eagle IV" (1995, Adventure) Louis Gossett Jr., PG-13				★★★ "Bad Boys" (1995, Drama) Martin Lawrence. R			★ "Syncrapse" (1996) Anna Nicole Smith. R		"Paris, France"
SHOW	(41)	★★ "Fluke" (1995, Adventure) Matthew Modine. (In Stereo) PG				★★½ "Sibling Rivalry" (1990) Kirstie Alley.			★★ "The Baby-Sitters Club" (1995) Schuyler Fisk.		"There Goes My Baby" (1994)



Dilbert By Scott Adams

Drabble By Kevin Fagan



Frumpy the Clown Judd Winick

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Social Norm By Mr K

Loodoo By Mike Rybicki

Leold By Roger & Salem Salloom

My brother's friend, Brad, just graduated from Harvard Business School. He got a job as a marketing consultant for a big drug rehabilitation center in Cleveland.

He figures he can increase their business by 30 to 40%. He'll target the potential customers with flyers in alley ways, messages on snow cone cups and hand outs at hospital emergency rooms.

Maybe, if things really start to hop, he'll arrange for some free trail "mini-kick-the-habit" weekend sleepovers!

But, he admits it could get tough. There just aren't enough junkies.

Anyway, that doesn't matter..... Brad suspects the real big money is in teenagers who have low self-esteem and smoke cigarettes.

He says their slogan could be:

"I saw the best minds of my generation destroyed by lack of interest."

University² By Frank Cho

Bruno By C. Baldwin

Close to Home By John McPherson

An unwavering truth of grocery shopping with a toddler: Your child will throw a tantrum, and it will invariably happen when your minister, pediatrician and mother-in-law are walking by.

Non Sequitor By Wiley

The Unsilent Majority By Luke Meridith

Quote of the Day

"And the way the rain comes down hard / That's the way i feel inside..."

–Robert Smith

Joke of the Day

Why did the watermelon have to have a formal wedding?

Antelope

Today's Staff

Mike Burke
Night Editor

Laura Stock
Copy Editor

Kenneth W.P. Scott
Photo Technician

Lorraine Urbanski
Production Supervisor

Chris Lavin
Lauren Goldfarb
Production

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Franklin

LUNCH	DINNER
Scrod	Scrod
Scrod	Scrod
Scrod	Scrod
Scrod	Scrod

Hampshire

LUNCH	DINNER
Scrod	Scrod
Scrod	Scrod
Scrod	Scrod
Scrod	Scrod

Worcester

LUNCH	DINNER
Scrod	Scrod
Scrod	Scrod
Scrod	Scrod
Scrod	Scrod

Berkshire

LUNCH	DINNER
Scrod	Scrod
Scrod	Scrod
Scrod	Scrod
Scrod	Scrod

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

Monday, February 3, 1997

▼ SPORTS THIS WEEK

MEN'S HOOP	WOMEN'S HOOP	MEN'S GYMNASTICS	WOMEN'S GYMNASTICS	MEN'S & WOMEN'S TRACK	MEN'S HOCKEY	MEN'S & WOMEN'S SWIM & DIVE
Feb. 3 @ Fordham, 9:00 p.m Feb. 6 Duquesne, 7:30 p.m. Feb. 8 @ URI, Providence C.C. 12:00 p.m.	Feb. 7 @ Temple, 7:00 p.m. Feb. 9 @ St. Joe's, 2:05 p.m.	Feb. 8 Temple, T.B.A. Feb. 6 Duquesne, 7:30 p.m.	Feb. 9 URI, Bridgeport, 1:00 p.m.	Feb. 8 @ Valentine Inv. Women, 11:00 a.m. men, 12:00 p.m.	Feb. 7 B.U., 7:00 p.m. Feb. 8 @ UM-Lowell, 7:00 p.m.	Feb. 8 @ Fordham, 1:00 p.m.

Minutemen suffer overtime loss to No. 20 Xavier

3-pointer doesn't go, UMass looks to regroup

By Chris Stamm
Collegian Staff

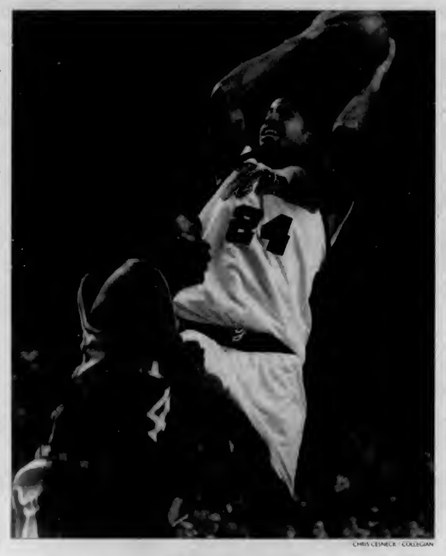
You can talk about payback, you can talk about national rankings and fatigue, but the men's basketball team's 87–84 overtime loss to Xavier on Saturday at the William D. Mullins Center was not without heart.

"I thought my guys played extremely hard today," Massachusetts coach James "Bruiser" Flint said. "You can't say enough about their effort, they did a great job tonight. We had our chances to win it down the stretch. I told them, this was a tough loss, but I'm proud of them because we're back to playing where we are playing as hard as we can, we're going out every night giving it a good effort."

XAVIER	87
MASSACHUSETTS	84
OVERTIME

With 13 seconds remaining in OT, UMass sharp–shooter Carmelo Travieso drained a 3–pointer cutting the Xavier (15–3, 6–2 Atlantic 10) lead to a point, 85–84. Freshman Winston Smith fouled Musketeer guard Lenny Brown, who sank both shots from the charity stripe.

UMass had 1.5 seconds of hope left in OT, and inevitably, the ball found its way into Travieso's hands. However, his baseline 3–pointer that would have sent the game into a second OT was broken up by Xavier's James Posey (17pts) dashing the Minutemen's hope of extending their streak to six.



"I knew the ball was going to go to him [Travieso] he's an excellent 3–point shooter," Posey said. "I saw him out of the corner of my eye and I didn't really see our defender in the way, so I decided to contest with a high hand. It was nothing special, I just contested a shot."

However, that contested shot was the nail in the coffin for the Minutemen.

Saturday's 87–84 overtime loss ended UMass' five game win streak. While the Minutemen (11–10, 5–3 A–10) did not pull off the win against the A–10's only ranked member, it was by no means due to a lack of effort.

With the exception of a one point, 5–4 lead on a Gary Lumpkin jumper three minutes into the game, UMass held the lead throughout the first frame, leading by as much as seven five times.

Turn to REGROUP, page 6

CHRIS CESMECK / COLLEGIAN

Carmelo Travieso led UMass with 29 points and scored his 1,000th point in the 87–84 OT losing effort.

Travieso scores 1,000th point, Xavier's Lumpkin thinks revenge

By Casey Kane
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's basketball team's loss to Xavier Saturday took some of the luster off one of the Minuteman players' finest accomplishments.

With 16:11 remaining in regulation, Carmelo Travieso hit a 3–pointer to become the 30th player in school history to reach the 1,000 point plateau.

"It was special, just the way my whole career played out here at UMass," Travieso said. "My first year I didn't think I was going to play."

At the first timeout following the barrier–breaking shot, Travieso was presented with the game ball by UMass coach James "Bruiser" Flint.

But to Travieso, a win would have meant more than the points.

"It was tough that we lost, but I'm sure my Mom is home, happy," he said. "That wasn't the most important thing. I wanted to win bad. If I didn't score any points tonight I would've been a lot happier if we had won."

Travieso joins the company of former teammates Dana Dingle, Donta Bright and Marcus Camby, as well as Julius Erving, Jim McCoy and Lou Roe among others.

Travieso also achieved a recent conference–wide distinction. At George Washington Thursday, Travieso became the eighth player in Atlantic 10 history (and second in UMass history) to hit 200 3–pointers.

• Lari Ketner didn't celebrate his 20th birthday with a win, but instead with a jump into the UMass record books.

The sophomore center recorded a pair of blocks in the game to earn his place on the top 10 all–time UMass list for that category.

Ketner now has 51 blocks, enough to knock Jeff Meyer (51) into 10th place. That total also ties Will Herndon for eighth place on the single season chart.

In addition to climbing the Minuteman list, Ketner owns the top spot for blocks in the A–10 this season.

• Gary Lumpkin was thinking revenge when the Massachusetts and Xavier men's basketball teams walked onto the court for the overtime period of Saturday's contest.

Who could blame him?

A year ago, give or take a few days, Lumpkin and the Musketeers were the overtime victims of the Minutemen, after failing to put the game away during regulation.

After UMass point guard Edgar Padilla hit a crucial 3– pointer with 15 remaining to tie the game at 68, the Xavier players could not put down any of their three attempts for the win.

From there the Minutemen took over, winning the game 78–74 in overtime. Lumpkin scored 13 in the game.

This time around, Lumpkin wasn't about the same thing happen.

"Right after regulation, as soon as we came back to the bench, the first word I heard was payback," the sophomore guard said. "Last year it was bitter. They did a lot of good things that stopped us."

Xavier coach Skip Prosser wasn't as concerned about redemption, staying away from the subject during talks with his players.

"Gary oft times waxes poetic,"

Turn to TRAVIESO, page 6

Hockey drops two: UNH and Merrimack

By Jorma Kansanen
Collegian Staff

DURHAM, N.H. — For 8:36 into the first period last Saturday night at the Whittemore Center, the Massachusetts hockey team was in the game against No. 4 nationally ranked New Hampshire, but that was it. Truthfully, the Minutemen

NEW HAMPSHIRE	10
MASSACHUSETTS	0

(11–16, 6–12 in Hockey East) were never in it and the Wildcats (22–6, 15–3 HE) skated off with a 10–0 obliteration at Towse Rink. All of this came off last Friday night's 5–3 loss to Merrimack (9–15–1, 5–9–1 HE) at the William D. Mullins Center, amassing a 16–4 shot advantage to no avail in their final period comeback attempt.

For UMass coach Joe Mallen, there could not be two more different results than this game and the last time UMass had faced UNH. On Nov. 8 and 9, the two teams played two tight 1–0 and 5–4 games at the Mullins Center, with the Minutemen just falling on the losing side in both contests. Sophomore Jason Krog burned them less than a minute into overtime in the 5–4 loss, and the whole nationally ranked squad burned them in this game.

MERRIMACK	5
MASSACHUSETTS	3

"When we played [UNH] in the first two games at the Mullins Center, I really thought they could be one of the best teams in the country," Mallen said. "Tonight, they played like one of the best teams in the country. I thought coming in maybe with [Rob] Bonneau and [Tom] O'Connor out, we might really rally around and come out with a good effort, but it just wasn't there tonight."

Nevermind that UNH is a legitimate contender for the national championship this year, UMass had to deal with the loss of several key players before this game. Leading scorer, and senior co–captain, Rob Bonneau was out due to a knee strain suffered against Merrimack, senior forward Judd Smith is out indefinitely to violation of team rules, and junior defenseman Tom O'Connor is still recovering from a deep left thigh bruise suffered Jan. 18 against Northeastern.

Those conditions, combined with the hostile home ice climate of Towse Rink, left the Minutemen in a big hole. The big hole became a grave when Krog blasted a slap shot past junior goalie Brian Regan with 11:24 left in the first period. The Minuteman defense let the leading scorer for the Wildcats tee the puck up at the top of the left faceoff cir-

Turn to MERRIMACK, page 6

JORMA KANSANEN / COLLEGIAN

Dennis Wright and the UMass hockey team were clobbered by New Hampshire 10–0 Saturday night.

UNH has it all, on & off the ice

DURHAM, N.H. — After the first period of Saturday night's Massachusetts–New Hampshire hockey game I didn't pay very close attention to the game. Twice in the latter stages of the game my notes include the phrase "Didn't really see it" in reference to the description of a UNH goal.

While my mind (a circumloquitous thing as many of you well know from reading this gobbily–gook) was wandering like the great vagabond Dean Moriarty from Jack Kerouac's On the Road, the play of Dean Campanale, Rich Moriarty and others escaped me.

LEIGH

TORBIN

The obvious conclusion to be drawn from a 10–0 hockey game is that the UNH team did everything right and UMass did not. Any imbecile could see that and filling this space with pointless Shaugnessy–esque jabs at the UMass team is pointless. The team acknowledged after the game that it played poorly and now the readers of this column know as well. There are no secrets here.

UNH is an excellent hockey team that could very well find itself in Milwaukee for the Final Four this March, and the Wildcats showed why Saturday night at a sold–out Whittemore Center.

Three years of covering Hockey East here and years of watching it back home have given me a good long look at this league and I've rarely seen a display like UNH's fans on Saturday. It's just a shame that few UMass fans (read, non–parents and girlfriends) made the trip to bottle some of that stuff and bring it back to the packed but quiet Mullins Center. Few were there to witness 6,153 fans make a sold– out Whittemore Center sound just like "lively" Snively Arena, the old barn next door that closed a few years back.

I've always been impressed by these

Turn to UNH, page 6

A–10's best downs UM, GW dominates both ends

By Jeremy R. Adams
Collegian Staff

Groundhog Day marked one of the Massachusetts women's basketball team's biggest showdowns of the season. Unfortunately, when the Minutewomen emerged from the tunnel and saw the Colonials' shadows, they got beat.

Such was the fate of UMass, as it

GEORGE WASHINGTON	83
MASSACHUSETTS	61

fell to Atlantic 10 leader George Washington 83–61 at the William D. Mullins Center.

Massachusetts refused to back down from the challenge of defeating the proud 10–0 (in the A–10) George Washington, but in front of a Mullins Center record 3,553 and a national cable television audience, the Colonials showed why the rest of the A–10 can only hope for better fortune in their six more chances to end GW's league dominance.

Twelve straight opponents have confronted GW and lost. Only 12 times in 111 years on this date has a certain rodent not seen his shadow and slept for six more weeks.

It was not simply the impressive stature of the Colonials that beat the Minutewomen. GW put out a team of strong players who lived up to their billings and responded to a sporadic and determined opponent with strong shooting and solid defense.

"They shot the ball tremendously well," Minutewomen coach Joanie O'Brien said. "We knew going in that they were a very good shooting team, that's what makes them so special."

The Colonials hit shots from all over the court, as indicated by the

Turn to WASHINGTON, page 7

Inside–outside GW wins

By Luke Meredith
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's basketball team came into yesterday's game with George Washington knowing it had to «top the Colonials killer Inside game by» containing the likes of Tajama Abraham and Noelia Gomez. What they didn't know was that George Washington would counter by just shooting the lights out.

GW proved why it was the best shooting team in the A–10 Sunday, ringing up an incredible 61 percent shooting percentage, including an Atlantic 10 record 8–9 from behind the three–point line, to bury the Minutewomen 83–61 in their first ever televised home game. Senior Lisa Cermingnano led the Colonial assault with a perfect 4–4 from three–point land, and freshman Marlo Egleston hit two 3–pointers in key junctures, killing UMass momentum.

"They shot the ball tremendously well. They're a very good shooting team and that's what makes them so special," UMass head coach Joanie O'Brien said. "You go inside on them too much and they're going to shoot you from the outside, you stay outside on the shooters and they're going to go one–on–one on the blocks and between [Tajama] Abraham and Noelia [Gomez] they did a great job in the post."

George Washington has gotten where they are by beating people down low, most often through the play of Tajama Abraham, considered by many one of the premier players in the country. Understandably, George Washington head coach Joe McKeown was a little surprised at what happened.

"They came at the right times," McKeown said. "Eight for nine is unusual for us. I think Cermigmano is such a great shooter that anytime we can get her

Turn to MINUTEWOMEN, page 7

The Massachusetts

DAILY COLLEGIAN

Volume CVI Issue 75 • New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967 • Tuesday, February 4, 1997

"May the force be with you."

Stars Wars re-opened on the big screen Friday. See what the Collegian thought aboutthe film's return. (see Arts & Living page 5).

Minutemen ram through Fordham

Powered by 17 points from senior forward Tyrone Weeks, the UMass men's basketball team blew past Fordham 75–54 last night (see Sports page 10).

WORLD

Child abuse inquiry probes abuse claims

LONDON — Over 650 complaints have been filed by people who allege that dozens of staff members at more than 30 children's homes in north Wales systematically abused them as youngsters in the 1970s and '80s.

Some youngsters say they were forced to eat dog food, raped or beaten. Others report being taken on sex trips to Amsterdam or made to perform in pornographic videos. A few claim they were sold to British establishment figures for sex.

The complaints have prompted Britain's largest child sex abuse inquiry, which resumes today. It is expected to last a year, cost up to $1.6 million and hear from 180 alleged victims.

Survivors say the abuse, physical and sexual, was covered up for decades by staff and social workers appointed by local officials. Most of the alleged victims were boys, some as young as 8. Up to 10 youngsters who claimed they were abused have died — senior tribunal lawyer Gerard Elias said most of them committed suicide in despair.

"The tribunal will leave no stone unturned in its search for the truth," Elias told the opening session of the tribunal Jan. 21.

NATION

Boston billboard honors late teen peacemaker

BOSTON — A billboard memorializing a 15-year-old Boston teen-ager killed in gang crossfire was unveiled yesterday in time for Black History Month.

The billboard was erected above the street corner where Louis D. Brown was killed near his home on Feb. 20, 1993, as he was heading to a meeting of Teens Against Gang Violence.

Brown served as an example of peace and hope, according to participants in a ceremony at the site at the corner of Geneva Avenue and Bowdoin Street in the city's Dorchester neighborhood.

Brown's parents, Joseph and Clementina Chery, say they hope the poster inspires teen-agers to "dream big dreams," and work towards peace, like their son who aspired to be the first black U.S. president.

The Cherys will spread Brown's story at local high schools as part of the Louis D. Brown Peace Curriculum, a nationally recognized program to help reduce teen violence.

"He was a peacemaker. He believed in doing everything he could to help his peers understand the true value of peace,' as one who dreamed big dreams, not only for himself, but for his entire generation," Joseph Chery said.

The billboard features a pencil drawing depicting Louis next to the motto, "No dream's too big. Reach for peace. The Louis D. Brown Peace Curriculum."

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Wed.	Thur.
HIGH: 40 LOW: 25	HIGH: 45 LOW: 35	HIGH: 40 LOW: 30

INSIDE

Arts & Living	page 5
Classifieds	page 8
Comics	page 9
Crossword	page 8
Editorial	page 4
FYI	page 2
News	page 3
Sports	page 10

Housing program now rents lounge furniture to residents

CHRIS CESMECK \ COLLEGIAN

Southwest Area North residents will find several barren lounges this semester as furniture can now be "rented" to residents based on seniority points.

By Leigh Faulkner
Collegian Staff

The Housing Services staff of Southwest Residential Area North is continuing a lounge furniture "renting" pilot program for a second semester. Residents of Coolidge, Kennedy, Emerson and Thoreau Residence Halls may sign out lounge couches based on seniority points they have accumulated during their residence.

Last semester, residents of Coolidge and Kennedy responded to a housing survey, stating that residence hall lounges would be better utilized with more tables and chairs for studying and, in addition, better furniture in their dormitory rooms.

Based on these responses, Resident Directors Jeff Cullen and Brenda Andrews of Coolidge and Kennedy, respectively, decided to let students sign out or "rent" lounge couches and chairs based on their seniority points.

"What we realized is that we were fighting an uphill battle to try to keep furniture in the lounges," Cullen said. "And because Housing [Services] takes a resident's right to privacy so seriously we can't just go in a residence room and take the furniture out."

"Another thing we noticed was that the furniture would go into the rooms in good condition and come out torn apart or busted into two pieces," Cullen said.

According to Cullen, the University loses "tens of thousands dollars" per year on damaged furniture, and because students were never held accountable for lounge furniture, there was never a way to bill the residents.

By allowing residents to sign out furniture that costs approximately $900 per piece, Cullen hopes that the University will save enough money over the next few years that new furniture can be purchased for the dormitory rooms.

Gaye Reinhold, the Operations manager in Southwest North said, "The program went very well the first semester in Kennedy and Coolidge. No one was billed for furniture damage."

Besides holding

Turn to RENT, page 3

Grad lounge food worker diagnosed with Hepatitis

By Laura Stock
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts issued a press release yesterday alerting the campus about a food handler in the Graduate Student Lounge in the Campus Center who was diagnosed with Hepatitis A on Jan. 31.

The employee is not currently working and will not return to work until cleared to do so by a physician, according to the press release.

According to A.J. Lardner, public health nurse at University Health Services, there is no evidence at this time of a direct link between this case and that of a kitchen worker in the Campus Center Coffee Shop diagnosed with the disease earlier in January.

Hepatitis A is a contagious viral disease that affects the liver. Symptoms of Hepatitis A are fever, fatigue, loss of appetite, nausea and jaundice (dark brown urine, yellow skin and whites of eyes).

Infected individuals are contagious roughly two weeks before symptoms appear and until one week after. In some cases, an individual may be infected and exhibit no symptoms.

According to the press release, all food handlers who were in direct contact with the employee were contacted by UMass Health Services staff during the weekend and have been immunized with immune serum globulin.

All other food handlers on the ground floor of the Campus Center will be offered immunization Feb. 6 from 9–11:15 a.m. and 1–4 p.m. in the Campus Center, room 1001–02.

"Immunization for patrons of the lounge is not recommended at this time according to federal public health guidelines," said Lardner. "But anyone who experiences the above symptoms is encouraged to consult his or her physician."

Lardner said active surveillance for symptoms of the disease among Campus Center food handlers will continue until 50 days after the last day the employee worked.

New Campus Center board provides students with info

By Tamar Carroll
Collegian Staff

A new information board which will display student organization and local business advertisements was installed yesterday in the University of Massachusetts Campus Center.

The information board is a combined project of the Campus Center Student Union Commission (CCSUC) and a private company, Campus Information Services (CIS), which specializes in maintaining information boards at campuses nationwide.

The information board, which is located to the left of the Coffee Shop, consists of three illuminated panels and a moving message center at the top. The center panel will contain advertisements from Registered Student Organizations (RSOs) and other student groups, while the side panels will contain advertisements mostly from local business offering services to students, such as real estate agencies and fitness clubs.

Dan Wolman, General Manager of CIS and a 1995 graduate of UMass, said that the information board will be a way for businesses and organizations that can not afford to place advertisements in newspapers or the yellow pages to reach students.

"This is a cost effective way for local businesses and student businesses to advertise," said CCSUC Chair Matthew Auger, a senior education and Russian major. "Prices will range from $65 a month to $2,000 a month."

The moving message center, which will be updated daily, will show headline news, sports scores and additional advertisements.

Another feature of the information

Turn to INFO, page 3

U.S. backs Peru in hostage stand–off

By Laura Myers
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton praised Peruvian leader Alberto Fujimori on yesterday for "skillfully walking a fine line" in handling Peru's hostage crisis even as Fujimori worried about how it might end.

"Because they are terrorists... it's almost unpredictable," Fujimori said after his White House meeting to discuss the 7–week–old standoff. "We don't know. We cannot predict." Bolstered by U.S. support, Fujimori pledged to make no concessions to the captors holding 72 international hostages at the Japanese Embassy in Lima.

Rebel leader Nestor Cerpa, meanwhile, chastised Fujimori for hinting over the weekend that the guerrillas were willing to give up their goal.

"It is absolutely false that we have renounced our demand for the liberation of our prisoners, a point that must be addressed in eventual conversations" with the government, Cerpa said, speaking by radio from the diplomatic compound.

No matter what, Fujimori said, he would never give into demands from the rebels, who have been seeking the liberation of several hundred jailed comrades. Giving in, he said, would set a bad precedent for other nations.

"This is important, not only to Peru but to America and the world," Fujimori said during an hour–long news conference. "This kind of crime cannot be accepted. All terrorists in the world must know they cannot have any concessions."

"In English, I will say, It's out of the question."

During a hastily scheduled 20–minute Oval Office meeting Clinton urged Fujimori to seek a peaceful solution without bowing to terrorism, White House officials said. Secretary of State Madeleine Albright and National Security Adviser Sandy Berger also attended. White House spokesman David Johnson said Clinton wanted to meet Fujimori to tell him he had "set exactly the right tone" in handling the crisis.

Clinton told Fujimori "that he thought he was skillfully walking a very fine line — and that is between resolving this crisis peacefully without giving into terrorism," Johnson said. "He told him it was a hard line to walk, but it was the right one."

The meeting, agreed to only on Sunday, ran counter to U.S. concerns last week that Clinton's direct involvement in the crisis would increase the value of the 72 hostages. No Americans are being held.

Fujimori told reporters he was pleased by his White House reception because Clinton "pledged his continued exceptional support."

During a hastily scheduled 20–minute Oval Office meeting Clinton urged Fujimori to seek a peaceful solution without bowing to terrorism, White House officials said. Secretary of State Madeleine Albright and National Security Adviser Sandy Berger also attended. White House spokesman David Johnson said Clinton wanted to meet Fujimori to tell him he had "set exactly the right tone" in handling the crisis.

Clinton told Fujimori "that he thought he was skillfully walking a

BC bookies plead innocent

NEWTON (AP) — Three men who allegedly took bets from Boston College students pleaded innocent to gambling charges yesterday, among them an employee of a popular bar near the campus.

Timothy J. Doheny was charged with organizing and promoting gambling and conspiring to organize and promote gambling in connection with the betting scandal that also has resulted in the suspension of eight BC seniors who allegedly worked as bookmakers at the Jesuit school.

Doheny, 25, of Newton, was a bartender at Mary Ann's, a student hangout where prosecutors said he took bets and made payoffs. He allegedly was part of a gambling ring run by James C. Potter, 33, of Flushing, N.Y., who also faces charges of organizing and promoting gambling, using the telephone for gaming purposes and conspiring to organize and promote gambling.

Also charged yesterday were Jason W. Pines, 26, of Boston, and Michael P. Rymsha, 23, of Newburyport. Each is accused of using the telephone for gaming purposes and keeping places for registering bets.

Prosecutor Karen Colucci said Pines and Rymsha worked separately from Potter and Doheny in association with a Boston organized crime syndicate.

Doheny and Rymsha pleaded innocent before Magistrate Conrad J. Beltzer. Pines, who also goes by the name of Jason Loomis, did not appear in court, but pleaded innocent through his attorney. All the men were released on their own recognizance and ordered to return to court March 6.

The university has suspended the eight student bookmakers and begun disciplinary action against at least 20 other students suspected of making illegal bets on sporting events.

The episode began when 13 football players were accused of betting as the team prepared to host Notre Dame. The players were initially suspended for violating NCAA rules against gambling. No evidence of point–shaving was found.

Mary Ann's, the bar where Doheny worked, also is under investigation by licensing authorities.

Mackimmie thefts investigated; incidents appear to be related

Four incidents of breaking and entering and burglary, which occurred in Mackimmie Residence Hall on Jan. 30 appear to be related, according to University of Massachusetts police.

UMass Chief of Police John Luippold said the incidents in Mackimmie seem to be related because each occurred around the same time between late Thursday night and early Friday morning.

"Each incident involved an unknown individual going into the room, two or three of which had doors that were unlocked, and taking items near the doorway — like off of a table or a dresser," Luippold said.

Items reported stolen include wallets containing cash and credit cards and watches. Two unsuccessful attempts were made at stealing stereo speakers.

Luippold said that a witness reported seeing a suspicious individual in the area around the time of the burglaries.

"We had a report of a 6 or 6–foot–2 white male with bushy brown hair seen in the area of one of the thefts," Luippold said.

Luippold said the individual was entering rooms in Mackimmie in close proximity to the ones broken into, asking residents if some unknown person lived there.

Anyone with additional information should contact the UMass Police Department.

— Laura Stock

KENNETH W. P. SCOTT \ COLLEGIAN

Old Faithful

One of the many steam leaks on campus, this one by Holdsworth Hall has been exposed for a few weeks.

For Your Information

FYIs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an FYI, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to The Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Tuesday, Feb. 4

Discussion — Portrait of a Lady, by Henry James, is the selection for the Odyssey Bookshop's monthly Open Book Discussion tonight at 7 p.m. Marjorie Kaufman, a professor emeritus of English at Mount Holyoke College, will lead the discussion.

Discussion — Zionist for Action sponsors Israel Issues Discussion Group at 7:30 p.m. in the Hillel House. Topic: "Division and Conflicts in Israeli Society." Discussion led by Shoshana Madmoni.

Meeting — The UMass Ballroom Dance Club's first general meeting will be held at 5:30 p.m. in 101 Totman Gym. For info call Kevin Murpy at 549–4036.

Meeting — Hey math majors! Welcome back. Come to the first spring meeting of the Math Club at 7 p.m. in LGRT 1521D. As always, snacks provided.

Meeting — The Ski Club will hold its first general meeting of the semester at 7 p.m. in Earthfoods. Members can get deals on tuning, waxing and lift passes for $30. For more info, call 545–3437.

Meeting — UMass Hillel Council's Kick–Off meeting will be held at 6 p.m. in Campus Center 904. Looking for Jewish student activists to help set 1997 Hillel Agenda for social, religious and cultural activities.

Wednesday, Feb. 5

Community Service — The UMass Community Service Program is sponsoring its annual Spring Volunteer Fair today from 11 a.m. – 1 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. Over 40 local service agencies will be on hand to discuss opportunities to volunteer or participate in internships. Any questions, call 545–3327.

Dance — Israeli dancing will be held from 8:30–10 p.m. in the Greenough Residence Hall basement. Instruction included. The event is free and sponsored by UMass Hillel.

Lecture — Susan L. Taylor, editor–in–chief of Essence Magazine and author of In the Spirit: The Inspirational Writings of Susan L. Taylor, will speak at Mount Holyoke College at 7:30 p.m. in Chapin Auditorium. The lecture is free and open to the public.

Meeting — Circle K International, a campus community service group, will be holding its first meeting of the semester at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center. New members welcome. For more info, call Aimee or Suzanne at 665–7712.

Meeting — The Student Health Advisory Board (SHAB) will hold its first meeting of the semester at University Health Services Room 304 from 5:30–6:30 p.m. Anyone interested is invited to attend this introductory meeting.

Meeting — Biracial/Multiracial Students Association (a new RSO) will hold a meeting at 7 p.m. in the Student Union Cape Cod Lounge. Questions? Call Jordan at 546–3548.

Meeting — The Animal Rights Coalition will be holding their first general meeting at 7 p.m. in Campus Center room 908. All beliefs are welcome and diversity is encouraged. Refreshments available.

Meeting — The UMass Poetry Society will hold its first meeting of the semester at 7 p.m. in room 917 of the Campus Center. New members are always welcome. For more information, call Tim at 546–0562.

Meeting — Have you ever done theater or always wanted to? If so, then the UMass Theater Guild wants you! Come to our first meeting of the semester at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center. Many artistic positions are available for the spring shows, Fame and Heidi Chronicles. Audition information will be available. Call the UMTG office at 545–0415 or Tara 546–2104 for more information.

Thursday, Feb. 6

Lecture — Keith Boykin, author of One More River to Cross: Black and Gay in America, graduate of Harvard Law School and Executive Director of the National Black Gay & Lesbian Leadership Forum, will speak at 8 p.m. Location to be announced. Contact the Stonewall Center at 545–4824 for more info.

Lecture — The Office of Human Relations and the philosophy department will offer an informal discussion on Spirituality and Identity at 7 p.m. in Campus Center room 803. For more info, call 546–5174.

Religious — Rosh Chodesh, a Jewish ritual celebration for women meets at 8:30 p.m. in the Hillel House downstairs.

Notices

Auditions — Auditions for the UMass Theater Guild's Spring production of Fame will take place Feb. 7 at 7 p.m. and Feb. 8 at 1 and 7 p.m. in room 101 of the Campus Center. You only need to attend one audition. Callbacks will take place Feb. 9 at 10 a.m. No need to prepare, come as you are. All are welcome. For more information call the UMTG office at 545–0415.

Karate — The UMass Shotoran Karate Club is now accepting new members. No prior experience necessary. Come watch and join our daily training in a traditional Japanese martial art. For more info, contact Loukia at 549– 8058 or Ian at 549–5485.

Orientation — Orientation tours for the W.E.B. Du Bois Library will be held today and Feb. 4–7. The tours will leave from the Entrance lobby at 10:30 a.m. and 2:30 p.m. daily. We encourage you to come, visit and get to know the library.

Independent study — Resources in Women's Studies Research, WOST 496B, will be held Wednesdays, 4–4:50 p.m. in the Callpari Instruction Room in the W.E.B. DuBois Library. Recommended for juniors and seniors. Call instructor Emily Silverman at 545–0995 or e–mail essilverman@library.umass.edu to register.

Internships — Internships are available working on Earth Day, Hunger, Recycling and Clean Air. Call Melanie at MassPirg, 545–0199 or stop by the office at 423–A Student Union Building.

Comedy — The UMass improv comedy show Mission Improvable will perform every Saturday in the Campus Center Basement at 8 p.m. Free.

Religious — The Alliance Church of the Pioneer Valley in South Amherst will provide rides to church. Pick up is at 9:40 a.m. on campus. Call Mark at 253–0361 for more information.

Support group — REFLECT, the Five College bereavement support program is offering two support groups this semester: A grief support group for those who have experienced the death of someone close to them; and an illness group for those currently coping with the serious illness of a loved one. If you or someone you know is interested, please call us at 577–5316 for more information.

Support group — Overeaters Anonymous, a group of individuals who share an addiction to food and suffer from compulsive eating and other eating disorders, will hold weekly meetings on Saturdays at 10 a.m. in the Campus Center. The only requirement for membership is the desire to stop eating. There are no dues or fees. Donations are strictly voluntary. For more info, call (617)641–2303.

Campus Police Log

Accident — Property Damage

Jan. 29

A two vehicle accident occurred on John Adams Rd.

A two vehicle accident occurred on Hicks Way.

A vehicle struck another vehicle parked in a fire lane on Washington Road.

A bus struck an illegally parked vehicle on Presidents Drive.

A two vehicle accident occurred on Fearing Street.

Jan. 30

There was a two vehicle accident on Governors Drive.

The Amherst Police Department was advised of a hit and run accident on Massachusetts Avenue.

An individual reported damage to his vehicle in parking lot 44 on Sylvan Drive, possibly from a snow plow.

Animal Complaint

Jan. 31

A dog was removed from the Mullins Center.

Feb. 1

A bat was reported in a hallway in Thoreau Residence Hall.

Annoying Behavior

Feb. 2

Snowballs were being thrown at passing vehicles on Butterfield Terrace.

Burglary/Breaking and Entering

Feb. 3

A door on the fourth floor of Goodell Library was forced open.

Disturbance

Jan. 31

An individual causing a disturbance in the Infirmary left the building.

Feb. 1

There was a report of a fight in progress in the Malcolm X Center. The incident was resolved.

Drug Law Offenses

Jan. 29

Paul M. Vincent, 19, of 19 Longview Rd., Port Washington, N.Y. and Eamon J. Keating, 19, of 155 Walnut St., Wellesley, were arrested for possession of Class D substances.

Jan. 31

Richard P. MacDonald, 18, of 33 Frankwyn St., East Longmeadow, was arrested in Patterson Residence Hall for possession of a Class D substance and person under 21 possession/transport of liquor.

Larceny

Jan. 29

Two telephones were reported stolen from the School of Management.

Jan. 30

There was a report of a television stolen from a Brown Residence Hall lounge.

An individual from John Adams Residence Hall reported CDs stolen from her room over Intersession.

An individual reported her pocketbook stolen from Tobin Residence Hall.

Jan. 31

A telephone was reported stolen from an office in Lederle Research Tower.

Liquor Law Violations

Jan. 30

Blair T. Haney, 19, of 58 Rockinghorse Way, Holland, Pa., was arrested in Butterfield Residence Hall for person under 21 possession/transport of liquor and possession of a Class D substance.

Jan. 31

Matthew G. Katkocin, 18, of 32 Sunswept Dr., New Fairfield, Ct., was arrested on Massachusetts Avenue, for person under 21 possessing/transporting liquor.

Traffic Stop

Jan. 31

Kevin M. Medeiros, 21, of 24 Bragetti Ln., East Falmouth, was stopped on North Pleasant Street and arrested for his second offense of driving under the influence of liquor, and failure to stay within marked lanes and to the right of the road.

Feb. 1

Dana G. McCann, 20, of 196 Kingsbury Ave., Bradford, was arrested on Infirmary Way for person under 21 possessing/transporting liquor, and possession of a Class D substance.

Feb. 2

Muhammed H. Yousef, 21, of 295 Puffton Village, Amherst, was arrested for failure to stop for a red light and operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license.

Vandalism

Jan. 29

Posters that were taped to a door in McNamara Residence Hall were set on fire.

A vehicle that was parked in parking lot 34 on Massachusetts Ave. was damaged.

Jan. 31

A broken window and tipped over sani–can were reported from Mahar Auditorium.

Damage to a copy machine was reported in Hampshire House.

Feb. 1

There was a report of individuals damaging trash cans on North Pleasant Street.

A window was smashed on a vehicle in parking lot 49 on Windmill Lane.

A windshield on a vehicle was smashed by a snowball on Infirmary Way.

Feb. 2

A toolbox from the rear bed of a truck was vandalized on Massachusetts Avenue.

Visit our website at- www.umass.edu/rso/collegian
Made with care by Dave "Toolbox" Quist!

To all Foreign Students and Scholars

A representative from the Internal Revenue Service will be on campus Wednesday February 5, 1997 in room 168 at the Campus Center from 1 - 3 PM. He will be offering a tax seminar on filing tax forms. All foreign nationals must fill our federal tax forms 1040NR and 1040NREZ and Form 8843, whether or not they are employed. Students and scholars from all area colleges are welcome to attend.

In the weeks following the seminar, tax assistance will be available at the School of Management. Please call the Office of Foreign Students and Scholars (545-2843) for times.

The deadline to file forms is not until April 15, 1997.

Hurry! Get Your Senior INDEX Yearbook Photo

NOW!

This will be the Final Sitting!

February 3 - February 28

Campus Center Rm. 177

Call Now To Schedule a sitting.

There is a $5 sitting fee.

(800) 836-0558

■ rent

continued from page1

the students accountable for the furniture in their rooms, Andrews also sees this program as a way of "rewarding residents who have lived in the same dormitory for a long period of time."

The furniture is given out based on seniority points, so while it is unlikely that first year students will get a couch in their room, it is also not guaranteed that juniors or seniors will get them either.

There are two types of seniority points, class points and hall points. Points are awarded at the beginning of each semester.

Residents receive one class point for every semester they are enrolled at the University. Once a class point is obtained it can never be taken away.

Hall points work differently. For each semester a resident spends in a specific dorm, they gain two hall points. However, when that resident decides to move to another dorm, he loses all his acquired hall points from his first dorm.

Andrews also added that Resident Assistants (RAs) are not given special treatment.

"We don't distinguish them from residents but we do take into account (when figuring seniority points) that RAs are asked to move all over campus without a choice," Andrews said.

"So far, the program is going great. The students really appreciate being able to have furniture in their rooms," Andrews said.

Shannon Blaney, an RA in Kennedy said that overall, the program has been going well but she felt that there was a publicity problem at the beginning of the semester.

"Some students were upset because the program wasn't publicized enough, so a lot of sophomores ended up getting lounge furniture instead of juniors and seniors," Blaney said.

"I'm sure it will improve in the future. It was only the first semester and anytime you start something new, there are always some quirks," Blaney added.

This semester, two new dorms in Southwest North have been added to the program — Emerson and Thoreau Residence Halls.

Neither Cullen nor Andrews are sure if the program will expand beyond the four participating dorms in Southwest North.

The four remaining residence halls in Southwest North — Prince, Crampton, James and Melville — are set up differently than the others.

Andrews said that the two graduate residence halls, Prince and Crampton, "do things a little differently. Melville and James Residence Halls are all women and there isn't a problem with furniture disappearing from their lounges."

"We are focusing on trying new things in Southwest North," she said.

As for lounge furniture ever returning to the lounges, both Cullen and Andrews are skeptical.

"We have tried so many different things to keep the furniture in the lounge. We have bolted the couches together. We have bolted them to the floor, we have even put furniture in the lounge that no one should want in their rooms," they said.

Recently, the lounges have been equipped with tables and chairs for residents to study in, but Blaney said residents are removing them and putting them into their rooms as well.

"I think that just about any furniture you put in the lounge will disappear because residents don't have a lot of furniture in their rooms and it's easier for them to take it from the lounge than to go out and buy furniture," said Blaney.

"Perhaps the University should regard [removing lounge furniture] as theft. Until the theft starts being treated seriously then students will go with the history of what students can get away with," Cullen said.

Currently, students who have lounge furniture in their rooms illegally are billed $25 for removal fees during winter session.

KENNETH W. P. SCOTT'S COLLEGIAN

Get this snow outta here!

Tim O'Brien and Chuck Drake of the Amherst Public Works Department help clear snow piles from downtown Amherst yesterday.

■ info

continued from page 1

board is the placement of two direct–response telephones located to the left of the board.they will allow students to call the businesses displaying advertisements for free, to schedule appointment times or inquire about services and fees.

Claudia Prodan, a senior hotel restaurant and travel administration (HRTA) major and member of the CCSUC, said she was excited about the new board and its telephone feature.

"I am really glad that students will be provided with an added, efficient service," said Prodan. "I think the phones will aid students so they will get a quicker service."

Auger said that the commission had been involved in the selection of advertisements from the beginning.

"We gave him [Wolman] a list of businesses that we couldn't accept," Auger said. "No large national chains, no businesses that actively compete with student and University business, no food. We wanted to keep it to non–offensive and useful businesses."

The CCSUC will control the allocation of the advertising space in the center panel to RSOs and other student groups. The Commission is still discussing what their final policy on the information board advertisements will be, but Auger expects that within a month, the policy will be in place.

Esther Salas, a senior psychology major and commission member, said that the board will be a useful service to both campus organizations and students themselves.

"Basically, it's another avenue for student groups to promote themselves," Salas said. "They can easily contact our office in room 817 of the Campus Center to put up an ad."

In addition, CIS will be hiring four to five interns from UMass in the next few weeks to work on the information board. The interns will work in sales, marketing and client account managing and earn an average of $500 a month.

Fired Coke employees sue for $420 million

By Verena Dobnik
Associated Press

NEW YORK — For 27 years, Jim Crumb toiled at a Coca-Cola warehouse in Queens, earning just enough money to feed his six children.

Suddenly, Crumb and 13 others were fired and charged with stealing soda they say they were promised in return for doing a good job — charges prosecutors have since dropped.

"I was shaking when they fingerprinted me," says Crumb. "I'm innocent. The policewoman said, 'We know, but it's such a big company.'"

A year later, the mostly unemployed men are suing the Coca-Cola Bottling Co. of New York for $420 million in damages in state Supreme Court, saying they were falsely arrested and accused of stealing thousands of cases of soda.

They say they were promised the reward for working during their lunch hour or just being good employees at the Queens borough bottling company, which is 49 percent owned by the Atlanta-based soft-drink giant Coca Cola Co.

"People make deals with their managers, who say, 'If you do a good job, take a couple of cases home,'" said Anthony Rumore, president of Local 812 of the Soft Drink Brewery Workers Union, a Teamsters local that represents the fired workers.

Most of the soda they were being offered had been mislabeled or could not be sold for some other reason, the union official said. "I believe top management orchestrated the whole situation," said Rumore, noting that the firings came at a time when Coca-Cola was reorganizing its business.

But Coca-Cola said the missing soda was clearly linked to the workers.

In October 1995, after receiving a letter saying employees were stealing about $4,000 worth of Coca-Cola products a month, the company noticed a wave of soda shortages, according to Lewis Boxenbaum, a spokesman for Coca-Cola in New York.

In the three months before the surveillance, 12,738 cases were missing, according to computerized company records, and that in the same period after the workers were fired, only 109 cases were reported missing, Boxenbaum said.

A private security firm produced a surveillance videotape of the Forest Park warehouse, and 14 employees were seen removing cases of soda.

"But removing something is different than stealing it," says their attorney, Jonathan Silver. "And one of the men was accused of taking just one bottle of soda."

They were fired in November along with two managers. The company then filed an official complaint, and they were criminally charged in February with petty larceny, losing not only their income but their health insurance.

The theft charges were dismissed in June 1996 by Criminal Court Judge Suzanne Melendez, who said at the time, "If there ever was a case that did not belong in this court, this was the case." To this day, the missing bottles have not been accounted for, said Silver. "For all I know, it could have been an accounting glitch, a computer glitch, theft by someone else. Nobody knows." The workers also have filed a federal lawsuit demanding arbitration.

There will be a meeting for all current Women's Issues writers and interested writers on Thursday, Feb. 6 at 6 p.m. in the Collegian newsroom. If you cannot make it please contact Michelle Hillman at 545-1361.

TRAVEL SMART!
FROM NEW YORK
One Way Roundtrip
LONDON $130 $245
PARIS $202 $379
ROME $235 $438
SAN JOSE, COSTA RICA $277 $517
Scheduled flights. Fares to worldwide destinations. Eurailpasses available.
Weekend surcharges may apply. Customs-immigration taxes apply. Fares subject to change without notice. Int'l. student I.D. cards may be required.
PRISM TRAVEL
212-986-8470
800-272-9676

!! AEROBICS !!

FLEX
FITNESS CENTER
175 UNIVERSITY DRIVE, AMHERST, MA • 253-3539

!! TREADMILLS !!

COMPUTER FAIR & SALE
$2 GA ADM. WITH STUDENT I.D.
TRI-STATE FAIRS
10AM-4:00PM
Buy & sell new & used computer equipment, software & accessories
Buy computer classes from all the show
Buy & sell computer books, magazines & tapes featuring the IBM PC competitive market from full systems to libraries of CDs. It's all here. Adm $2 ea. with ad $5ea after 1:00 pm $4 ea w/ad only
MULLINS CENTER AMHERST SUND, FEB 9

COME SEE WHAT IT'S ALL ABOUT...

SHAB

Gain Experience in Administrative Aspects of Health Care

Sponsor Health Promotion Events

Come join the Student Health Advisory Board

Informational meeting:
Wed. February 5, 5:30 -6:30pm
University Health Services Rm. 304

For more info call Tamara at the Health Education Office 577-5181

WANTED
WIRED, CRAZED, PASSIONATE, CREATIVE
MULTIMEDIA PROGRAMMERS
NETWORK ENGINEERS, HACKERS, PHOTOGS, VIDEOGRAPHERS
LEAN & MEAN 3 YEAR OLD FIRM SEEKS FULL & PART-TIME HELP, INTERNS PASSION, But NO EXPERIENCE? CONTACT US!
VISION MULTIMEDIA
http://www.visionmm.com
please include: resume, letter of interest, work, reel
VISION MULTIMEDIA
P.O. Box 776
Amherst, MA 01004
attn: Ben Bailyn
benning@visionmm.com

MULTILEX
English/Russian Dictionary on CD ROM for Windows 95
The World's Largest and Most Powerful English/Russian Language Tool Available on The International Market Today!
ORDER TODAY!
By INTERNET:
http://www.profit-russia.com (click "MEDIALINGUA")
Or Call toll free USA/Canada: 1-(800)717-3105
OVER 250,000 ENTRIES !!!
ONLY $39.95 + Shipping and Handling !
"Exceptional Dictionary For Studying"
"Electronic Dictionary of a New Generation"
Published by: MEDIALINGUA - MOSCOW, RUSSIA
Distributed by: PEAK TRADE SYSTEMS INC. - DENVER, COLORADO USA

DAILY COLLEGIAN

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003 • (413) 545-3500 • Fax (413) 545-1592
http://www.umass.edu/ro/collegian

Jacob W. Michaels Editor-in-Chief Chris Taylor Conner Managing Editor
Alycia Hines Business Manager Josh Sylvester Production Manager Craig J. Brody Advertising Manager
David Voldan Advertising Production Manager Lisa Chiu Senior Diversity Editor

Jeremy Brothers Arts & Living Editor
Humphrey brown III Black Affairs Editor
Lisa Chiu Developing Nations Editor
Mike Burke Editorial/Opinion Editor
Jamie Simsheimer Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Issues Editor
Sarah Kimmel Jewish Affairs Editor
Raghuram Vadarevu Multicultural Affairs Co-Editor
Christine Soh Multicultural Affairs Co-Editor
Laura Stock News Editor
Thang Vo Photography Editor
Casey Kane Sports Co-Editor
Chris Stamm Sports Co-Editor

Michelle Hillman Women's Issues Editor
Marc Dionne Editorial Production Manager
Position Vacant Systems Manager
Eric R. Remillard IV Finance Manager
Position Vacant Circulation Manager
Feisal Ahmad Marketing Manager
Jaclyn E. Alberti Classifieds Manager
Lyle A. Henry Operations Manager
Maureen Majerowski Assistant Operations Manager
Marty Pappas Classified Advertising
Thomas F. Sweeney, Jr. Graphics Advisor/Instructor
David Quist Webmaster

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is financially independent from the University of Massachusetts, operating solely on revenues generated by advertising sales. The paper was founded in 1890 as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and then the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. The Collegian has been published daily since 1967, and has been a broadsheet publication since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call (413) 545-3500 weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Image isn't everything

Seema Gangatirkar

When Alicia Machado of Venezuela won her Miss Universe 1996 crown, she won it on the basis of her talent and personality.

And the fact that she is pretty and has a good figure didn't hurt her cause much either.

At the time of the pageant, Machado weighed in at 110 pounds and stood just shy of six feet. A couple months later, she gained 10 pounds. She explained the weight gain, saying that her busy schedule did not allow for a regular exercise program.

Rumors flew that pageant officials wanted to dethrone Machado for gaining the extra weight, now up to 50 pounds. As if all that personality and talent was gone with the wind, once she gained weight.

Machado kept her crown, and she was recently photographed in a New York gym showing off a new weight–loss program. Coincidence? Probably not. It's probably the same program she is using to shed the pounds that irritated the Miss Universe pageant officials.

Even the owner of the Miss Universe pageant, Donald Trump, poked fun at Machado's weight gain. When asked by the New York Post why he won't fire Machado, Trump replied, "Imagine the ratings... Absolutely the whole world will want to tune in to see how she looks, right?"

The question would have given Trump the perfect opportunity to reflect that how much one weighs isn't important, it's more important what you do. But rather, he countered with a flip comment on television ratings.

The struggle for the perfect body, the quest for the perfect face continues. If Machado — who was supposed to epitomize perfection in a woman — couldn't maintain the image, what hope is there for the rest of us?

There is a perverted image out there, saying that thin is beautiful. The image mocks women and wreaks havoc on confidence levels. The chief perpetrators include various beauty pageants, which style themselves as "talent" contests and advertising.

Other forms of media, including film and television, contribute to perpetuating the myth that in order to be beautiful, you must be thin.

Deep down inside, we know it is impossible to look like some of the supermodels prancing on runaways, but there is always that little part that wishes desperately to have legs like Tyra Banks or a face like Claudia Schiffer.

But even in the supermodel world, these women are a far– cry from perfection. Computer graphics, for them, has reduced some of the stress of perfection.

Cindy Crawford's body? If you checked out "Behind Closed Doors with Joan Lundon," you would have learned that not only are Crawford's features enhanced, but her curves are air–brushed. A little fat on those thighs? Not a problem in this world of computer graphics. With a click of the mouse, that fat is gone, along with any other unsightly features that might make Crawford less than perfect.

How could you possibly compete with that?

The struggle for perfection is more amplified in the teen years, when girls are most vulnerable to the messages broadcast by media and beauty pageants.

In adolescence, girls go through many changes in their bodies. It's a painful time, when they are subject to teasing — mostly from the opposite sex. And as puberty continues, the little girls turn into sexual objects. Instead of being portrayed as strong and independent, a constant barrage of media taunts young women into slavery to image.

Magazines like Vogue, Seventeen and Sassy are aimed at young women and tend to be the biggest promoters of body image. These magazines are filled with pages and pages on how to get a man, how to keep a man, or what to wear to make your man happy. There are monthly columns on make–up, hair, sex and fashion tips.

And of course, the biggest culprit in these magazines are the ads. Most of these magazines have more ads than stories.

The ads feature women, young and unnaturally thin. There is an element of glamour and happiness in these ads. Like buying a pack of Virginia Slims will immediately transform you into a bubbly, happy and cheerful woman. Or drinking a type of alcohol will make you instantly attractive to the opposite sex — love actually pours out of a whiskey bottle.

Advertisements sum up beauty and thinness, equating those two elements with happiness. The real answer is actually a big fat zero, but for an adolescent girl, already unhappy and confused about body changes, these ads are especially harmful.

It's during this age that anorexia takes hold. It begins with a diet that slips out of control. In an anorexic's mind, her thinness shows to the world that she is in control, that she has power over herself. But while there is a physical hunger, the anorexic is seeking to quench a more emotional mental hunger, the hunger for happiness, love and confidence.

For college girls, changes and new attitudes lead to insecurity about looks. As a result, college is a breeding ground for the more impulsive disease, bulimia. For many girls, it's a frenzy of binging and later, the guilt and revulsion that leads to self–induced vomiting. Bulimia is less about control than anorexia is, but the common denominators of emptiness and self–hatred bind these two diseases together.

Advertisements and pageants contribute to those feelings of inadequacy, making it almost impossible to feel secure about yourself when you don't look anything like Cindy Crawford or Alicia Machado.

The current standards of beauty need to change. There ought to be an impetus to say it's okay to be the way you are, it's okay to look the way you do.

So when you look in the mirror in the morning, don't be disappointed that Cindy Crawford isn't smiling back at you.

If you tune into the Miss Universe pageant, which airs later this month on CBS, keep this thought in mind:

It's wonderful to be yourself.

Seema Gangatirkar is a Collegian columnist.

Letters to the Editor

End the oppression

To the Editor:

How does institutional oppression manifest at UMass?

• 7 percent of teaching assistants are people of color.

• the University is two years overdue on coming through on the ALANA agreements, signed with ALANA groups in 1992 to increase the percentage of students of color on campus to 20 percent by 1995.

• TA's (Teaching Assistants) are paid an average of $6900 per year.

• Top administrators in Whitmore are paid in the range of six figures per year.

• The UMass child care system provides no daycare for infants under 18 months of age.

• The UMass child care system has only 19 subsidized slots out of a total of 78.

• The UMass child care system fails to meet the varying scheduling needs of graduate students, such as having your child supervised while you teach an evening class.

• 867 UMass students are on welfare — which does not cover student loans.

• 2,500 assistantships exist to accommodate 6,000 grad students.

• A majority of these assistantships lack guaranteed funding the following semester.

• Lack of job security results in many graduate employees having to drop out of school, unable to pay for their education.

The mission statement of the University to achieve "a campus where men and women of diverse racial, social and economic groups play major roles" is demoralizing and insulting, as it exists in words only. If the University were adhering to its mission, then this campus community would be benefiting from the knowledge and experience of a rich and broad range of individuals, including single parents — primarily women — people of color, and poor and working class. Instead, we have an overwhelmingly white campus, accessible only to an increasingly middle class and privileged community.

What is GEO doing to end institutional oppression at UMass?

The Graduate Employee Organization (GEO), the union that represents all graduate employees, is currently in its twelfth month of contract negotiations with the University. Graduate employees are the Teaching Assistants and Associates who teach undergraduates, the Research Assistants and Interns conducting critical research for the University and the Area Resident Directors who advise, support and guide students in their busy residence hall living situations.

The GEO is fighting for:

• increased funding for graduate employees of color

• a new fund for graduate employees from underrepresented groups such as poor and working class people, single parents and immigrants.

• a subsidized flexible child care center

• a livable wage

• job security

• comprehensive health care

If the UMass administration is serious about remaining true to their mission and making UMass accessible to people in economic need, it is incumbent upon them to acknowledge, take responsibility for and work to end the institutional classism, racism and sexism at this University. One way to accomplish this goal is to settle a fair contract with GEO, the union that is already doing this work, to end UMass' institutional oppression.

This "flagship university," the largest employer in the Commonwealth, can be a model of economic justice in the higher education community if it chooses. In the meantime, the campus community can achieve such justice, if we choose, by supporting GEO: email the Chancellor; sign the GEO petitions; wear GEO buttons; call GEO and ask how else you can help. Your support, no matter how seemingly small, is invaluable to this union winning a contract that makes UMass more accessible, enriched and public.

Emilie S. Woodward
Social Justice Education Program

Doonesbury BY GARRY TRUDEAU

Opinion/Editorial

The views and opinions expressed on this page are those of the individual writers and do not necessarily represent the views of the Collegian.

We the people

Mark McGrath

It has been said that our generation will be the first in the history of America which cannot look forward to a better standard of living than the generation preceding it, yet that doesn't seem to bother us.

Because we feel we cannot control the government that defines how we are to live, we do not vote. Yet we complain about our elected officials. Only 20 percent of Newt Gingrich's Georgia district voted for him, but because most of the people who didn't vote for him didn't vote at all, he is perhaps the most powerful political figure in Washington.

If we are aware that our society is ripping apart at the seams, we choose to look in the opposite direction.

We laughed when we heard that our Vice President could not spell the word "potato" and when traveling to Latin America, how he wished he had studied harder in Latin class.

We supported the Gulf War because the government and the media told us to.

We can quote more lines from Adam Sandler movies and Hootie and the Blowfish songs than we can from our own Constitution.

We are more concerned with the departure of the head coach of the New England Patriots than with the fact that the IRS just wasted $4 billion of taxpayers' money on a failed revamp of its computer system. We hardly blink an eye when they add that they're going to pay private corporations to process our data for them instead.

We do not believe in God.

We have accepted a set of social norms, and when an individual decides to deviate from those norms or think freely, we ridicule and alienate that individual.

We grew up in a time when the government spent billions of dollars producing smart bombs, when it should have been spending those billions of dollars producing smart kids.

We are spoon fed our news in 30–second sound bites.

We have seen the institution of matrimony fail to such depths that a modern marriage has a better chance of ending in divorce than success, but we refuse to allow gay couples to be wed because we see such a union as amoral and contradicting the laws of nature.

When the economy isn't as healthy as it should be, we blame welfare mothers, immigrants and any other marginalized group who we know will be unable to defend themselves, and that makes us feel better.

We believe that our current president has broken numerous laws, but understand that lying and cheating are expected of the office.

We are destroying our environment so quickly that one has to wonder whether the Earth will even be habitable in 100 years, yet we throw away plastic bottles and aluminum cans, drink from styrofoam cups, spray our hair with aerosol cans and stand idly by as the government buckles under corporate pressure when faced with environmental legislation.

We eat lunch at McDonald's, dinner at Pizza Hut, sip coffee at Starbucks and rent movies from Blockbuster; handing what little money we have over to the very corporations whose work is to ensure that all wealth is concentrated in their hands.

We attend this University not because we care about our educational advancement, but because in order to have a job in the 21st Century, it will be necessary for us to have a diploma.

We would rather spend an hour on the Net, communicating through a bunch of circuits then talking with another person face to face.

We have allowed the powers that be to divide us into groups based on our race, sex, class, religion, sexual orientation and political ideology and we have allowed them to pit our groups against each other for no other purpose than to ensure that we will never be able to unite against them.

We refuse to believe that the United States of America is anything but the best country on Earth.

We watch "Jenny Jones" and "Jerry Springer" because we have nothing better to do.

We act as if all of society's problems are going to take care of themselves.

Amidst all of these negative realities, there are still some among us who wonder why we're not going to live as well as our parents did.

Mark McGrath is a Collegian columnist.

We want the airwaves

Mike Burke

"It's amazing. You can buy an Uzi fully assembled, but it's illegal to buy [an FM transmitter]."
— Napoleon William, microbroadcaster

After Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic shut down the dissident independent stations Radio Index and Radio B-92 in Belgrade, the international community forced Milosevic to allow his opposition access to the airwaves.

Here in the United States, independent radio stations have been facing the same battle — and losing.

Though certain loopholes in broadcasting regulations do allow for certain underground stations, the federal government, led by the Federal Communication Commission (FCC) has cracked down on this alternative form of media in recent months.

Pirate radio, glamorized in Christian Slater's Pump Up the Volume, has long offered an alternative to commercial radio stations. By circumventing FCC regulations, pirate radio broadcasters transmit on an unauthorized radio frequency with a small transmittor. Traditionally the FCC has taken little notice to music broadcasts, but politically based stations have come under severe attack in recent months.

Take Mbanna Kantako's Black Liberation Radio in Springfield, Ill. for example:

Kantako, a blind man living in the projects, started Black Liberation Radio in November 1988. His frequency didn't even reach the city limits, but the town officials felt threatened anyway. First, the FCC fined him $750. Then, the Springfield police intervened and arrested Kantako's nine– year–old son, evicted the family and made numerous threats.

Only when the Springfield community joined together and backed Kantako's efforts, did the officials allow Black Liberation Radio back on the radio. Today Kantako's influence and message have spread around the nation; and Black Liberation Radio can be heard 24 hours a day in Springfield.

But not all pirate radio broadcasters have been so fortunate. Three weeks ago police from Decatur, Ill. raided the home of Napoleon Williams and Mildred Jones, who broadcast their own form of Black Liberation Radio. The police shut down the station and confiscated equipment ranging from radio transmitters, shortwave radios, compact discs, cassette recorders and even a computer.

The police charged Williams with eavesdropping, a Class 4 felony. Williams' show had become too dangerous for public officials — he spoke freely on matters such as police brutality against African Americans and aired speeches from such "radicals" as Malcolm X, Kwesi Mfume and Louis Farrakhan.

The police got scared and shut down Williams' station — sounds like something Milosevic would try in Serbia, doesn't it?

The Williams and Jones debacle is far more complex and disturbing; a couple of years ago the Department of Children and Family Services in Illinois took their two children, Unique Dream, 8, and Atrue Dream, 3, from their natural parents. Why? The Department felt that the children were not being raised in a proper environment determined after a police raid, where an officer threatened to shoot Unique.

According to police records, both Williams and Jones have spotted histories. But it's apparent that the recent raid and subsequent shut down stemmed directly from Williams' programming choices.

Though Williams' Black Liberation Radio is currently off the air, he should rejoice that he is still alive.

Unfortunately that wasn't the case in Los Angeles. Social activist and strong supporter of Mumia Abu–Jamal, Michael Taylor was mysteriously murdered just prior to his planned venture into underground radio. He had planned to form a station "dedicated to the voiceless people of Los Angeles."

Taylor's mission is that of most pirate radio station: to provide a voice to those Americans left out in the cold by modern technologies such as the Internet and satellite television. While these new sources of information offer new ways of looking at the world, only a small percent of America has a chance to even take a glance.

The African American community has been far behind in gaining access to modern information sources such as the Internet leading to a segregation of information. Separate but equal doesn't even apply here.

Without access to luxuries such as the Internet, radio remains an essential tool to spread news in the inner cities. And men like Michael Taylor and Napoleon Williams are paying the price so someday the airwaves will be free just like they are in Belgrade.

Mike Burke is a Collegian columnist.

A capella group a Swede treat

By Seema Gangatirkar
Collegian Staff

THE REAL GROUP
Fine Arts Center Concert Hall
Jan. 31

The art of a capella singing involves absolutely no instrument except for voice.

Last Friday evening, the Swedish a capella quintet, The Real Group, brought down the house with their blending harmonies and interpretations of everything from Duke Ellington to Count Basie to the Beatles.

The quintet featured soprano Johanna Nyström, alto Katarina Nordström, counter tenor Anders Edenroth, tenor Peder Karlsson and bass Anders Jalkeus. Friday's concert marked the beginning of their North American tour.

The concert began with the Duke Ellington classic, "It Don't Mean a Thing (If It Ain't Got That Swing)." Right away, the group established its sound with generous and full vocals.

The second selection was a piece by Stevie Wonder, belted out by Nystrom. Nordstrom followed with a smooth rendition of the Beatles' "Strawberry Fields Forever." On both of these pop selections, the group handled each piece deftly, with strong harmonies backing up the vocalists.

Part of The Real Group's charm stemmed from their easy banter and wit. They also enjoyed a great rapport with each other, and also with the audience.

On one of their own pieces, "How Come It's So Hard To Be The Way You Are," the quintet urged the audience to start singing, and later sway back and forth with the music.

The Real Group featured many of their own songs in the program, including the recipe for "Chili con Carne" and what to wear when singing "A capella in Acapulco."

The concert closed out with a medley of Swedish pop songs that had risen to the top of the American charts, including ABBA's "Dancing Queen," Ace of Base's "The Sign" and "It Must've Been Love" by Roxette.

At the end of the performance, the group was summoned back by an enthusiastic audience begging for an encore. The group obliged with a hilarious Spanish tune, sung by Jalkeus. A second encore was demanded following Jalkeus's performance, and the group came back and sang a Swedish song.

Star Wars explodes back onto big screen

By Adam Levine
Collegian Staff

STAR WARS: SPECIAL EDITION
Directed by George Lucas with Mark Hamill, Harrison Ford, Carrie Fisher
Playing at Hampshire Six Theater

During the 1970s, a unique occurrence in Hollywood changed motion picture history forever. The evolution of the so called Blockbuster mentality transformed movie–going from casual entertainment into an important leisure activity.

Studios began to market their films with everything from book adaptations, to action figures and even Happy Meal themes. Society indulged itself within the realm of popular culture, which consisted of long lines at the box office with the anticipation of witnessing spectacular and breathtaking stories of adventure.

There were two specific directors who were primarily responsible for recreating Hollywood. Graduates of USC film school Steven Speilberg and George Lucas changed the way the world watched movies forever. In 1975, Speilberg made the first true Blockbuster, Jaws, and became one of the most phenomenal and controversial directors in history.

Although audiences around the globe flocked to the theater like never before, many critics were skeptical of what Jaws had to offer. At a time when film was finally beginning to be taken seriously as an art form, Speilberg was accused of solely thrilling and entertaining the public, offering little else.

Speilberg continued to create films that expanded both the human imagination and the box office revenues. However, in 1977, fellow colleague George Lucas also did more than his fair share to contribute to the new Hollywood. With a budget of only 10 million dollars, Lucas created the most inspiring science fiction odyssey since Gene Roddenberry's 1967 television show Star Trek.

With only two films on his resume, including the highly successful American Graffiti. Lucas pitched his idea, which was based on the japanese film The Hidden Fortress, to 20th Century Fox. From this point, the legend of Star Wars was created.

For 20 years, Star Wars has entertained audiences through four rereleasings of the original film and two of the most successful sequels in history. With the popularity of video, newer generations have also witnessed the excitement of Lucas' trilogy.

Now, the blockbuster mentality has come full circle with the fifth re–release of Star Wars, properly referred to as The Special Edition. This past Friday, the first of the trilo-

Turn to STARS WARS, page 6

Brecker & Co. ignite Iron Horse

By Joshua Boyd
Collegian Staff

MICHAEL BRECKER & FRIENDS
Iron Horse
Jan. 31

Last Friday night, the all–star quintet that played on Michael Brecker's fall Impulse! release, Tales From The Hudson, brought their strong chemistry to the Iron Horse for the second of two nights. The band played a total of four sets over their two night stand, but Friday night, the last set showed they clearly were not tired in the least.

Against the backdrop of another winter snowfall, the five musicians took their combined experience and talent and reached climactic heights to a standing room only audience.

From the opening song, "Willie T.," from Tales, the band showed they clearly held the concept of playing off serene themes, before working themselves into churning acoustic jazz meltdowns.

Brecker clearly wore his John Coltrane influence on his suit–jacket sleeves, as he got into moments where he would blow fast figures in the high altissimo register, always ending up his solos completely differently from the mostly calm manner he started with.

While Pat Metheny, clearly the most popular name in the line–up, played smoothly, he wasn't knock–down amazing. To tell the truth, the "new kid" of the ensemble, young pianist Joey Calderazzo, was the real story that night in terms of solos. Bouncing around a little on his stool, he brought out sides of the Iron Horse's piano that nobody was really expecting to hear. He also wore his influences on his short sleeve shirt, this being Coltrane's famous pianist, McCoy Tyner. He never actually eclipsed Tyner's abilities, but he played with the same ferocity and multi–rhythmic style.

One of the greatest rhythm sections in jazz, bassist Dave Holland and drummer Jack DeJohnette surprised no one. They were as viciously textured as always, filling the room with many bass booms and DeJohnette's merciless, thundering drum fills. They especially shined on the second tune of the show, "Song For Bilbao" (another Tale), and a boiling rendition of the jazz standard "Autumn Leaves."

When the audience demand an encore, the group delivered the last tune of their Iron Horse stand with conviction, and more importantly, fun.

Michael Brecker performed at the Iron Horse last Friday night. COURTESY NICOLE ANDREA

COME SEE WHAT THE FRATERNITIES OF UMASS HAVE TO OFFER YOU

COME TO THE

FRATERNITY GAY FORUM

18 Fraternities Will Be Present

Answering All of Your Questions About Greek Life at UMASS

Wednesday, February 5, 1997
7 - 9 pm at the Newman Center

Interested in helping others?
Thinking about community service?
Want to get experience in your field?

Then attend the UMass Community Service Program's

Annual Spring Volunteer Fair

Wednesday, February 5, 1997 - 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.
in the Campus Center Auditorium

Volunteer work, academic internships and service learning projects available

If you are unable to attend but are interested in volunteering, contact the Community Service Program at 545-3327

Academics and More !!!

UMass Division of Continuing Education

For a free course catalog, call 413-545-0107 or e-mail contined@admin.umass.edu
Explore our web site and see how we can help you - http://www.umass.edu/contined/

Division of Continuing Education
University of Massachusetts Amherst
providing access to adult, nontraditional education for over 25 years

Tons of credit undergrad courses — in the evening!
Nearly 100 noncredit workshops — affordable, fun, practical, including
- Bartending,
- GMAT, GRE, LSAT, & MCAT Preparation,
- Magical Arts,
- Photography,
- ESL,
- EMT Training,
- Marketing,

and CHOCOLATE !

Mental Health Groups Spring 1997

MONDAY	TUESDAY	WEDNESDAY	THURSDAY
Mindfulness-based Stress Management Group — Learn to live fully in the present moment. Mindfulness meditation will be used as the foundation for all stress management exercises. This group is appropriate for both general stress management as well as for assistance in managing stress related medical disorders. Group runs for 8 weeks. Mondays, 3:30 - 5:30 p.m.	Self-Discovery Groups — Learn to develop better social skills; improve relationships; become more assertive; improve connections with others; feel more in control of your life; and cope with sadness, lonliness, or isolation by talking with others who share your concerns. These groups run for 10 weeks. Group I -Tuesdays, 3:30 - 5:00 p.m.	Self-Discovery Groups — Learn to develop better social skills; improve relationships; become more assertive; improve connections with others; feel more in control of your life; and cope with sadness, lonliness, or isolation by talking with others who share your concerns. These groups run for 10 weeks. Group II - Wednesdays, 3 - 4:30 p.m.	Ninos Adultos de Familias Disfuncionales — This is a therapy group for individuals who would like to understand how their upbringing continues to influence relationships in the present. Issues such as exploring/expressing feelings, developing self-esteem and breaking dysfunctional patterns are central. Group is held in Spanish. Group runs for 8 weeks, Wednesdays, 3:30 - 5:00 p.m.	Men's Group - If you are a man who has difficulty with self-confidence, friendships, romantic relationships, or expressing anger you're not alone. This weekly discussion group can help you understand and overcome these problems as group members talk with and learn from each other. The group is co-led by a man and woman and runs for 8 - 10 weeks, Thursdays, 4:00 - 5:00 p.m

All groups require a pre-group interview. For more information, or to sign up for an interview, please call the Mental Health Division of University Health Services at 545-2337 or stop by 127 Hills North, M - F, 8:00 a.m. - 5 p.m.

■ Star Wars

continued from page 5

gy exploded into theaters while eager fans rushed with anticipation to relive the memory of one of their fondest movie memories. Younger fans also were ecstatic to witness their first viewing of Star Wars on the big screen.

Star Wars, for the first time in history has been re- established with sharper special effects and additional scenes that Lucas originally cut in 1977. The best parts of the Special Edition are these few scenes that have not been tampered with. Establishing shots of Obi Wan's home on Tatooeine are included, as well as Luke reminiscing with an old friend in the Rebel docking base. Unfortunately, the cramped streets of Mos Eisely and Han's confrontation with Jabba the Hut are a bit over the top.

The most important aspect of the re-release is the ability to watch the film again on a proper movie screen with THX sound systems. Regardless of how many viewings one has had on video, it can not begin to compare to the magniitude that only a theater could offer.

Star Wars is most likely just the beginning of 1970s and '80s blockbuster directors re-releasing their material. Already, films like Speilberg's E.T. and Close Encounters of the Third Kind have been restored and remastered on video. Hopefully, The Indiana Jones Trilogy will also be redone and shown on the big screen.

If for no other reason than for nostalgia, members of the generations that previously witnessed the legacy of these films can relive their youth. In addition, an entire new generation will have the opportunity to experience the magic of the original blockbusters. A–

COURTESY TWENTIETH CENTURY FOX

Princess Leia (Carrie Fisher) and Luke Skywalker (Mark Hamill) share a moment of distress.

Shine star reflects on career

By Bob Thomas
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — He has won the Golden Globe, been applauded by Hollywood's great names and courted by Steven Spielberg, yet Australian actor Geoffrey Rush manages to keep it all in perspective.

At 45, Rush is no wide-eyed new star. He has known his hits and misses in the Australian theater, where he has appeared in scores of classical and modern plays.

Still, he had a right to be dazzled when he captured the Golden Globe as best dramatic actor of 1996 for his role as troubled Australian pianist David Helfgott in Shine. And he is likely to get a nod for the more prestigious Oscar, when nominations are announced on Feb. 11.

"I was taken by the party atmosphere," he reflected. "Within the room it didn't feel too tense. I was expecting an undercurrent of intense, competitive energy. It felt like this town was having a bit of a party that night."

"Getting my name called out and then going up there — the response was quite different from what I thought it was going to be. Something quite huge poured up onto the stage, and I felt, 'My God, this is the peer group of peer groups!'"

"I'm really new to this. I've only done films since 1994; the rest has been theater. I suddenly find myself on the West Coast of America with Dustin Hoffman beaming up at me. Nicole Kidman, Tom Cruise, John Travolta and all these faces — it was pretty extraordinary."

"The nice thing was the warmth of the response and the generosity I've sensed as an outsider. There's a feeling in the industry I got at that moment... that people were saying, 'We like this sort of film, we like what it says, we like how it was made, we like its ethos.'"

Like all quality, independent films, Shine had a long journey to completion. Rush first heard about the project in 1992 when the director, Scott Hicks, saw him onstage in Uncle Vanya.

"Scott was fearful that I might have stumpy, banana-like fingers," said Rush. "So the joke is that I had been cast from the wrist down."

His long, slender fingers suited him for the role of the concert pianist, he was hired without a screen test. Financial and casting problems stalled production until 1995. The final budget came to $6 million, a large sum for an Australian film.

Rush used the delay to study tapes Hicks had made with David Helfgott, who spoke in an outburst of manic, repetitive sentences.

"It was like learning a dialect or another language," the actor remarked. "I tried to absorb what I could of David's particular rhythms, then make it my own."

He met Helfgott socially, but decided not to study him lest the portrayal become an imitation.

Rush had studied piano until he was 15, mostly pop music. He worked with a piano tutor for Shine and was able to fake the playing for the movie.

Geoffrey Rush has a long face, melancholy in repose, with a prominent nose and unruly hair. He was born in Toowoomba ("an aboriginal word. I'm not sure what it means," he says) in Queensland.

When he was eight years old, his family moved to Brisbane, where he did all his schooling, earning an arts degree at the university.

"I was never really thinking I'd become a professional actor," he said, "because there was no theatrical culture I'd been around." Having seen some traveling tent-shows in his youth, he was fascinated by the theater. He appeared in college plays, then joined the newly founded, state-sponsored Queensland Theater Company.

In the mid-1970s, he studied drama in Paris, and returned to work in repertory in Brisbane and Sydney. His first major film came in 1994.

About the rendezvous with Steven Spielberg: "We had a chat about a possible project that may eventuate. It was great. He was filming a terrific stunt sequence for (Jurassic Park sequel) The Lost World with a velociraptor.

"He was absolutely extraordinary. He was working this shot on a set with perhaps 200 people. We were having chats about this future project. He talked to my wife about the impending birth of his child. There was a six year old boy who was a friend of a friend of a friend, and he was giving that child equal time."

"Some prop guy would come up with a velociraptor part to see if it was OK. Steven would get called to the monitor to look at the shot. Brilliant, absolutely brilliant. No overt ego. Good, hard work and skills."

Pats pick Pete to replace Parcells

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

FOXBORO — Pete Carroll, who had a losing record in his only season as an NFL head coach, knows he'll be compared to Bill Parcells.

That's fine with him.

"We're following a heck of a coach. We're following a heck of a season," Carroll said after he was appointed on Monday to succeed Parcells as New England's coach. "It couldn't get any tougher. I like it. I think it's going to be great fun."

Carroll, the San Francisco 49ers defensive coordinator the past two seasons, got a five-year contract Monday to succeed Parcells as coach of the team that represented the AFC in the Super Bowl.

"I want everyone in the organization to know he's not on trial" and that the club won't panic if it suffers a setback next season, owner Robert Kraft said in explaining the long-term deal.

Parcells, whose four-year tenure ended last Friday when he resigned after NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue ruled that he owned New England an option year, still could end up as coach of the New York Jets next season if they offer enough in compensation.

Kraft indicated Monday some flexibility in his demand that the top pick in the draft must be included and resumed talks with the Jets.

"We're open to any ideas. But I don't think the transaction can happen without the number one pick," Kraft said. "If they want to give us Hugh Douglas, Keyshawn Johnson and Aaron Glenn, we'd think about it."

They were first-round draft picks the last three years. Now the Jets must decide if Parcells is worth this year's top pick.

Tagliabue's ruling held that the Patriots must give permission for Parcells to work for another NFL team next season.

Parcells' final game with the Patriots was a 35-21 loss in the Super Bowl. Carroll's last five games as a head coach were all losses — with the Jets in 1994 after he started the season 6-5. He was fired after that 6-10 season.

Carroll, 45, is 10 years younger than his predecessor, more player-friendly and not hung up on having final say over all personnel decisions.

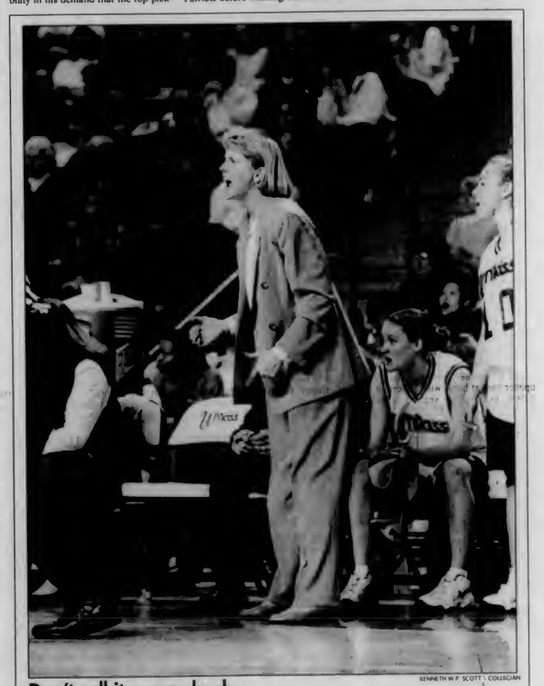
"It's just like Jay Leno took over for Johnny Carson and he was Jay Leno. He wasn't trying to be Johnny Carson," Carroll said.

"I'm going to be me. What will really be compared is how we win."

Parcells had losing records in two of his first three seasons with the Patriots before winning the AFC East with an 11-5 record last year that brought his regular-season mark with New England to 32-32. He was 2–2 in the playoffs with New England.

His dominating personality, though, could be better than

Carroll's for a young team that might get too arrogant after an outstanding season.



"It remains to be seen what the effect of that will be," said Carroll, who also interviewed for the St. Louis and Detroit coaching jobs. "I'm doing this the way that I know how to do it best and I will not be thinking about looking back over my shoulder and how it was done."

"His style of motivation is probably right for coming into the age of the millennium and the internet," Kraft said. "His style, I think, will be a style that will help our younger players."

Carroll, far more straightforward than Parcells, said it didn't bother him that Kraft's first choice for a coach was George Seifert, who won two Super Bowls in his eight years as San Francisco's coach before resigning after last season.

Seifert, a 49ers consultant this year, was the "least risky" choice but didn't want to coach and recommended Carroll highly, Kraft said.

"I'd have called him myself," Carroll said of his former boss, but "I'm glad George didn't want to coach."

KENNETH W.P. SCOTT \ COLLEGIAN

Don't call it a comeback...
Joanie O'Brien and the women's hoop team look to start a new winning streak Friday night when they face Temple.

Flying Compass Graphics
Faster than a Speeding Bullet.
and Higher than a Kite!
Call 253-compass or go to 13666 Main St. Good luck Finding it.
Check out our website at: www.wicked.high.com
Collegian Graphics. We just can't stop. We just can't stop. We just can't

Campus Activities at the University of Massachusetts presents
"Something Every Friday"

A Touch of Reality

This three-person group uses poetry to express important issues like AIDs; gang violence; and day-to-day reality. This powerful trio has opened for the Fugees, the Lost Boys, and the Last Poets.

For more information check our website: http://www.umass.edu/campact/events/sef.htm
This series is made possible by a grant from UMASS Auxiliary Services, the Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs, and the Daily Collegian.

Bluewall Cafe
February 7, 1997
8:00pm
Free

Go to the Game on the
UNIVERSITY STORE
Register to Win 2 FREE Tickets for
UMass vs. Duquesne

Thursday February 6 7:30 PM
William D. Mullins Center
Enter at the University Store Campus Center
Entries Close Wednesday Feb. 5 at 5PM

UNIVERSITY STORE — Campus Center 545-2619 — Hours: M - F 9 AM - 5 PM, Sat 10 AM - 5 PM

ENTRY FORM
NAME _____
LOCAL PHONE _____
LOCAL ADDRESS _____
REGISTER TO WIN 2 FREE TICKETS TO UMASS VS. DUQUESNE
ENTER AT THE UNIVERSITY STORE
EMPLOYEES OF THE UNIVERSITY STORE ARE NOT ELIGIBLE TO WIN

■ Norris

continued from page 10

Dakota, Jason Blake and David Hoogstein, and are five points ahead of No. 7 Michigan State's Sean Berens and Mike York.

By the end of this season, he will be one of the all–time centers of attention, and not just this season, but along with Bonneau and old–schooler Pat Keenan, in UMass history. But, like a faceoff against Hockey East stars like UNH's Jason Krog or BU's Chris Drury, he takes it all in stride. "It has been a great experience," Norris said. "I have learned a lot of things, and gone through a lot of ups and downs, but especially with this team, you have to learn overcome adversity.

"Sure, me and Robby are among the leading all–time scorers and whatnot, but we really don't look into that too much. It hasn't really entered my mind, not at all. Obviously, I had a goal at the beginning of the year to score thirty goals, but that's looking pretty hard right now."

"I've had some tough luck around the goal this year, but who knows? It doesn't really matter what your record is at the beginning of the year, because you want to be playing good hockey come playoff–time in March."

Mallen is a old–time hockey fan, and he considers Norris to be a throwback to those good old days. The decision to sign Norris was one of the best the coach has made since the reinvent of the program in 1993, and the team has reaped the benefits.

"I think he has had a great career here for four years," Mallen said. "A lot of people wanted him to play another year in juniors before he decided on college hockey. We decided he could help us right away, and went after him."

"He's a hockey player through and through, and loves the game. He works hard every day, and he really wants to be successful in this game, and make our team successful."

JOANA KANSANEN \ COLLEGIAN

UMass senior center Warren Norris enjoys what he does best; handling face–offs for the Minutemen.

UMass men's gym team opens with a bang

By Michael J. Nam
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's gymnastics team had a successful start to their season with a first place finish at the UMass Open Dec. 7, a third place finish at the West Point Open Jan. 11, a victory at Navy Jan. 24, and an easy win over M.I.T. and Vermont at home on Feb. 1.

The Minutemen took their season opener here at home with a score of 219.8, beating out second place Temple who finished with a 215.2. Freshman Jeff LaValee was the all–around winner with a 55.55 score.

"He's just an outstanding kid, a real great addition to the team," said UMass head coach Roy Johnson.

LaVallee and sophomore Phil Lieberman helped the team to a No. 3 finish out of eight competitors at the West Point Open. LaVallee took second place in the pommel horse (9.3) and tied for fourth with Lieberman in the floor exercise (9.350) during the preliminaries, and they finished first and second, respectively, on Saturday again in the floor exercise.

The Minutemen rolled along at Annapolis competing against Navy and defeating them 221.200 to 211.700. LaVallee took his second all–around victory of the season, and senior Gabe Columbus, sophomore Brad LeClair, and Lieberman all posted impressive finishes in the victory.

"This is the best team I've ever had," Coach Johnson said. "We have a shot at [having] a couple of All–Americans. I expected to do as well as we have been doing."

The 221.200 score against Navy was a season high culminating the early successful run that saw the Minutemen gain and hold onto a No. 10 national ranking.

"The best marker [of progress] was the Navy meet. Though you don't go out there to compete for a ranking, they do send a message to other coaches and officials as to how far along the program's come," Johnson said.

The Minutemen cruised through the competition against the Engineers of M.I.T. and the Catamounts of Vermont with a score of 218.800, easily overcoming the respective scores of 173.500 and 165.100 posted by their opponents.

"We had a little trouble at the beginning," Johnson said. "But we tried out a few things that needed work. [Rusland] Shupak and [Michael] Sangirardi did really well. They posted some career highs in their events."

The Minutemen took the top honors in all six events, led by sophomore Stephen Pryor who won first all–around with a score of 54.900.

Lieberman, who won the floor exercise with a 9.400 and senior Chris Funk who tied a career–high score with a 9.400 on the parallel bars rounded out the winning performances in the meet.

"The guys are feeling good right now, and the important part of coaching is to get the guys to do everything they can without injuring them," Johnson said.

UMass will host Temple at Boyden Gym on Feb. 8. Temple is currently ranked No. 15 in the nation and is the defending EIGL Cup champions.

"We haven't beaten Temple at home in 10 years, but if we hit 85–90% of our routines, we should win," Johnson said.

The Minutemen trail the all–time series against the Owls with a record of 9–27, which includes a loss in Philadelphia last year in which UMass was defeated by the score of 220.300–219.850.

"We now have a chance to go to the NCAA reigonals as a team. Everything is built on progression, and if we want to win the EIGL (Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League) Cup, we have to beat Temple at home," Johnson said. "There's room for improvement, but we could still catch Michigan State ranked No. 2 in the country."

Minutemen Notes...

LaVallee was named the ECAC Rookie of the Week for his outstanding performance in the meet against Navy.

The Minutemen will have two more home meets after Temple, hosting Army, Air Force, and Syracuse all in the Curry Hicks Cage before championship tourneys begin.

UM skiers blow by BC

By Jackie Leroux
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts ski coach Bill MacConnell had one goal for the men's ski team last weekend — to beat Boston College.

They did just that.

In the Brown/UConn Tournament held at Loon Mountain, N.H., the UMass men's ski team took first place in the slalom at 226.43, and second in the giant slalom, just behind Plymouth State at 325.31. Boston College took third in the giant slalom, and second in the slalom.

"The men just had an outstanding weekend," MacConnell said.

Plymouth State's third place finish on Saturday is the first time it has finished below first place all season long. Currently, the Panthers lead the regional standings with eight points. Boston College and UMass are tied at second with fourteen points each.

Sophomore Tom Holden had a sensational weekend for UMass, as he took first in the giant slalom at 105.10, and second in the slalom, at 74.16.

This weekend also featured the return of junior Tom Schaefer, who missed the Plymouth State Tournament due to muscle spasms. Schaefer took the individual crown in the slalom with a time of 73.85, and then took fourth in the giant slalom at 108.89.

"He came crashing back and skied as well as he could," MacConnell commented.

The women's ski team continued to struggle this weekend, as it took sixth place in both the slalom (274.89) and the giant slalom (391.64). The women of Boston College led the way in both races, followed by Smith College and then Babson.

The Minutewomen lost their top skier, Leah Muliero, when she hit some soft snow on the edge of the track and took a fall.

Despite the team's troubles, sophomore Katie Keane managed to pull off two top ten finishes.

"Katie had a real good weekend, she had eighth in the slalom and ninth in the giant slalom, which is really good sking when you look at how many skiers there are," MacConnell said.

Keane finished the slalom in 82.07 and the giant slalom in 117.24.

Things should be looking up soon for the women, as their number three skier, Heather Schay, is slated to return next weekend. She has missed every tournament so far this season with a sprained ankle.

The Minutewomen are currently sixth in the regional standings, and are looking to move into fifth place so that they can go to the United States College Sking Association Reigonals at the end of this month.

Both the men and the women will head to Ascutney Mountain, Vt. this coming weekend to compete in the Boston College Tournament.

■ swim

continued from page 10

gonna pay attention because Fordham is an Atlantic 10 team. They're a good solid team, they've got some good tough swimmers."

The swimming and diving team has just one more dual meet left in their schedule before they hit the road and travel to Buffalo to defend their title in the long awaited Atlantic-10 Championship on February 20.

"You know my philosophy has always been not to focus much on the dual meets as you do on the championships. It's certainly at that time of the year now where we say, 'championship time, let's go'," Yarworth said, "We want everyone to understand that they can't wait for their other teammates to do it, the whole team has to do it. It becomes a team sport, even though it is an individual affair, it becomes a team sport."

When it comes down to the Atlantic-10 Championship, everyone, from the first swimmer to the last diver must make the best contribution possible in order to succeed.

"Last year we beat LaSalle by about 60 points, and we outscored them in diving 60 to 15, so that's where we pulled ahead. We got to have them [divers]."

Yarworth's final comments touched upon his feelings about the upcoming Atlantic-10 Championship, and what it will like defending the title.

"I think we're definitely one of the favorites. It's wide open between us, Fordham, St. Bonaventure, LaSalle and George Washington. Obviously, as the defending champions, we're the team to beat, but I wouldn't say we are the favorite. This team has an awful lot of heart," Yarworth said.

This Saturday, UMass travels down to the Bronx to splash off against Fordham at 1 p.m.

■ women's track

continued from page 10

Junior Christy Martin has been a top performer in the mile, setting a personal record earlier this season with a fast time of 5:10.73.

Senior Molly Dunlap was one of UMass' top performers this winter, despite battling bronchitis for several weeks. Dunlap ran a tough 5000m race in West Point, N.Y., finishing with an exhausting time of 18:45.

Senior Katie Greenia celebrates two outstanding performances this season. At the New England Challenge Cup Finals in Hanover, N.H., Greenia ran a strong 3000m race, finishing 18th overall, with a time of 10:17. In West Point, she finished 25th in the 5000m race, with a time of 18:13:19.

Saturday, UMass will head to Boston to compete in the Valentine Invitational hosted by Boston University. It will be their final invitational before they begin preparation for the championship round of their schedule.

"We're not going to send the whole team," LaFreniere said. "We see this as an opportunity to rest some girls for the real important part of our schedule: the A–10 Championships, followed by the New England Championships, followed by the ECAC Championships, hopefully followed by the NCAA Championships."

Webmaster Dave Quist is a very nice and sweet boy.
come see his handiwork at-
www.umass.edu/rso/colegian

DESIGN
INVENT
CREATE

Use your EDUCATION in ways you never thought possible. DESIGN a new software program. MARKET the next remote access product. CREATE products that fit in the palm of your hand. U.S. Robotics gives entry-level sales professionals MEANINGFUL experience. (You may be new, but your VALUABLE contributions are encouraged, and expected.)

U.S. Robotics is the LEADER in information ACCESS. We make PRODUCTS that connect people with INFORMATION — anytime, anywhere. We hire SALES PEOPLE — with DEGREES in marketing, business, sciences and liberal arts.

Now that you know more about US, we'd like to know more about YOU.

Come see us at the
Career Fair
February 12

If you are unable to stop by, send your resume to: U.S. Robotics, College Relations, 7770 N. Frontage Rd., Skokie, IL 60077, or e-mail: resumes@usr.com We are an equal OPPORTUNITY employer m/f/d/v.

There are NO limits.

U.S.Robotics
The Intelligent Choice In Information Access
HTTP://WWW.USR.COM

Collegian Graphics.
More tools than a hardware store.

Buy at wholesale prices right at the show from up to 50 companies (150 exhibit tables) featuring the IBM/PC compatible market. From full systems to libraries of CDs, it's all here. Adm $7 ea. with ad $5ea after 1:00 pm $4 ea w/ad only

MULLINS CENTER AMHERST SUND, FEB 9

EMERGENCY MEDICAL TRAINING

- Be Human Services Intervention Consultants, Inc
- Pay Less Expenses
- Classes Start Feb 10
- Call Mrs. Goodwin for more information 545-0742

THE BOLTWOOD PROJECT™
A Student/Comminity Service Learning Program*
(*an RSO and Dept. of Landscape Architecture & Regional Planning sponsored program)

Assignment notification, Feb. 6th (Thurs.) at Boltwood table on Campus Center Concourse.

Volunteer while earning credit
Come and Learn How!!!
Your life will NEVER be the same!

You Can Earn 1-2 Credits
Recruitment Nights
(Attend one session - Required for all Applicants!!!)

SPRING SEMESTER '97
6:30 PM
(Note: Prompt starting time)

- Feb 3 Mon Campus Center Aud. or
- Feb 4 Tues. CC Room 163 or
- Feb 5 Wed. Campus Center Aud.

FAMOUS FOR 2 BURGS 2 BUCKS
PETE'S UNIVERSITY
ROUTE 9
HADLEY, MA
YEAR 'ROUND
http://www.javanet/~mrburger/

Munchie Madness 3-6PM
MONDAY-FRIDAY
Fried Cheese & Onion Rings 5.95 2.98
Shrimp Cocktail 5.75 2.88
Lite Potato Skins 6.99 3.50
1/2 PRICE!

http://virtual-valley.com/judies

Collegian Classifieds

113 Campus Center • University of Massachusetts • Phone: (413)545-3500 Fax: (413)545-1592

AUTO FOR SALE

1987 Jeep Grand Wagoneer runs great, needs minor repairs. $1500 or B/O. Call Colin 256-8480

Mustang looks good, runs good. $500. Call 665-9068

EMPLOYMENT

Appointment Setters Hadley office has several openings in its calling center. No calling involved. Fun atmosphere. On bus-line. Up to $7-$10 hr. Start work immediately. Call 584-7696. Ask for Mr. Boone or Mr. Bart

Camp Wayne/Sister-half of Brother/Sister Camp. Northeast Pennsylvania. 6/23-8/20/97) Have the most memorable summer of your life! Coaches, teachers, students. Pre-requisite: Must love children, enjoy living and working in a group situation. On-campus interviews March 11th Call (800)279-3019

The Ultimate Summer Job Whitewater Rafting Guides needed. No experience necessary. Looking for outgoing, enthusiastic people-previous outdoor or athletic experience is a plus. For more info send resume and letter of interest to Crab Apple Whitewater, P.O. Box 295, Charlemont, MA 01339 or call (413)339-0188

EMPLOYMENT

PREMIERE BROTHER-SISTER CAMPS IN MASSACHUSETTS ON CAMPUS INTERVIEWS Counselor positions for talented and energetic students in all Team Sports, especially Baseball, Basketball, Roller Hockey, Gymnastics, Field Hockey, Soccer, Volleyball; 30 Tennis openings, also Golf, Archery, Riflery, Ropes and Rock Climbing, Weights/Fitness and Cycling; other opportunities include, Performing Arts, Fine Arts, Figure Skating, Newspaper, Photography, Yearbook, Radio Station, Rocketry, Swimming, Skiing, Sailing, Windsurfing, Canoeing/Keyaking, Top Salaries, room, board and travel. June 22nd-August 20th. Call for information MAI-KEE-NAC(boys) 1-800-753-9118 DANBEE(girls) 1-800-392-3752. Recruiters will be on campus Tuesday, March 11th from 10am to 4pm at the UMass Camp Day

Teaching Substitute $6-25/hour. Hampshire Franklin Day Care Center, Route 63. Near Amherst-Leverett town line. 548-9674

PUBLIC RELATIONS/MARKETING STAFF

If you seek an ever-changing high-energy workplace, this may be the job for you. Hinsdale/Greyhound Park/simulcast betting capital of the Northeast, is looking for enthusiastic individuals experienced in Public Relations/Marketing/Promotions. Exciting work atmosphere, competitive salary, and benefits. Send confidential resume to: Ron Algeni, GM, Hinsdale/Greyhound Park, Route 119, Hinsdale, NH 03451. F/PT Equal Opportunity Employer.

English Teachers Needed Abroad! Teach conversational English in Prague, Budapest or Kralhow. No teaching certificate or European languages required. Inexpensive room and board and other benefits. For details call (206)971-3680 ext. K50011

Wanted: Marketing student to market custom software via the Internet- Pay is on commission 548-8896

Wanted: Tour guides. Summer Counselors, Student Admissions Representatives. Applications available at the Admissions Center.

Cruise Line Entry level on-board positions available. Benefits. Summer or year round. (612)643-4333

Cruise and Land Tour Employment with exotic locations. Meet fun people and get paid! For industry information, call Cruise Employment Services (800)276-4948 ext. C50017. (We are a Research and Publishing Co.)

Outside Jobs- Now hiring. National Parks, Beach Resorts, Ranches, Rafting Co's benefits and Bonuses! Nationwide openings. Call (919)918-7767 ext. W180

EMPLOYMENT

Capa Cod group & summer rentals. Waterfront houses, Falmouth area. (508)477-8000

Sugarloaf Estates- Ultra modern two bedroom apartments. Free heat/hot water. New kitchens, baths, carpeting, washers/dryers and more! On bus-line. Minutes to Amherst. Great specials! Call 665-3856

Fridge Rentals 253-9742 Free Delivery

FOR SALE

For Sale Electric Guitar Peavey black strat copy, excellent condition. $200.00 Sean 546-5734

Word Processor: Brother Whisper Writer WP-7550, Ink Jet Printer. Asking $299 or B/O. Bill 582-9175

MAC Plus excellent condition. CPU, monitor, keyboard, mouse, lots of software. $175. John 6-8359

Smith Corona WP compact, great condition. $150 or B/O. Call 256-5470

FOR SALE

For Sale Ricoh KR5 Super II Camera, lens, body, flash- $100; neon light $90. Sarah 253-3241

Soowboard w/bindiags 148GNU Dukester, brand new. 665-8680 CHEAP!!

FREE Two computer desks in good condition. 548-8896

486 Now Laptop $585, VGA Color Monitor $175, IDE Hard Drive $110. Steve 566-3324-2

MUSICIANS

Blues Harmonica Player looking for musicians to play Chicago style harp with! Call Eric @ 256-6324

MISCELLANEOUS

New Metabolism Breakthrough Period Lose 5-100 pounds. Doctor approved. Cost $35. (800)666-4793

GORILLAGRAMS Valentines, Birthdays, Roses, Balloons, Poems. Send the Crazy Gorilla. We'll go anywhere, anytime. Student Rates. Call ahead for Valentine's Day. 256-0287

Start your own fraternity VETA BETA TAU is looking for men to start a new chapter. If you are interested in academic success, a chance to network and an opportunity to make friends in a non-pledging brotherhood, E-mail ZBTA@IBT National ORG or call Brett Hrbeck at (317)334-1898

PERSONALS

"Lat's gat it oa"- Marvin Gaye, Free love and Valentines at www.mainquad.com

"What's love got to do with it?"- Tina Turner, Free love and Valentines at www.mainquad.com

ROOM FOR RENT

One bedroom in 2 bedroom apt. Available immediately. On bus route. Sugarloaf Estates. Keira (203)294-1336. Females Only.

One bedroom for rent in two bedroom apt. Call Taryn (508)682-5607

ROOMATE WANTED

Roommates wanted to share house in Ocean City, NJ for the summer. Call Sue at 546-0407

SERVICES

Questions about your lease/security deposit deductions? Questions about subletting/assigning leases? Questions about the condition of your new house or apartment? Contact the Student Legal Services Office. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Attention Long Distance Callers Introducing the rechargeable telecard by New Media Telecommunications, Inc. Reasonable long-distance rates- a $25.00 minimum charge gets you over 2 hours of long-distance time, anywhere in the U.S. Works from any phone, no major telephone carrier needed. Enjoy the benefits of the rechargeable telecard now! Immediately send a long self-addressed stamped envelope to: L.L.T., 80 Skiff Street, Ste. 507, Hamden, CT 06517

Piercings by the Boardad Lady 222 State Street, Northampton. (413)586-0629

Seeking Financial Aid? Don't limit your possibilities for financial aid! Student Financial Services profiles over 200,000+ individual awards from private and public sectors. Call (800)263-6495 ext. FS0018. (We are a research and publishing company).

www.smartbomb.com Serving all your smart drug needs

TRAVEL

Last Daal- 100% Guaranteed Organized by local travel company. Great packages for Cancun, Florida, and more. Call 256-8724

Jamaica- Spring Break Stay in beautiful Negril. Includes roundtrip airfare, hotel transfers, 7 nights lodging from $519. Don't take chances with other companies, go with the UMass Ski Club. Call 545-3437

TRAVEL

Europa $155. Caribb./Mexico $189 R/T Worldwide Destinations. Airhitch Tm. (800)326-2009. airhitch@netcom.com or www.is-com.fr/airhitch

Spring Break '97 It's heaven. Wake and Bake in the hottest destinations-free parties!!! Organize group and travel. Free lowest price guarantee. From $99. (800)426-7710. www.sunsplashtours.com

Spring Break- Nassau/Paradise Island, from $379. Air, hotel, transfers, parties and more! Organize small group- earn free trips plus commissions! Call (800)9-Beach-1

WANTED TO RENT

Six bedroom house for the fall! Willing to take over summer lease. Call 549-5362!

WANTED

Conservative students interested in starting a conservative student newspaper. Good writing skills and familiarity with Pagemaker software a plus. Call Paul at 6-0183 for more information.

Here's something to do with all the ¢hange you have in your pockets... Collegian Classifieds

Unfortunately, there's still no use for pocket lint.

Personals Policy

1. All personals MUST be proofread by Collegian classified employees before payment and acceptance of the classified.
2. Last names MAY NOT be used in personals. ONLY first names and initials are allowed. The only exceptions are for birthday or congratulations personals, in which case the full name may be used.
3. Phone numbers are not allowed in personals. NO EXCEPTIONS.
4. Addresses are not allowed in personals. this means dorm room numbers as well.
5. Personals of a threatening or derogatory nature are not acceptable. Personals of a violent/crime or libelous nature are not acceptable. Personals may not be used for the purpose of harassment.
6. Profanity may not be used in personals.
7. The personals section is for personals only. The personals section may NOT be used to sell items, seek roommates, advertise meetings, etc.
8. All personals must have the name, signature and UMass I.D. number of the student placing the ad, filled in on the invention order. Non students must provide a valid driver's license and the license number must be recorded on the invention order.
9. Use of false identification or misrepresentation is subject to penalties under the law.
10. The Collegian reserves the right to refuse or to edit any personal that does not meet the Collegian's standards in accordance with the statutes of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Standard Headings

Activities
Announcements
Apartment For Rent
Auto For Sale
Employment
Entertainment For Sale
Found (2 days Free)
Happy Birthday
Houses For Rent
Instruction
Lost
Musicians
Miscellaneous
Motorcycles
Personals
Room For Rent
Room Wanted
Roommate Wanted
Services
Summer Sublet
To Sublet
Travel
Transportation Wanted to Rent
Wanted

Rates

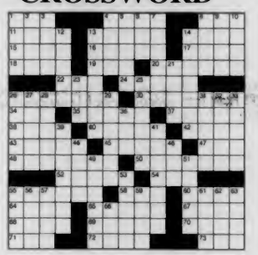
$2.00 minimum/day

Students

20¢ per word/day

All others

40¢ per word/day



NO REFUNDS

Please write clearly and legibly. We are not responsible for errors resulting from illegible handwriting or type.

Answers to Yesterday's Puzzle

U	T	A	H			T	O	U	T		P	A	W	N
R	E	L	Y		S	H	A	R	I		E	L	E	E
S	A	L	E		M	E	R	G	E		R	A	N	D
A	M	A	N	D	A		S	E	R	P	E	N	T	S
			A	R	L	O		D	N	A
E	M	U		E	L	I	E		E	L	O	P	E	R
S	A	N	T	A		L	A	D	Y		M	A	S	H
S	P	I	E	D		E	G	O		S	A	U	T	E
A	L	T	S		A	R	E	S		I	N	L	E	T
Y	E	S	S	I	R		R	E	S	T		A	R	T
			V	I	M		S	H	I	P
A	N	A	L	Y	S	I	S		E	N	R	A	G	E
B	A	L	I		I	N	A	N	E		E	R	I	E
L	I	M	O		N	E	V	E	R		P	O	L	L
E	L	A	N		G	R	E	W			S	W	A	Y

CROSSWORD

ACROSS

1. Duffer's peg
4. Unite
8. Hammering sound
11. His last roster was Dolla
13. Sign, on the Seine
14. Suspicious
15. Minute
16. Rental document
17. Disturbed
18. Colors the hair
19. Bug
20. From Odense
22. Capital of Switzerland?
24. Revise
26. Yangtze places
30. Contract supplements
34. North Pole worker
35. Western mountain
37. Sylvia Plath biography collection
38. Character on "Star Trek: The Next Generation"
40. Salamanders
42. Martial order
43. Prayer enders
45. Choose
47. Union letters
48. Irked
50. Least fatty
52. Cowboy's rope
54. Vane indication
55. Receive
58. Like some peppers
60. Undulating
64. 12 inches
65. Stunned
67. Gen. Robert ___
68. Author Oz
69. Exhausted
70. Scold
71. Fabric for ties
72. Ardor
73. "___ Cry Tomorrow"

DOWN

1. Marched
2. Hard to handle
3. Ms. Hart of "Peter Gunn"
4. Mock
5. Japanese port
6. "Baby ___ You"
7. Had occasion for
8. Former Dutch colony
9. Scientific suffix
10. Legend
12. Portions of medicine
13. Shins
14. Roams
21. Three Men ___ Baby (2 wds.)
23. Clique
25. Fireplace shelf
26. Material for a hamster's bedding
27. Altiplano animal
28. Many times
29. Equines
31. Bias, to Di
32. Luncheonettes
33. Parcel out
37. What Acetaphus was changed to
39. Socks for tots
41. Perfumed
44. "___ That Bass" (Addams song)
46. Bronzed
48. Probate concern
51. Later
53. Pat Joey author
56. Distantly
59. Beckoning word
57. Tenant-owned apt. building
58. The ___ Root (Stephen Crane)
61. Turkish regiment
62. The Painted ___ (Carlos Brin)
63. Megaphone noise
66. Actor Gerard

HOROSCOPES

ARIES
March 21-April 20

Surrrighten your personal connections this week with a few thoughtful kisses. You'll earn the respect of someone who's had doubts about you in the past. An envious person has a difficult time with your recent success.

TAURUS
April 21-May 21

Don't allow all your time to be monopolized by someone who lacks the initiative to broaden his or her horizons. Instead, find a way to gently brush them off, and offer them alternatives to choose from.

GEMINI
May 22-June 21

Thinking ahead—even into the distant future—pays off handsomely, as your insight is fairly good. Don't take undue risks, especially when the stakes are high. A job prospect that seemed remote could be heating up.

CANCER
June 22-July 22

Catch up on your letters this week. You could find out some important news from an interesting source. Keep it under your hat until the appropriate time. It will make a big impression.

LEO
July 23-August 23

A friend saddles you with a burdensome secret. Maintain their trust, but take steps to see that you're not taken advantage of. Try to bolster the ego of someone who's been having a rough time. You could earn their undying gratitude.

VIRGO
August 24-September 22

Exposure to new technology increases your value in the job market. Do your best to banish any fears and take all the instruction you can get. You could be in line for an interesting proposition.

LIBRA
September 23-October 23

Although you're feeling prolifically creative, they simply aren't enough hours in the day to complete all your goals. Take copious notes, and you'll be able to come back to the less pressing projects. A friend could surprise you with a secret.

SCORPIO
October 24-November 22

Keep your ears open and your mouth shut, or you could be caught in the middle of a violent disagreement. Although emotions are running high, with tact and humor the storm could subside as quickly as it formed.

SAGITTARIUS
November 23-December 21

Dive into the nuts and bolts at work and you'll surprise yourself with your productivity. Don't allow a slick salesperson to talk you out of your hard-earned money. Make yourself step back and take a night or two to sleep on any big decisions.

CAPRICORN
December 22-January 20

A relationship could germinate from a quick acquaintance. Follow your instincts, but don't mistake loneliness for connection. Review your major goals; some of them may be a bit outdated.

AQUARIUS
January 21-February 18

Focus on tradition to add strength to a relationship. An emphasis on trust will foster growth as well. You may be ready to make a commitment. Make an effort to pay off any substantial debts you owe.

PISCES
February 19-March 20

Clarify yourself whenever you have a discussion this week to avoid a mixup. A volatile situation is ready to ignite, so take steps to shield yourself from the fallout. A back-up plan might be a good idea.

Daily Listings sponsored by: Your Ad Could Be Here. Call 545-3500

HSCN — Housing Services Cable Network

2	HSCN	Bulletin Board
3	CBS/3	Hartford
4	CBS/4	Boston
5	ABC/5	Boston
6	PBS/57	Springfield
7	HSCN	Movie Channel
8	UPN/20	Hartford
9	Weather Channel
10	NBC/30	New Britain
11	Fox/61	Hartford
12	PBS/24	Hartford
13	WOCH & HSCN
14	UMATV
17	HSCN	Programming
18	TV-19
20	ABC/40	Springfield
22	NBC/22	Springfield
23	CNN
24	CNN/Headline News
25	BET
26	BET on Jazz
27	Laser Video
28	The Learning Channel
30	Comedy Central
31	Popcorn Channel
32	Satellite Programming

TUESDAY EVENING — C - Campus — FEBRUARY 4, 1997

	C	6:00	6:30	7:00	7:30	8:00	8:30	9:00	9:30	10:00	10:30	11:00	11:30
WEDH	2	(12) Creatures	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Nova "The Old Pyramid" (R)		Frontline "The Gulf War" (R) (Part 2 of 2)				Going Places
WFSB	3	(3) News	CBS News	Inside Edition	Am.Journal	Promised Land (In Stereo)		State of the Union Address (In Stereo Live)				News	Late Show
WBZ	4	(4) News		CBS News	Ent. Tonight	Promised Land (In Stereo)		State of the Union Address (In Stereo Live)				News	Late Show
WCVB	5	(3) News	ABC News	Inside Edition	Chronicle	Roseanne	Home Imp.	State of the Union Address (In Stereo Live)			Politically Inc.	News	Nightline
WLVI	6	Full House	Fresh Prince	Star Trek: Next Gener.		★½ "Young Guns II" (1990, Western) Emilio Estevez						Jenny Jones (In Stereo)
WHDH	7	News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Med Abo. You	Something So	State of the Union Address (In Stereo Live)				News	Tonight Show
WTXX		(6) Fresh Prince	Martin	Judge Judy	Real TV	Moesha	Homeboys	Burning Zone "Death Song"	News		LAPD	N. Patrol	Real TV
WVIT		(30) News	NBC News	Ent. Tonight	Hard Copy	Med Abo. You	Something So	State of the Union Address (In Stereo Live)				News	Tonight Show
WTIC	8	(61) Simpsons	Roseanne	Home Imp.	Seinfeld	Star Wars: The Magic		State of the Union Address (In Stereo Live)			News	Coach	Deep Space 9
WWLP	9	(22) News	NBC News	Wheel-Fortune	Jeopardy!	Med Abo. You	Something So	State of the Union Address (In Stereo Live)				News	Tonight Show
WGBY	10	(6) Creatures	Business Rpt.	Newshour With Jim Lehrer		Nova "The Old Pyramid" (R)		Frontline "The Gulf War" (R) (Part 2 of 2)				Charlie Rose (In Stereo)
WGGB	40	(28) News	ABC News	Seinfeld	Ent. Tonight	Roseanne	Home Imp.	State of the Union Address (In Stereo Live)			Politically Inc.	News	Nightline
WSBK	38	Beverly Hills, 90210 (In Stereo)		Seinfeld	Mad Abo. You	Moesha	Homeboys	Burning Zone "Death Song"	News		Martin	Mad Abo. You	Real TV
WTBS	46	Family Matters	Family Matters	Home Videos	Home Videos	★★½ "The Exorcist" (1973, Horror) Ellen Burstyn, Max Von Sydow						★★ "Exorcist II: The Heretic" (1977) Linda Blair
A&E	49	Quincy "Hot Ice, Cold Hearts"		Equalizer "Memories of Manon"		Biography: Menendez		Touch of Frost "Nothing to Hide" (R)				Law & Order "Family Values"
CNN	20	(21) WorldView		Moneyline	Crossfire	Prime News	Inside Politics	State of the Union Address (Live)				Sports Illus.	Moneyline
COM	53	(26) Thick	Dream On	Daily Show (R)	TV Nation	Gallagher: Overboard (R)		Comedy Club All-Stars (R)			A-List (R)	Dream On	Daily Show
DISC	52	Beyond 2000	Next Step (R)	Sea Wings "The Killer Bee" (R)		Wild Discovery: Koala		Mystery Univ.	World-Wond.		Widest of Tribes (R)	Wild Discovery: Koala
ESPN	33	Up Close	Sportscenter		College Basketball	Indiana at Iowa (Live)			College Basketball: Kentucky at South Carolina. (Live)				Sportscenter
LIFE	50	Supermarket	Debi	Designing	Designing	Unsolved Mysteries (In Stereo)		★★ "Babycakes" (1993, Comedy) Rick Lake, Craig Sheffer				Living	Mysteries
MTV	51	Ren & Stimpy	Road Rules	Singled Out	Idiot Savants	Unplugged	Real World Reunion (R) (In Stereo)				House of Style	World Tour (R)	Singled Out
NICK	44	Clarissa Expl.	Tiny Toon	Doug	Rugrats	Secret-of Alex	Happy Days	I Love Lucy	Munsters		M.T. Moore	Rhoda	Taxi
SCIFI	45	Twilight Zone	Darkside	Time Trax "Optic Nerve"		★★½ "Dollman" Tim Kelly, Frankie Raye					VP.5 "Love and Death"		Time Trax "Optic Nerve" (R)
TLC	29	(24) Furniture	Renovation	Hometime (R)	Hometime (R)	Treasures	America	Zulu Wars (R) (Part 2 of 3)			Body Styles (R) (Part 2 of 2)	Treasures	America
TNT	43	In the Heat of the Night		In the Heat of the Night		NBA Basketball: Houston Rockets at New York Knicks. (Live)					Inside-NBA	★★★ "29th Street" (1991)
USA	31	Renegade "The Posse"		Highlander: The Series		Murder, She Wrote		"Buried Alive II" (1997, Suspense) Tim Matheson, Jill Eikenberry. (In Stereo)				Wings	Wings
HBO	35	★★½ "She's Having a Baby" (1988) Kevin Bacon. "PG-13"				★★★ "Executive Decision" (1996, Suspense) Kurt Russell. "R"				Rosewood-1st	★★ "Hard Evidence" (1994) Gregory Harrison. "R"
MAX	36	★★★ "Forever Young" (1992, Fantasy) Mel Gibson. "PG"				★★ "Widow's Kiss" (1995, Suspense) Beverly D'Angelo. "R"					★★½ "Once Were Warriors" (1994, Drama) "R"	★ "Fair Game"
SHOW	55	★★★ "A Pyromaniac's Love Story" (1995) "PG-13"		On the Set		★★★ "It Could Happen to You" (1994) "PG"		"End of Summer" (1996, Drama) Jacqueline Bisset. (In Stereo) "R"				Women

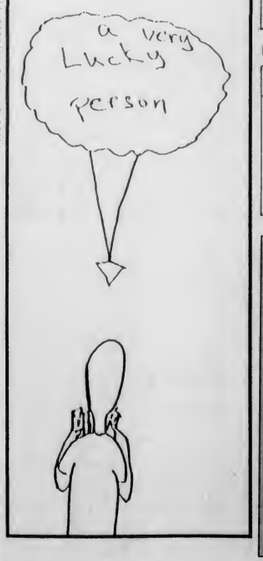
Bruno By C. Baldwin

Drabble By Kevin Fagan

Frumpy the Clown Judd Winick

Robotman By Jim Meddick

Dilbert By Scott Adams



Non-Sequitur By Wiley

Leold By Roger & Salem Salloom

You know, ... you get born and you think you've been dealt 3 queens and 2 kings. But what you really got was a pair of 3's, one 6, a 4, and..... a joker..... but the rest of your life you still act as if you have 3 queens and 2 kings..... and you make some bets, some bad bets. Who's responsible for this misunderstanding?

University² By Frank Cho

Generation X By Chris Lehman

Duh By Moura & Micaela

Loodoo By Mike Rybicki

Close to Home By John McPherson

"I can't believe that nun down on the third floor actually tried to catch it!"

Quote of the Day

"Our wines leave you nothing to hope for."

–Seen on a menu in a Swiss restaurant

–A. Rottweiler

Joke of the Day

What has four legs and an arm?

Today's Staff

Mark McGrath
Night Editor

Raghuram Vadarevu
Copy Editor

Kenneth W.P. Scott
Photo Technician

Matthew P. McCarthy
Production Supervisor

Joylyn Lombard
Kelvin Torres
Production

Today's D.C. Menu

Call 545-2626 for more information.

Franklin

LUNCH
Hamburger
Grilled Cheese
Hot & Spicy Wings

DINNER
Roast Turkey
Burgers
Veg. Chili
Southern Fried Steak

Hampshire

LUNCH
Hamburger
Grilled Cheese
Chicken a la King

DINNER
Roast Turkey
Southern Fried Steak

Worcester

LUNCH
Hamburger
Spaghetti
Veggie Burger
Felafel

DINNER
Roast Turkey
Pastabilities
Spaghetti

Berkshire

LUNCH
Hamburger
Spaghetti
Veggie Burger

DINNER
Roast Turkey
BBQ Spareribs
Pastabilities
Spaghetti

Minutemen bounce back, defeat Rams 75–54

By Luke Meredith
Collegian Staff

Coach Cal has had a tough rookie year in New Jersey, and Bruiser Flint has taken his lumps in his first year at UMass. But when the two get together, they still do nothing but win.

With former head UMass head coach and current New Jersey Net coach John Calipari in attendance, the Massachusetts men's basketball team returned to form, spanking Atlantic-10 doormat Fordham 75–54 last night in the Bronx, N.Y. UMass improves to 12–10 (6–3 in the conference) with the win.

The Minutemen were led by Tyrone Weeks, who scored 17 points and grabbed nine rebounds. Senior guard Carmelo Travieso bagged 18 points, including four three–pointers, and backcourt mate Edgar Padilla added 11 assists and three steals. UMass has now won six of their last seven games.

UMass never really struggled in this one. The Minutemen jumped out to a 40–26 halftime lead and cruised from there. UMass shot 60 percent from the floor in the first half, and 55 percent for the game, including a five for eight performance from behind the three–point line.

Charlton Clarke chipped in with 10 points and three assists for the Minutemen, Lari Ketner added four points and Mike Babul pulled down three rebounds in nine minutes of play.

UMass looks to make it two in a row when they host Duquesne Thursday night in the William D. Mullins Center. Tip–off is 7:30 p.m.

Massachusetts 75, Fordham 54

Massachusetts (12–10, 6–3)
Clarke 5–6 0–0 10, Weeks 7–11 3–3 17, Ketner 2–3 0–0 4, Padilla 3–7 0–0 7, Travieso 6–11 2–2 18, Burns 0–1 0–0 0, Maclay 0–2 0–0 0, Smith 0–2 2–4 2, Kirkland 1–1 0–0 2, Babul 0–0 0–0 0, Basit 3–5 1–2 7, Norville 3–5 2–2 8
Totals 30–54 10–13 75

Fordham (6–12, 1–7)
Berrien 4–9 0–0 9, Ziskunov 0–0 1–2 1, Mack 3–8 2–2 8, Carroll 4–9 2–3 12, Harmatuk 3–5 1–1 9, Lovett 1–3 0–0 2, Kissane 1–2 0–2 2, DiMasco 2–8 0–0 6, Pugh 1–4 1–3 3, White 1–1 0–0 2
Totals 20–49 7–13 54

Assists— Massachusetts 21 (Padilla 11), Fordham 12 (Harmatuk 5) Rebounds— Massachusetts 30 (Weeks 9), Fordham 27 (Mack 5) 3–point field goals— Massachusetts 5–8 (Travieso 4), Fordham 7–16 (Carroll, Di Masco 2) Steals— Massachusetts 14 (Padilla, Travieso, Clarke 3), Fordham 4 (Berrien 3) Attendance— 2,435

Player of the Game

Tyrone Weeks – 17 points, 9 rebounds.

Highlights...

UMass shot 56 percent from the field.... Charlton Clarke returned home and scored 10 points and had three steals... Carmelo Travieso hit four three pointers and ended up with 18 points...Edgar Padilla dished out 11 assists...

COURTNEY SMITH / COLLEGIAN

Charlton Clarke made his homecoming a successful one last night, leading the Minutemen past Fordham 75–54 in the Bronx, N.Y.

UM finishes 2nd at URI

By Corey Peter Goodman
Collegian Staff

Midway through its injury–ridden 1996–97 campaign, the Massachusetts women's track and field team has compiled an improbable 13–4 record despite devastating losses of some of their key performers.

In her ninth season at the helm, coach Julie LaFreniere has done a remarkable job picking up the pieces and leading her Minutewomen into battle, camouflaged as one of the most underrated powerhouses in the northeast.

"I have been real proud of the team's effort this season," LaFreniere said. "They have helped to fill the gaps when we needed them to, and have willingly competed in several events each meet. It has been a real challenge for them, but they've stepped it up."

The Minutewomen (67 pts) continued their winning ways Friday when they finished second behind host Rhode Island (74 pts), and pummeled Dartmouth (25 pts) and Holy Cross (8 pts), respectively.

UMass was led by junior Rebecca Donaghue, who took home first–place finishes in both the mile and 1000m. Donaghue's 1000m time of 2:55:38 was the team's season best and positioned her third on UMass' all–time performances list in that event.

The Minutewomen's supporting cast of sophomore Shelanda Irish, junior Silifa Kenku and freshman Nicole Way helped to turn the heat on Rhode Island and separate themselves from the rest of the pack.

Irish had season–best times in the 200m dash and 55m dash in which she finished first and second, respectively.

Kenku enjoyed a season–best time of 58:20 in the 400m.

And Way convincingly won the triple jump with a season– best leap of 36'2" which also qualified her for the New England Championships.

The Minutewomen also received an outstanding effort from freshman Christine Kloiber, who finished second in the 500m dash with a time of 1:21.22 that also qualified her for the New England Championships.

"During the meets over the break, we were carried by not only our veterans, but by our younger athletes," LaFreniere said. "We have been pushing the kids real hard all season, and they've been producing some great numbers for us."

Earlier this season, newcomer Andrea Comeau set school records in both the pentathlon and the high jump. Comeau achieved the latter with a jump of 5'8".

In her 3000m debut, freshman Sally Hirsch set a personal record with an impressive time of 10:28:56.

Freshman Raqueil Shelton set a personal record in the 55 yard dash at 7:46.

Freshman Melissa Ward achieved outstanding numbers in the long jump, relays, shot put and hurdles.

Freshman Lisa Flood ran well in the 800m, boasting a top time of 2:21:80.

Sophomore Irish dominated the Jan. 11 New England Challenge Cup Trials in Orono, Maine, sporting the overall high scorer honors with gritty performances in several events.

Sophomore Melanie Bell has been surging in the long jump, consistently leaping close to 18' each meet.

Junior Emma Gardiner has been a solid performer in the 55m dash and the relays for the Minutewomen. Gardiner's top time in the 55m dash was 7:37.

As for its seasoned veterans, UMass has been receiving a superlative effort all season.

Turn to WOMEN'S TRACK, page 7

Minuteman Warren Norris: Center of attention

By Jorma Kansanen
Collegian Staff

The zone — a mythical place where we all would like to be, all the time, but only the chosen few have the talent to reach that place. When you are in that indescribable sphere of consciousness, the world is at your fingertips, and it's just a matter of going with that mental and physical flow.

In hockey, one of the aspects of the game, which getting into the zone suits best, is found in the faceoff circle. The player on the Massachusetts hockey team (11–16, 6–12 in Hockey East) that is the first option to faceoff with the opponent's best is senior center Warren Norris (16–18–34). Adept at all parts of the game, Norris is the standout for the Minutemen in the magical circle of puck possession.

Recently, ESPN2 has done a variety of commercials to promote their NHL coverage, with one done on the enigma of the faceoff man. This commercial talks about one of the best in the pro game, Pittsburgh's Ron Francis, with the ref in the commercial believing he has to think of other things (i.e. pizza) to break Francis out of his zone. Norris does not have commercials done on his puck–handling proficiency, and Hockey East referees like Steve McBride think of other things than the game before them, but he believes in feeling the faceoff flow.

"The main thing about faceoffs is that you have to get into a groove," Norris said. "If you're not into a groove early into the game, you can really get into trouble. For me, I know that if I win them early in the game, I pretty much win them throughout the game."

"So, it's a matter of confidence. But, if I am losing faceoffs, I try to do different things, like tying the guy up straight after the draw. It's a key part of hockey, just like scoring goals, and if you're in a rut, you have to get out of it. But, really, I try to cheat as much as possible."

For coach Joe Mallen, the importance of his senior center effects his whole team. But, his importance also comes down to a key juncture in the game, when his team needs to win a faceoff in an opponent's end of the ice.

"Faceoffs are huge in the standpoint that every time the puck is dropped there is a 50–50 chance as to which team will get possession," Mallen said. "Winning and losing faceoffs are something that we can keep track of during the course of a game, and he is very good at them.

"But, he also takes a lot of pride in taking and winning faceoffs. As a result of that, he has had some real good success in that area, and statistically, he has been our most reliable guy."

It's in the blood

When you sit back, relax and think about Canada, what is the first thing that comes to mind? Moose? No, we get those in this country, too. Strange Brew, and those hosers, Bob and Doug MacKenzie? No, you can meet guys like that at Time Out any night of the week. For sports aficionados, and was Rookie of the Year for that team. He planned on going to Michigan State, like his brother Dwayne, and if he did well in the juniors, would be given the benefit of the doubt concerning scholarship status. Coming off of a 107 point season (47–60), he expected to be a Spartan. For whatever political reason, it did not happen, and was then contacted by Dave Peters, who worked for the Minutemen at that time. and the rest is history.

When Norris came to UMass on his recruiting trip, he knew something special was going on with the reinstated hockey program.

"I saw the rink and I wanted to sign right away," Norris said. "I couldn't believe the facility, and [for that reason only] I really didn't care about the campus at that time, which turned out to be nice. I was used to a big campus like Michigan State, [the school] my brother went to, and I used to go visit him there when I was in high school. When I saw this facility, I just knew I was destined to come here."

Center of attention

This season, Norris has taken the experience, often harsh, of his four years in the maroon and white and used it to his advantage. After a rough start for both Norris and the team against nationally ranked squads in New Hampshire and Boston University, the team has been streaky, but the senior center is on a pace to be one of the all–time best UMass centers. Along with his linemate, senior co–captain Rob Bonneau, the leaders of the new hockey school are at the top of several school scoring lists.

In his four years for the Minutemen, Norris is now third in total points (142), tied for second in goals scored with Bonneau (69) and third in assists, only 16 behind his fellow linemate. This season, Bonneau and Norris have teamed up to be one of the top scoring duos in the nation. Both are tied at 73 points with the duo from No. 2 North

Turn to NORRIS, page 7

UMass fired up for A–10's

Jonathan M. Place
Collegian Staff

Since the Philadelphia Invitational back in December, sophomore Brian Wisniewski has been riding a wave that's been covering nothing but victories.

This past Saturday was no exception. Wisniewski swam to victory in two events leading the Minutemen to their third straight win, defeating Rutgers 170–130.

Wisniewski captured the 200 free in a finishing time of 1:46.73 and the 200 back at 1:58.08.

Water polo just doesn't seem to be enough for Billy Hunter, the freshman from Philadelphia, Pa., because for some reason he feels the need to just keep on getting better in every race he swims for the Minutemen.

"They [Wisniewski and Hunter] swam well," head coach Russ Yarworth said, "The kids that have to, in order for us to be successful in the Atlantic 10's, they have to answer the call, big time. I think they're moving in the right direction."

"He's [Hunter] starting to adapt to swimming, because he was just doing polo at the beginning of the year. It takes him a while to get the feel back, but he's obviously ready to do what we need him to do," Yarworth said, "He's carrying a lot of pressure for a freshman, because he's our only real, accomplished breast stroker."

In Saturday's meet against the Scarlet Knights, Hunter took events of his own in the 200 breast (2:14.73) and in the 100 breast (1:00.84). His time in the 100 breast was sharp enough to squeeze in to the ninth spot on the UMass all– time top–performance chart.

"Rutgers is a team in a little transition right now. They've got some sick kids, they've got a new coach this year. They weren't as strong as they have been in the past," Yarworth said, "Our kids swam OK, but we just came off a tremendous emotional high the week before and I didn't expect a whole lot."

The week before that Yarworth referred to was the outstanding accomplishment of his UConn meets where his divers recorded some of their best scores of the season.

"This weekend was a really nice weekend for us. We had Parents' Weekend, so all the kids' parents were here, that made it so that they could swim in front of their folks, and then we had a nice banquet that night," Yarworth said.

Other notables for UMass were sophomore Simon Flynn, who kept up the most endurance in the 1000 free to take the victory in 9:45.51, sophomore Dave Kortikoski in the 100 back in 52.45, junior Sean Anderson in the 50 free in 21.73, junior Matt Davey captured the 100 free in 48.43, and finally B.J. Brannan who took the 500 free in 4:51.25.

"I think Sean Anderson has been swimming real well, along with Matt Davey, David Kortikoski single handedly stuck it to UConn," Yarworth said, "Basically to win a championship, you've got to have all seventeen swimmers and three divers ready to score points, because you win a championship like that with depth."

Massachusetts is one up on Rutgers after winning the dual meet on Saturday. The overall record between these two state schools is 2–1 with UMass taking the last two. Now that the team has beaten Rutgers, Fordham is the next team on the schedule, and it's important for them to remain focused while the A–10s are on the horizon.

"There's not a problem with focus. We've got this final dual meet at Fordham, and I've got to pick the final Atlantic–10 squad," Yarworth said, "They're [UMass]

Turn to SWIM, page7

Attention Sports Staff:

There is a general staff meeting tonight at 7 p.m. for both current staff members and interested newcomers. Attendance is strongly suggested. If you can't make it, please contact Chris, Casey or Luke. If you don't come down, you'll never work in this town again.

Minutemen annihilate UNH and URI

By Steven Grant
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts track teams both came up big in the smallest state on Friday when they competed in the Rhode Island Invitational in Kingston, R.I.

The men's indoor team beat out Rhode Island and New Hampshire for first place, improving their flawless record to 9–0. The women's team (6–1) fared almost as well, beating out Dartmouth and Holy Cross but losing to the home team.

The Minutemen earned five individual victories, while Scott Price, Dave Cahill, Tom Toye and Neil Concepcion finished first as a team in the 4 X 400 relay (3:21.49).

"We ran really well [Friday]," said Price. "It's always a plus to go home with a win, no question. If everyone on the track team can keep doing well, and keep improving, we may finish the season undefeated."

Sophomore Jan Stevens threw the shot put the longest (50'4.5"), while freshman Jared Kennefick jumped the highest (6'6").

Toye ran a 49.50 in the 400 to take first place, while senior Paul Blodorn's time of 1:54.91 in the 800 was also the best time. Junior Ryan Carrara won the 3,000 by more than four seconds with a time of 8:40.8.

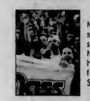
UMass' next meet will be Feb. 8 at 12 p.m. at the Valentine Invitational in Boston.

COURTESY MEDIA RELATIONS

The UMass men's track team went down to Kingston, R.I. this weekend and continued their winning ways.

The Massachusetts

DAILY COLLEGIAN



Volume CVI Issue 76 • New England's Largest College Daily • Founded in 1890 • Daily Since 1967 • Wednesday, February 5, 1997

Drew Barrymore... she sings too?

Yes, the young actress coos with the cast of Woody Allen's new movie, Everyone Says I Love You. Check out our review (see Arts & Living, page 5).

Back on track and the bounce is back!

Since the Minutemen have strung together some wins, the Mullins faithful have returned in full force (see Sports, page 12).

WORLD

Communist leadership urging Yeltsin to retire

MOSCOW — Communists pledged yesterday to press their campaign to oust ailing President Boris Yeltsin, but Yeltsin took some of the force out of their arguments by showing up for work at the Kremlin.

The Russian president, who is recovering from pneumonia, was out of the public eye for three weeks until he resurfaced a week ago. Yesterday's visit was his third to his office since then, although like the others it was made known only after the fact in television footage and photographs.

Yeltsin has been at work in the Kremlin only sporadically since he suffered a heart attack last summer. His prolonged absence has provided ammunition to his critics, who say Yeltsin should step down.

"I wish the president would take the decision to retire, to undergo medical treatment in peace and gradually recover," Communist Party leader Gennady Zyuganov said yesterday.

NATION

Cosby hires private eye to probe son's killing

LOS ANGELES — Bill Cosby has hired a highly respected entertainment investigator to monitor developments in the hunt for his son's killer, a source close to the Cosby family said yesterday. Gavin DeBecker, a security consultant who specializes in stalking, safety and domestic violence, was called in shortly after Ennis Cosby, 27, was shot to death Jan. 16, a source close to the Cosbys told The Associated Press.

"He's on board," said the source, adding that DeBecker was hired to "help the family get a better understanding to what the LAPD is doing."

DeBecker's hiring does not reflect the Cosbys' unhappiness with police because of the lack of an arrest in the case, the source said.

The Cosbys "are not at odds in any way with the homicide investigation," said another source connected with the family. Both sources spoke on condition of anonymity.

DeBecker stressed yesterday that he was hired only as a consultant, not to conduct an independent investigation. "The only organization investigating the homicide of Ennis Cosby is the LAPD," DeBecker said.

EXTENDED FORECAST

Today	Thursday	Friday
HIGH: 40 LOW: 30	HIGH: 30 LOW: 15	HIGH: 30 LOW: 15

INDEX

Arts & Living.....page 5
Classifieds .....page 10
Comics .....page 11
Crossword .....page 10
Editorial .....page 4
FYI.....page 2
News.....page 3
Sports .....page 12

Students, Red Cross ease blood shortage

By Tamar Carroll
Collegian Staff

The American Red Cross conducted it's first of six blood drives for the month of February at the University of Massachusetts in the Campus Center basement yesterday.

Marla Stotski, a Donor/Recruitment Assistant for the Hampshire County Chapter of the American Red Cross, said that UMass is one of the best donors in New England, contributing a significant portion of the blood supply.

"We come this often because we can," Stotski said. "UMass is a great resource because there's so many people and a community of dedicated donors who come back again and again, every 58 days, to give."

Stotski also pointed to recent developments such as a bad flu season and accidents over the holiday season that have left hospitals with critical shortages of blood.

"We need new donors," Stotski said. "The supply changes from day to say, so it's important to give when you can."

Students do not need to have appointments to donate blood, they just need to go to the registration desk next to the escalators in the Campus Center basement.

Potential donators are required to be 18 years or older, and weigh at least 110 pounds, be in good health and have waited at least 56 days (eight weeks) since their last donation. If donors have had a tattoo or a body piercing done by needle, they need to wait a full year before giving their blood.

In addition, donators fill out a confidential form and are interviewed by registered nurses on their sexual history and other risk factors for HIV and other contagious disease.

"The purpose of the form is to protect the blood supply and to help the donors in terms of addressing issues in their own health," said Natalie Drake, a Red Cross volunteer.

After their interview and a quick blood iron level tests, the donors lie down on a table and give one pint of blood. The donors then go to the refreshment table for fifteen minutes, where they replenish with fruit juice, animal crackers and pretzels.

Drake said that although many donors have safety concerns, the use of sterile, disposable needles eliminates the risk of infection.

"It's one of the most important things," Drake said. "People have a right to be concerned, but the Red Cross is very careful. Everything is disposable and changed with each person."

Stotski said that the other major concern most people have is fear of needles.

"Lots of people come in with anxiety about needles," said Stotski. "I've had very few people who have had a bad experience. They always say it didn't hurt at all, it was fine."

Robert Kallen, a freshman pre–medical major, agreed with Stotski.

"I feel fine," Kallen said.

Kallen, who has been a regular donor for a year and a half, said he plans on continuing to donate as long as he can.

"Most of us, sometime in our life, will need blood. If I'm going to give it, chance are I'll receive it sometime," Kallen said.

Ruth Gallagher, a Red Cross volunteer for 50 years, emphasized the importance of giving blood.

"The most important part is to praise the donors because they are absolutely wonderful to give it," said Gallagher.

"We can give of ourselves in community service, but even in service you don't give as much as in blood. You really give something of yourself when you give blood, and it's for someone you don't even know," Gallagher said.

LAUREN KOSARY-COLLEGIAN

Jessica Waska a freshman Biochemistry major, donates blood at the blood drive in the campus center Tuesday afternoon.

Auto accident claims life of UM student

Jesse Michael Creeden, 20, a sophomore at the University of Massachusetts, died on Dec. 29, 1996 at Cape Cod Hospital, Hyannis, after a car accident on Dec. 28, 1996 in Sandwich.

Creeden, a School of Management student who lived in John Adams Residence Hall, was born in Norwood and raised in Sharon until his family moved to Sandwich in 1989.

He graduated from Sandwich High School in 1995, where he had been captain of the swim team. He was also a member of the U.S. Swim Club on Cape Cod and in Amherst, where he was a coach.

Creedon won two gold medals in state swim meets. He also was a lifeguard and taught lifesaving courses.

Creedon leaves his mother, Loesje (Graven) Creeden; his father Michael J. Creedon; his sister, Cerissa Creeden; his brother, Ryan Creedon; and his grandparents, Ian and Louise Graven and Marjorie Creeden of Walpole.

A funeral Mass was celebrated at Corpus Christi Parish Center, East Sandwich. Burial was in Sandwich Town Cemetery.

Memorial donations may be made to Jesse Creeden Swim/Dive Scholarship, in care of Sandwich Co–operative bank, P.O. Box 959, Sandwich, MA 02563.

The Cape Cod Times contributed to this article.

— Laura Stock

President focuses on education and balanced budget in State of Union

By Terence Hunt
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton, declaring that Americans "want us to be partners, not partisans," challenged Congress in his State of the Union address last night to give the nation's schools a big spending increase while balancing the budget by 2002.

Recycling popular ideas from his campaign, Clinton identified education as the top priority of his second term and said he wanted America's classrooms to be "the envy of the world." He challenged communities to measure their students against national standards to lift achievement in math and science.

The president's proposals would boost education spending by 20 percent, to $51 billion for fiscal 1998. The increase — including the cost of tax breaks for college — would total 40 percent by 2002.

Two weeks after his second inauguration, the president lectured the Republican–led Congress to "complete the unfinished business of our country" — balancing the budget, enacting long–stalled campaign finance reform and reopening last year's welfare law to restore benefits to legal immigrants.

His tone was both conciliatory and challenging, calling for racial and political harmony but also pressuring Congress for action.

Balancing the budget by 2002 "requires only your vote and my signature," Clinton said, brushing over the wide gulf with Republicans over how to achieve that goal.

He said the Republican–driven proposal for a constitutional amendment for a balanced budget was "unnecessary and unwise," adding, "We don't need a constitutional amendment. We need action." That line drew groans from Republicans.

As Clinton stood before a joint session of Congress, the nation's attention was distracted by news of a verdict in the O.J. Simpson civil trial.

"Clearly the court should have realized that this speech was more important," said freshman GOP Rep. Jim Gibbons. "They could have waited an hour or two longer."

Clinton was on strong footing as he faced Republicans suspicious of his proposals. His political confidence, shaken by the Democrats' devastation in 1994, was restored by his re–election, and his recent approval ratings were among the highest of his presidency.

LAUREN KOSARY-COLLEGIAN

Art at Durfee!

Master of Fine Arts student Tom Matsuda's "Japanese Lantern" among a patch of bamboo at the Durfee Conservatory.

$500 grants assist needy students in buying books

By Leigh Faulkner
Collegian Staff

For 212 students at the University of Massachusetts, purchasing books this semester may be a lot easier than expected. That's because they are the recipients of "Performance Bonus Grants" in the amount of $500.

These grants were added to the students' financial aid packages by the board of Higher Education's office of student financial assistance. The awards were based on high academic achievement and a previous demonstration for financial aid.

In all, 2,700 students in Massachusetts were awarded grants totaling $1.2 million.

The breakdown of students receiving performance bonus grants and their total dollar amounts are as follows: UMass system — 541 students, $270,500; state colleges — 395 students ,$197,500; community colleges — 768 students, $268,800; private institutions — 942 students, $470,500; other schools — 51 students, $22,000.

UMass students in Amherst received the largest number of bonus grants among students at all public schools for a total of $106,000.

"Five hundred dollars may not sound like a lot, but to some students it's like $5,000," said Burt Batty, director of financial aid services.

"For them it might just be enough to make a big difference — enough to clear their bills for the second semester," Batty said.

The bonus grant program, which is in its first year, was established to provide recognition and incentive for students who perform well at high academic levels.

"The bonus grants are designed to reward the success of the state's neediest students. They provide a financial incentive for these students to persist toward the achievement of a post–secondary degree," said Clantha Carrigan McCurdy, director of the office of Student Financial Assistance.

Eligible students include full–time, in–state students attending a public or private institution and in need of financial assistance. Students must have also earned 24 credit hours with a grade point average of 3.0 or better.

Performance awards are renewable from year to year.

Civil jury finds Simpson liable for wrongful deaths

By Linda Deutsch
Associated Press

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — A civil jury found O.J. Simpson liable Tuesday for the slashing deaths of his ex–wife and her friend, a moral victory for grieving relatives who felt the football great got away with murder. The jury ordered him to pay $8.5 million in compensatory damages.

The mostly white panel, forced to start deliberations anew last Friday after a juror was removed for misconduct, snatched away some of the vindication Simpson claimed when he was acquitted of murder by a mostly black jury in 1995. That televised murder trial divided the nation over issues of police racism, domestic violence and the quality of justice.

This civil jury, using the lesser standard of "preponderance of evidence" rather than "beyond a reasonable doubt," blamed Simpson for the June 12, 1994, deaths of Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald Goldman.

The dramatic reading of the verdict was delayed more than three hours to allow the lawyers and families to get to the courthouse. Simpson's trip — in a black Suburban instead of a white Bronco — was televised live nationally on a split screen just as President Clinton began his State of the Union address.

The $8.5 million represented the value of Goldman's funeral and the loss of Goldman's companionship, to his parents. Ms. Simpson's family did not seek compensatory damages.

The jury's findings of malice and oppression triggered a second phase of the trial to determine punitive damages — money assessed to punish Simpson.

Already, plaintiffs' attorneys have asked for, and received Simpson's latest financial records in preparation for a punitive phase.

The jury reached the verdict after 17 hours of deliberations over three days — more than five times as long as the criminal jury deliberated.

Turn to SIMPSON, page 2

For Your Information

PIFs are public service announcements printed daily. To submit an PIF, please send a press release containing all pertinent information, including the name and phone number of the contact person to the Collegian, c/o the Managing Editor by noon the previous day.

Wednesday, Feb. 5

Community Service — The UMass Community Service Program is sponsoring its annual Spring Volunteer Fair today from 11 a.m. – 1 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium. Over 40 local service agencies will be on hand to discuss opportunities to volunteer or participate in internships. Any questions, call 545-3327.

Dance — Israeli dancing will be held from 8:30–10 p.m. in the Greenough Residence Hall basement. Instruction included. The event is free and sponsored by UMass Hillel.

Lecture — Susan L. Taylor, editor-in-chief of Essence Magazine and author of In the Spirit: The Inspirational Writings of Susan L. Taylor, will speak at Mount Holyoke College at 7:30 p.m. in Chapin Auditorium. The lecture is free and open to the public.

Meeting — Circle K International, a campus community service group, will be holding its first meeting of the semester at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center. New members welcome. For more info, call Aimee or Suzanne at 665–7712.

